Phil. It is ſoone anſwered my Lord, for that it is of no force, neither this fact of Ireneus maketh no more for the ſupremacy of the Biſhop of Rome, then mine hath done which hath been at Rome as well as he, and might have ſpoken with the pope if I had liſt: and yet I would none in England did favour his ſupremacie more then I.

S. Aſſe. You are the more to blame (by the faith of my body) for that you favour the ſame no better, ſince all the catholike church (untill theſe few yeers) have taken him to be the ſupreme head of the church, beſides this good man Ireneus.

Phil. That is not likely, that Ireneus ſo tooke him, or the primitive church: for I am able to ſhew ſeven generall Councels after Irenens time, wherein he was never ſo taken, which may be a ſufficient proofe that the Catholike Primitive church never took him for ſupreme head.

The other Biſhop. This man will never be ſatisfied, ſay what we can. It is but folly to reaſon any more with him.

Phil. O my Lords, would you have me ſatisfied with nothing? Judge, I pray you, who of us hath better authoritie, he which bringeth the example of one man going to Rome, or I that by theſe many generall Councels am able to prove, that he was never ſo taken in many hundred yeers after Chriſt, as by Nicene, Epheſine, the firſt and the ſecond Chalcedone, Conſtantinopolitane, Carthaginenſe, Aquillenſe.

Socr. lib. 5. c. 22. 7. Generall Councels in which the B. of Rome was never taken for ſupreme head.

Coven. Why will you not admit the Church of Rome to be the catholike church?

Phil. Becauſe it followeth not the Primitive catholike church, neither agreeth with the ſame, no more then an apple is like a nutte.

The Church of Rome diſſenteth from the Primitive church.

Covent. Wherein doth it diſſent?

Phil. It were too long to recite all, but two things I will name; the ſupremacy, & tranſubſtantiation.

Cur. As for Tranſubſtantiation, albeit it was ſet forth and decreed for an Article of faith not much above 300. yeers, yet it was alwaies beleeved in the Church.

Bon. Yea that it was. Very well ſaid of you Maſter Curtop.

Phil. Ye have ſaid right, that Tranſubſtantiation is but a late plantation of the Biſhop of Rome, and you are not able to ſhew any ancient writer, that the primitive church did beleeve any ſuchthing; and with this Curtop ſhranke away. And immediately after, the Ambaſſadour of Spaine came in, to whom my Lord of London went, leaving the other with me. To whom I ſaid; my Lords, if you can ſhew me that this church of Rome (whereof you are members) is the true catholike church, I ſhall be content to be one thereof, and as conformable to the ſame as you can require me in all things; for I know there is no ſalvation but within the church.

Tranſubſtantiation is but a late plantation.

John Philpot returneth again to his iſſue.

Coven. Can you diſprove that the church of Rome is not the catholike church?

Phil. Yea that I am able, but I deſire rather to heare of you for the proofe thereof. And ſeeing I cannot have my requeſt at your hands, neither be ſatisfied with any probable authoritie, I will ſhew you good proofe why it is not. For if the Primitive church were catholike, as it was indeed, and ought to be the forme and ſchoolemiſtris of the church to the worlds end; then is not the church of Rome now the catholike church which diſſenteth ſo farre from the ſame both in doctrine and uſe of the Sacraments.

Rome is not the Catholike Church & why.

Covent. How prove you that the church of Rome now diſſenteth in doctrine and uſe of the Sacraments from the Primitive church?

Phil. Compare the one with the other, and it ſhall ſoone appeare; as you may ſee both in Euſebius and other Eccleſiaicall and ancient writers.

Covent. What have you to ſay more, why it is not the catholike church?

Phil. Becauſe it is not (by your interpretation of catholike) univerſall, neither ever was, albeit you falſely perſwade the people that it is ſo. For the world being divided into three parts, Aſia, Africa, and Europa; two parts thereof, Aſia, and Africa profeſſing Chriſt as well as we, did never conſent to the church of Rome, which is of Europa; which is a ſufficient teſtimony that your faith was never univerſall.

Compariſon between the Primitive Church and the Popes Catholike Church. The faith of the Popes Catholike Church now was never univerſall.

Covent. How prove you that?

Phil. All the Hiſtoriographers, which write of the proceedings of the church, doe teſtifie the ſame. Beſides that, this preſent time doth declare that to be true which I ſay. For at this preſent the church of Aſia and Africa doe not conſent to the church of Rome. Yea and beſides all this, moſt part of Europa doth not agree, neither allow the church of Rome; as Germany, the kingdom of Denmark, the kingdome of Pole, a great part of France, England, and Zeland, which is a manifeſt probation that your church is not univerſall. And after this, the biſhop of London called away the other biſhops, and left with me divers gentlemen, with certain of his chaplaines, as Doctor Saverſon an Engliſhman, which had proceeded Doctor in Bononie, who after began with me in this manner.

Doctor Saver. Maſter Philpot, I remember you beyond Sea ſince the time you reaſoned with a Frier (a notable learned man) coming from Venice to Padua in a barge.

Phil. I cannot forget that; for the Frier threatned me to accuſe me of hereſie as ſoone as he came to Padua, for that I talked with him ſo boldly of the truth. He was no ſuch learned man as you name him to be, but onely in his ſchoole points a good Purgatorie Frier.

Doctor Saver. Well, he was a learned man for all that. And I am ſorry to heare that you this day having communed with ſo many notable learned men are no more conformable to them then you be.

Philpot. I will be conformable to all them that be conformable to Chriſt in his word. And I pray you good maſter Doctor, be not ſo conformable to pleaſe men more then God, contrary to your learning for worldly eſtimations ſake.

D. Saver. No that I am not. Upon what occaſion ſhould you thinke thus of me?

Phil. Upon no evill that I doe know of you maſter Doctor; but I ſpeak as one wiſhing that you ſhould not be led away from the truth for promotions ſake' as many Doctors be now adaies.

For the further debating of this matter that Cyprian doth allow no ſuch thing, read the anſwer of Maſter Nowel to M. Dorman.

D. Saver. I have heard your arguments hitherto, and me thinketh that a great many of the old ancient writers be againſt you in that you doe not allow the Church of Rome, neither the ſupremacy; for Saint Cyprian (which is an old ancient writer) doth allow the biſhop of Rome to be ſupreme head of the church.

Phil. That I am ſure of he doth not. For he, writing unto Cornelius then Biſhop of Rome, calleth him but his companion and his fellow Biſhop, neither attributed to him the name either of Pope, or elſe of any uſurped terms which now be aſcribed to the Biſhop of Rome to the ſetting forth of his dignitie.

Saver. You cannot be able to ſhew that Saint Cyprian calleth Cornelius his fellow Biſhop.

Philpot. I will wager with you what I am able to make, that I can ſhew it you in Cyprian, as I have ſaid.

D. Saver. I will lay none other wager with you, but book for book that it is not ſo.

Cyp.lib. 1 epi. 3.

D. Saverſon hath loſt his book to maſter Philpot.

Cyp.li. 4.epi. 2. cap 16.

Nic. conc. 3.

Patriarkes only be named, to whom afterward the Patriarke of Conſtantinople was alſo joyned.

Cyprian hath alſo theſe words following in the ſame Epiſtle: it was declared amongſt us, and it is according to juſtice and equitie that every mans cauſe ſhould be heard where the fault was committed, and to every ſeverall Paſtour there is a portion of the flock appointed to rule and governe, for the which he muſt make an account before God.

Cypri.lib. 4. Epiſt. 2.

Philpot. I agree thereto, and I pray you one of my Lords Chaplaines to fet us Cyprian hither for the triall hereof. And with that one of them went to my Lords ſtudie and brought forth Cyprian, and by and by he turned to the firſt book of his Epiſtles, the third Epiſtle, and there would have ſeemed to have gathered a ſtrong argument for the ſupremacie of the Biſhop of Rome, becauſe he ſaith; It goeth not well with the Church when the high prieſt is not obeyed, which ſupplieth the ſtead of Chriſt, after Gods word, and the conſent of his fellow Biſhops, and the agreement of the people.

Doct. Saver. How can you avoid this place which maketh ſo plainly for the Biſhop of Romes ſupremacie?

Phil. It maketh not ſo plaine, Maſter Doctor, on your ſide, as you gather, as by and by I will give you to underſtand. But firſt I challenge the wager which we made that your booke is mine. For here you may ſee that he calleth Cornelius his fellow Biſhop, as he doth alſo in other places. And now for the underſtanding of that place, you do miſconſtrue it, to take the high prieſt onely for the Biſhop of Rome, and otherwiſe then it was in his time. For there were by the Nicene Councel foure Patriarkes appointed, the Patriarke of Jeruſalem, the Patriarke of Conſtantinople, the Patriarke of Alexandria, and the Patriark of Rome, of which foure, the Patriarke of Rome was placed loweſt in the Councel, and ſo continued many yeers, for the time of ſeven or eight generall councels, as I am able to ſhew.

Therefore Saint Cyprian writing to Cornelius Patriarke of Rome (whom he calleth his fellow Biſhop) findeth himſelfe offended, that certain heretikes being juſtly excommunicated by him (as the Novatians were) did flee from his Dioceſſe, which was their chiefe biſhop (refuſing to be obedient to him and to be reformed) to the biſhop of Rome and to the Patriarke of Conſtantinople, and there were received in communion of congregation, in derogation of good order & diſcipline in the church, and to the maintaining of hereſies & ſchiſmes: and that hereſies did ſpring up and ſchiſmes daily riſe hereof, that obedience was not given to the prieſt of God, nor was it once conſidered him to be in the church for the time, the prieſt, and for the time the judge in Chriſts ſtead (as in the decree ef Nicene Councel was appointed) not the Biſhop of Rome onely, but every Patriarke in his precinct; who had every one of them a colledge or Cathedrall Church of learned Prieſts, in hearing of whom by a convocation of his fellow Biſhops, with the conſent of the people, all hereſies were determined by the word of God; and this is the meaning of Saint Cyprian.

D. Saver. You take it ſo, but it ſeemeth to me otherwiſe.

Phil. Upon what ground it ſhould ſeeme otherwiſe unto you I know not, but this meaning which I have declared, the generall Councels, ſeven or eight one after another, confirmed it ſo to be, which did not allow one ſupreme head onely.

Pend. There were not ſo many generall councels, but foure onely allowed.

Phil. That is not ſo Maſter Pendleton, although there be foure ſpecially allowed for the confirmation of the Trinitie: but beſides theſe foure there were many other generall Councels, as you may learne by many writers.

A Chaplaine. Did not Chriſt build his Church upon Peter? Saint Cyprian ſaith ſo.

How S. Cyprian meaneth Chriſt to build his Church upon Peter.

Cyp. De ſimplicitate prælatorum.

Tract. 10. in Ioan.

Phil. Saint Cyprian De ſimplicitate prælatorum declareth in what reſpect he ſo ſaid; In perſona unius dedit Dominus omnibus claves, ut omnium unitatem denunciaret. i. God gave in perſon of one man the keies to all, that he might ſignifie the unitie of all men. And alſo Saint Auguſtine ſaith in the tenth treatiſe of Saint John, Si in Petro non eſſet eccleſia myſterium, non ei diceret Dominus tibi dabo claves. Si autem hoc Petro dictum eſt, non habet Eccleſia; ſi autem Eccleſia habet, quando claves accepit, eccleſiam totam deſignavit i. If in Peter had not beene the myſterie of the Church, the Lord had not ſaid unto him, I will give unto thee the keies. For if that were ſaid to Peter, the Church hath them not; if the Church have them when Peter received them, he ſignified the whole church. And alſo S. Hier. a prieſt of Rome, writing to Nepotian, ſaith, That all churches do leane to their own paſtors, where he ſpeaketh of the Eccleſiaſticall Hierarchy or regiment, where he maketh no mention of the Biſhop of Rome. And Ad Evagrium, he ſaith, That whereſoever a Biſhop be, whether it be at Rome, or at Evagie, or at Rhegium, he is of one power and of one juriſdiction.

Hieronym. ad Nepotianum.

Hieronym. ad Evagrium.

D. Saver. Saint Hierome De cœleſti hierarchia? It was Dionyſius you meane.

Phil. I ſay not that Hierome wrote any booke ſo intituled. But I ſay, that in the Epiſtle by me alledged, he maketh mention of the Eccleſiaſticall regiment.

D. Saver. I wonder you will ſtand ſo ſtedfaſt in your error to your owne deſtruction.

Phil. I am ſure we are in no error, by the promiſe of Chriſt made to the faithfull once, which is, that he will give to his true Church ſuch a ſpirit of wiſdome, that the adverſaries thereof ſhould never be able to reſiſt. And by this I know we are of the truth, for that neither by reaſoning, neither by writing, your ſynagogue of Rome is able to anſwer. Where is there one of you all that ever hath beene able to anſwer any of the godly learned Miniſters of Germany, who have diſcloſed your counterfaite religion? Which of you all (at this day) is able to anſwer Calvins Inſtitutions, which is Miniſter of Geneva.

D. Saver. A godly miniſter indeed of receipt of cutpurſes, and runnagate traytors. And of late I can tell you, there is ſuch contention fallen betweene him and his owne ſects, that he was faine to flee the towne, about predeſtination. I tell you truth, for I came by Geneva hither.

Falſe ſlande

Philpot. I am ſure you blaſpheme that godly man, and that godly church where he is miniſter; as it is your churches condition, when you cannot anſwer men by learning, to oppreſſe them with blaſphemies and falſe reports. For in the matter of predeſtination he is in none other opinion then all the Doctours of the Church be, agreeing to the ſcriptures.

Saver. Men be able to anſwer him if they liſt. And I pray you which of you have anſwered biſhop Fiſhers booke?

Phil. Yes (maſter Doctor) that booke is anſwered and anſwered againe, if you liſt to ſéeke what hath been written againſt him.

D. Story commeth in.

And after this Doctor Story came in. To whom I ſaid, maſter Doctor, you have done me great injurie, and without law have ſtraitly impriſoned me, more like a dog then a man. And beſides this you have not kept promiſe with me, for you promiſed that I ſhould be judged the next day after.

Happy are you when they revile you, and ſay all evill againſt you for my names ſake. Math. 5.

Story. I am come now to kéepe promiſe with thee. Was there ever ſuch a phantaſticall man as this is? Nay, he is no man, he is a beaſt, yea, theſe heretikes be worſe then brute beaſts: for they will upon a vaine ſingularitie take upon them to be wiſer then al men, being indéed very fooles and aſſe heads, not able to maintain that which of an arrogant obſtinacie they do ſtand in.

Phil. Maſter Doctor, I am content to abide your railing judgement of me now. Say what you wil, I am content, for I am under your féet to be troden on as you liſt. God forgive it you; yet I am no heretike. Neither you nor any other ſhall be able to prove that I hold any jote againſt the word of God, otherwiſe then a Chriſtian man ought.

The Papiſts will not be ruled by the ſcriptures without their owne judge.

Story. The word of God? forſooth the word of God? It is but a folly to reaſon with theſe heretikes, for they are incurable and deſperate. But yet I may reaſon with thee, not that I have any hope to win thee; whom wilt thou appoint to judge of the word whereto thou ſtandeſt.

Phil. Verily the word it ſelfe.

Story. Do you not ſée the ignorance of this beaſtly heretike? He willeth the word to be judged of the word. Can the word ſpeake?

Phil. If I cannot prove that which I have ſaid by good authoritie, I will be content to be counted an heretike and an ignorant perſon, and further what you pleaſe.

Story. Let us heare what wiſe authoritie thou canſt bring in?

John 12.

What ſay you now Maſter Doctor?

Phil. It is the ſaying of Chriſt in Saint John, Verbum quod locutus ſum judicabit in noviſſimo die, The word which I have ſpoken, ſaith Chriſt, ſhall judge in the laſt day. If the word ſhall judge in the laſt day, much more it ought to judge our doings now: And I am ſure I have my judge on my ſide, who ſhall abſolve and juſtifie me in another world. Howſoever now it ſhall pleaſe you by authoritie unrighteouſly to judge of me and others, ſure I am in another world to judge you.

M. Doctor having not to anſwer falleth to railing.

Story. What? you purpoſe to be a ſtinking martyr, and to ſit in judgement with Chriſt at the laſt day to judge the twelve tribes of Iſrael?

Phil. Yea ſir, I doubt not thereof, having the promiſe of Chriſt, if I die for righteouſnes ſake, which you have begun to perſecute in me.

Story. I told you it was but vaine to argue with this heretike; he is drowned in his hereſies without all learning.

Phil. Sir I have brought you, for that I have ſaid, good authoritie out of Gods booke, to the which you anſwer nothing, but go about ſtill to give railing judgement againſt me without any cauſe.

Story. I will come to you by and by. When as the judge in Weſtminſter hall giveth ſentence, doth the word give ſentence, or the judge? tell me.

ods judge,
ent and civill dgement not ly.

Phil. Civill matters be ſubject to civill men, and they have authoritie by the word, to be judges of them. But the word of God is not ſubject to mans judgement, but ought to judge all the wiſdome, thoughts and doings of men, and therefore your compariſon diſproveth nothing that I have ſaid, neither anſwereth any whit thereto.

Story. Wilt thou not allow the interpretation of the Church upon the ſcriptures?

The judgement of the church how farre it ſerveth.

Philpot. Yes, if it be according to the word of the true Church: and this I ſay to you, as I have ſaid heretofore, that if ye can prove the church of Rome (whereof ye are) to be the true catholike church which I ought to follow, I will be as ready to yéeld thereto (as long as it can be ſo proved) as you may deſire me.

Story. What a fellow is this, he will beléeve nothing but what he liſt himſelf. Are we not in poſſeſſion of the church? have not our forefathers theſe many hundred yéeres taken this Church for the catholike church whereof we are now? And if we had none other proofe but this, it were ſufficient; for the preſcription of time maketh a good title in the Law.

Preſcription of time.

Preſcription of time maketh no title in Gods matters.

Phil. You do well, maſter Doctor, to alledge preſcription of many yéers, for it is al that you have to ſhew for your ſelves. But you muſt underſtand, In divinis nulla occurrit præſcriptio, that preſcription hath no place in matters belonging unto God, as I am able to ſhew by the teſtimony of many Doctors.

Story. Well ſir, you are like to go after your Father Latimer the Sophiſter, and Ridley, who had nothing to alledge for himſelf, but that he had learned his hereſie of Cranmer. When I came to him with a poore batchelor of art, he trembled as though he had had the palſie, as theſe heretikes have alwaies ſome token of feare whereby a man may know them, as you may ſée this mans eies do tremble in his head. But I diſpatched them; and I tell thee that there hath been yet never a one burnt, but I have ſpoken with him, and have been a cauſe of his diſpatch.

D. Story confeſſeth himſelfe to be the chiefe diſpatcher of all Gods ſaints that ſuffered in Queen Maries time.

Phil. You have the more to anſwer for, maſter Doctor, as you ſhall feele in another world, how muchſoever you do now triumph of your procéedings.

Story. I tell thee I will never be confeſſed thereof. And becauſe I cannot now tarry to ſpeake with my Lord, I pray one of you tell my Lord, that my coming was to ſignifie to his Lordſhip, That he muſt out of hand rid this heretike out of the way. And going away he ſaid to me, I certifie thee, that thou maiſt thank none other man but me.

Phil. I thank you therefore with all mine heart, and God forgive it you.

Stories crueltie.

Story. What? doeſt thou thank me? If I had thee in my ſtudy halfe an houre, I think I ſhould make you ſing another ſong.

Phil. No, maſter Doctor, I ſtand upon too ſure a ground to be overthrowne by you now. And thus they departed all away from me one after another, untill I was left all alone. And afterwards with my Keeper going to my Colehouſe, as I went, I met with my Lord of London, who ſpake unto me gently, as he hath hitherto in words, ſaying;

London. Philpot, if there be any pleaſure I may ſhew you in my houſe, I pray you require it, and you ſhall have it.

The ſtrait handling of Jo. Philpot in priſon, for all the Biſhops faire words.

Phil. My Lord, The pleaſure that I will require of your LL. is to haſten my judgement which is committed unto you, and to diſpatch me forth of this miſerable world, unto my eternall reſt. And for all this faire ſpéech I cannot attain hitherto this fortnights ſpace, neither fire nor candle, neither yet good lodging. But it is good for a man to be brought low in this world, and to be counted amongſt the vileſt, that he may in time of reward receive exaltation and glory. Therefore praiſed be God, that hath humbled me, and given me grace with gladneſſe to be content therewithall.

Let all that love the truth ſay, Amen.

Thus endeth the fifth Tragedie.

The ſixth examination of Iohn Philpot had before the right honorable Lords, the Lord Chamberlaine to the Queenes Majeſtie, the Vicount Hereford, commonly called Lord Ferras, the Lord Rich, the Lord Saint Iohns, the Lord Windſore, the Lord Shandois, Sir Iohn Bridges, Lieutenant of the Tower, and two other moe whoſe names I know not, with the Biſhop of London and Doctor Chedſey, the ſixth day of November. Anno 1555.

The ſixth examination of maſter Philpot before certaine Lords, and the B. of London.

PHilpot. Before that I was called afore the lords, and whiles they were in ſitting down, the Biſhop of London came aſide to me and whiſpered in mine eare, willing me to uſe my ſelfe before the Lords of the Queenes Majeſties Councel prudently, and to take heed what I ſaid; and thus he pretended to give me counſel becauſe he wiſhed me to do well, as I might now do if I liſt. And after the Lords and other worſhipfull Gentlemen of the Queenes Majeſties ſervants were ſet, my Lord of London placed himſelfe at the end of the table, and called me to him, and by the Lords I was placed at the upper end againſt him; where I kneeling down, the Lords commanded me to ſtand up, and after in this manner the Biſhop began to ſpeake.

The words of Biſhop Boner to maſter Philpot.

London. Maſter Philpot, I have heretofore both privately my ſelfe, and openly before the Lords of the Clergy, moe times then once cauſed you to be talked withall to reforme you of your errors, but I have not found you yet ſo tractable as I would wiſh: Wherefore now I have deſired theſe honorable lords of the temporalty & of the Q. Majeſties Councel, who have taken paines with me this day, I thank them therefore, to heare you what you can ſay, that they may be judges whether I have ſought all meanes to do you good or no: and I dare be bold to ſay in their behalfe, that if you ſhew your ſelfe conformable to the Queens Majeſties proceedings, you ſhall finde as much favour for your deliverance, as you can wiſh. I ſpeake not this to fawne upon you, but to bring you home into the Church. Now let them heare what you can ſay.

M. Philpots anſwer to the Biſhop.

Phil. My Lord, I thanke God of this day, that I have ſuch an honourable audience to declare my minde before. And I cannot but commend your lordſhips equity in this behalfe, which agreeth with the order of the primitive church, which was, if any body had been ſuſpected of hereſie, as I am now, he ſhould be called firſt before the archbiſhop or biſhop of the Dioceſſe where he was ſuſpected; ſecondly, in the preſence of others his fellow Biſhops and learned elders; and thirdly in hearing of the laitie: where after the judgement of Gods word declared, and with the aſſent of other Biſhops and conſent of the people, he was condemned for an heretike, or abſolved. And the ſecond point of that good order I have found at your Lordſhips hands already in being called before you and your fellow biſhops, and now have the third ſort of men, at whoſe hands I truſt to finde more righteouſneſſe in my cauſe then I have found with my Lords of the Clergie; God grant I may have at laſt the judgement of Gods word concerning the ſame.

Heretikes in the primitive Church onely condemned to exile.

London. Maſter Philpot, I pray you ere you goe any further, tell my lords here plainly whether you were by me or by my procurement committed to priſon or not, and whether I have ſhewed you any crueltie ſithen ye have been committed to my priſon.

Philpot. If it ſhall pleaſe your Lordſhip to give me leave to declare forth my matter, I will touch that afterward.

B. Boner not the cauſe of M. Philpots impriſonment.

Rich. Anſwer firſt of all to my Lords two queſtions, and then proceed forth to the matter. How ſay you? were you impriſoned by my Lord or no? can you finde any fault ſince with his cruell uſing of you?

Phil. I cannot lay to my lords charge the cauſe of my impriſonment, neither may I ſay that he hath uſed me cruelly, but rather for my part I may ſay that I have found more gentleneſſe at his Lordſhips hands, then I did at mine owne Ordinaries, for the time I have been within his priſon, for that he hath called me three or foure times to mine anſwer, to the which I was not called in a twelvemoneth and a halfe before.

Rich. Well, now go to your matter.

Phil. The matter is, that I am impriſoned for the diſputations had by me in the Convocation houſe againſt the Sacrament of the Altar, which matter was not moved principally by me, but by the prolocutor, with the conſent of the Queenes Majeſtie and of the whole houſe, & that houſe, being a member of the Parliament houſe, ought to be a place of free ſpeech for all men of the houſe, by the ancient and laudable cuſtome of this realme. Wherefore I thinke my ſelfe to have ſuſtained hitherto great injurie for ſpeaking my conſcience freely in ſuch a place as I might lawfully do it: and I deſire your honourable Lordſhips judgement which be of the Parliament houſe, whether of right I ought to be impeached therefore, and ſuſtaine the loſſe of my living, (as I have done) and moreover of my life, as it is ſought.

The Convocation no part of the Parliament houſe, ſaith the Lord Rich.

Rich. You are deceived herein; for the Convocation houſe is no part of the Parliament houſe.

Phil. My Lord, I have alwaies underſtood the contrarie by ſuch as are more expert men in things of this realme then I: and againe, the title of every Act leadeth me to think otherwiſe, which alledgeth the agreement of the ſpiritualtie and temporaltie aſſembled together.

Rich. Yea, that is meant of the ſpirituall Lords of the upper houſe.

Whether the Convocation be part of the Parliament houſe or no, yet free libertie was given by the Queene every man to ſpeake his conſcience.

Windſor. Indeed the Convocation houſe is called together by one writ of the Summons of the Parliament of an old cuſtome; notwithſtanding that houſe is no part of the Parliament houſe.

Phil. My Lords, I muſt be contented to abide your judgements in this behalfe.

Rich. We have told you the truth. Marie yet we would not that you ſhould be troubled for any thing that there was ſpoken, ſo that you having ſpoken amiſſe doe declare now that you are ſorry therefore.

Lond. My lords, he hath ſpoken there manifeſt hereſie, yea & there ſtoutly maintained the ſame againſt the bleſſed ſacrament of the altar (and with that he put off his cap, that all the Lords might reverence and vaile their bonets at that idoll as he did) and would not allow the reall preſence of the body and bloud of Chriſt in the ſame: yet my Lords, God forbid that I ſhould go about to ſhew him extremitie for ſo doing, in caſe he will repent and revoke his wicked ſayings; and if in faith he will ſo doe, with your Lordſhips conſent he ſhall be releaſed by and by. Mary if he will not, he ſhall looke for the extremitie of the law, and that ſhortly.

Chamb. My Lord of London ſpeaketh reaſonably unto you: take it whiles it is offered you.

Rich. How ſay you? Will you acknowledge the reall preſence of the body and bloud of Chriſt, as all the learned men of this realme do, in the maſſe, and as I do, and will beleeve as long as I live, I do proteſt it?

Phil. My lord, I do acknowledge in the ſacrament of the body and bloud of Chriſt ſuch a preſence, as the word of God doth allow and teach me.

Rich. That ſhal be no otherwiſe then you liſt.

How Boner taketh in the ſacrament, to be both the ſigne and the thing ſigni

Lond. A ſacrament is the ſigne of a holy thing; So that there is both the ſign which is the accident (as the whiteneſſe, roundneſſe, and ſhape of bread) and there is alſo the thing it ſelfe, as very Chriſt both God and man. But theſe heretikes will have the ſacrament to be but bare ſignes. How ſay you? declare unto my Lords here whether you do allow the thing it ſelfe in the ſacrament or no?

Both the ſigne and the thing ſignified in due reſpects be in the Sacrament.

Phil. I doe confeſſe that in the Lords ſupper there is in due reſpects both the ſign and the thing ſignified, when it is duly miniſtred after the inſtitution of Chriſt.

London. You may ſee how he goeth about the buſh (as he hath done before) with my Lords of the clergie, and dare not utter his minde plainly.

Rich. Shew us what manner of preſence you allow in the ſacrament.

Phil. If it pleaſe you, my Lord of London, to give me leave to proceed orderly thereunto, and to let me declare my minde without interruption, I will throughly open my minde therein.

L. Shand. I pray you my Lord, let him ſpeake his minde.

Phil. My Lords, that at the firſt I have not plainly declared my judgement unto you the reaſon is this, becauſe I cannot ſpeake hereof without the danger of my life.

Ye ſay ye ſeeke not his life, and yet ye know to anſwer to that ye aske wil be his death.

Rich. There is none of us here that ſeeketh thy life, or means to take any advantage of that thou ſhalt ſpeake.

Phil. Although I miſtruſt not your honorable Lordſhips that be here of the temporaltie; yet here is one that ſitteth againſt me (pointing to my Lord of London) that wil lay it to my charge even to the death. Notwithſtanding, ſeeing your honors doe require me to declare my minde of the preſence of Chriſt in the ſacrament, that ye may perceive that I am not aſhamed of the Goſpel of Chriſt, neither doe maintaine any opinion without probable and ſufficient authoritie of the ſcripture, I will ſhew you frankely my minde without all colour, whatſoever ſhall enſue unto me therefore, ſo that my lord of London will not let me to utter my minde.

Rich. My Lord, permit him to ſay what he can, ſeeing he is willing to ſhew his minde.

London. I am content my lords, let him ſay what he can, I will heare him.

The proteſtation of John Philpot before the Lords.

Phil. That which I doe intend to ſpeake unto you (right honorable Lords) I do proteſt here, firſt before God and his Angels, that I ſpeake it not of vaineglory, neither of ſingularitie, neither of wilful ſtubbornneſſe, but truly upon a good conſcience, grounded on Gods word, againſt the which I dare not do for feare of damnation which will follow that which is done contrary to knowledge. Neither do I diſagree to the proceedings of this realm in the religion, for that I love not the Queene, (whom I love from the bottome of my heart) but becauſe I ought to love and feare God in his word more then man in his lawes, though I ſtand as I ſeeme to doe in this conſideration, and for none other as God I call to witneſſe.

Two things wherein the Clergy deceiveth the whole Realme.

There be two things principally, by the which the Clergie at this day doth deceive the whole realme; that is, the Sacrament of the body and bloud of Chriſt, & the name of the catholike church: the which both they do uſurpe, having indeed none of them both. And as touching their Sacrament, which they terme of the altar, I ſay now as I ſaid in the convocation houſe, that it is not the ſacrament of Chriſt, neither in the ſame is there any manner of Chriſts preſence. Wherefore they deceive the Queenes Majeſtie, and you of the Nobilitie of this realme, in making you to beleeve that to be a Sacrament which is none, and cauſe you to commit manifeſt idolatrie in worſhipping that for God, which is no God. And in teſtimonie of this to be true, beſides manifeſt proof, which I am able to make to the Queenes Majeſtie, and to all you of her nobility, I wil yeeld my life. The which to do, if it were not upon a ſure ground, it were to my utter damnation.

The Papiſts have neither the ſacrament of the Lords body nor the true Church.

Papiſts untruly uſurpe the name of the Church.

And where they take on them the name of the catholike church (wherby they blinde many folkes eies) they are nothing ſo, calling you from the true religion which was revealed and taught in King Edwards time, unto vaine ſuperſtition. And this I will ſay for the triall hereof, that if they can prove themſelves to be the Catholike Church (as they ſhall never be able to doe) I will never be againſt their doings, but revoke all that I have ſaid. And I ſhall deſire you, my Lords, to be a meane for me to the Queenes Majeſtie, that I may be brought to the juſt triall hereof. Yea, I wil not refuſe to ſtand againſt ten of the beſt of them in this realm. And if they be able to prove otherwiſe then I have ſaid, either by writing or by reaſoning, with good and lawfull authoritie, I will here promiſe to recant whatſoever I have ſaid, and to conſent to them in all points. And in the declaration of theſe things more at large, which now I write in ſumme, the Biſhop of London eftſoones would have interrupted me, but the Lords procured me libertie to make out my tale, to the great griefe of the Lord Biſhop of London, as it appeared by the dumpes he was in.

M. Philpot offereth himſelf to ſtand againſt ten of the beſt learned in the realme in the proofe of his cauſe.

London. It hath been told me before, that you love to make a long tale.

Rich. All heretikes do boaſt of the ſpirit of God, and every one would have a Church by himſelfe; as Joane of Kent and the Anabaptiſts. I had my ſelfe Joan of Kent a ſevennight in my houſe after the writ was out for her to be burnt, where my Lord of Canterburie, and Biſhop Ridley reſorted almoſt daily unto her: but ſhe was ſo high in the ſpirit that they could doe nothing with her for all their learning. But ſhe went wilfully unto the fire, was burnt, and ſo doe you now.

Philpot. As for Joan of Kent, ſhe was a vaine woman (I knew her well) and an heretike indeed, well worthy to be burnt, becauſe ſhe ſtood againſt one of the manifeſt articles of our faith, contrary to the Scriptures: and ſuch vain ſpirits be ſoon knowne from the true ſpirit of God and his Church, for that the ſame abideth within the limits of Gods word and will not goe out of the ſame, neither ſtubbornly maintaine any thing contrary to the word, as I have Gods word throughly on my ſide to ſhew for that I ſtand in.

The Popes catholikes when they have no juſt reaſon wherewith to perſwade, they fall to railing and to charge men with ſtubbornneſſe.

London. I pray you, how will you joyne me theſe two Scriptures together; Pater major me eſt; & pater et ego unum ſumus. I muſt interpret the ſame, becauſe my Lords here underſtand not the Latine, that is to ſay, The Father is greater then I; and I and the Father are one. But I cry you mercy my Lords, I have miſſpoken, in ſaying you underſtand no Latine; for the moſt part of you underſtand Latine as well as I. But I ſpeak in conſideration of my Lord Shandoys and Maſter Bridges his brother, whom I take to be no great Latine men. Now ſhew your cunning, and joyne theſe two Scriptures by the word if you can.

Phil. Yes that I can right well. For we muſt underſtand that in Chriſt there be two natures, the Divinitie and Humanitie, and in reſpect of his Humanity it is ſpoken of Chriſt, The Father is greater then I. But in reſpect of his Deitie he ſaid againe; The Father and I be one.

London. But what ſcripture have you?

Phil. Yes I have ſufficient ſcripture for the proofe of that I have ſaid. For the firſt, it is written of Chriſt in the Pſalmes; Diminuiſti eum paulo minus ab Angelis; Thou haſt made him a little leſſer then Angels. It is the fifteenth Pſalme, beginning, Cœli enarrant. And there I miſreckoned, wherewithall my Lord took me.

Pſalm. 8

London. It is in Domine Dominus noſter. Ye may ſee my Lords how well this man is uſed to ſay his Mattins.

Phil. Though I ſay not mattens in ſuch order as your Lordſhip meaneth; yet I remember of old, that Domine Dominus noſter, and cœli enarrant, be not far aſunder: and albeit I miſnamed the Pſalm, it is no prejudice to the truth that I have proved.

Lon. What ſay you then to the ſecond Scripture? how couple you that by the word to the other?

Scriptures alledged.

Phil. The text it ſelfe decareth that notwithſtanding Chriſt did abaſe himſelfe in our humane nature, yet he is ſtill one in Deitie with the Father. And this Saint Paul to the Hebrewes doth more at large ſet forth. And as I have by the Scriptures joyned theſe two Scriptures together, ſo am I able to doe in all other articles of faith which we ought to beleeve, and by the manifeſt word of God to expound them.

Lon. How can that be, ſeeing S. Paul ſaith, That the letter killeth, but it is the ſpirit that giveth life.

How the letter killeth and whom.

2 Cor. 3.

Iohn 6.

London. What? do you underſtand that of Saint Paul and of Saint John ſo?

Phil. It is not mine owne interpretation, it is agreeable to the word in other places; and I have learned the ſame of ancient fathers interpreting it likewiſe. And to the Corinthians it is written; Animalis homo non percipit ea quæ ſunt ſpiritus Dei; ſpiritualis dijudicat omnia. The naturall man perceiveth not the things that be of the ſpirit of God; but the ſpirituall man which is indued with the ſpirit judgeth all things.

1 Cor. 2.

London. You ſee my Lords, that this man will have his owne minde, and will wilfully caſt away himſelfe. I am ſorry for him.

Philpot. The words that I have ſpoken be none of mine but the Goſpel, whereon I ought to ſtand. And if you my Lord of London can bring better authoritie for the faith you will draw me unto, then that which I ſtand upon, I will gladly heare the ſame by you or by any other in this realme.

Wherefore I kneeling down beſought the lords to be good unto me a poore Gentleman, that would faine live in the world if I might, and teſtifie as you have heard me to ſay this day, that if any man can prove that I ought to be of any other manner of faith then that of which I now am, and can prove the ſame ſufficiently, I will be neither wilfull, neither deſperate, as my Lord of London would make you beleeve me to be.

M. Philpots requeſt to the Lords.

Rich. What countrieman be you? are you of the Philpots of Hampſhire.

Phil. Yea my Lord, I was ſir Peter Philpots ſon of Hampſhire.

Rich. He is my neere kinſman; wherefore I am the more ſorry for him.

Phil. I thanke your Lordſhip that it pleaſeth you to challenge kindred of a poore priſoner.

Rich. In faith I would go an hundred miles on my bare feete to doe you good.

Chamb. He may do well enough if he liſt.

Saint Iohn. Maſter Philpot, you are my Countreyman, and I would be glad you ſhould doe well.

Rich. You ſaid even now, that you would deſire to maintaine your beliefe before ten of the beſt in the realme. You did not well to compare with the Nobilitie of the Realm. But what if you have ten of the beſt in the realme to heare you, will you be tried by them?

Phil. My Lord your Lordſhip miſtaketh me to thinke that I challenge ten of the beſt of the Nobilitie in this realme. It was no part of my minde, but I meant of the beſt learned on the cõtrary ſide.

Rich. Well, I take your meaning: what if means be made to the Queens Majeſtie, that you ſhall have your requeſt, will you be judged by them.

Phil. My Lord, it is not meet that a man ſhould be judged by his adverſaries.

Io. Philpot will not be judged by his adverſaries, but by the hearers, ſo far as they ſhall judge by Gods word.

Rich. By whom then would you be judged?

Phil. I will make your honors judges, that ſhall be hearers of us.

Rich. I dare be bold to procure for you of the Queenes Majeſty that you ſhall have ten learned men to reaſon with you, and twenty or forty of the Nobilitie to heare, ſo you will promiſe to abide their judgement. How ſay you, will you promiſe here afore my Lords ſo to doe?

Phil. I will be contented to be judged by them.

Rich. Yea but will you promiſe to agree to their judgement?

Phil. There be cauſes why I may not ſo do unleſſe I were ſure they would judge according to the word of God.

Rich. O, I perceive you wil have no man judge but your ſelfe, and thinke your ſelfe wiſer then all the learned men in this realme.

Phil. My Lord, I ſeek not to be mine own judge, but am content to be judged by other, ſo that the order of judgement in matters of religion be kept that was in the primitive church, which is, firſt that Gods will by his word was ſought, and thereunto both the ſpiritualty & temporalty was gathered together, and gave their conſents and judgement, and ſuch kind of judgement I will ſtand to.

The true order of judgement uſed in the primitive church.

London. My Lords he would make you beleeve that he were profoundly ſeen in ancient writers of the judgements of the Primitive Church, and there was never any ſuch manner of judgement uſed as he now talketh of.

B. Boner bewraieth his own ignorance.

Phil. In the Epiſtles of Saint Cyprian I am able to ſhew it you.

London. Ah, I tell you there is no ſuch thing; fet me Cyprian hither.

B. Boner dare not fet out his booke.

Phil. You ſhall finde it otherwiſe when the booke cometh. And Doctor Chedſey his chaplain (whom he appointed to fet his book) whiſpered the biſhop in his eare, and fet not the book, by likelihood that he ſhould have ſuſtained the reproch thereof if the book had been fet. Well my Lord, quoth I, M. Doctor knoweth it is ſo, or elſe he would have fet the book ere this.

Rich. You would have none other judge, I ſee, but the word.

Phil. Yes my Lord: I wil be tried by the word, and by ſuch as will judge according to the word. As for an example, if there were a controverſie betweene your Lordſhip and another upon the words of a ſtatute, muſt not the words of the ſtatute judge and determine the controverſie?

Rich. No mary, the iudges of the Law may determine of the meaning thereof.

London. He hath brought as good an example againſt himſelfe as can be.

And here the Biſhop thought he had good handfaſt againſt me, and therefore enlarged it with many words to the judgement of the Church.

B. Boner triumphes before the victorie.

The Lords. He hath overthrowne himſelfe by his owne argument.

Phil. My Lords, it ſeemeth to your honors that you have great advantage of me by the example I brought in, to expreſſe my cauſe, but if it be pondered throughly, it maketh wholly with me, & nothing againſt me, as my L. of London hath pretended. For I will ask of my L. Rich here whom I know to have good knowledge in the lawes and ſtatutes

As a judge of the Law may not diſcerne th meaning of a ſtatute otherwiſe then agreeable to the words: ſo hat the church no power to judg the meaning o Gods word co trary to it ſelfe ſtatutes of this realme, albeit a judge may diſcern the meaning of a ſtatute agreeable to the words, whether the ſame may judge a meaning contrary to the expreſſe words or no?

Rich. He cannot ſo do.

Phil. Even ſo ſay I, that no man ought to judge the word of God to have a meaning contrarie to the expreſſe words thereof, as this falſe Church of Rome doth in many things; and with this the Lords ſeemed to be ſatiſfied, and made no further replication herein.

Objection of the Lord Rich why the words of the ſcripture are not to be taken; this is my body.

Rich. I marvell then why you do deny the expreſſe words of Chriſt in the ſacrament, ſaying, This is my body, and yet you will not ſtick to ſay it is not his body. Is not God omnipotent? and is not he able aſwell by his omnipotencie to make it his body, as he was to make man fleſh of a piece of clay? Did not he ſay; This is my body which ſhall be betraied for you? and was not his very body betrayed for us? therefore it muſt needs be his body.

London. My Lord Rich, you have ſaid wonderfull well and learnedly. But you might have begun with him before alſo in the 6. of John, where Chriſt promiſed to give his body in the ſacrament of the altar, ſaying, Panis quem ego dabo, caro mea eſt; The bread which I will give is my fleſh. How can you anſwer to that?

Phil. If it pleaſe you to give me leave to anſwer firſt my Lord Rich, I will alſo anſwer this Objection.

Rich. Anſwer my Lord of London firſt, and after come to me.

Anſwer to B. Boners objection.

Phil. My Lord of London may be ſoone anſwered, that the ſaying of ſaint John is, that the humanity of Chriſt, which he took upon him for the redemption of man, is the bread of life, whereby our bodies and ſouls be ſuſtained to eternall life, of the which the ſacramentall bread is a lively repreſentation and an effectuall coaptation, to all ſuch as beleeve on his paſſion. And as Chriſt ſaith in the ſame ſixth of John, I am the bread that came down from heaven; but yet he is not materiall neither naturall bread: Likewiſe the bread is his fleſh, not naturall or ſubſtantiall, but by ſignification, and by grace in the Sacrament.

The place Joh. 6. expounded, (The bread that I will give is my fleſh, &c.) Anſwer to the Lord Riches objection.

Papiſts catercoſins to the Capernaites. Tranſubſtantiation hath neither ground of Scripture, nor antiquitie.

And now to my Lord Riches argument. I do not deny the expreſſe words of Chriſt in the ſacrament, This is my body, but I deny that they are naturally and corporally to be taken: they muſt be taken ſacramentally and ſpiritually, according to the expreſſe declaration of Chriſt, ſaying, that the words of the ſacrament which the Capernaits took carnally, as the Papiſts now do, ought to be taken ſpiritually and not carnally, as they falſely imagine, not weighing what interpretation Chriſt hath made in this bahalf, neither following the inſtitution of Chriſt, neither the uſe of the Apoſtles & of the primitive Church, who never taught, neither declared any ſuch carnall manner of preſence as is now exacted of us violently without any ground of Scripture or antiquity, who uſed to put out of the Church all ſuch as did not receive the ſacrament with the reſt, and alſo to burn that which was left after the receiving, as by the Canon of the Apoſtles, and by the decree of the Councell of Antioch may appear.

Lond. No, that is not ſo; they were onely Catechumeni which went out of the Church at the celebration of the Communion, and none other.

Phil. It was not onely of ſuch as were Novices in faith, but all others that did not receive.

Lond. What ſay you to the omnipotency of God? is not he able to perform that which he ſpake, as my Lord Rich hath very well ſaid: I tell thee, that God by his omnipotency may make himſelf to be this carpet if he will.

Pſal. 135.

Phil. As concerning the omniſpotencie of God, I ſay that God is able to do (as the Prophet David ſaith) whatſoever he willeth; but he willeth nothing that is not agreeable to his word; as that is blaſphemy which my Lord of London hath ſpoken, that God may become a carpet. For as I have learned of ancient writers; Non poteſt Deus facere quæ ſunt naturæ ſuæ contraria, That is, God cannot do that which is contrary to his nature, as it is contrary to the nature of God to be a carpet. A carpet is a creature; and God is the creator; and the creator cannot be the creature: wherefore unleſſe you can declare by the word, that Chriſt is otherwiſe preſent with us then ſpiritually and ſacramentally by grace, as he hath taught us, you pretend the omnipotency of God in vain.

B. Boners irreverent and blaſphemous ſpeaking of God.

The omnipotencie pretended in vain.

Lond. Why? Wilt thou not ſay that Chriſt is really preſent in the ſacrament? Or do you deny it.

Phil. I deny not that Chriſt is really in the ſacrament to the receiver thereof according to Chriſts inſtitution.

Chriſt in the ſacrament really preſent to the receiver. What he calleth really.

Lond. What mean you by really preſent?

Phil. I mean by really preſent, preſent indeed.

London. Is God really preſent every where?

Philpot. He is ſo.

Lond. How prove you that?

Phil. The Prophet Eſay ſaith, That God filleth all places: and whereſoever there be two or three gathered together in Chriſts name, there is he in the midſt of them.

Lond. What? his humanitie?

Philpot. No my Lord, I mean the deitie, according to that you demanded.

Rich. My Lord of London, I pray you let maſter Doctor Chedſey reaſon with him, and let us ſee how he can anſwer him, for I tell thee he is a learned man indeed, and one that I do credit before a great many of you, whoſe doctrine the Queenes Majeſty and the whole realme doth well allow, therefore hear him.

B. Boner too weak for John Philpot.

Lond. My Lords I pray you, will it pleaſe you to drink? you have talked a great while, and much talk is thirſtie. I will leave M. Doctor and him reaſoning together a while, with your leave, and will come to you by and by again. He went (as I ſuppoſe) to make roome for more drink, after the Lords had drunken.

The Lords fall to drinking.

Rich. My Lord Rich ſaid to the Lords, I pray you let the poore man drink, for he is thirſtie: and with that he called for a cup of drink, and gave it me, and I drank before them all: God requite it him, for I was athirſt indeed. Afterwards doctor Chedſey began in this wiſe, making a great proceſſe, of the which this is the effect.

L. Rich biddeth M. Philpot drink.

Ched. M. Philpot findeth fault with the Convocation houſe before your Lordſhips, that he hath lain thus long in priſon, and that he had there a doſen arguments, whereof he could not be ſuffered to proſecute one throughly, which is not ſo; for he had “ leave to ſay what he could, and was anſwered to as much as he was able to bring; and when he had “ nothing elſe to ſay, he fell to weeping. I was there preſent and can teſtifie thereof; albeit there is a book abroad of the report of the diſputation to the contrary, in the which there is “ never a true word. And whereas you require to be ſatiſfied of the ſacrament, I wil ſhew you the “ truth thereof, both by the Scriptures, and by the Doctors.

Chedſey beginneth to diſpute with M. Philpot.

4. Untruths of Chedſey, at one clap.
“ 1. Untruth.
“ 2. Untruth.
“ 4. Untruth.

Phil. It is a ſhrewd likelihood that you will not conclude with any truth, ſince you have begun with ſo many untruths, as to ſay that I was anſwered whiles I had any thing to ſay, and that I wept for lack of matter to ſay, and that the book of the report of the diſputation is nothing true. God be praiſed, there were a good many of Noblemen, Gentlemen, and worſhipfull men that heard and ſaw the doings thereof, which can teſtifie that you here have made an unjuſt report before theſe honorable Lords. And that I wept, was not for lack of matter, as you ſlander me; for I thank

M. Philpot anſwered D. Chedſey.

God, I have more matter then the beſt of you all ſhall ever be able to anſwer, as little learning as I have: but my weeping was, as Chriſts was upon Jeruſalem, ſeeing the deſtruction that ſhould fall upon her; and I foreſeeing then the deſtruction which you (through violence and unrighteouſneſſe which you there declared) would work againſt the true Church of Chriſt and his faithfull members, as this day beareth witnes, was compelled to weep in remembrance of that which I with infinite more have felt and ſhall feel.

Jo. Philpot interrupted in his anſwer.

All theſe words I did then ſpeak out, being interrupted by my Lord Rich, ſaying that I ſhould ſuffer him to proceed out in this matter, and afterwards I ſhould have leaſure to anſwer him in every article. But he promiſed more then he could perform, as the end did well declare, for he had not the conſent of the ſpiritualty to his promiſe, which now rule the roſt. God ſhorten their cruell dayes, for his elects ſake. And therefore I adde this, which I had purpoſed to have ſpoken if then I might have been ſuffered, leſt any that perfectly know not the things done in the Convocation houſe and now laid to my charge, if they ſhould not be anſwered by me, might reckon doctor Chedſeies ſayings to be true. And as concerning the book of the report of the diſputations, I wrote the ſame, and it is true in every argument, as maſter Deane of Rocheſter, and maſter Cheyney Archdeacon of Herford (yet being alive, and within the realm) can teſtifie.

Praiſe be to the Lord, for ſo he hath.

Ched. You have of Scriptures the foure Evangeliſts for the probation of Chriſts reall preſence to be in the ſacrament after the words of conſecration, with S. Paul to the Corinthians; which all ſay, Hoc eſt corpus meum, This is my body. They ſay not as you would have me to beleeve, this is not the body. But ſpecially the 6. of John proveth the ſame moſt manifeſtly, where Chriſt promiſed to give his body, which he performed in his laſt ſupper, as it appeareth by theſe words, Panis quem ego dabo, caro mea eſt, quam ego dabo pro mundi vita, The bread which I will give is my fleſh, which I will give for the life of the world.

Chedſey proveth the ſacrament by the ſixth of John.

Philpot. My Lord Rich, with your leave, I muſt needs interrupt him a little, becauſe he ſpeaketh open blaſphemie againſt the death of Chriſt: for if that promiſe brought in by S. John was performed by Chriſt in his laſt ſupper, then needed he not to have died after he had given the ſacrament.

Rich. Let M. Doctor make an end of his arguments, and afterward object to him what you can.

Ched. You muſt note that there is twiſe “Dabo in this ſaying of S. John, and the firſt is referred to the ſacrament of the altar; and the ſecond to the ſacrifice upon the Croſſe: and beſides theſe manifeſt Scriptures, there be many ancient Doctors proving the ſame, as Ignatius, Irenæus, and S. Cyprian (whoſe authoritie he recited at large) which I do omit becauſe I was not permitted to anſwer the ſame.

“ So is there twiſe Ego too, and yet but one naturall body.

Rich. Now anſwer, and object to him what you can, and you ſhall be heard.

Phil. My Lord, the chiefeſt ground wheron he with the reſt of his ſide do ground themſelves againſt us, be theſe words, This is my body, with a falſe pretence of the omnipotencie of God. And before I will come to the particular anſwers of all that he hath alledged, for that your Lordſhips may the better underſtand me, what I mean, and whereupon I ſtand, I will firſt require M. Doctor to anſwer me one queſtion. But firſt of all I do proteſt to your honors that I think as reverently of the Sacrament, as a Chriſtian man ought to do, and that I acknowledge the Sacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt, miniſtred after Chriſts inſtitution, to be one of the greateſt treaſures and comforts that he left us on the earth: and contrariwiſe it is moſt diſcomfort and abominable, not being miniſtred as it ought to be, as it is uſed now adayes. And now to my queſtion, which is this; whether theſe words onely, Hoc eſt corpus meum, This is my bodie, ſpoken by a Prieſt over the bread and wine, may make the body and blood of Chriſt, as you ſuppoſe or no?

Jo. Philpot anſwereth with proteſtation.

A queſtion of John Philpot.

Chedſey, Staggering what he might ſay, at laſt he ſaid, that theſe words alone, pronounced by the prieſt, be ſufficient to make the bread and the wine the very body and blood of Chriſt really.

Phil. That is blaſphemie to ſay, and againſt all the Scriptures and Doctors, who affirm that the form and ſubſtance in conſecration muſt be obſerved which Chriſt uſed and did inſtitute, as S. Cyprian ſaith, In ſacrificio quod Chriſtus eſt, non niſi Chriſtus ſequendus: In the ſacrifice which is Chriſt, onely Chriſt is to be followed. And by the Law it is forbidden to adde or take away from Gods word. And ſaint Peter ſaith, If any man ſpeak, let him ſpeake as the word of God. Wherefore whoſoever ſaith that theſe words onely, This is my body, do make a preſence of Chriſt, without bleſſe, take, and eat, which be three as ſubſtantiall points of the Sacrament, as, This is my body, is, he is highly deceived.

Blaſphemy to ſay that theſe words onely (this is my body) make a reall preſence.

Cypri. lib. 2. Epiſt. 3.

Therefore ſaint Auſtine ſaith, Accedat verbum ad elementum & fit Sacramentum; Let the word be joyned to the element, and it becometh a Sacrament: So that if the intire words of Chriſts Inſtitution be not obſerved in the miniſtration of a Sacrament, it is no Sacrament; as the ſacrifices which the ten tribes did offer at Bethel to God, were not acceptable, becauſe they were not in al points done according to Gods word. Wherefore except bleſſing be made after the word (which is a due thankſgiving for our redemption in Chriſt) and alſo a ſhewing forth of the Lords death in ſuch wiſe as the congregation may be edified; and moreover a taking and eating after Chriſts commandement; except (I ſay) theſe three parts be firſt performed (which is not done in the Maſſe) theſe words; This is my body, which are laſt placed in the inſtitution of the Lords ſupper, cannot be verified. For Chriſt commanded as well, Take ye, eat ye, as This is my bodie.

Theſe words (bleſſe, take, and eat) be as ſubſtantiall points of the ſacrament as (this is my body.)

Hereof read more in the examinations of M. Bradford.

Ched. Chriſt ſaid, Take, eat, this is my body, and not, take ye, eat ye.

Philpot. No did, maſter doctor? Be not theſe the words of Chriſt: Accipite, manducate? and do not theſe words in the plural number ſignifie, Take ye, eat ye, and not take thou, eat thou, as you would ſuppoſe?

M. doctor taken with the manner.

Ched. I grant it is as you ſay.

Phil. Likewiſe of conſequencie, you (M. Doctor) muſt needs deny which you have ſaid, that theſe words, This is my body, being onely ſpoken, be ſufficient to make the body and blood of Chriſt in the Sacrament, as you have untruly ſaid.

London. Then came in the Biſhop again and ſaid, what is it that you would have M. doctor deny?

Phil. My Lord, M. doctor hath affirmed that theſe words, This is my body, ſpoken by the prieſt, onely do make the ſacrament.

London. Indeed if M. Bridges ſhould ſpeak theſe words over the bread and wine, they would be of none effect: but if a prieſt ſpeak them after a due manner, they are effectuall, and make a reall body.

The words of Chriſt (this is my body) except a prieſt ſpeake them make no body.

Philpot. M. Doctor hath ſaid otherwiſe.

London. I think you miſtake him; for he meaneth of the words duely pronounced.

Phil. Let him revoke that he hath granted, & then will I begin again with that which before was ſaid; that, This is my body, hath no place, except, bleſſe, take, and eat, duely go before. And therefore becauſe the ſame words do not go before, This is my body, but prepoſterouſly follow in your ſacrament of the Maſſe, it is not the Sacrament of Chriſt, neither hath Chriſt in it preſent.

Ched. If, This is my body onely do not make the ſacrament, no more do, bleſſe, take, and eat.

Phil. I grant that the one without the other cannot make the Sacrament. And it can be no Sacrament unleſſe the whole action of Chriſt doth concur together according to the firſt Inſtitution.

Ched. Why, then you would not have it to be the body of Chriſt, unleſſe it be received?

Sacraments without their uſe be no ſacraments.

Phil. No verily, it is not the very body of Chriſt to any other, but ſuch as condignely receive the ſame after his inſtitution.

London. Is not a loaf a loaf, being ſet on the table though no body eat thereof?

Phil. It is not like my Lord; for a loaf is a loaf before it be ſet on the table: but ſo is not the Sacrament a perfect ſacrament before it be duly miniſtred at the table of the Lord.

London. I pray you, what is it in the mean while, before it is received.

The ſacrament of the Lords bodie without receiving, is no ſacrament.

Phil. It is, my Lord, the ſigne begun of a holy thing, and yet no perfect ſacrament untill it be received. For in the Sacrament there be two things to be conſidered, the ſigne and the thing it ſelf, which is Chriſt and his whole paſſion; and it is that to none but to ſuch as worthily receive the holy ſignes of bread and wine, according to Chriſts inſtitution.

Windſor. There were never any that denied the words of Chriſt as you do. Did not he ſay, This is my body?

Phil. My Lord, I pray you be not deceived. We do not deny the words of Chriſt: but we ſay, theſe words be of none effect, being ſpoken otherwiſe then Chriſt did inſtitute them in his laſt ſupper. For an example; Chriſt biddeth the Church to baptize in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the holy Ghoſt: if a prieſt ſay thoſe words over the water and there be no child to be baptized, thoſe words only pronounced do not make baptiſme. And again, Baptiſme, is onely baptiſme to ſuch as be baptized, and to none other ſtanding by.

As baptiſme, is no baptiſme but to the childe that is baptized, and not to the ſtanders by: ſo the ſacrament of the body is no ſacrament but to them that worthily receive.

L. Chamb. I pray you my Lord let me aſk him one queſtion. What kinde of preſence in the ſacrament (duely miniſtred according to Chriſts ordinance) do you allow?

Philpot. If any come worthily to receive, then do I confeſſe the preſence of Chriſt wholly to be, with all the fruits of his paſſion, unto the ſaid worthy receiver, by the ſpirit of God, and that Chriſt is thereby joyned to him and he to Chriſt.

L. Chamb. I am anſwered.

London. My Lords take no heed of him, for he goeth about to deceive you. His ſimilitude that he bringeth in of baptiſme is nothing like to the ſacrament of the Altar. For if I ſhould ſay to ſir John Bridges being with me at ſupper, and having a fat Capon, Take, eat, this is of a Capon, although he eat not thereof, is it not a Capon ſtill? And likewiſe of a piece of Beefe, or of a cup of wine, if I ſay; drink this is a cup of wine, is it not ſo, becauſe he drinketh not thereof?

My Lord is better ſkilled in a fat capon, then in Chriſts ſacrament.

Phil. My Lord, your ſimilitudes be too groſſe for ſo high myſteries as we have in hand, as if I were your equall I could more plainly declare, and there is much more diſſimilitude betweene common meats and drinks then there is between baptiſme and the ſacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt. Like muſt be compared to like, and ſpiritual things with ſpirituall, and not ſpirituall things with corporall things. And meats and drinks be of their own natures good or evill, and your words, commending or diſcommending, do but declare what they are. But the ſacraments be to be conſidered according to the word which Chriſt ſpake of them, of the which, Take ye, and eat ye, be ſome of the chief, concurrent to the making of the ſame, without the which there can be no ſacraments: and therefore in Greek, the Sacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt is called κοινωνία, i. Communion, and likewiſe in the Goſpel Chriſt commanded, ſaying, Dividite inter vos, i. Divide it among you.

Ched. Saint Paul calleth it a Communication.

Phil. That doth more expreſly ſhew that there muſt be a participation of the ſacrament together.

London. My Lords, I am ſorry I have troubled you ſo long with this obſtinate man, with whom we can do no good; I will trouble you no longer now: and with that the Lords roſe up, none of them ſaying any evill word unto me, halfe amazed, in my judgement, God work it to good.

You are too weak my Lords, you may riſe when ye will.

Thus ended the ſixth part of this Tragedie: The ſeventh look for with joy.

The ſeventh examination of Iohn Philpot, had the nineteenth of November, before the Biſhops of London and Rocheſter, the Chancellor of Lichfield, and Doctor Chedſey.

London. Sirrha come hither. How chance you come no ſooner? Is it well done of you to make M. Chancellor and me to tarry for you this houre? by the faith of my body, half an houre before maſſe, and half an houre even at maſſe, looking for your coming.

Another calling of Jo. Philpot before the biſhop

Philpot. My Lord, it is not unknown to you that I am a priſoner, and that the doores be ſhut upon me, and I cannot come when I liſt; but as ſoone as the doores of my priſon were open, I came immediately.

London. We ſent for thee to the intent thou ſhouldeſt have come to Maſſe. How ſay you, would you have come to Maſſe or no, if the doores had ſooner been opened?

Philpot. My Lord, that is another manner of queſtion.

Lond. Lo M. Chancellor, I told you we ſhould have a froward fellow of him; he will anſwer directly to nothing. I have had him before both the ſpirituall Lords and temporall, and thus he fareth ſtill; yet he reckoneth himſelfe better learned then all the Realme. Yea, before the temporall Lords, the other day, he was ſo fooliſh to challenge the beſt: he would make himſelf learned, and is a very ignorant fool indeed.

You ſaid before he was learned.

Phil. I reckon I anſwered your Lordſhip before the Lords plain enough.

London. Why anſwereſt thou not directly, whether thou wouldeſt have gone to maſſe or no, if thou haddeſt come in time?

Philpot. Mine anſwer ſhall be thus, that if your Lordſhip can prove your Maſſe, whereunto you would have me to come, to be the true ſervice of God, whereunto a Chriſtian ought to come, I will afterward come with a good will.

Lond. Look I pray you: the King and the Queen, and all the Nobilitie of the Realme do come to Maſſe, and yet he will not. By my faith thou art too well handled: thou ſhalt be worſe handled hereafter, I warrant thee.

Note how ſubſtantially B. Boner proveth the Maſſe.

Phil. If to lie in a blinde Colehouſe, may be counted good handling, both without fire and candle, then may it be ſaid, I am well handled. Your Lordſhip hath power to intreat my body as you liſt.

London. Thou art a foole, and a verie ignorant foole. Maſter Chancellor, in good faith I have handled him and his fellows with as much gentleneſſe as they can deſire. I let their friends come unto them to relieve them. And wot you what? the other day they had gotten themſelves up into the top of the leads with a many of prentiſes, gazing abroad as though they had been at libertie; but I will cut off your reſort: and as for the prentiſes, they were as good not to come to you, if I take them.

Philpot.

Phil. My Lord, we have no ſuch reſort to us as your lordſhip imagineth, and there cometh very few unto us. And of Prentiſes I know not one, neither have we any leads to walk on over our Colehouſe, that I wote of: wherefore your lordſhip hath miſtaken your mark.

The priſoners charged with that they neither did nor knew of.

He meaneth Steven Gardiner, which in this moneth died a little before.

London. Nay: now you thinke (becauſe my Lord Chancellor is gone) that we will burn no moe: yes I warrant thee, I will diſpatch you ſhortly, unleſſe you do recant.

Philpot. My Lord, I had not thought that I ſhould have been alive now, neither ſo raw as I am, but well roſted to aſhes.

Chanc. Caſt not your ſelf wilfully away M. Philpot. Be content to be ruled by my lord here, and by other learned men of this Realm, and you may do well enough.

M. Philpot ſtandeth upon his conſcience and the fear of God.

Phil. My conſcience beareth me record that I ſeek to pleaſe God, and that the love and feare of God cauſeth me to do as I do: and I were of all other creatures moſt miſerable, if for mine own will onely I do loſe all the commodities I might have in this life, and afterward be caſt to damnation. But I am ſure, it is not my will whereon I ſtand, but Gods will, which will not ſuffer me to be caſt away, I am ſure.

Chanc. You are not ſo ſure, but you may be deceived.

B. Boner proceedeth Ex officio with M. Philpot.

London. Well, ſince thou will not be conformable by fair means, I will proceed againſt thee Ex officio, and therefore hearken here to ſuch articles as I have here written, and I charge thee to make anſwer to them; and with that he read a libell which he had in his hand of divers articles, and when he had done, he bad me anſwer.

2. Untruths in the Biſhops articles.

Phil. Your libell, my lord, containeth in ſumme two ſpeciall points: The firſt pretendeth, that I ſhould be of your Dioceſſe, and therefore your Lordſhip, upon divers ſuſpects and infamies of hereſie going upon me, is moved to proceed againſt me by your ordinarie office; the which firſt is not true, for that I am not of your Lordſhips Dioceſſe, as the libell doth pretend. And the ſecond is, that I being baptized in the Catholique church, and in the Catholique faith, am gone from them, the which is not ſo, for I am of that Catholique faith and church as I was baptized unto.

Lond. What? art thou not of my Dioceſſe? where are ye now I pray you?

Phil. My Lord, I cannot deny but I am in your Colehouſe, which is your Dioceſſe: yet I am not of your Dioceſſe.

Lond. You were ſent hither unto me by the Queens Majeſties commiſſioners, and thou art now in my dioceſſe: wherefore I will proceed againſt thee as thy Ordinarie.

John Philpot challengeth the priviledge of his ordinarie right.

Philpot. I was brought hither through violence, and therefore my preſent being now in your dioceſſe is not enough to abridge me of mine own ordinary juriſdiction, neither maketh it me willingly ſubject to your juriſdiction, ſince it cometh by force, and by ſuch men as had no juſt authoritie ſo to do; no more then a ſanctuarie man, being by force brought forth of his place of priviledge, doth thereby loſe his priviledge, but alwayes may challenge the ſame whereſoever he be brought.

Chedſey. Hath not the Queenes Majeſties authoritie, by her commiſſioners, to remove your bodie whither ſhe will? and ought you not to obey herein?

Spirituall things are not ſubject to temporall powers, and therefore the temporall commiſſioners had no power to remove him into another mans dioceſſe.

Philpot. I grant that the Queenes Majeſty (of her juſt power) may tranſpoſe my body, whither it ſhal pleaſe her grace to command the ſame. But yet by your laws Spiritualia non ſunt ſubjecta Imperatoris poteſtati. i. Spirituall cauſes be not ſubject to the temporall power. As for example; you maſter Doctor, if the Queenes Majeſty would appoint two temporall men to be judges over you in certain ſpirituall matters, might not you alledge the priviledge of a clark, and demand competent ſpirituall judges in your cauſes?

Lond. Doth not a man (I pray you) ſortiri forum ratione delicti?

Philpot. My Lord, your rule is true in temporall matters, but in ſpirituall cauſes it is not ſo: which be otherwiſe priviledged.

Lon. What ſaiſt thou then to the ſecond article, and to the other?

Philpot. My Lord, I ſay that I am not bound to anſwer the ſecond, neither the reſt, unleſſe the firſt be proved.

Lond. Well, ſuppoſe the firſt may be proved, as it will be, what will you ſay then to the ſecond, that you are not of the ſame Catholique faith, neither of the ſame church now, as you were baptized in?

Phil. I am of the ſame Catholique faith, and of the ſame Catholique Church which is of Chriſt, the pillar and ſtabliſhment of truth.

Lond. Nay that you are not.

Phil. Yes that I am.

London. Your godfathers and godmothers were of another faith then you be now.

A man is not baptized into his godfathers faith nor his godmothers faith: but into the faith of Chriſts church.

Phil. I was not baptized either into my godfathers faith or my godmothers, but into the faith and into the church of Chriſt.

Lond. How know you that?

Phil. By the word of God, which is the touchſtone of faith, and the limits of the Church.

London. How long hath your Church ſtood I pray you?

Philpot. Even from the beginning, from Chriſt and from his Apoſtles, and from their immediate ſucceſſors.

John Philpot proveth his church to be from Chriſt.

Chancel. He will prove his Church to be before Chriſt.

Philpot. If I did ſo I go not amiſſe: for there was a church before the coming of Chriſt, which maketh one Catholique Church.

Chanc. It is ſo indeed.

No rule better then Antiquity, Univerſalitie, and Unitie, to prove the true faith and church of the Proteſtants.

Phil. I will deſire no better rule then the ſame which is oftentimes brought in of your ſide, to prove both my faith and the Catholique church; that is, antiquitie, univerſalitie, and unitie.

Lond. Do you not ſee what a bragging fooliſh fellow this is? He would ſeeme to be verie well ſeene in the Doctors, and he is but a foole. By what Doctor art thou able to prove thy Church? Name him, and thou ſhalt have him.

Philpot. My Lord, let me have all your ancient writers, with pen, and inke, and paper, and I will prove both my faith and my church out of every one of them.

Becauſe you dare not.

London. No that thou ſhalt not have. You ſhall ſee how he lieth. Saint Cyprian ſaith, There muſt be one high Prieſt, to the which the reſidue muſt obey, and they will allow no head, neither Vicar general.

S. Cyprian meaneth every church to have his own governor, not all churches to be under one.

Philpot. Saint Cyprian ſaith not, that there ſhould be a vicar generall over all. For in his book De ſimplicitate prælatorum, I am ſure he ſaith the contrary; Vnus Epiſcopatus eſt, cujus pars in ſolidum à ſingulis tenetur. i. There is but one Biſhoprick which is wholly poſſeſſed of every Biſhop in part.

Lond. Fet hither the book, thou ſhalt ſee the manifeſt place againſt thee.

Cypri. lib. 1. Epiſt. 3.

Doctor Chedſey brought the book, and turned to the place in an epiſtle written unto Cornelius, then biſhop of Rome, and recited theſe words in ſumme, That it went not well with the Church, where the high Prieſt was not obeyed, and ſo would have concluded for the confirmation of the Biſhops ſaying.

The place of S. Cyprian explained.

Philpot. Maſter doctor you miſconſtrue the place of ſaint Cyprian; for he meaneth not there by the high prieſt, the biſhop of Rome, but every Patriarke in his precinct, of whom there were foure appointed in his time. And in writing unto Cornelius he meaneth by the high prieſt, himſelfe, which was then chiefe Biſhop of Africa, whoſe authoritie the heretiques began to deſpiſe. Whereof he complaineth to Cornelius, and ſaith, the Church cannot be well ordered, where the chiefe miniſter by order, after the judgement of the ſcriptures, after the agreement of the people, and the conſent of his fellow biſhops, is not obeyed.

London. Hath not the Biſhop of Rome alwayes been ſupreme head of the Church, and Chriſts vicar in earth even from Peter?

The Biſhop of Rome no more head of the church, then the B. of London.

Philpot. No, that he was not. For by the word of God he hath no more authority, then the Biſhop of London hath.

Lond. Was not Peter head of the Church, and hath not the Biſhop of Rome, which is his ſucceſſor, the ſame authoritie?

Peter had no more authority over the church then every one of the apoſtles.

Philpot. I grant that the Biſhop of Rome, as he is the ſucceſſor of Peter, hath the ſame authority as Peter had: but Peter had no more authority then every one of the Apoſtles had.

Chanc. Yes that S. Peter had; for Chriſt ſaid ſpecially unto him, Tibi dabo claves regni cœlorum; I will give thee the keyes of the kingdome of heaven; the which he ſpake to none other of his diſciples ſingularly, but to him.

Peter beareth but a figure of the Church.

Phil. S. Auguſtine anſwereth otherwiſe to the objection, and ſaith, That if in Peter there had not been the figure of the Church, the Lord had not ſaid to him, To thee I will give the keyes of the kingdome of Heaven. The which if Peter received not, the Church hath them not. If the Church hath them, then Peter hath them not.

B. Boners divinitie lieth much in the Civill Law.

London. What if I can prove and ſhew you out of the Civill Law, that all Chriſtendome ought to follow the holy Catholique Church of Rome, as there is a ſpeciall title thereof, De catholica fide & ſancta Romana Eccleſia?

Phil. That is nothing materiall, ſeeing the things of God be not ſubject to mans laws; and the divine matters muſt be ordered by the word of God, and not of man.

Cyprian.

A Doctor. What will you ſay, if I can prove that Chriſt builded his church upon Peter, and that out of S. Cyprian? Will you then beleeve that the B. of Rome ought to be ſupreme head of the Church?

Phil. I know what S. Cyprian writeth in that behalf; but he meaneth nothing as you take it.

A Doctor. S. Cyprian hath theſe words, Quod ſuper Petrum fundata fuit Eccleſia, tanquam ſuper originem unitatis, That upon Peter was builded the Church, as upon the firſt beginning of unity.

The place of Cyprian expounded.

Philpot. He declareth that in an example, that Unitie muſt be in the Church; he grounded on Peter his Church alone, and not upon men. The which he doth more manifeſtly declare in the book De ſimplicitate Prælatorum, ſaying, In perſona unius Chriſtus dedit omnibus claves, ut omnium unitatem denotaret. In the perſon of one man God gave the keyes to all, that he in ſignification thereby might declare the unitie of all men.

A Doctor. What will you underſtand S. Cyprian ſo? That were good indeed.

Philpot. I think you cannot underſtand S. Cyprian better, then he doth declare himſelf.

B. Boner goeth to the Parliament.

London. I will deſire you (M. Chancellor) to take ſome pains with M. D. Chadſey, about his examination, for I muſt go to the Parliament houſe. And I will deſire you to dine with me.

Philpot. Then the doctor took again his former authority in hand for want of another, and would have made a further circumſtance, digreſſing from his purpoſe. To whom I ſaid, he knew not whereabout he went, and therewith he laughed. And I ſaid his divinitie was nothing but ſcoffing.

M. doctor ſlippeth away.

M. Doctor. Yea, then I have done with you, and ſo went away.

Phil. You are too yong in divinitie to teach me in the matters of my Faith. Though you be learned in other things more then I, yet in Divinitie I have been longer practiſed then you, for any thing I can hear of you; therefore be not too haſty to judge that you do not perfectly know.

Chanc. Peter and his ſucceſſours from the beginning have been allowed for the ſupreme head of the Church, and that by the Scriptures, for that Chriſt ſaid unto him in S. John thriſe, Feed my ſheep, Paſce oves meas.

The words of Chriſt to Peter, feed my ſheep. Paſce oves meas, expounded by Ite, prædicate.

Philpot. That is no otherwiſe to be taken, then, Ite, prædicate, Go ye and preach, which was ſpoken to all the Apoſtles, as well as unto Peter. And that Chriſt ſaid thriſe, Paſce oves meas, Feed my ſheep, it ſignifieth nothing elſe but the earneſt ſtudy that the miniſters of God ought to have in preaching the word. God grant that you of the Clergy would weigh your dutie in this behalfe more then you do. Is this a juſt interpretation of the ſcripture, to take Paſce oves meas, for to be Lord of the whole world? In this meane while came in the Bachelor of Divinitie, which is a Reader of Greek in Oxford, belonging to the Biſhop, and he took upon him to help M. Chancellor.

Scholler. What will you ſay if I can ſhew you a Greek author called Theophylact, to interpret it ſo? Will you beleeve his interpretation?

Theophylact of no great authority.

Phil. Theophyl. is a late Writer, and one that was a favourer of the B. of Rome; and therefore not to be credited, ſince his interpretation is contrarie to the manifeſt words of the Scripture, and contrary to the determination of many generall Councels.

Schol. In what generall councell was it otherwiſe, that the B. of Rome was not ſupreme head over al?

In Nice Councell the B. of Rome was no ſupreme head nor preſident there.

Phil. In Nice Councel I am ſure it was otherwiſe; for Athanaſius was there the chief Biſhop and preſident of the Councell, and not the B. of Rome.

Scholler. Nay that is not ſo.

Phil. Then I perceive you are better ſeen in words then in knowledge of things: and I will gage with you what you will, it is ſo, as you may ſee in the Epitome of the Councels.

The ſcholler of Oxford ſhrinketh away.

Schol. I will fet Euſebius and ſhew the contrary, and the book of generall Councels. He went into my Lords cloſet, and brought Euſebius; but the generall Councels he brought not, ſaying (for ſaving of his honeſty) that he could not come by them, and there he would have defended that it was otherwiſe in Euſebius, but was not able to ſhew the ſame, and ſo ſhranke away confounded.

Chanc. The Church of Rome hath been alwayes taken for the whole Catholique Church; therefore I would adviſe you to come into the ſame with us. You ſee all the men of this Realme do condemne you. And why will you be ſo ſingular?

The Popes ſide not able to prove their church to be the holy Catholike church.

Phil. I have ſaid, and ſtill do ſay, that if you can be able to prove it unto me, that I will be of the ſame. But I am ſure that the Church, which you make ſo much of, is a falſe church, and a Synagogue of Satan. And you with the learned men of the realm do perſecute the true Church, and condemne ſuch as be more righteous then you.

Chanc. Do you hear (M. doctor) what he ſaith, that the church of Rome is the Devill?

Chad. I wiſh you did think more reverently of the church of Rome. What will you ſay if I can ſhew you out of S. Auſtin in his Epiſtle written unto Pope Innocentius, that the whole generall Councell of Carthage did allow the church of Rome to be chiefeſt over all other?

Phil. I am ſure you can ſhew no ſuch thing. And with that he fet the book of S. Auſtin, and turned to the Epiſtle: but he could not prove his allegation manifeſtly, but by conjectures in this wiſe.

Th[illegible] blinde conjectures out of the epiſtle of Auſtin to Innocentius proving the ſee of Rome to be ſupreme head.

Chad. Here you may ſee, that the Councell of Carthage writing to Innocent, the Biſhop, calleth the See of Rome the Apoſtolike See. And beſides this they write to him, certifying him of things done in the councel for the condemnation of the Donatiſts, requiring his approbations in the ſame, which they would not have done, if they had not taken the church of Rome for the ſupreme head of others. And moreover you may ſee how S. Auſtin doth prove the Church of Rome to be the Catholique Church by continuall ſucceſſion of the Biſhop untill his time, which ſucceſſion we can prove until our daies: therefore by the ſame reaſon of S. Auſtine we ſay now, that the Church of Rome is the Catholique Church.

The ſucceſſion of Biſhops from Peter to S. Auſtins time.

The conjectures of D. Chadſey anſwered. How the See of Rome may be called Apoſtolicall, and how not apoſtolicall. The being of Peter at Rome giveth no perpetuity to Rome to be the head of the whole Church.

Phil. M. Doctor, I have conſidered how you do weigh S. Auguſtine; and contrary to his meaning and words, you would infer your falſe concluſion. As concerning that it was called by him the Apoſtolicall See, that is not materiall to prove the Church of Rome now to be the Catholique church. I will grant it now that it is the Apoſtolique See, in reſpect that Paul & Peter did once there preach the Goſpel, and abode there for a certain ſeaſon. I would you could prove it to be the apoſtolicall ſee of the true religion and ſinceritie as the Apoſtle left it, and did teach the ſame; the which if ye could do, you might boaſt of Rome as of the apoſtolicall See; otherwiſe it is now of no more force, then if the Turk at Antioch and at Jeruſalem ſhould boaſt of the apoſtolicall Sees, becauſe the Apoſtles once did there abide, and founded the church of Chriſt.

The Councel of Carthage wrote to Innocentius B. of Rome, to confirm their acts with his ſubſcription: ergo, the B. of Rome is above all Biſhops. Argument, à cauſa non ſufficiente.

And whereas the whole councell of Carthage did write unto pope Innocentius, certifying him of that was done in the generall councell, and willing him to ſet his helping hand to the ſuppreſſing of the Donatiſts, as they had done; that fact of the Councell proveth nothing the ſupremacie of the Biſhop of Rome, no more then if the whole Convocation houſe now gathered together, and agreeing upon certain Articles, might ſend the ſame to ſome Biſhop, that upon certain impediments is not preſent, willing him to agree thereto, and to ſet them forth in his Dioceſſe. The which fact doth not make any ſuch B. of greater authority then the reſt, becauſe his conſent is brotherly required.

The ſcope of S. Auguſtines argument is not to prove the Church of Rome therefore to be found in the doctrine becauſe it hath ſucceſſion of Biſhops from the Apoſtles, but to prove the Donatiſts to be ſchiſmatikes, for that the church of Rome continuing both found in the doctrine of the Apoſtles, and alſo in retaining ſtill ſucceſſion of Biſhops from the Apoſtles time, yet they would forſake the unitie of that Church, and ſet up another church of their own.

The argument is this.

To diſſever from that Church which by continuall ſucceſſion of Biſhops deſcendeth from the Apoſtles, and keepeth the ſame inſtitution ſtill in faith and doctrine, is to break the unity of the church and to be Schiſmatikes.

The Donatiſts do ſo from the Church of Rome, having no juſt cauſe of doctrine ſo to do. Ergo, the Donatiſts be Schiſmatikes.

And touching the ſucceſſion of the Biſhops of Rome, brought in by S. Auguſtine, it maketh nothing now thereby to prove the ſame Catholique Church, unleſſe you can conclude with the ſame reaſon as S. Auguſtine doth. And the rehearſall of the ſucceſſion of the Biſhops doth tend to this onely, to prove the Donatiſts to be heretiques, becauſe they began as well at Rome as in Africa, to found another church of their own ſetting up then was grounded by Peter and Paul, and by their ſucceſſors, whom he reciteth untill his time, which all taught no ſuch doctrine, neither ſuch church as the Donatiſts. And if preſently you be able to prove by the Biſhops of Rome (whereof you do glory) that ſuch doctrine hath bin taught by any of the ſucceſſors of Peters ſee, as is now taught and beleeved of us, you have good reaſon againſt us: otherwiſe it is of no force, as I am able to declare.

The Chancellor about to miniſter Articles againſt John Philpot. John Philpot refuſeth the Chancellor to be his ordinary.

Chanc. Well M. Doctor, you ſee we can do no good in perſwading of him: let us miniſter the Articles which my Lord hath left us, unto him. How ſay you M. Philpot to theſe articles? M. Johnſon, I pray you write his anſwers.

Philpot. M. Chancellor, you have no authoritie to inquire of me my beliefe in ſuch articles as you go about, for that I am not of my Lord of Londons dioceſſe; and to be briefe with you, I will make no further anſwer herein, then I have already to the Biſhop.

Chanc. Why then let us go our wayes, and let his keeper take him away.

Thus endeth the ſeventh part of this Tragedie.

The ſumme of a private conference or talk between M. Philpot, and the Biſhop.

Private talk between M. Philpot and Biſhop Boner.

Philpot. The next day in the morning betime, the Biſhop ſent one of his men unto me, to call me up into his Chappell to hear Maſſe.

Biſhops man. M. Philpot where be you?

Phil. Who is it that calleth me?

Biſhops man. My Lords will is, you ſhould riſe and come to heare Maſſe: Will you come or no?

Philpot. My Stomacke is not verie good this morning: you may tell my Lord I am ſick. After this the Keeper was ſent to bring me to my Lord.

The Keeper. M. Philpot, you muſt riſe and come to my Lord.

Phil. I am at your commandement (M. Keeper) aſſoon as I can; and going out of the priſon, he asked me, ſaying:

A marvell how the prieſt eating up a whole man, fleſh, blood, and bone, to breakfaſt, can have ſuch an hungrie ſtomack to their dinner afterward as they have, as if they had eaten never a bit of meat before.

The Keeper. Will ye go to Maſſe?

Philpot. My ſtomack is too raw to digeſt ſuch raw meats of fleſh, blood, and bone, this morning. After this my Keeper preſented me to the Biſhop in his Hall.

London. Maſter Philpot, I charge you to anſwer unto ſuch articles as my Chaplain and my Regiſter have from me to object againſt you; go and anſwer them.

John Philpot refuſeth to anſwer but in open judgement.

Philpot. My Lord, Omnia judicia debent eſſe publica; All judgements ought to be publique. Therefore if your Lordſhip have any thing to charge me lawfully withall, let me be in judgement lawfully and openly called, and I will anſwer according to my dutie; otherwiſe in corners I will not.

Lond. Thou art a fooliſh knave I ſee well enough; thou ſhalt anſwer whether thou wilt or no, Go thy wayes with them I ſay.

Phil. I may well go with them at your Lordſhips pleaſure; but I will make them no further anſwers then I have ſaid already.

John Philpot commanded to be ſet in the ſtocks of the Colehouſe.

London. No wilt thou knave? Have him away, and ſet him in the Stocks: What, fooliſh knave?

Philpot. Indeed (my Lord) you handle me with others like fools: and we muſt be content to be made fools at your hands, ſtocks and violence be your Biſhoplike Alms. You go about by force in corners to oppreſſe, and be aſhamed that your doings ſhould come to light; God ſhorten your cruell kingdome for his mercies ſake. And I was put by and by into the Stocks, in an houſe alone, ſeparate from my fellows; God be praiſed that he hath thought me worthie to ſuffer any thing for his names ſake. Better it is to ſit in the ſtocks of this world, then to ſit in the ſtocks of a damnable conſcience.

Another conference between the Biſhop and maſter Philpot, and other priſoners.

Another dayes talk of the Biſhop with John Philpot and other priſoners.

Philpot. The next day after, an houre before day, the Biſhop ſent for me againe by the keeper.

The Keeper. M. Philpot ariſe, you muſt come to my Lord.

Philpot. I wonder what my Lord meaneth, that he ſendeth for me thus early, I feare he will uſe ſome violence towards me, wherefore I pray you make him this anſwer, That if he ſend for me by an order of Law, I will come and anſwer; otherwiſe, ſince I am not of his Dioceſſe, neither is he mine ordinarie, I will not (without I be violently conſtrained) come unto him.

Keeper. I will goe tell my Lord what anſwer you make: And ſo he went away to the Biſhop, and immediately returned with two of the Biſhops men, ſaying that I muſt come whether I would or no.

John Philpot brought to the B. by violence.

Philpot. If by violence any of you will enforce me to goe, then I muſt goe, otherwiſe I will not; and therewith one of them tooke me with force by the arme, and led me up into the Biſhops Gallerie.

London. What, Thou art a fooliſh Knave indeed; thou wilt not come without thou be fetcht.

Philpot. I am brought indeede (my Lord) by violence unto you, and your crueltie is ſuch, that I am afraid to come before you, I would your Lordſhip would gently proceed againſt me by the law.

Note here the juſt dealings of theſe biſhops.

London. I am blamed of the Lords the Biſhops, for that I have not diſpatched thee ere this. And in faith I made ſute to my Lord Cardinall, and to all the Convocation houſe, that they would heare thee. And my Lord of Lincolne ſtood up, and ſaid, that thou wert a frantike fellow, and a man that will have the laſt word. And they all have much blamed me, becauſe I have brought thee ſo often before the Lords openly: and they ſay it is meate and drinke to you to ſpeake in an open audience, you glory ſo of your ſelfe. Wherefore I am commanded to take a further order with thee, and in good faith if you wil not relent, I wil make no further delay. Marie if thou wilt be conformable, I will yet forgive thee all that is paſt, and thou ſhalt have none hurt for any thing that is already ſpoken or done.

This Biſhop of Lincolne was D. White.

John Philpot being archdeacon excommunicated biſhop White for preaching falſe doctrine.

Philpot. My Lord, I have anſwered you already in this behalfe, what I will do. And as for the report of Maſter White, biſhop of Lincolne, I paſſe not: who is known to be mine enemy, for that I being Archdeacon did excommunicate him for preaching naughty doctrine. If Chriſt my Maſter were called a mad man, it is no marvell though ye count me frantick.

London. Haddeſt not thou a pigge brought thee the other day with a knife in it? Wherefore was it (I pray thee) but to kill thy ſelfe? Or as it is told me (marie I am counſelled to take heed of thee) to kill me? but I feare thee not. I trow I am able to tread thee under my feete; doe the beſt thou canſt.

Matter made of a knife ſent to Jo. Philpot in a pigs belly.

Philpot. My Lord, I cannot denie but that there was a knife in the pigges belly that was brought me. But who put it in, or for what purpoſe I know not, unleſſe it were becauſe he that ſent the meat, thought I was without a knife, and ſo put it in. But other things your Lordſhip needeth not to feare: for I was never without a knife ſince I came to priſon. And touching your owne perſon, you ſhould live long if you ſhould live untill I goe about to kill you; and I confeſſe by violence your Lordſhip is able to overcome me.

Articles againe put to John Philpot.

London. I charge thee to anſwer to mine articles. Hold him a booke. Thou ſhalt ſwear to anſwer truly to all ſuch articles, as I ſhall demand of thee.

Phil. I will firſt know your Lordſhip to be mine Ordinarie, before I ſweare herein.

Lond. What, we ſhall have an Anabaptiſt of thee, which thinketh it not lawfull to ſweare before a judge.

Phil. My Lord, I am no Anabaptiſt, I thinke it lawfull to ſweare before a competent judge, being lawfully required. But I refuſe to ſweare in theſe cauſes before your Lordſhip, becauſe you are not mine Ordinarie.

B. Boner of meere power & authoritie pronounceth himſelfe to be Philpots ordinarie.

Lond. I am thine ordinarie, and here do pronounce by ſentence peremptorie, that I am thine Ordinarie, and that thou art of my Dioceſſe: and here he bad call in more to beare him witneſſe. And I make thee (taking one of his ſervants by the arme) to be my notarie. And now hearken to my Articles, to the which (when he had read them) he moniſhed me to make anſwer, and ſaid to the keeper, Fet me his fellowes, and I ſhall make them to be witneſſes againſt him.

In the mean while came in one of the Sheriffes of London, whom the biſhop (calling for two chairs) placed by him, ſaying, Maſter Sheriffe I would you ſhould underſtand how I doe proceede againſt this man. Maſter Sheriffe, you ſhall heare what articles this man doth maintaine; and ſo read a rablement of fained articles: That I ſhould deny baptiſme to be neceſſary to them that were born of Chriſtian parents, that I denied faſting & prayer, and all other good deeds, and I maintained onely bare faith to be ſufficient to ſalvation whatſoever a man did beſides, and I maintained God to be the author of all ſin and wickedneſſe.

Falſe articles feigned againſt Jo. Philpot.

Phil. Ha my Lord, have ye nothing of truth to charge me withall, but ye muſt be faine to imagine theſe blaſphemous lies againſt me? You might as well have ſaid I had killed your father. The ſcriptures ſay, That God will deſtroy all men that ſpeake lies. And is not your Lordſhip aſhamed to ſay before this worſhipfull Gentleman (who is unknowne to me) that I maintaine theſe abominable blaſphemies which you have rehearſed? which if I did maintain, I were wel worthy to be counted an heretike, and to be burned an hundred times if it were poſſible.

Lond. I doe object them unto thee, to heare what thou wilt ſay in them, and how thou canſt purge thy ſelfe of them.

B. Boner taken with an untruth.

Phil. Then it was not juſtly ſaid of your Lordſhip in the beginning, that I did maintaine them, ſince almoſt I hold none of theſe articles you have read, in forme as they are written.

Lond. How ſaiſt thou? Wilt thou anſwer to them or no?

Phil. I wil firſt know you to be mine ordinary, and that you may lawfully charge me with ſuch things, and then afterward being lawfully called in judgement, I will ſhew my minde fully thereof, and not otherwiſe.

Other priſoners called in to bear witneſſe againſt John Philpot.

London. Well, then I will make thy fellowes to be witneſſes herein againſt thee; where are they? come.

Keep. They be here my Lord.

Lond. Come hither ſirs, hold them a booke, you ſhall ſweare by the contents of that booke, that you ſhall (all manner of affections laid apart) ſay the truth of all ſuch Articles as you ſhall be demanded of, concerning this man here preſent, which is a very naughty man, and take you heed of him that he doth not deceive you, as I am afraid he doth you much hurt, and ſtrengthneth you in your errors.

The priſoners refuſed to be ſworne againſt M. Philpot.

Priſoners. My Lord, we will not ſweare, except we know whereto: we can accuſe him of no evill, we have beene but a while acquainted with him.

Phil. I wonder your lordſhip knowing the law wil go about, contrarie to the ſame, to have infamous perſons to be witneſſes, for your lordſhip doth take them to be heretikes, and by the law an heretike connot be a witneſſe.

B. Boner againe doth againſt the law.

Lond. Yes, one heretike againſt another may be well enough. And M. Sheriffe, I will make one of them to be a witneſſe againſt another.

Phil. You have the law in your hand, and you will do what you liſt.

Priſoners. No my Lord.

Note how the biſhops make Anabaptiſts.

London. No will, I will make you ſweare, whether you will or no. I weene they be Anabaptiſts, Maſter Sheriffe, they thinke it not lawfull to ſweare before a judge.

Philpot. We think it lawfull to ſweare for a man iudicially called, as we are not now, but in a blind corner.

London. Why then, ſeeing you will not ſweare againſt your fellow, you ſhall ſweare for your ſelves, and I doe here in the preſence of M. Sheriffe obiect the ſame articles unto you as I have done unto him, and doe require you under the paine of excommunication, to anſwer particularly unto every one of them when ye ſhall be examined, as ye ſhall be by and by examined by my regiſter and ſome of my chaplaines.

Priſoners. My Lord, we will not accuſe our ſelves. If any man can lay any thing againſt us, we are here ready to anſwer thereto: otherwiſe we pray your Lordſhip not to burthen us; for ſome of us are here before you, we know no iuſt cauſe why.

Lond. M. Sheriffe, I will trouble you no longer with theſe froward men. And ſo he roſe up and was going away, talking with M. Sheriffe.

B. Boner ſeeketh corners.

Phil. M. Sheriffe, I pray you record how my lord proceedeth againſt us in corners, without all order of law, having no iuſt cauſe to lay againſt us. And after this were all commanded to be put in the Stocks, where I ſate from morning untill night, and the keeper at night upon favor let me out.

Another private conference between the Biſhop and Maſter Philpot in the Colehouſe.

Another private talke or conference betwixt him and the Biſhop.

B. Boner viewing his Colehouſe.

PHil. The Sunday after, the Biſhop came into the Colehouſe at night with the Keeper, and viewed the houſe, ſaying that he was never here afore: whereby a man may gueſſe how he hath kept Gods commandement in viſiting the priſoners, ſeeing he was never with them that have beene ſo nigh his noſe: and he came not then for any good zeale, but to view the place, and thought it too good for me, and therefore after ſupper, betweene eight and nine, he ſent for me, ſaying.

Lond. Sir, I have great diſpleaſure of the Queen and the councel for keeping you ſo long, and letting you have ſo much libertie; and beſides that, you be yonder, and ſtrengthen the other priſoners in their errors, as I have laid wait for your doings, and am certified of you well enough: I will ſequeſter you therefore from them, and you ſhal hurt no moe as you have done, and I will out of hand diſpatch you, as I am commanded, unleſſe you will be a conformable man.

Phil. My lord, you have my body in your cuſtodie; you may tranſport it whither you pleaſe: I am content. And I would you would make as quicke expedition in my iudgement, as, you ſay, I long therefore; and as for conformitie, I am ready to yeeld to all truth, if any can bring better then I.

Lond. Why, wil you beleeve no man but your ſelfe, whatſoever they ſay.

Phil. My beleefe muſt not hang upon mens ſayings, without ſure authoritie of Gods word, the which if any can ſhew me, I will be pliant to the ſame; otherwiſe, I cannot go from my certain faith to that which is uncertaine.

Lond. Have you then the truth onely?

Phil. My Lord, I will ſpeake my minde freely unto you, and upon no malice I beare to you, before God. You have not the truth, neither are you of the church of God; but you perſecute both the truth and the true church of God, for the which cauſe you cannot proſper long. You ſee God doth not proſper your doings according to your expectation: He hath of late ſhewed his iuſt iudgement againſt one of your greateſt doers, who by report died miſerably. I envy not your authority you are in. You that have learning ſhould know beſt how to rule. And ſeeing God hath reſtored you to your dignitie and living againe, uſe the ſame to Gods glory, and to the ſetting forth of his true Religion; otherwiſe it will not continue, do what you can. With this ſaying he was apauſed, and ſaid at length.

He meaneth Ste. Gardiner B. of Winch.

Q. MARIE.

Good counſell given to Biſh. Boner.

Lon. That good man was puniſhed for ſuch as thou art. Where is the Keeper? come let him have him to the place that is provided for him. Go your way before.

Anno 1555. December.

Phil. And he followed me, calling the Keeper aſide, commanding to keepe all men from me, and narrowly to ſearch me (as the ſequell did declare) and brought me to his privie doore that goeth into the Church, and commanded two of his men to accompany the keeper, and to ſee me placed.

John Philpot conveyed into a cloſe tower ioyning to Pauls church.

And afterwards I paſſed through Pauls up to Lollards tower, and after that turned along all the Weſt ſide of Pauls through the wall, and paſſing through ſix or ſeaven doores, came to my lodging through many ſtraites; where I called to remembrance, that ſtraite is the way to heaven. And it is in a tower right on the other ſide of Lollards tower, as high almoſt as the battlements of Pauls, 8. foot of breadth, and 13. of length, & almoſt over the priſon where I was before, having a window opening toward the Eaſt, by the which I may look over the tops of a great many houſes, but ſee no man paſſing into them: and whoſo walketh in the biſhops utter gallerie going to his Chappell, may ſee my window and me ſtanding in the ſame.

M. Philpot ſearched for writings.

And as I was come to my place, the Keeper pluckt off my gowne, & ſearched me very narrowly, and took away penner, inkhorn, girdle, & knife, but (as God would) I had an inkling a little before I was called, of my removing, and thereupon made an errand to the ſtool, where ful ſore againſt my will I caſt away many a ſweet letter & friendly: but that I had written of my laſt examination before, I thruſt into my hoſe, thinking the next day to have made an end therof, and with going it was falne downe to my leg, the which he by feeling did ſoon eſpie, & asked what that was. I ſaid, they were certain letters: and with that he was very buſie to have them out. Let me alone (ſaid I) I will pluck them out; with that I put in my hand, having two other letters therin, and brought up the ſame writing to my codpeece, and there left it, giving him the other two letters that were not of any great importance; the which to make a ſhew that they had been weightie, I began to teare as well as I could, till they ſnatched them from me, and ſo deluded him (I thank God) of his purpoſe.

The copy of his examinations by Gods great working preſerved.

After this he went his way, and as he was going, one of them that came with him, ſaid, that I did not deliver the writings I had in my hoſe, but two other letters I had in my hand before. No did, quoth he? I will go ſearch him better: the which I hearing, conveyed my examination I had written, into another place beſides my bed, & took al my letters I had in my purſe, and was tearing of them when he came againe, and as he came I threw the ſame out of my window, ſaying, that I heard what he ſaid; wherefore I did prevent his ſearching again, whereof I was right glad. God be praiſed that gave me that preſent ſhift to blinde their eies from the knowledge of my writings, the which if they had knowne, it would have been a great occaſion of more ſtraiter keeping and looking unto, although they look as narrowly as they may.

The eighth examination of Iohn Philpot, before the Biſhop of London, the Biſhop of S. Davids, Maſter Mordant, and others, in the Biſhops Chappell.

The eighth examination of M. Philpot.

THe next day after, my keeper came before day in the morning to call me downe, and ſo was

I brought

Q. MARIE. Anno 1555. December.

I brought downe into his Wardrobe, where with a Keeper I was left, and there continued all the day. But after dinner I was called down into the Chappell, before the Biſhop of London, the Biſhop of Saint Davids, Maſter Mordant one of the Queenes Councell, Maſter Archdeacon of London, & before a great many more Baalamites, and the Biſhop ſpake unto me in this wiſe.

Articles objected and read to J. Philpot.

Lond. Sir, here I object and lay unto you in the preſence of my Lord of Saint Davids, and of maſter Mordant, and of theſe worſhipfull men, theſe articles here in this libell contained, and openly he read them.

To whom when I would particularly have anſwered to ſome of his blaſphemies, he would not permit me, but ſaid, I ſhould have leiſure enough to ſay what I would, when he had ſaid: And unto theſe here I adde another ſchedule. Alſo I require thee to anſwer to the catechiſme ſet forth in the ſchiſmaticall time of K. Edward. Alſo I will thee to anſwer to certaine Concluſions agreed upon both in Oxford and Cambridge. And I here doe bring forth theſe witneſſes againſt thee in thine owne preſence, namely my Lord of ſaint Davids, Maſter Mordant, and Maſter Harpsfield, with as many of you as were preſent in the Diſputation he made in the Convocation houſe; willing you to teſtifie, of your Oathes taken upon a booke, his ſtubborne and unreverent behaviour he did there uſe againſt the bleſſed ſacrament of the altar. Give me a book, and receiving one, he opened the ſame, ſaying; I will teach him here one trick in our Law which he knoweth not; that is, my Lord of ſaint Davids, becauſe you are a Biſhop, you have this priviledge, that you may ſweare, Inſpectis Evangeliis, & non tactis; By looking on the Goſpel booke, without touching of the ſame. And ſo he opened the Book in his ſight, and ſhut it again, and cauſed the other to put their hands on the booke, and took their oath, and willed them to reſort to his Regiſter to make their depoſitions when they might be beſt at leiſure; and afterwards he turned to me and ſaid, Now ſir, you ſhall anſwer but two words, whether you will anſwer to theſe articles which I have laid unto you, directly, yea or nay?

Witneſſes ſworne againſt M. Philpot.

Papiſts keepe no promiſe.

Phil. My Lord, you have told a long tale againſt me, containing many lying blaſphemies, which cannot be anſwered in two words: beſides this, you promiſed me at the beginning, that I ſhould ſay what I could for my defence, and now will you not give me leave to ſpeake? What Law is this?

Lond. Speake, yea or nay, for you ſhall ſay no more at this time.

The cauſe was, as I gueſſe, that he ſaw ſo many there gathered to heare.

Jo. Philpot appealeth from B. Boner.

Phil. Then my two words you would have me ſpeake ſhall be, that I have appealed from you, and take you not for my ſufficient judge.

Lond. Indeed, M. Mordant, he hath appealed to the King and to the Queen; but I will be ſo bold with her Majeſtie, to ſtay that appeale in mine owne hands.

Phil. You will do what you liſt, my lord, you have the law in your hands.

Lond. Wilt thou anſwer or no?

Phil. I will not anſwer otherwiſe then I have ſaid.

London. Regiſter, note his anſwer that he maketh.

B. Boner doth without order of law.

Phil. Knock me on the head with an hatchet, or ſet up a ſtake and burne me out of hand, without further law; as well you may doe ſo, as doe that you doe, for all is without order of law: ſuch tyranny was never ſeene as you uſe now adayes; God of his mercy deſtroy your cruell Kingdome. And whileſt I ſpake this, the Biſhop went away in haſte.

S. Davids. M. Philpot, I pray you be quiet, and have patience with you.

Phil. My Lord, I thank God I have patience to beare and abide all your cruel intents againſt me; notwithſtanding I ſpeak this earneſtly, being moved thereto juſtly, to notifie your unjuſt and cruell dealing with men in corners, without all due order of law.

After this, at night I was conducted againe by three or foure into the Colehouſe.

The ninth examination of Maſter Philpot before Biſhop Boner and his Chaplaines.

The ninth examination of M. Jo. Philpot before the B. and his chaplaines.

IN the morning the next day I was called downe betimes by my Keeper, and brought againe into the Wardrobe, where I remained untill the Biſhop had heard his maſſe, and afterward he ſent up for me into his inward parlour, and there he called for a chaire to ſit down, and brought his infamous Libell of his forged articles in his hand, and ſate downe; willing me to draw neere unto him, and ſaid:

Lond. I am this day appointed to tarry at home from the Parliament houſe, to examine you and your fellowes upon theſe articles, and you ſtand dallying with me, and will neither anſwer to nor fro. I wis all your exceptions will not ſerve you. Will it not be a faire honeſtie for you, thinke ye, that when thou comeſt before my Lord Maior and the Sheriffes, and other Worſhipfull Audience, when I ſhall ſay before them all, that I have had thee theſe many times before me, and before ſo many learned men, and then thou couldeſt ſay nothing for that thou ſtandeſt in, for all thy bragges of learning, neither wouldeſt anſwer directly to any thing?

Jo. Philpot ſtill ſtandeth to his former plea to anſwer before his owne Ordinarie.

Phil. My Lord, I have told you my minde plaine enough; but yet I doe not intend to loſe that priviledge the law giveth me, the which is free choice to anſwer where I am not bound, and this priviledge will I cleave unto, untill I be compelled otherwiſe.

Lond. Well, I perceive you wil play the obſtinate foole. Lay thine appellation when thou comeſt in judgement, and anſwer in the mean while to theſe articles.

Philpot. No, my Lord, by your leave I will not anſwer to them, untill my lawfull appeale be tried.

Phil. Well, thou ſhalt heare them, and with that he began to read them.

Jo. Philpot will not heare his articles read.

Phil. I ſhranke back into the window, and looked on a booke, and after he had read them over he ſaid unto me;

Lond. I have read them over, although it hath not pleaſed you to heare me. I marvell, in good faith, what thou meaneſt to be ſo wilfull and ſtubborne, ſeeing thou maiſt doe well enough if thou liſt. It is but a ſingularitie; doeſt thou not ſee all the realme againſt thee?

Phil. My Lord, I ſpeake unto you in the witneſſe of God, before whom I ſtand, that I am neither wedded to mine owne will, neither ſtand upon mine own ſtubbornneſſe or ſingularity, but upon my conſcience inſtructed by Gods word: and if your Lordſhip can ſhew better evidence then I have for a good faith, I will follow the ſame.

Lond. What thou wilt not, loe, for all that. Well, all that is paſt ſhall be forgotten; and be thou conformable unto us. I wis thou mighteſt finde as much favour as thou wouldeſt deſire.

Phil. Then I perceiving that he fawned ſo much upon me, thought it good to give him ſome comfort of my relenting, to the entent I might give him and his hypocriticall generation openly a further foile, perceiving that they dare reaſon openly with none, but with ſuch as be unlearned, and for lack of knowledge not able to anſwer, or els with ſuch as they have a hope, that for feare or love of the world, wil recant: I ſaid; My Lord, it is not unknown to you, that I have openly in the audience of a great number ſtood to the maintenance of theſe opinions I am in, and by learning did offer to defend them; therefore, my Lord, I would it might openly appeare to the world that I am won by learning, or elſe what will they ſay, but that either for feare or love of the world I am without any ground turned from the truth? and if I heare any kinde of learning openly ſhewed, I ſhall be as conformable as you may require me.

Lond. Yea Mary, now ye ſpeake ſomewhat like a reaſonable man. I wis you might have had a great deale more favour in my houſe, and libertie, then you have had; and you ſhall lack nothing that is within my houſe; call for it, and you ſhall have it. And what is it that you would openly by learning ſomewhat be ſatisfied in, tell me?

Phil. My Lord, I have openly ſaid, and do beleeve it alſo, that your ſacrifice of the maſſe is no ſacramēt.

Lond. What, do you deny the preſence of Chriſt in the ſacrament?

Talke of the Sacrament.

Phil. No, my lord, I deny not the preſence of Chriſt in the ſacrament, but I have denied the ſacrament of the altar, as it is uſed in your Maſſe, to be the true ſacrament of Chriſts inſtitution, and firſt it muſt be proved a ſacrament before there can be any preſence granted.

Lond. Why, do you deny the Maſſe to be a Sacrament? I pray you what is a ſacrament? Is it not a ſign of a holy thing, as S. Auſtin doth define it?

Phil. Yes verily that it is.

This argument in the ſecond figure concluding affirmatively, doth not hold by Logick.

Lond. Then I make this argument unto you, a ſacrament is the ſign of a holy thing: but the maſſe is the ſign of a holy thing, ergo, it is a ſacrament.

Philpot. You muſt adde this to your Major, or firſt propoſition, as S. Auguſtine doth meane, that a ſacrament is the ſigne of a holy thing inſtituted of God, and commanded; for otherwiſe it can be no ſacrament, for all men cannot make a ſacrament.

London. I grant that; and ſuch a ſigne of a holy thing is the Maſſe of Chriſts inſtitution.

Phil. I deny that my Lord.

Lond. I will prove this by ſaint Auguſtine by and by. I will goe ſhew you the booke, and you ſhall have any book I have that you will demand. Ho, who is without there? Call me M. Doctor Chedſey, M. Archdeacon, M. Coſins, and other chaplaines hither.

The biſhop being brought to a narrow ſtraite, is faine to call for more helpe.

Here my Lord, M. Doctor Chedſey is gone to Weſtminſter, and M. Archdeacon was here even now.

Lond. Maſter Coſins, I pray you examine him upon theſe articles, and write his anſwer he maketh to every one of them. I will goe examine his fellowes, and ſend you ſaint Auguſtine by and by. I finde this man more conformable then he was before.

Coſins. I truſt, my Lord, you ſhall finde him at length a good catholike man. Mary here be a ſight of hereſies; I dare ſay you will hold none of them, nor ſtand in any of them. How ſay you to the firſt?

Phil. Maſter Coſins, I have told my lord already, that I wil anſwer to none of theſe articles he hath objected againſt me; but if you will with learning anſwer to that which is in queſtion between my Lord and me, I will gladly heare and commune with you.

Coſins. No will you? Why what is that then that is in queſtion between my Lord and you?

Whether the Maſſe be a ſacrament.

Philpot. Whether your Maſſe be a Sacrament or no?

Q. MARIE. Anno 1555. December.

Coſins. What, the maſſe to be a ſacrament? Who ever doubted thereof?

Phil. If it be an undoubted truth, you may the ſooner prove it; for I doubt much thereof.

Coſins. Why, I will prove it. It is the ſigne of a holy thing; Ergo, it is a ſacrament.

Phil. I deny your antecedent.

Coſins. What will you ſo? then there is no reaſoning with you.

M. Coſins giveth over in the plaine field.

Thus M. Coſins gave over in the plaine field for want of further proofe. And then the morrow Maſſe Chaplaine began to ſpeak for his occupation; and with that M. Harpſfield came out from my Lord with S. Auguſtines Epiſtles, ſaying:

Harpſ. My Lord hath ſent you here Saint Auguſtine to looke upon, and I pray you looke what he ſaith in a certain Epiſtle which he writeth, I will reade over the whole. Here you may heare the celebration of the Maſſe, and how it reproveth them that went a hawking and hunting before the celebration of the ſame, on the ſabbath and holidaies.

Phil. I perceive the contents of this Epiſtle, and I ſee nothing herein againſt me, neither any thing that maketh for the proofe of your ſacrament of the Maſſe.

Harpſ. No, doth he not make mention of the maſſe, and the celebration thereof? what can be ſpoken more plaine?

The Epiſtle of S. Auguſtine alledged for confirmation of the Maſſe, anſwered how it is derived.

Phil. S. Auſtin meaneth of the celebration of the Communion, and of the true uſe of the ſacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt, and not of your private maſſe, which you of late yeers have erected in the ſtead thereof; for this word maſſe hath beene an old terme attributed to the Communion even from the primitive church. And I pray you tell me what Miſſa doth ſignifie. I think not many that ſay maſſe can well tell.

Coſins. No can? that is marvell.

Phil. Then tell me if you can. But M. Coſins & my morrow maſſe chaplain were both dumbe, looking upon M. Harpſfield for help, & at length he ſpake.

The word Miſſa.

Harpſ. You thinke it cometh of the Hebrew word Maſſah, as though none were ſeene in the Hebrew but you.

Phil. I have not gone ſo long to ſchoole, to derive the ſignification of Miſſa, which is a latin word, out of Hebrew: but I have learned to interpret Greek words by Greek, and Latine by Latine, and Hebrew by Hebrew; I take the Communion to be called Miſſa, à mittendo, of ſuch things as at the celebration of the Communion were ſent by ſuch as were of abilitie, to the reliefe of the poore, where the rich brought after their devotion & abilitie, and required the miniſter in the celebration of the communion to pray unto God for them, & to accept their common almes, which they at ſuch times did ſend for the help of their poore brethren and ſiſters; and for this cauſe was it called Miſſa, as learned men do witneſſe. At the which celebration of the maſſe all that were preſent did communicate under both kinds, according to Chriſts inſtitution, as they did in S. Auguſtines time. But unleſſe you can ſhew that your maſſe is uſed as then it was, ye ſhall never by the name of maſſe (which S. Auguſtine attributed to the true uſe of the communion) prove your private maſſe to be a ſacrament, unleſſe ye can prove the ſame now to be in your maſſes as was then, which is clean contrary.

Harpſ. What, deny you the maſſe to be a Sacrament? for ſhame ſpeake it not.

Phil. I will not be aſhamed to deny it, if you cannot prove it.

The Maſſe is a ſacrifice, quoth Harpſfield.

Harpſ. Why, it is a ſacrifice, which is more then a ſacrament.

Phil. You may make of it as much as you liſt: but you ſhall never make it a ſacrifice, as you imagine thereof, but firſt it muſt be a ſacrament, for of the ſacrament you deduce your ſacrifice.

A Sacrament is no ſacrament without his uſe.

Harpſ. Why? doth not Chriſt ſay, This is my body? and doth not the Prieſt pronounce the ſame that Chriſt did?

Phil. The pronunciation onely is not enough, unleſſe the words be therewithall applied to the uſe, as Chriſt ſpake them to. For though ye ſpeake the words of Baptiſme over water never ſo many times, yet there is no baptiſme unleſſe there be a Chriſtian perſon to be baptiſed.

Harpſ. Nay, that is not like; for, Hoc eſt corpus meum, is an indicative propoſition, ſhewing a working of God in the ſubſtance of bread and wine.

Phil. It is not onely an indicative propoſition, but alſo imperative or commanding. For he that ſaid, Hoc eſt corpus meum, i. This is my body, ſaid alſo, Accipite, manducate, i. Take ye, eat ye. And except the former part of the inſtitution of Chriſts Sacrament be accompliſhed according to the Communion, the latter, This is my body, can have no verification, take it which way you will, and how you will.

Morowmaſſe Chap. Why, then you will make the ſacrament to ſtand in the receiving, and that receiving maketh it a ſacrament.

Receiving maketh not the ſacrament, yet the ſacrament of the Lords Supper without it be received, is no ſacrament.

Phil. I do not ſay, that the receiving onely maketh it a Sacrament, but I ſay, that a common receiving muſt néeds be concurrent with the true Sacrament, as a neceſſarie member, without the which it cannot be a Sacrament, becauſe Chriſt hath made this a principall part of the ſacrament, Take ye, eate ye, which you do not in your Maſſe according to Chriſts inſtitution; wherefore, it can be no Sacrament, for that it wanteth of Chriſts inſtitution.

Coſins. We doe forbid none to come to it, but as many as liſt may be partakers with us at the maſſe, if they require it.

What the prieſts ought to do at their maſſe.

Phil. Nay, that they ſhall not, though they require it, you will miniſter but one kinde unto them, which is not after Chriſts inſtitution. Beſides that, you ought before you go to Maſſe, to exhort all that be preſent, to make a ſacrifice of thankeſgiving, for Chriſts paſſion with you, and exhort them to be partakers with you, according to Chriſts Commandement, ſaying unto all that be preſent; Take ye, eat ye; And likewiſe by preaching ſhew forth the Lords death, which you doe not.

Coſins. What, if all things be done even as you would have it, and whileſt the miniſter is about to miniſter the ſacrament, before any have received it, there riſe a ſudden hurly burly, that the communicants be compelled to go away; is it not a ſacrament for all that none hath communicated beſide the prieſt?

Phil. In this caſe where all things are appointed to be done according to Gods word, if incident neceſſity had not let, I cannot ſay but it is a ſacrament, and that he which hath received, hath received the true ſacrament. After this, the Morrowmaſſe prieſt made this apiſh reaſon.

The Morrowmaſſe prieſt. If the Sacrament of the Maſſe be no Sacrament, unleſſe all do receive it, becauſe Chriſt ſaid, Take ye, eate ye; then the ſacrament of baptiſme is no ſacrament where there is but one baptized, becauſe Chriſt ſaid to his Apoſtles, Go preach the Goſpel to all creatures, baptiſing all nations in the name of the Father, &c.

The ſacrament of Baptiſme may be miniſtred unto any ſingular perſon.

Phil. In that ſaying of Chriſt, baptiſing all Nations, is a commandement to the Apoſtles, to baptiſe all ſorts of men, and to exclude none that belœve, be he Gentile or Jew, not meaning all at once, for that were impoſſible. And there are many examples that baptiſme may be ſingularly miniſtred to one perſon, as we have example in Chriſt baptiſed of John, & in the Eunuch baptiſed of Philip, with many moe ſuch like: but ſo have you not of the Sacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt, but contrariwiſe by the expreſſe words of S. Paul you are commanded to uſe it in a communion and participation of many together, the 11. to the Corinthians, Quoties convenitis ad manducandum, alius alium expectate; as oft as ye come together to eat (meaning the Lords ſupper) tarie one for another. And alſo the miniſter in the celebration of the ſacrament ſpeaketh unto all that be preſent in Chriſts behalfe, to communicate with him ſaying, Take ye, and eat ye. Wherefore, as many as be preſent & doe not communicate, break Gods commandement in not receiving the ſame, and the miniſter is no juſt miniſter that doth not diſtribute the ſacrament, as Chriſt did, to all that are preſent; and where Gods word is tranſgreſſed, there is not Chriſt preſent, and conſequently it is no ſacrament.

The ſacrament of the Lords Supper requireth a communion.

At the miniſtration of the ſupper all that be preſent ought to communicate.

Harp. What, would you have it no ſacrament without it be a communion?

Phil. I make it not ſo, but Gods expreſſe word teacheth me ſo, yea, alſo all the ancient writers; as S. Chryſoſtome writing upon the Epiſtle to the Epheſians, ſaith, That the oblation is in vain, whereas none doth communicate with the Prieſt. If by his judgement the action of the prieſt alone is in vain, where is no communion, how can that be a Sacrament, which he calleth a vaine oblation, and a vain ſtanding at the Altar?

Chryſoſt. in Ep. ad Eph.

It is no Sacrament without it be a communion.

Coſins. You are ſuch another fellow as I have not heard, that will not have the Maſſe to be a Sacrament; you are no man for me to reaſon withal. Come, let us goe, pointing to the Morrowmaſſe Chaplaine: we will leave you (M. Archdeacon) and him together; and ſo they went away. Afterward the Archdeacon fel into earneſt perſwaſions with me, ſaying:

Coſins and the Chaplaine give over their part

Harpſ. M. Philpot, you and I have been of old acquaintance a long time; we were ſchoolefellowes both in Wincheſter, and in Oxford many yéeres. Wherefore I muſt wiſh you as well to doe as my ſelfe, and I pray you ſo thinke of me.

Philpot. I thank you for your good will towards me. But if you be deceived (as I am ſure you are) I ſhall deſire you not to wiſh me deceived with you. For afore God I tell you plainly, you are highly deceived, and maintaine falſe Religion, and be not thoſe men you take your ſelves for: and if you do not repent, and leave off your perſecuting of Chriſts truth, you will go to the Devill for it. Therfore conſider it in time, I give you warning, for elſe in the day of judgement I ſhall be a witneſſe againſt you, that I told you this here talking together.

Talke between M. Philpot, and M. Harpſfield Archdeacon.

Harpſ. Fie, that is but your owne vaine ſingular opinion; I perceive you are now ſtill that man you were in Oxford.

Phil. I truſt you can report no notorious evill that ever you knew by me there.

Harpſ. I can ſay no evill of your converſation, but I knew you to be a ſtudious man. Mary, if you remember when we met in diſputation in parvis, you would not lightly give over, and for that cauſe I ſpeake what I have ſaid.

Phil. M. Harpſfield, you know in the ſchooles of Oxford, when we were young men, we did ſtrive much upon vain glorie, and upon contention, more then for the truth; but now our yéers and our riper learning teach us to fall to a truth, which muſt be our portion for ever. And if I was then, in my time of ignorance, earneſt in my owne cauſe, I ought now to be earneſt in my maſter Chriſts cauſe, and his truth. I know now that nothing done upon vaine glory and ſingularitie can pleaſe God, have it never ſo goodly a ſhew: wherefore I pray you judge not ſo of me now.

Harpſ. What, wil you think your ſelf better learned, then all the learned men in this Realme?

Phil. My faith hangeth not upon the learned of the world, but upon the learned of Gods word.

M. Harpſfield ſtandeth upon number and multitude.

Harpſ. Well, I will talke with you no more as now, but pray to God to open your heart.

Phil. I pray God open both our hearts, to do more his will then we have done in times paſt.

Harpſ. No keeper, take him away with you.

What this pronoune Hoc doth demonſtrate.

Phil. I pray you Maſter Harpſfield tell me what this pronoune (Hoc) doth demonſtrate and ſhew, in this indicative propoſition, as you call it, Hoc eſt corpus meum, This is my body?

Harpſ. It doth demonſtrate the ſubſtance of bread, which by the words ſpoken by the prieſt, and by the omnipotencie of God, is turned into the ſubſtance of Chriſts very body.

That is againſt the opinion of Wincheſter: read before in the tractation of Wincheſters Sermon.

Phil. Is the ſubſtance of the bread, as you ſay, turned into Chriſts body?

Harpſ. Yea that it is.

Phil. Why then Chriſts body receiveth daily a great increaſe of many thouſand pieces of bread into his body, and that is his body become now, which was not before, and by this you would ſeeme to make, that there is an alteration in Chriſts glorified body, which is a wicked thing to thinke.

M. Harpſfield in a double tale.

Harpſ. Then he ſet about againe, and remembring better himſelfe, and ſeeing the inconvenience of his firſt aſſertion, of the tranſubſtantiation of bread into Chriſts body, he ſaid, that the ſubſtance of bread after the words ſpoken by the Prieſt, was evacuated or vaniſhed away by the omnipotencie of God.

Contrariety in popiſh doctrine.

Phil. This is another ſong then you ſang firſt: and here you may ſee how contrarie you are to your ſelves. For indeed your ſchoolemen do hold, that the very ſubſtance of bread is really turned into the ſubſtance of Chriſts body. And now you perceiving of late the inconvenience which is objected againſt you in that opinion, you are driven to imagine a new ſhift, and ſay, the ſubſtance of bread is evacuated, contrary to that your church hath firſt beleeved and taught. O what contrariety is there among you, and all to deface the ſincere truth?

Pretence of Gods omnipotence.

Harpſ. Is not God omnipotent? and cannot he do as he hath ſaid?

Phil. But his omnipotence will not do as you ſay, contrary to his word and to his honour. It is not Gods honour to include him bodily into a piece of bread, and of neceſſitie to tie him thereto. It is not Gods honour for you to make a piece of bread God and man, which you ſee before your face doth putrifie after a certaine time. Is not Gods omnipotency as able to give his body with the ſacramentall bread, as to make ſo many turnings away of the bread, as you do, and that directly againſt the ſcripture, which calleth it bread many times after the conſecration? Are you not aſhamed to make ſo many alterations of the Lords holy inſtitution as you do, and to take away the ſubſtantiall parts of the Sacrament, as, Take ye, eate ye, drinke ye all of this; doe ye this in remembrace of me: and to place in their ſteads, Heare ye, gaze ye, knock ye, worſhip ye, offer ye, ſacrifice ye for the quicke and the dead? If this be not blaſphemy to God and his ſacraments, to adde and to pluck away in this ſort, and that contrary to the minde of all ancient writers, and contrary to the example of Chriſt and all his Apoſtles, tell me.

The ſubſtantial parts of the ſacrament taken away by the papiſts.

Harpſ. I know you have gathered the ſayings of the doctors together, which make for your purpoſe; I will talke no longer with you.

Phil. I pray God open both our hearts, to doe more his will then we have done in times paſt.

Harpſ. O keeper, take him away with you.

M. Harpſfield giveth over for lack of good matter.

The tenth examination of Iohn Philpot, before Biſhop Boner his Regiſter, and others.

His tenth examination before the biſhop and others.

The next day after dinner I was brought into my Lords upper hall, and there he called me before him and his Regiſter, and before Doctour Chedſey, in the preſence of two homely gentlemen, and a prieſt which I knew not: at what time the Biſhop ſaid;

Q. MARIE. Anno 1555. December.

Lond. I doe here lay unto this man in your preſence (requiring you to be a witneſſe againſt him, as much as you know in any of them) theſe articles, this booke of the Catechiſme made in King Edwards daies, alſo theſe Concluſions agreed upon both in Oxford and Cambridge; alſo I lay unto him, that he hath deſpiſed the Cenſures of the Church, and hath ſtood accurſed more then this twelve moneth, and never required abſolution thereof. How ſay you, waſt thou not accurſed by my Lord Chancellor?

Phil. I was excommunicated by him wrongfully, and without any juſt cauſe, and without order of law, being never perſonally cited.

John Philpot accurſed by St. Gardiner without order of law.

Lond. Diddeſt thou not tell me the other day, when I required thee to come to the Maſſe, that thou was excommunicated, and therefore by the Law couldſt not heare maſſe? How long haſt thou been thus excommunicate?

Phil. More then a twelve moneth and a halfe.

Lond. Lo, you may here what he ſaith: write it.

Phil. But as you would have written that I have ſaid, I have beene thus long excommunicated, ſo alſo let him write, that I did require of my Lord Chancellor that did excommunicate me, my abſolution, but he would not give it me; ſaying, That I was, excommunicatus ipſo jure, becauſe I was an heretike, as it pleaſed him to call me, therefore accurſed by your law, and ſo commanded me to priſon, where I remaine.

John Philpot required abſolution of Win. and was denied.

Gentleman. Why doe you not require abſolution at my Lords hands here now?

Phil. Becauſe he is not mine Ordinarie, neither hath by the law any thing to do with me of right.

Lon. What an obſtinate foole is this? I tell thee I will be thine Ordinary whether thou wilt or no.

Biſh. Boner will needs be his Ordinarie. M. Philpot appealeth from the B. of London againe.

Phil. And becauſe of this your unrighteous force towards me, I have appealed from you, and require you, M. Regiſter, that my appeale may be entred in writing.

London. Have you heard ſuch a froward fellow as this? he ſeemed yeſterday to be very tractable, and I had a good hope of him. I tell thee thou art of my Dioceſſe.

Phil. I am of Wincheſter dioceſſe, and not of London dioceſſe.

Lond. I pray you may not a man be of two Dioceſſes at once?

Phil. No that he cannot.

Lond. Lo, will you ſee what an ignorant foole this is in the Law, in the which he would ſeeme to be ſeen? I tell thee a man may be of three Dioceſſes at once: as if thou wert born in London, by reaſon thereof thou ſhouldeſt be of my Dioceſſe; or elſe if thou wert not born, but hadſt a dignitie here, alſo thou art to be counted of my dioceſſe, or elſe by reaſon of thy habitation in my dioceſſe.

How one may be of three dioces at once.

Phil. In none of theſe reſpects I am of your Lordſhips dioceſſe. But for all that, this wil not follow, that I, dwelling at Wincheſter, am at that preſent of London dioceſſe.

Lon. What wilt thou lay thereof? Wilt thou recant if I prove it?

Phil. But what ſhall I win if you do not?

Lon. I wil give thee my biſhoprick if I prove it not Phil. Yea, but who ſhall deliver it me if I win?

Lon. Thou art an arrogant foole, enter their othes, and take theſe witneſſes depoſitions. I muſt be gone to the parliament houſe.

After this ſpake unto me a prieſt ſtanding by, aſking me whether I was kin to my L. Rich, [illegible]

Phil. I ſaid, he ſaid ſo himſelfe to me the other day, but how I know not.

Ched. I heard him ſay he was his nigh kinſman.

[illegible] kinſman.

Baalamite. Why, then you and I muſt be of kinne, for he is my nigh kinſman. How chance it that you and I be of contrary judgements?

Phil. It is no marvell, for Chriſt propheſied, That the father ſhall be divided againſt the ſon, and the ſon againſt the father for my truths ſake.

Baala. You do hold (as I underſtand) againſt the bleſſed ſacrament of the Altar, and againſt the holy Maſſe.

Phil. If you can prove it a ſacrament, I will not hold againſt you.

Scripture handſomely applied.

Baal. What, prove it a ſacrament, quoth he? doth not ſaint Paul ſay; Quæ oculus non vidit, & auris non audivit, ea præparavit Deus diligentibus ſe; That ſuch things as the eye hath not ſeen, neither eare heard, hath God prepared for them that love him?

Phil. That ſaying of S. Paul concerneth nothing your ſacrament, but is meant of the heavenly joyes that be prepared for all faithfull beleevers.

Baal. Why, then I perceive you underſtand not S. Paul. By God, you are deceived.

Phil. You ought not to ſwear kinſman, if you will that I ſhall ſo call you: and without diſworſhip of our kindred, I underſtand S. Paul as well as you, and know what I ſay, and with that ſhewed him a Greek teſtament with Eraſmus tranſlation, and with the old alſo, demanding him which text he was beſt acquainted withall.

Baal. I knew Greek too once, as well as you, I care not which you read.

Philpot. You know them then all alike; you underſtand the one as well as the other. With this my Baalamite kinſman departed in a fury.

The next daies talk with the Biſhops.

The next day after I was brought down again after dinner to the Chappell, and there my Baalamite kinſman (to verifie the Scriptures, that a mans own kinſfolks ſhall be his enemies) came in with the biſh. as a witneſſe againſt me: and there the Biſhop cauſed another that came to him about other matters, to ſweare alſo to be a witneſſe againſt me, which was a prieſt alſo, ſaying, Witneſſe again ſworn againſt Jo. Philpot.

Lond. You ſhall ſweare to depoſe all the truth of certain articles you ſhall be inquired of concerning this man; and here I (according to the law) do bring them forth in thy preſence.

Jo. Philpot appealeth again from the biſhop.

Phil. My Lord, I do not agree to the production of them, but do appeale from all theſe and other your proceedings againſt me: and require you, M. Regiſter, that my appeale may be entred, and I will give you for your labour.

Reg. Your appeal ſhall be entred at leiſure. Whom do you appeal unto? tell me.

Phil. I appeal to a higher judge, as to the Lieutenant of the Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury; for I know not who is Biſhop thereof at this preſent. With that the B. went away, and my Baalamite kinſman looking bigge upon me, but ſaid never a word.

Thus have I in haſte ſcribled out all mine examinations hitherto; that the ſame which hath been done unto me in darke, might come to light, and that the Papiſts unjuſt proceedings, and nakednes in their falſe religion, might be known to their confuſion. Jeſus is Emanuel, that is, God with us, Amen. 1555.

The eleventh examination of Iohn Philpot, had on Saint Andrews day; before the Biſhop of Dureſme, the B. of Chicheſter, the B. of Bath, the B. of London, the prolocutor, maſter Chriſtopherſon, and Doctor Chedſey, maſter Morgan of Oxford, M. Huſſey of the Arches, doctor Weſton, Doctor Harpſfield Archdeacon, M. Coſins, and M. Iohnſon Regiſter to the Biſhop of London, in his Palace.

Yet another examination of Jo. Philpot before biſhops and doctors.

I Was coming, being ſent for with my keeper, and the Biſhop of London met me in his hall doore, and full mannerly he played the gentleman Uſher to bring me before the Lords, ſaying;

Lond. My Lords, I ſhall deſire you to take ſome pains with this man, he is a gentleman, and I would he ſhould do well; but he will wilfully caſt away himſelf.

Dureſ. Come hither ſir, what is your name?

Philpot. My name is Philpot.

Dureſ. I have heard of that name to be a worſhipfull ſtock, and ſince you be a gentleman, do as you may live worſhipfully among other gentlemen. What is the cauſe of your trouble now?

Phil. I told him the cauſe, as in my former examinations is expreſſed.

Dureſ. Well, all cauſes ſet apart, will you now be a conformable man to the Catholique faith, and leave all new fangled opinions and hereſies? I wis I was in Germany with Luther at the beginning of theſe opinions, and can tell how they began. Leave them, and follow the Catholike church thorowout the whole world, as the whole Realme now doth.

Phil. My Lord, I am in the Catholique faith, and deſire to live and die in the ſame: but it is not unknown to your Lordſhip, that I with others theſe twenty yeers have been taught another manner of faith then you now go about to compell us unto; wherefore it is requiſite that we have a time to weigh the ſame, and to hear how it agreeth with Gods word. For faith is at a ſudden neither won, neither removed, but as S. Paul ſaith, Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word; Fides ex auditu, auditus per verbum.

Setling of a mans conſcience in religion requireth good adviſement.

Chich. And if you will give me leave, my Lord, I wil ſhew him how he taketh the ſaying of S. Paul amiſſe, as many other now adayes alledging the ſame do, that they ought not to be compelled to beleeve, whereas ſaint Paul meaneth of infidels, and not of the faithfull; and ſo S. Auſtine, writing againſt the Donatiſts, ſaith, that the faithfull may be compelled to beleeve.

Papiſts will have faith to be compelled.

Phil. S. Bernard (if it pleaſe your Lordſhip) doth take that ſenſe of S. Paul as I do, ſaying, that Fides eſt ſuadenda, & non imponenda; Faith muſt be perſwaded to a man, and not injoyned. And ſaint Auguſtine ſpeaketh of ſuch as were firſt throughly perſwaded by manifeſt Scriptures, and yet would reſiſt of ſtubborn wilfulneſſe.

Bernard in cant. Serm. 66. Faith ought not to be compelled.

Chich. So Bernard meaneth of Infidels alſo.

Phil. No, my Lord, that he doth not, for he writeth not of the Infidels, but he writeth of ſuch as were deceived by errors.

Chich. My Lord of Durham, I have been ſo bold to interrupt your Lordſhip of your tale, I pray you now proceed on.

Dur. M. Philpot, will you be of the ſame catholike faith and church with us you were baptized in, and your godfathers promiſed for you, and hold as we do, and then may you be rid out of trouble? I perceive you are learned, and it is pity but you ſhould do well.

Phil. I am of the ſame Catholique faith and Catholique Church I was baptized unto, and in that will I live and die.

Jo. Philpot is of the ſame faith and church ſtill as he was baptized.

Dur. That is well ſaid; if you hold there you cannot do but well.

Chich. Yea, my Lord, but he meaneth otherwiſe then you do; Are you of the ſame faith your godfathers and godmothers were, or no?

No man bound to be of the faith of his godfathers in every reſpect.

Phil. I cannot tell what faith they were of certainly, but I am of the faith I was baptized unto, which is, the faith of Chriſt: for I was not baptized in the faith of my godfathers, but in the faith of Chriſt.

Chi. S. Auſtin ſaith, that infants are baptized in fide ſuſceptorum, in the faith of their godfathers.

The place of S. Auguſtine in fide ſuſceptorum, expounded.

Phi. S. Auguſtine in ſo ſaying meaneth of the faith of Chriſt, which the godfathers do or ought to beleeve, and not otherwiſe.

Dureſ. How ſay you, will you beléeve as we do, and all the learned of the Realme or no, and be of one church with us?

Phil. My Lords, It is not unknown to you, that there hath béen alwayes two churches.

Chicheſter. Nay, that is not ſo: there is but one catholike Church.

The true church and the falſe church ever joyned together. Aug. de civit. Dei li. 15. c. 15.

The true and falſe church declared firſt in Abel and Cain.

Phil. I ſhall deſire your Lordſhips to hear out my tale, and to take my meaning. For I know there is but one true Church; but alwayes from the beginning there hath béen joyned to the ſame true Church a falſe church, adverſarie to the true: and that was declared at the firſt in Abel and Cain, who perſecuted and ſlew his brother, in whom (as S. Auguſtine witneſſeth) is repreſented the falſe and true Church. And after that, as ſoon as God had choſen his peculiar people, and ſhewed unto them his ſanctuarie, holy ſtatutes, and will, anone after aroſe the falſe church, and ten of the twelve tribes of Iſrael divided themſelves from the true church of Juda and Benjamin, and made to themſelves at Bethel and ſet up golden calves, and yet pretended therewith to ſerve God, and ſo abuſed his word. Notwithſtanding, God was diſpleaſed with them, and ceaſed not his wrath, untill he had utterly deſtroyed them.

The Biſhop of Chicheſter D. Day driven to a ſtraight.

Chic. I wil grant you before the coming of Chriſt, there were two churches in the old Law; but in the new Law ſince Chriſts coming, you cannot ſhew it to be ſo by the Scripture.

Phil. Yes my Lord that I can, if you will give me leave. After Chriſt had choſen his twelve apoſtles was there not a Judas in the new law, and a Simon Magus? and were not they of the falſe church?

Chich. Yea, but I meane after the Goſpel was written, where can you finde me two churches after Chriſt had aſcended, and ſent the holy Ghoſt?

Phil. The Goſpel was within eight yéers after the Aſcenſion written by ſaint Matthew, and the writing thereof is not materiall to the declaration of theſe two churches to have béen alwaies from time to time, as by example it may be ſhewed: and yet as evil as my memory is, I remember in the new Teſtament is mention made of two Churches, as it appeareth in the Apocalyps, and alſo S. Paul to the Theſſalonians maketh mention that Antichriſt with his falſe Generation ſhall ſit in the Temple of God. To the which Chicheſter replyed not.

Dureſ. The Church in the Scripture is likened to a great fiſhers net, which containeth in it both góod fiſhes and bad fiſhes. I truſt you will be of the better ſort, and leane to the truth.

Phil. My Lord it is my whole deſire now to follow that which is góod, whatſoever I have done in times paſt, and to cleave to Gods truth.

Dureſme. Do you ſo, and then ſhall you do well: it is almoſt night, my Lord of London, I muſt néeds be gone.

The Biſhops begin to be weary of their part.

Lond. Nay, my Lord of Dureſme, I muſt deſire your Lordſhip, and my Lord of Chicheſter to tarry a little while. And before he had ſo ſaid, the Biſhop of Bathe went his way without ſaying any word. What my Lord of Bathe will you be gone? I pray you tarrie. My Lords, I have earneſt matters to charge this man withall, whereof I would your Lordſhips to be made privie, and I have them here written in a Libell, I pray you ſit down again, or elſe I will. Firſt I lay to him here, that he hath written in a Bible, which I took from him, this erroneous ſaying, Quod ſpiritus eſt Vicarius Chriſti in terra. i. The holy Ghoſt is Chriſts Vicar in earth. Wilt thou abide by this ſaying of thine; that the ſpirit is Chriſts Vicar on earth?

Biſhop Boner would fain pick out matter if he could tell how.

Philpot. My Lord, it is not my ſaying, it is a better learned mans then mine: For I uſe not to write mine own ſayings, but the notable ſayings of other ancient writers, as all the others be where ye finde the ſame written. And as I remember, it is even the ſaying of S. Bernard, and a ſaying that I néed not to be aſhamed of, neither you to be offended at, as my Lord of Dureſme, and my Lord of Chichiſter by their learning can diſcern, and will not reckon it evil ſaid.

Lond. No will? why, take away the firſt ſyllable, and it ſoundeth arius.

Phil. That is far fetched indéed; if your Lordſhip will ſcan mens ſayings in ſuch wiſe, you may finde out what you liſt.

Another matter picked againſt Joh. Philpot.

London. But to helpe this, I finde moreover written with his owne hand in another book; In me Iohanne Philpotto ubi abundavit peccatum, ſuperabundavit & gratia; that is, In me John Philpot where ſinne did abound, Grace hath ſuperabounded. I pray you what ſuperaboundant grace have you more then other men? So ſaid Arius, That he had the aboundance of Grace above all other.

Rom. 5. 1. Tim. 1.

Philpot. My Lord you néed not to be offended with that ſaying more then the other, for it is the ſaying of S. Paul himſelf, and I did apply it to my ſelf for my comfort, knowing that though my ſins be huge and great in the ſight of God, yet is his mercy and grace above them all. And concerning Arius and his adherents, I defie them, as it is well known I have written againſt them.

Lond. Alſo I lay to thy charge that thou killedſt thy father, and was accurſed of thy mother in her death-bed, as I can bring witneſſe hereof.

John Philpot falſly charged with untruth, when no truth can be found againſt him.

Philpot. O Lord, what blaſphemie is this? Hath your Lordſhip nothing of truth to charge me withall, but (as I may ſpeak it with your honour) ſuch forged blaſphemous lies? If any of theſe can be proved, I will promiſe here to recant at Pauls Croſſe, what you will have me: I am ſo ſure they are as great blaſphemies as may be objected againſt any man. Ya, my Lords, I pray you conſider how my Lord of London hath hitherto procéeded againſt me: For indéed he hath none other but ſuch pretenſed ſlanderous lies.

Chich. They be Parerga; that is, matters beſide the purpoſe.

Dureſ. My Lord, I muſt néeds bid you farewell.

M. Philpot charged with a letter written to M. Green.

Lond. Nay my Lord, here is a Letter which I ſhall deſire your Lordſhip to hear ere you go. This man (being in my kéeping) hath taken upon him to write letters out of priſon, and to pervert a young gentleman called maſter Gréene in my houſe (call him hither) and hath made a falſe report of his examination, as you ſhall hear, not being content to be evill himſelf, but to make others as bad as himſelf. He all to tare the letter when he ſaw my man went about to ſearch him, but yet I have péeced it againe together, and cauſed a copy to be written thereof, and he read the torn Letter, bidding maſter Chriſtofer ſon and Morgan to mark the Copy thereof.

This letter torn in the blinde tower, read before.

The contents of M. Philpots letter to M. Green.

The contents of the letter was the examination of maſter Gréene before the B. of London in the preſence of M. Fecknam Dean of Pauls, and of divers others, whoſe ready anſwers in the Scriptures and in the Doctors were wondred at of the Deane himſelf, and of many others, as Fecknam did report: and that he was committed to Doctor Chedſey, and to have his meat from the Biſhops own Table. How ſay you my Lords, was this well done of him, being my priſoner, to write this? And yet he hath written a ſhamefull lie, that he was in D. Chedſeys kéeping. How ſay you M. D. Chedſey, is it not a ſhamefull lie?

Ch. Yes my Lord, he was never in my kéeping.

Lond. Art not thou aſhamed to write ſuch ſhamefull letters?

Come hither M. Gréen, did not I ſhew you this letter?

M. Philpot called.

Green. Yea forſooth my Lord, you ſhewed it me.

London.

Q. MARIE. Anno. 1555.

Lond. How think you my Lords, is not this an honeſt man to belie me?

Phil. Your Lordſhip doth miſtake all things. This letter (as your lordſhip may perceive, and all other that have heard the ſame) was not written by me, but by a friend of mine, certifying me at my requeſt how maſter Green ſped at the Biſhop of Londons hands: and there is nothing in the letter that either I, or he that wrote it, need to fear, but that might be written as my report.

December. M. Philpot again charged with an untruth

London. Then tell me who wrote it if you dare.

Phil. No, my Lord, it is not my duty to accuſe my friend: and ſpecially ſeeing you will take all things at the worſt: Neither ſhall you ever know of me who wrote it. Your Lordſhip may ſee in the end of the letter, that my friend did write unto me upon the occaſion of my appeal which I have made to the whole Parliament houſe about ſuch matters as I am wrongfully troubled for.

Lond. I would ſee any ſo hardie to put up thine appeal.

Phil. My Lord, I cannot tell what God will work, I have written it, ſpeed as it may.

Lond. My Lords, I have uſed him with much gentleneſſe ſince he came to me. How ſaiſt thou, have I not?

Note what great gentlenes this B. ſhewed to Philpot, and compare the ſame with the handling now of him in his impriſonment.

Phil. If to lie in the vileſt priſon in this town (being a Gentleman, and an Archdeacon) and in a colehouſe, by the ſpace of five or ſix weeks already, without fire or candle, be to be counted gentleneſſe at your hands, I muſt needs ſay I have found gentleneſſe. But there were never men ſo cruelly handled as we are at theſe dayes?

Lond. Lo, what a varlet is this? Beſides this (my lords) even yeſterday he procured his man to bring a bladder of black powder, I cannot tell for what purpoſe, I.

Phil. Your Lordſhip needeth not to miſtruſt the matter: it is nothing but to make ink withall, for lack of ink, as I had it before in the Kings Bench, when my keeper took away my inkhorn.

Black powder ſent to John Philpot to make inke.

Lond. And why ſhouldeſt thou go about any ſuch thing unknowing unto me being thy keeper? for I am thy keeper in this houſe I tell thee.

Phil. My lord, becauſe you have cauſed my pennar and inkhorn to be taken from me, I would yet fain that my friends might underſtand what I lack, not that I intend to write any thing that I would be afraid ſhould come to your ſight.

Lond. More then this my lords, he cauſed a pig to be roſted, and made a knife be put between the ſkin and the fleſh, for what purpoſe judge you. How ſaiſt thou, didſt thou not ſo?

Phil. I cannot deny but there was half a pig ſent me, and under the ſame a knife lying in the ſauce, but for no ill purpoſe that I know; your Lordſhip may judge what you will. It was not to kill my ſelf, nor any other, as you would have men to beleeve; for I was never yet without a knife ſince I came to priſon. Therefore all theſe be but falſe ſurmiſes, and not worth rehearſall.

Falſe ſurmiſes laid againſt Jo. Philpot.

Lond. I have here to lay to his charge (chiefeſt of all) his book of the report of the diſputation had in the Convocation houſe, which is the ranckeſt hereſie that may be, againſt the bleſſed ſacrament of the altar. How ſay you M. Doctor Weſton? did he maintain the ſame there ſtubbornly, or no?

West. Yea my lord, that he did, and would never be anſwered. And it is pitie that the ſame worſhipfull congregation ſhould be ſlandered with ſuch untrue reports.

Phil. You anſwered me indeed M. Doctor (being then prolocutor) goodly, with hold thy peace, and have him to priſon, and put him out of the houſe. I have read the book, and I finde the report of every mans argument to be true in all points. And if there be any fault, it is, becauſe he ſetteth forth your doings too favourably, and nothing like to that you did uſe me, being an Archdeacon, and not of the worſt of the houſe.

D. Weſtons chief arguments in the Convocation houſe.

Weſt. Thou art no Archdeacon.

Phil. Indeed M. Doctor, ye have amongſt you unarchdeaconed me, as now (I thank God of it) and that without all order of law.

Lond. I pray you my lords hearken what he writeth of himſelf, I read it over this morning, and made a note of it. He ſaith, that doctor Weſton called him frantike and mad man, and ſaid, he ſhould go to Bedlem.

Phil. Indeed my Lord ſo it pleaſed D. Weſton to taunt at me and ſay his ſhamefull pleaſure, but yet I was no whit the more for all his ſayings, then Chriſt was when the Scribes and the Phariſees ſaid likewiſe he was mad, and that he was poſſeſſed of a devil, moſt blaſphemouſly.

Dureſ. My lord of London I can tarry no longer, I muſt needs bid you farewel. M. Philpot, me thinketh you have ſaid well that you will abide in the Catholique faith, and in the Catholique Church: I pray you ſo do, and you ſhall do right well. And ſo departed with M. Weſton and M. Huſſey.

B. Tonſtall and M. Weſton give over the matter.

Phil. I have purpoſed ſo to do, howſoever I ſpeed by Gods grace.

Lond. I pray you my lord of Chicheſter, and M. Prolocutor, and M. Doctor Morgan, to commune with him whiles I bring my L. of Dureſm going.

Chriſto. M. Philpot I was acquainted with you at Rome if you be remembred, but you have forgotten me, and talked ſomewhat with you of theſe matters, and I finde you now the ſame man that you were then, I wiſh it were otherwiſe. For Gods ſake be conformable to men that be better learned then you, and ſtand not in your own conceit.

Phil. Whereas you call me in remembrance of acquaintance had at Rome, indeed it was ſo, though it were but verie ſtrange on your part, to me-ward, being driven to neceſſitie.

Chriſto. You know the world was dangerous at that time.

Phil. Nothing ſo dangerous as it is now: but let that paſſe. Whereas you ſay, you finde me to be the ſame man I was then, I praiſe God for that you ſee me not like a reed wavering with everie winde. And whereas you would have me follow better learned men then my ſelf: indeed I do acknowledge that you, with a great many other, are far better learned then I, whoſe books in reſpect of learning I am not worthy to carry after you: but faith and the wiſedome of God conſiſteth not in learning onely, and therefore S. Paul willeth that our faith be not grounded upon the wiſedome of man. If you can ſhew by learning out of Gods book, that I ought to be of another faith then I am, I will hear you & any other man whatſoever he be.

Wiſedome in Gods matters conſiſteth not in mans learning.

Chriſto. I marvell why you ſhould diſſent from the Catholique Church, ſince it hath thus long univerſally been received, except within this five or ſix yeers here in England.

Philpot. I do not diſſent from the true Catholique Church, I do only diſſent from the biſhop of Rome, which if you can prove to be the catholique church of Chriſt, I will be of the ſame alſo with you.

Chriſto. Will you beleeve S. Cyprian, if I can ſhew out of him, Quod Eccleſia Romana eſt talis ad quam perfidia accedere non poteſt, That the Church of Rome is ſuch a one, unto the which miſbeleefe cannot approach?

Phil. I am ſure you cannot ſhew any ſuch ſaying out of S. Cyprian.

Chriſto. What will you lay thereon?

Phil. I will lay as much as I am able to make.

Morgan. Will you promiſe to recant, if I ſhew his ſaying to be true.

Phil. My faith ſhall not hang upon any Doctors ſaying, further then he ſhall be able to prove the ſame by Gods word.

Chriſto.

December.
Cyprian, ad Corne. lib. 1. Epiſt. 3.

Chriſto. I will go fet the book and ſhew it him by and by, and therewithall he went into the Biſhops ſtudie, and fet Cyprian, and appointed out theſe words in one of his Epiſtles, Ad Romanos autem, quorum fides Apoſtolo prædicante laudata eſt, non poteſt accedere perfidia: But unto the Romanes, whoſe faith by the teſtimonie of the Apoſtle is praiſed, miſbeléef can have no acceſſe.

Phil. Theſe words of Cyprian do nothing prove your pretenſed aſſertion, which is, that to the church of Rome there could come no miſbeléef.

Chriſt. Good Lord, no doth? What can be ſaid more plainly?

Phil. He ſpeaketh not of the church of Rome abſolutely.

Chriſto. By God, a childe that can but his Grammar will not denie that you do, the words be ſo plain.

Phil. Swear not M. Doctor, but weigh Cyprians words with me, and I ſhall make you to ſay as I have ſaid.

Chriſto. I am no Doctor, but I perceive it is but labour loſt to reaſon with you.

D. Day, B. of Chicheſter ſhrinketh alſo away.

Boner. And with that the Biſhop of London came in blowing again, and ſaid; What, is my Lord of Chicheſter gone away alſo? (for he even a little before departed alſo without any other word ſaying, but he muſt néeds be gone.) What is the matter you now ſtand upon?

Morg. M. Chriſtoferſon hath ſhewed M. Philpot a notable place of the authority of the Church of Rome, and he maketh nothing of it.

Boner. Where is the place? let me ſée. By my faith here is a place alone. Come hither ſir, what ſay you to this? Nay tary a little, I will help this place with S. Pauls own teſtimonie, the firſt to the Romans, where he ſaith, that their faith is preached throughout the world; how can you be able to anſwer to this?

The place of Cyprian expounded.
Ad Romanos, quorum fides Apoſtolo prædicante laudata eſt, perfidia accedere non poteſt.

Phil. Yes my Lord, it is ſoone anſwered, if you will conſider all the words of Cyprian: for he ſpeaketh of ſuch as in his time were faithful at Rome, that followed the doctrine of S. Paul as he had taught them, and as it was notified throughout the world, by an Epiſtle which he had written in the commendation of their faith. With ſuch as are praiſed of S. Paul at Rome, for following the true faith, miſbeléefe can have no place. And if you can ſhew, that the faith which the church of Rome holdeth now, is that faith which the Apoſtle praiſed and allowed in the Romanes in his time, then will I ſay that S. Cyprian then ſaid, and with you, That infidelity can have no place there; but otherwiſe it maketh not abſolutely for the authority of the church of Rome, as you do miſtake it.

Chriſto. You underſtand Cyprian well indéed; I think you never read him in your life.

Phil. Yes M. Doc. that I have, I can ſhew you a book noted with mine own hand: though I have not read ſo much as you, yet I have read ſomewhat. It is a ſhame for you to wreſt and wreath the Doctors as you do, to maintain a falſe religion, which be altogether againſt you, if you take them aright; and indéed your falſe packing of doctors together hath given me and others occaſion to look upon them, whereby we finde you ſhamefull liers, and miſreporters of the ancient doctors.

Papiſts wreſters and miſreporters of the Doctors.

Morgan. What, will you be in hand to allow Doctors now? they of your ſect do not ſo. I marvell therefore you will allow them.

Phil. I do allow them in as much as they do agrée with the ſcriptures, & ſo do all they which be of the truth, howſoever you term us, and I praiſe God for that good underſtanding I have received by them.

Chriſto. What, you underſtand not the doctors, you may be aſhamed to ſay it.

Phil. I thank God I underſtand them better then you: for you have Excæcationem cordis, the blindneſſe of heart; ſo that you underſtand not truly what you read, no more then the wall here, as the taking of Cyprian doth wel declare. And afore God you are but deceivers of the people, for al your brag you make of learning; neither have ye ſcripture or ancient doctor on your ſide, being truly taken.

Doctors make againſt the Papiſts if they be rightly taken.

Morgan. Why, all the doctors be on our ſide, and againſt you altogether.

Phil. Yea, ſo you ſay when you be in your pulpits alone, and none to anſwer you. But if you wil come to caſt accounts with me thereof, I will venture with you a recantation, that I (as little ſight as I have in the doctors) will bring more authorities of ancient doctors on my ſide then you ſhall be able for yours, and he that can bring moſt, to him let the other ſide yéeld. Are ye ſo content herewith?

Chriſto. It it but folly to reaſon with you, you will beléeve no man but your ſelf.

Phil. I will beléeve you or any other learned man, if you can bring any thing worthy to be beléeved. You cannot win me with vain words from my faith. Before God there is no truth in you.

Morgan. What, no truth? no truth? ha, ha, ha.

Phil. Except the articles of the Trinitie, you are corrupt in all other things, and ſound in nothing.

Morgan. What ſay you, do we not beléeve well on the Sacrament?

Philpot. It is the thing which (among all other) you do moſt abuſe.

Morgan. Wherein I pray you? tell us.

Phil. I have told you before, M. doctor, in the Convocation houſe.

Morgan here beginneth to play the vice.

Morgan. Yea marie: indéed you told us there very well. For there you fell down upon your knées, and fell to wéeping, ha, ha, ha.

Phil. I did wéep indéed, and ſo did Chriſt upon Jeruſalem, and am not to be blamed therefore, if you conſider the cauſe of my wéeping.

Morg. What, make you your ſelf Chriſt? ha, ha, ha.

Phil. No ſir, I make not my ſelf Chriſt: but I am not aſhamed to do as my maſter and ſaviour did, to bewail and lament your infidelitie and idolatrie, which I there foreſaw through tyranny you would bring again to this realm, as this day doth declare.

Morgan. That is your argument.

Chriſto. Wherein do we abuſe the Sacrament? tell us.

The ſacrament abuſed by the Papiſts, how and wherein.

Phil. As I may touch but one of the leaſt abuſes, you miniſter it not in both kinds as you ought to do, but kéep the one half from the people, contrary to Chriſts inſtitution.

Chriſto. Why, is not there as much contained in one kinde, as in both? And what néed is it then to miniſter in both kinds?

Sacrament in one kinde.

Phil. I beléeve not ſo: for if it had, Chriſt would have given but one kinde onely; for he inſtituted nothing ſuperfluous, and therefore you cannot ſay that the whole effect of the Sacrament is as well in one kinde, as in both, ſince the Scripture teacheth otherwiſe.

Chriſto. What if I can prove it by Scripture, that we may miniſter it in one kinde? The Apoſtles did ſo, as it may appear in the Acts of the Apoſtles in one or two places, where it is written that the Apoſtles continued In orationibus & fractione panis, In prayers and in breaking of bread, which is meant of the Sacrament.

Ph. Why, M. Doc. do you not know that S. Luke, by making mention of breaking of bread, meaneth the whole uſe of the ſacramēt, according to Chriſts inſtitution, by a figure which you have learned in grammar, "Synecdoche, where part is mentioned, and the whole underſtood to be done, as Chriſt commanded it?

" Synecdoche is a figure when by one thing or by part, the whole is underſtood.

Chriſto. Nay, that is not ſo. For I can ſhew you out of Euſeb. in Eccl. hiſt. that there was a man of God (whom he named) that ſent the ſacrament in one kind by a boy, to one that was ſick.

Euſeb. hath theſe words.

Philpot.

Q. MARIE. Anno. 1555. December.

Parum Euchariſtiæ puero dedit. i. He gave a little of the ſacrament to the boy: which words may very wel comprehend both parts: and it ſeemeth by the words that follow, that part of it was liquor, for it is written in the ſame place, Juſſit ut id infundere, & in os ſenis inſtillaret. i. He commanded that he ſhould poure it & drop it into the mans mouth, and ſo he did. Euſeb. in Eccleſ. hiſt. l. 6. c. 44.

Phil. I have read indeed that they did uſe to give that was left of the communion bread, to children, to mariners, and to women, and ſo peradventure the boie might carrie a piece of that was left to the ſick man.

Christo. Nay, as a Sacrament it was purpoſely ſent unto him.

Phil. If it were ſo, yet can you not preciſely ſay, that he had not the cup miniſtred unto him alſo by ſome other ſent unto him: but though one man did uſe it thus, doth it follow that all men may do the like? S. Cyprian noteth many abuſes of the ſacrament in his time, which roſe upon ſingular mens examples, as uſing of water in ſtead of wine: therefore he ſaith, Non reſpiciendum quid aliquis ante nos fecerit, ſed quid Chriſtus qui omnium primus ante nos fecerit & mandavit, that is, we muſt not look what any man hath done before us, but what Chriſt firſt of all men did and commanded.

Christo. Hath not the Church taught us ſo to uſe the Sacrament? and how do we know that Chriſt is Homouſios, that is, of one ſubſtance with the Father, but by the determination of the Church? How can you prove that otherwiſe by expreſſe words of Scripture, and where finde you Homouſios in all the Scripture?

Phil. Yes that I do, in the firſt of the Hebrews, where it is written that Chriſt is the expreſſe image of Gods own ſubſtance, ejuſdem ſubſtantiæ.

Christo. Nay, that is not ſo. That is, There is no more but expreſſa imago ſubſtantiæ, The expreſſe image of Gods ſubſtance, and image is accident.

Phil. It is in the text, Of his ſubſtance, Subſtantiæ illius, or of his own ſubſtance, as it may be right well interpreted. Beſides this, that which Chriſt ſpake of himſelf in S. John manifeſteth the ſame, ſaying, I and the Father be one thing, Ego & pater unum ſumus. And whereas you ſay, Imago here is accidence, the ancient Fathers uſe this for a ſtrong argument, to prove Chriſt to be God, becauſe he is the very image of God.

Christo. Yea do? is this a good argument, becauſe we are the image of God, ergo, we are God.

The image of God, is not like in Chriſt, and in us.

Phil. We are not called the expreſſe image of God, as it is written of Chriſt, and we are but the image of God by participation; and as it is written in Geneſis, we are made to the likenes and ſimilitude of God. But you ought to know (M. Chriſtoferſon) that there is no accident in God, and therefore Chriſt cannot be the image of God, but he muſt be of the ſame ſubſtance with God.

Christo. Tuſh.

Preſence of the ſacrament.

Morgan. How ſay you to the preſence of the ſacrament? will you ſtand to the judgement here of your book, or no? or will you recant?

Ph. I know you go but about to catch me in words. If you can prove that book to be of my ſetting forth lay it to my charge when I come to judgement.

Morgan. Speak, be you of the ſame minde as this book is of, or no? Sure I am you were once, unleſſe you become another manner of man then you were.

The ſacrament of the Maſſe as it is uſed, is no ſacrament.

Phil. What I was, you know; what I am, I will not tell you now: but this I will ſay to you by the way, that if you can prove the Sacrament of the maſſe (as you now uſe it) to be a ſacrament, I will then grant you a preſence, but firſt you muſt prove the ſame a ſacrament, and afterward intreat of the preſence.

Morg. Ho, do you doubt that it is a ſacrament?

Philpot. I am paſt doubting, for I beleeve you can never be able to prove it a ſacrament.

Christo. Yea do? good Lord, doth not S. Auguſtine call it the ſacrament of the altar? How ſay you to that?

Ph. That maketh nothing for the probation of your Sacrament. For ſo he with other ancient writers do call the holy Communion or the ſupper of the Lord, in reſpect that it is the ſacrament of the Sacrifice which Chriſt offered upon the altar of the Croſſe, the which Sacrifice all the altars and Sacrifices done upon the altars in the old Law did prefigure and ſhadow, the which pertaineth nothing to your ſacrament hanging upon your altars of lime and ſtone.

Christo. No doth? I pray you what ſignifieth altar?

Altar what it ſignifieth.

Phil. Not as you falſely take it, materially, but for the ſacrifice of the altar of the croſſe.

Christo. Where finde you it ever ſo taken?

Phil. Yes that I do in ſaint Paul to the Hebrews the thirteenth, where he ſaith; Habemus altare de quo non eſt fas edere his qui tabernaculo deſerviunt, We have an altar, of the which it is not lawfull for them to eat that ſerve the tabernacle. Is not altar in this place taken for the ſacrifice of the altar, and not for the altar of lime and ſtone.

Chriſtopherſon for lack of better proof falleth to exclaiming.

Christo. Well, God bleſſe me out of your companie. You are ſuch an obſtinate heretique, as I have not heard the like.

Phil. I pray God keep me from ſuch blinde Doctors, which when they are not able to prove what they ſay, then they fall to blaſpheming (as you now do) for lack of better proof. In the meane while the Biſhop of London was talking with ſome other by, and at length came in to ſupply his part, and ſaid.

Boner. I pray you Maſters, hearken what I ſhall ſay to this man: come hither maſter Green. And now ſir (pointing to me) you cannot think it ſufficient to be naught your ſelf, but muſt go about to procure this young gentleman by your letters to do the like.

Wrangling matter againſt M. Philpot.

Phil. My Lord, he cannot ſay, that I ever hitherto wrote unto him concerning any ſuch matter, as he here can teſtifie.

Green. No you never wrote unto me.

Boner. Why, is not this your letter which you did write concerning him.

Phil. I have ſhewed your Lordſhip my minde concerning that letter alreadie: it was not written to maſter Green, neither was he privy of the writing thereof.

Lond. How ſay you then, If a man be in an error, and you know thereof, what are you bound to do in ſuch a caſe?

Phil. I am bound to do the beſt I can to bring him out of it.

Lond. If M. Green here be in the like, are you not bound to reform him thereof if you can?

Phil. Yes that I am, and will do to the uttermoſt of my power therein. The Biſhop remembring himſelf, thinking that he would but ſhrewdly after his expectation be holpen at my mouth, but rather confirmed in that which he called an errour, ceaſed to go any further in his demand, and called maſter Green aſide, and before his Regiſter read him a letter, I know not the contents thereof: and therewithall he gave M. Green the book of my diſputation in the Convocation houſe, and afterward went aſide, communing with maſter Chriſtoferſon, leaving M. Morgan, M. Harpsfield, and M. Coſins, to reaſon with me in the hearing of maſter Green.

Morgan. M. Philpot, I would aſk you how old your religion is?

Jo. Philpots religion elder then popery by a 1000. yeers. This religion was not ſeen openly a 100. yeers ago: Ergo, this religion was not. The antecedent is true, and the conſequence falſe.

Phil. It is older then yours by a thouſand yeers and moe.

Morgan. I pray you where was it fiftie yeers ago?

Phil. It was in Germany apparant by the teſtimony of Huſſe, Hierome of Prage and Wickliffe, whom your generation an hundred yeers ago and moe, did burn for preaching the truth unto you: and before their time and ſince hath been, although under perſecution it hath been put to ſilence.

Morgan. That is a marvellous ſtrange religion, which no man can tell certainly where to finde it.

Philpot. It ought to be no marvell unto you to ſee Gods truth thorow violence oppreſſed; for ſo it hath been from the beginning from time to time, as it appeareth by ſtories, and as Chriſts true religion is now to be found here in England, although hypocriſie hath by violence the upper hand. And in the Apocalyps you may ſee it was prophecied, that the true Church ſhould be driven into corners, and into wilderneſſe, and ſuffer great perſecutions.

Morg. A, are you ſeen in the Apocalyps? there are many ſtrange things.

Scoffing Morgan.

Phil. If I tell you the truth which you are not able to refell, beleeve it, and dallie not out ſo earneſt matters: Me think you are liker a ſcoffer in a play, then a reaſonable Doctor to inſtruct a man, you are bare arſed, and dance naked in a net, and you ſee not your own nakedneſſe.

Morg. What, I pray you, be not ſo quick with me, let us talk a little more coldly together.

Phil. I will talk with you as mildely as you can deſire, if you will ſpeak learnedly and charitably. But if you go about with tants to delude the truth, I will not hide it from you.

Morg. Why will not you ſubmit your judgement to the learned men of this realm?

Phil. Becauſe I ſee they can bring no good ground whereupon I may with a good conſcience ſettle my faith more ſurely then on that which I am now grounded upon by Gods manifeſt word.

Morgan. No do? that is marvell that ſo many learned men ſhould be deceived.

1. Cor. 2.

Phil. It is no marvell by ſaint Paul, for he ſaith, That not many wiſe, neither many learned after the world be called to the knowledge of the Goſpel.

Morg. Have you then alone the ſpirit of God, and not we?

Philpot. I ſay not that I alone have the ſpirit of God, but as many as abide in the true faith of Chriſt, have the ſpirit of God as well as I.

Morg. How know you that you have the ſpirit of God?

Phil. By the faith of Chriſt which is in me.

Morgan falleth to ſcoffing and railing at the good martyrs of God.

Morg. A, by faith do you ſo? I weene it be the ſpirit of the Butterie, which your fellows have had that have been burned before you, who were drunk the night before they went to their death, and I weene went drunken unto it.

Phil. It appeareth by your communication, that you are better acquainted with the ſpirit of the butterie, then with the ſpirit of God; wherefore I muſt now tell thee, thou painted wall and hypocrite, in the name of the living Lord, whoſe truth I have told thee, that God ſhall rain fire and brimſtone upon ſuch ſcorners of his word and blaſphemers of his people, as thou art.

Morg. What, you rage now.

Phil. Thy fooliſh blaſphemies have compelled the ſpirit of God, which is in me, to ſpeak that which I have ſaid to thee, thou enemy of all righteouſnes.

Morg. Why do you judge me ſo?

Phil. By thine own wicked words I judge of thee, thou blinde and blaſphemous Doctor: for as it is written, By thy words thou ſhalt be juſtified, and by thy words thou ſhalt be condemned. I have ſpoken on Gods behalf, and now I have done with thee.

Morg. Why then I tell thee Philpot, thou art an heretique, and ſhalt be burned for thine hereſie, and afterwards go to hell fire.

John Philpot with great zeal denounceth hell fire to Morgan unleſſe he repent

Philpot. I tell thee, thou hypocrite, that I paſſe not this for thy fire and fagots, neither, I thank God my Lord, ſtand in fear of the ſame: my faith in Chriſt ſhall overcome them. But the hell fire which thou threateneſt me is thy portion, and is prepared for thee (unleſſe thou ſpeedily repent) and for ſuch hypocrites as thou art.

Morg. What, thou ſpeakeſt upon wine, thou haſt tipled well to day by likelihood.

Phil. So ſaid the curſed generation, of the apoſtles being repleniſhed with the holy Ghoſt, and ſpeaking the wondrous works of God, they ſaid they were drunk, when they had nothing elſe to ſay, as thou doeſt now.

Morg. Why, I am able to anſwer thee, ywis, I trow.

Philpot. So it ſeemeth, with Blaſphemies and lies.

Morgan. Nay, even with learning, ſay what thou canſt.

Morgan fumbling and ſtammering in the Convocation houſe.

Phil. That appeared well at my diſputation in the Convocation houſe, where thou tookeſt upon thee to anſwer thoſe few arguments I was permitted to make, and yet waſt not able to anſwer one, but in thine anſwers didſt fumble and ſtammer, that the whole houſe was aſhamed of thee: and the finall concluſion of all thine anſwers was, that thou couldſt anſwer me if I were in the ſchooles at Oxford.

Morg. What, did I ſo? thou belieſt me.

Phil. I do not belie thee, the book of the report of the diſputation beareth record thereto, and all that were preſent then can tel, if they liſt, thou ſaidſt ſo. And I tell thee plain, thou art not able to anſwer that ſpirit of truth which ſpeaketh in me for the defence of Chriſts true religion. I am able by the might therof to drive thee round about this gallery before me: and if it would pleaſe the Queens majeſty and her councell to hear thee and me, I would make thee for ſhame ſhrink behinde the doore.

Morg. Yea, would you ſo?

Morgan taken up for halting.

Phil. Thou haſt the ſpirit of illuſion and ſophiſtry, which is not able to countervail the ſpirit of truth. Thou art but an aſſe in the true underſtanding of things appertaining unto God. I call thee aſſe, not in reſpect of malice, but in that thou kickeſt againſt the truth, and art void of all godly underſtanding, not able to anſwer to that thou braggeſt in.

Mor. Why, have I not anſwered thee in all things thou haſt ſaid unto me? I take them to record.

Phil Aſk of my fellow whether I be a theef.

Coſins. Heark, he maketh us all theeves.

Phil. You know that phraſe of the proverbe, that like will hold with like. And I am ſure you will not judge with me, againſt him, ſpeak I never ſo true; and in this ſenſe I ſpeak it. The ſtrongeſt anſwer that he hath made againſt me is, that you will burn me.

Morg. Why, we do not burn you, it is the temporall men that burn you, and not we.

Phil. Thus you would (as Pilate did) waſh your hands of all your wicked doings. But I pray you, Invocate ſeculare brachium; call upon the ſecular power to be executioners of your unrighteous judgements. And have you not a title in your law, De hæreticis comburendis, to burn heretiques?

Harpſ. I have heard you both a good while reaſon together, and I never heard ſo ſtout an heretique as you are, M. Philpot.

Coſins. Neither I in all my life.

Phil. You are not able to prove me an heretique, by one jot of Gods word.

M. Harpsfield and Coſins do part.

Harpsfield. You have the ſpirit of arrogancie, I will reaſon with you no more. And ſo he was departing, and maſter Coſins alſo. And with that the Biſhop and Chriſtoferſon came in again, and ſaid:

Boner. Maſter doctor, how doth this man and you agree?

Morgan. My Lord, I do aſk him where his Church was fifty yeers ago.

Boner. Are you not half agreed? as one man ſaid once to two parties, in whom the one was equally diſagreeing from the other.

Chriſtof. My Lord, it is but follie to reaſon with him

Q. Marie.

him any further, your Lordſhip ſhall but loſe time, for he is incurable.

Boner. Well then, let his Keeper have him away. And with that doctor Chedſey led me away by the which we could not paſſe, and therefore came back againe through the Biſhops chamber, where all theſe Doctors were cluſtered together; and as I was paſſing by, the Biſhop took me by the gowne and ſaid, Wote you what Maſter Chriſtoferſon telleth me? I pray you Maſter Chriſtoferſon rehearſe the ſentence in Latine; and ſo he did. The contents whereof were, That an heretike would not be won. Chriſto. S. Paul ſaith, Hereticum hominem poſt unam atque alteram admonitionem devita; Fly an heretique after once or twice warning.

Chriſtian truth called hereſie.

All the Doctors. Yea, my Lord, it is beſt you ſo do, and trouble your Lordſhip no more with him.

Phil. You muſt firſt prove me iuſtly to be an heretique, before you uſe the iudgement of S. Paul againſt me: for he ſpeaketh of ſuch as hold opinion againſt the manifeſt Word, the which you cannot prove by me: and becauſe you want in your proofe, and be able to prove nothing againſt me, therefore you go about falſly to ſuppoſe me to be an heretike, for the ſafegard of your own counterfeit honeſties; but afore God you are the heretiques which ſo ſtoutly and ſtubbornly maintain ſo many things directly againſt Gods word, as God in his time ſhall reveale. As I went out of his chamber, the Biſhop called me aſide and ſaid:

Boner. I pray thee in good ſadneſſe, what meaneſt thou by writing in the beginning of thy Bible, Spiritus eſt Vicarius Chriſti in terris; The Spirit is the Vicar of Chriſt on the earth? I wis you have ſome ſpeciall meaning thereof.

The holy Ghoſt is Chriſts vicar upon earth and how.

Phil. My Lord, I have none other meaning than as I have told you already, That Chriſt ſince his aſcenſion worketh all things in us by his Spirit, and by his ſpirit doth dwell in us. I pray you my Lord let me have my Bible, with other lawfull books and writings which you have of mine, whereof many of them be none of mine, but lent to me by my friends.

Boner. Your Bible you ſhall not have, but I will perhaps let you have another, & after I have peruſed the reſt, you ſhall have ſuch as I think good.

Phil. I pray your Lordſhip then, that you would let me have candle light.

Boner. To what purpoſe I pray you?

Phil. The nights be long, and I would faine occupie my ſelf about ſomewhat, and not ſpend my time idlely.

Boner. You may then pray.

John Philpot denied to have candle light.

Phil. I cannot well ſay my prayers without light.

Boner. Can you not ſay your Pater-noſter without a candle? I tell you ſir, you ſhall have ſome meat and drink of me, but can you get none.

Phil. I had rather have a candle then your meat and drink; but ſeeing I ſhall not have my requeſt, the Lord ſhall be my light.

Boner. Have him down.

Chad. I will bring him to his Keeper, my Lord. Maſter Philpot, I wonder that all theſe learned men whom you have talked withall this day can nothing at all perſwade you?

Phil. Why, Maſter Doctor, would you have me to be perſwaded with nothing? or would you have me build my faith upon ſand? What do you all bring, whereby I ought by any ſufficient authoritie to be perſwaded to you?

Chad. I am ſory you wil ſo wilfully caſt away your ſelf, wheras you might live worſhipfully: do you not think other have ſouls to ſave aſwell as you have?

Ph. Every man ſhall receive according to his own doings. Sure I am you are deceived, and maintain a falſe religion; and as for my caſting away, I would my burning day were to morrow, for this delay is every day to die, and yet not to be dead.

Ched. You are not like to die yet I can tell you.

Phil. I am the more ſorry thereof. But the will of God be done of me to his glory. Amen.

The twelfth examination of Iohn Philpot, on Wedneſday the fourth of December before the Biſhop of London, the B. of Worceſter, and the Biſhop of Bangor.

The 12. examination of M. Philpot before certain Biſhops. John Philpot ſent for to maſſe refuſeth to come.

In the morning I was ſet down to the wardrobe adioyning to the Chappell, and within a while after came three of the Biſhops Chaplaines unto me ſaying:

Chaplaines. Maſter Philpot, my lord hath ſent us unto you, to deſire you to come to maſſe, certifying you that there is a doctor of divinitie, a Chaplaine of my Lords, a notable learned man, called Doctor Chedſey, going to maſſe: therefore we alſo pray you good Maſter Philpot, be content to come; it is heard hereby.

Phil. I wonder my Lord would trouble you in ſending you about this matter, ſeeing he knoweth I am a man (by your law) that cannot heare maſſe, becauſe I ſtand excommunicate.

Biſh. Chap. Your excommunication is but upon a contumacie, and my Lord will diſpence with you, if you will come,

Phil. My Lord cannot, for he is not mine Ordinarie, and I will not ſeeke any ſuch thing at his hands. With this anſwere they went their way. And after maſſe the biſhop called me before him into his chappell, and there in the preſence of his Regiſter, after he had ſaid his minde, becauſe I would not come to maſſe) recited the articles, which he oftentimes before had done in that behalf, with the depoſitions of the witneſſes, of whom ſome were not examined.

The Biſhop layeth out his articles again.

Bon. Sir, what can you now ſay, why I ſhould not proceed to give ſentẽce againſt thee as an heretike.

Phil. Why my Lord, will you proceed to give ſentence againſt me before your witneſſes be examined? that is plain againſt your own law, as all your doings hath been hitherto.

The Biſhops doings againſt the law.

Bon. See what a foole thou art in the law. I need not to recite the depoſitions of the witneſſes, but if I liſt; for I know them well enough already.

Phil. It appeareth indeed you may do what you liſt.

Bon. Tell me, I ſay whether thou wilt anſwer, or no: and whether if thou were abſolved of thine excommunication, thou wouldſt come to maſſe, or no?

Phil. I have anſwered as much as I intend to do until I be called to lawfull judgement: and as concerning my conſcience I will not make you God to ſit there as yet; it is Gods part onely to be ſearcher of my heart.

Bon. Look how fooliſhly he ſpeaks. Art thou God? and yet doſt thou not ſit in thine own conſcience?

Phil. I ſit not in mine own conſcience; but I know it, and God there onely ought to ſit, and no man elſe.

Bon. Thou art a naughtie fellow, and haſt done much hurt, and haſt ſeduced other poore fellows here in priſon with thee, by thy comforting of them in their errours, and haſt made them reioyce and ſing with thee.

John Philpot is rebuked for ſinging.

Phil. Yea my Lord we ſhall ſing, when you and ſuch other as you are ſhall cry Væ, Væ, Wo, wo, except you repent.

Boner, What an arrogant foole is this? I will handle thee like an heretike and that ſhortly.

Phil. I feare nothing (I thanke God) you can do to me. But God ſhall deſtroy ſuch as thou art, and that ſhortly, as I truſt.

Boner. Have him away this is a knave indeed.

Phil. And I was had into the Wardrobe again by my keeper, and within an houre after was ſent for to come before him and the Biſhops of Worceſter and Bangor.

Sir, I have talked with you many times, and have cauſed you to be talked with of many learned men, yea and honourable both temporall and ſpirituall, and it availeth nothing with you. I am blamed that I have brought thee afore ſo many: for they ſay, thou glorieſt to have many to talke withall. Well, now it lyeth thee upon to look to thy ſelf; for thy time draweth neere to an end, if thou doe not become conformable. And at this preſent we are ſent from the Synod to offer you this grace, that if you will come to the unity of the Church of Rome with us, and acknowledge the Reall preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament of the Altar with us, all that is paſt ſhall be forgiven, and you received to favour.

Talke between Iohn Philpot and the B. of Worceſter and and Bangor.

Worc. M. Philpot, we are ſent (as you here have heard by my Lord of London) from the Synode, to offer you mercy, if you wil receive it, and of good will I beare you I wiſh you take it, whileſt it is offered, and be not a ſingular man againſt a whole multitude of learned men, which now in faſting and prayer are gathered together to deviſe things to do you good. There have many very learned men talked with you: why ſhould you thinke your ſelfe better learned than them all? Be not of ſuch arrogancie, but have humilitie, and remember there is no ſalvation but in the Church.

Bangor. Me thinketh my Lord hath ſaid wonderfully well unto you, that you ſhould not think your ſelf ſo wel learned, but other men are as well learned as you, neither of ſo good wit, but other be as wiſe as you, neither of ſo good memorie, but other have as good memories as you. Therefore miſtruſt your owne judgement, and come home to us again. Iwis I never liked your Religion, becauſe it was ſet forth by violence and tyranny, and that is no token of true religion. And I was the ſame manner of man then that I am now, and a great many moe. Marie, for feare we held our peace, and bare with that time. Wherefore M. Philpot, I would you did well, for I love you; and therefore be content to come home with us again into the Catholike church of Rome.

If violence and tyranny be no token of true religion: what may men judge then of the Popes religion, I pray you.

Phil. Where my Lord (as I may begin firſt to anſwer you) you ſay, that Religion is to be miſliked, which is ſet forth by tyranny, I pray God you give not men occaſion to think the ſame by yours at this day, which have none other argument to ſtand by, but violence. If you can ſhew me any good ſufficient ground, whereby to ground my conſcience, that the church of Rome is the true Catholike church, whereunto you call me, I will gladly be of the ſame; otherwiſe I cannot ſo ſoon change the religion I have learned theſe many yeers.

The Popes religion hath no other ground to ſtand upon but violence.

Bangor. Where was your religion to be found (I pray you) an hundred yeers ago, that any man knew of it?

Where this religion was one hundred yeers ago.

Phil. It was in Germany, and in divers other places apparant.

Worc. Ieſus, will you be ſtill ſo ſingular a man? What is Germany to the whole world?

Bon. My Lords, I pray you give me leave to tell you; that I ſent for him to heare Maſſe, this morning. And what you what excuſe he made unto me, forſooth that he was accurſed, alledging his own ſhame. He playeth as the varlet Latimer did at Cambridge: when the Vicechancellor ſent for him, (who intended to have excommunicated him for ſome of his hereſies) and the Chancellor was coming to his chamber, he hearing that the chancellor was coming, made anſwer that he was ſick of the plague, and ſo deluded the chancellor; even ſo this man ſaith, he was accurſed, becauſe he will not come to Maſſe.

Boner raileth on Latimer.

Worc. My Lord (I am ſure) here doth behave himſelf like a father unto you; therefore be admoniſhed by him, and by us, that come now friendly unto you, and follow your fathers before you.

Phil. It is forbidden us of God by the Prophet Ezechiel, to follow our fathers, or to walk in their commandements.

Worc. It is written alſo in another place, Interroga patres, Ask of your Fathers.

Phil. We ought to aſk indeed our fathers that have more experience and knowledge then we, of Gods will, but no more to allow them, then we perceive they agree with the Scripture.

Fathers may be asked, but not followed further then they follow the Scriptures.

Worc. You will be a contentious man, I ſee well; and S. Paul ſaith, that neither we, nor the church of God have any ſuch cuſtome.

Phil. I am not contentious but for the veritie of my faith, in the which I ought to contend with all ſuch as do impugne the ſame without any juſt objection.

Worc. Let us riſe my Lord, for I ſee we ſhall do no good.

Boner. Nay, I pray you tarry and hear the articles I lay to his charge. And after he had recited them, they aroſe, and after ſtanding, they reaſoned with me a while.

Wor. M. Philpot, I am very ſory that you will be ſo ſingular. I never talked with any yet in my dioceſſe, but after once communication had with me, they have been contented to revoke their errors, and to teach the people how they were deceived, and ſo do much good, as you may if you liſt. For as I underſtand you were Archdeacon of Wincheſter, (which is the eye of the Biſhop) and you may do much good in that countrey if you would forſake your errors, and come to the Catholique Church.

Phil. Wherewithall you ſo ſoon perſwaded them to your will, I ſee not. Error, that I know, I hold none; of the Catholique Church I am ſure I am.

Wor. The Catholique Church doth acknowledge a reall preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament, and ſo will not you.

Phil. That is not ſo: For I acknowleage a verie eſſentiall preſence in the "duely uſing of the Sacrament.

" Note he ſaith not in the ſacrament, but in the adminiſtration of the ſacrament

Wor. What, a reall preſence?

Phil. Yea a reall preſence by the ſpirit of God in the right adminiſtration.

Worc. That is well ſaid: and do you agree with the Catholique Church alſo?

Phil. I do agree with the true Catholique Church.

Wor. My Lord of London, this man ſpeaketh reaſonably now.

Bon. You do agree in generalities, but when it ſhal come to the particularities, you will far diſagree.

Wor. Well, keep your ſelf here, and you ſhall have other learned Biſhops to commune further with you, as my L. of Dureſme, and my Lord of Chich. whom I hear ſay you do like well.

Phil. I do like them as I do all other that ſpeak the truth. I have once alreadie ſpoken with them, and they found no fault with me.

Wor. Pray in the mean ſeaſon for grace to God.

Phil. Prayer is the comfortableſt exerciſe I feel in my trouble, & my conſcience is quiet, and I have the peace of mind, which cannot be the fruits of hereſie

Wor. We will bid you farewell for this time.

Phil. After dinner they called for me again, and demanded of me whether I meant as I ſpake before dinner, and would not go from it. To whom I anſwered, that I would not go from that I had ſaid.

After dinner M. Philpot called again.

Wor. You ſaid at my departing from you before dinner, that if we did burn you, we ſhould burn a Catholique man. Will you be a Catholique man and ſtand to the Catholique Church?

Phil. I will ſtand to the true Catholique Church.

Wor. Will you ſtand to the Catholique Church of Rome?

Phil. If you can prove the ſame to be the Catholique Church, I will be one thereof.

To ſtand to the Catholique Church, is not enough with theſe men, except you be in the Church of Rome.

Worc.

Q. MARIE. Anno. 1555. December.

Worc. Did not Chriſt ſay unto Peter, and to all his ſucceſſors of Rome; Paſce oves meas, paſce agnos meos? Feed my ſheepe, feed my lambes? Which doth ſignifie that he gave him a more authoritie then the reſt.

The words of Chriſt (feed my ſheep) opened.

Phil. That ſaying pertaineth nothing to the authoritie of Peter, above others, but declareth what Chriſt requireth of his beloved Apoſtles, that they ſhould with all diligence preach to the flock of Chriſt the way of ſalvation, and that doth the iteration of feeding, ſpoken to Peter, onely ſignifie. But the Biſhop of Rome little regardeth the ſpirituall feeding, and therefore he hath imagined an eaſier way to make himſelfe Lord of the whole world, yea and of Gods word too, and doth not feed Chriſts flock as Peter did.

The Pope is no feeder.

Worc. How can you tell that?

Phil. Yes I have been there, and I could not learne of all his Countrimen, that ever he preacheth.

Worc. Though he preacheth not one way, he preacheth another, by procuring good order for the Church to be kept in.

Phil. I am ſure that it wil be his damnation before God, that he leaveth that he is commanded of Chriſt, and ſetteth forth his own Decrees to deface the Goſpel.

Worc. It is the evill living that you have ſeene at Rome, that cauſeth you to have this ill judgement of the Church of Rome. I cannot now tarrie with you to reaſon further of the matter.

How ſay you to the reall preſence of the Sacrament, will you ſtand to that?

By really he meaneth truly.

Phil. I do acknowledge (as I have ſaid) a reall preſence of the ſacrament, in the due adminiſtration thereof, to the worthy receivers by the ſpirit of God.

Worc. You adde now a great many moe words then you did before: and yet you ſay more of the Sacrament, then a great many will do.

Talk with D. Chadſey, and D. Wright and others.

Thus they departed, and after them came in to me D. Chadſey, and D. Wright Archdeacon of Oxford with a great many moe.

Chad. M. Philpot, here is M. Archdeacon of Oxford come to you, to give you good counſell, I pray heare him.

Phil. I will refuſe to heare none that will counſell me any good; and if any can bring any matter better then I have, I will ſtick thereunto.

Wright. I would wiſh you M. Philpot to agree with the catholike church, and not to ſtand in your owne conceit: you ſee a great many of learned men againſt you.

Phil. I am (M. Doctor) of the unfained Catholike Church, and will live and die therein: and if you can prove your Church to be the true Catholike Church, I will be one of the ſame.

Wright. I came not to diſpute with you, but to exhort you. Here be better learned then I that can informe you better then I.

You promiſe more Chadſey then you can prove.

Chad. What profe would you have? I will prove unto you, our Church to have his being and foundation by the Scriptures, by the Apoſtles, and by the Primitive Church, confirmed with the bloud of Martyrs, and with the teſtimonie of all Confeſſors.

Phil. Give me your hand, M. Doctor prove that, and have with you.

D. Chadſey fetcheth his book of Annotations.

Chad. If I had my bookes here, I could ſoon prove it, I will go fetch ſome; and with that he went and fet his book of Annotations, ſaying, I cannot bring my books well, therefore I have brought my book of Annotations, and turned there to a common place of the Sacrament, asking me whether the catholike church did allow the preſence of Chriſts body in the ſacrament, or no? I here ſay you doe confeſſe a reall preſence: but I will be hanged if you will abide by it. You will deny it by and by.

Philpot. That I have ſaid, I cannot deny; neither intend whatſoever you ſay.

Chad. If there be a real preſence in the ſacrament, then evill men receive Chriſt, which thing you will not grant, I am ſure.

Phil. I deny the Argument, for I doe not grant in in the Sacrament, by Tranſubſtantiation, any Reall preſence, as you falſly imagine, but in the due adminiſtration to the worthy receivers.

Whether evill men receive the body of Chriſt.

Chad. I will prove that the evill and wicked men eat the body of Chriſt, as well as the good men, by S. Auſtin here.

Phil. And in the beginning of his text Saint Auſtin ſeemeth to approve his aſſertion; but I bad him reade out to the end, and there Saint Auſtin declareth moſt evidently that it was quodammodo, after a certaine manner the evill men received the body of Chriſt, which is ſacramentally only in the outer ſignes, and not really, or indeed, as the good doth. And thus all the Doctors that you ſeeme to bring in for your purpoſe, be quite againſt you, if ye did rightly weigh them.

Quodammodo.

Chad. By God you are a ſubtill fellow. See how he would writhe S. Auguſtines words.

Phil. See who of us writheth Saint Auſtin more, you or I, which take his meaning by his owne expreſſe words. And ſeeing you charge me of ſubtilty, what ſubtiltie is this of you, to ſay, that you will prove your matter of the church, even from the beginning, promiſing to ſhew your books therein, and when it cometh to the ſhewing, you are able to ſhew none, and for want of proof ſlip into a by matter, and yet faint in the proofe thereof? Afore God you are bare arſt in your Religion.

D. Chadſey fainteth in his proofe.

Chad. You ſhall be conſtrained to come to us at length, whether you will or no.

Phil. Hold that argument faſt; for it is the beſt you have, for you have nothing but violence.

The thirteenth examination of Maſter Phipot, before the Archbiſhop of Yorke, and divers other Biſhops.

The 13. examination of M. Philpot before the Archbiſhop of Yorke and other biſhops.

The thurſday after, I was called in the morning before the Archbiſhop of Yorke, the Biſhop of Chicheſter, the Biſhop of Bathe, and the Biſhop of London. The Biſhop of Chicheſter being firſt come began to talke with me.

Chich. I am come of good wil to talke with you, to inſtruct you what I can, to come to the Catholike Church, and to will you to inſtruct your owne judgement, and to learn firſt to have humility, and by the ſame to learn of others that be better learned then you, as they did learn of ſuch as were their betters before them.

Philpot. We muſt all be taught of God, and I will with all humilitie learn of them that will informe me by Gods word, what I have to doe. I confeſſe I have but little learning in reſpect of you, that both of your yeeres and great exerciſe doe excell therein: but faith conſiſteth not onely in learning, but in ſimplicitie of beleeving that which Gods word teacheth. Therefore I will be glad to heare both of your Lordſhip, and of any other (that God hath revealed unto by his word) the true Doctrine thereof, and to thank you, that it doth pleaſe you to take paines herein.

Faith conſiſts not in learning but in beleeving.

Chich. You take the firſt alledged amiſſe, as though all men ſhould be taught by inſpiration, and not by learning. How do we beleeve the Goſpel, but by the authoritie of the Church, and becauſe the ſame hath allowed it.

The authoritie of the Church.

Phil. S. Paul ſaith, He learned not the Goſpel by men, neither of men, but by the revelation of Ieſus Chriſt. Which is a plain and ſufficient proofe that the Goſpel taketh not his authority of man, but of God onely.

Chich. Saint Paul ſpeaketh but of his owne knowledge how he came thereto.

Phil. Nay he ſpeaketh of the Goſpel generally, Which cometh not from man but from God; and that the Church muſt onely teach that which cometh from God, and not mans precepts.

The place of S. Auſtin, I would not beleeve the word if the Church did not move me, &c.

Chich. Doth not S. Auguſtine ſay, I would not beleeve the Goſpel if the authoritie of the Church did not move me thereto.

The word hath his authoritie only from God, and not of the Church.

The word is the foundation of the church, and not the Church, of the Word.

Phil. I grant, that the authoritie of the church doth move the unbeleevers to beleeve; but yet the church giveth not the word his authority; for the word hath his authority only from God, and not of men; men be but the diſpoſers therof. For firſt, the word hath his being before the Church, and the Word is the foundation of the Church, and firſt is the foundation ſure, before the building thereon can be ſtedfaſt.

Chich. I perceive you miſtake me, I ſpeake of the knowledge of the Goſpel, and not of the authority; for by the Church we have all knowledge of the Goſpel.

Phil. I confeſſe that; for faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word. And I acknowledge that God appointeth an ordinary means for men to come unto the knowledge now, and not miraculouſly, as he hath done in times paſt; yet we that be taught by men, muſt take heed that we learne nothing elſe but that which was taught in the primitive Church by revelation. Here came in the Biſhop of Yorke and the Biſhop of Bathe, and after they had ſaluted one another, and communed a while together, the Archbiſhop of York called me unto them, ſaying;

Talke between the Archbiſh. of Yorke and Io. Philpot.

Yorke. Sir, we hearing that you are out of the way, are come of charity to informe you, and to bring you into the true faith, and to the Catholike Church againe; willing you firſt to have humility, and to be humble and willing to learn of your betters, for elſe we can do no good with you. And God ſaith by his Prophet; On whom ſhall I reſt, but on the humble and meeke, and ſuch as tremble at my Word. Now if you will ſo be, we will be glad to travell with you.

Phil. I know that humilitie is the doore whereby we enter unto Chriſt; and I thanke his goodneſſe I have entred in at the ſame unto him, and with all humilitie wil heare whatſoever truth you ſhall ſpeake unto me.

Yorke. What be the matters you ſtand on, and require to be ſatisfied in?

Phil. My Lord, if it ſhall pleaſe your grace, we were entred into a good matter before you came, of the church, and how we ſhould know the truth but by the Church.

Yorke. Indeed that is the head we need to begin at, for the Church being truly known we ſhall ſooner agree in the particular things.

Phil. If your Lordſhips can prove the Church of Rome to be the true Catholike Church, it ſhall do much to perſwade me toward that you would have me incline unto.

Yorke. Why let us go to the definition of the Church. What is it?

The Church defined.

Phil. It is a congregation of people diſperſed thorow the world, agreeing together in the Word of God, uſing the ſacraments and all other things according to the ſame.

Yorke. Your definition is of many words to no purpoſe.

Phil. I do not preciſely define the Church, but declare unto you what I think the Church is.

Yorke. Is the Church viſible or inviſible?

The Church both viſible and inviſible.

Phil. It is both viſible and inviſible. The inviſible Church is of the Elect of God only; the viſible conſiſts both of good and bad, uſing all things in faith, according to Gods word.

York. The church is an univerſall congregation of faithfull people in Chriſt thorow the world; which this word Catholike doth well expreſſe; for what is Catholike elſe? doth it not ſignifie univerſall?

Catholike defined by Saint Auguſtine.

Catholike defined by the Papiſts.

Phil. The church is defined by S. Auſtin to be called Catholike in this wiſe, Eccleſia ideo dicitur Catholica, quia univerſalitèr perfecta eſt & in nullo claudicat. The Church is called therefore catholike, becauſe it is throughly perfect, and halteth in nothing.

Yorke. Nay, it is called Catholike, becauſe it is univerſally received of all Chriſtian nations for the moſt part.

Phil. The Church was Catholike in the Apoſtles time, yet was it not univerſally received of the world; but becauſe their doctrine which they had received of Chriſt was perfect, and appointed to be preached and received of the whole world, therfore it is called the Catholike faith, & all perſons receiving the ſame, to be counted the catholike church. And S. Auſtin in another place writeth, that the catholike church is that which beleeveth aright.

Yorke. If you will learn, I will ſhew you by S. Auſtin, writing againſt the Donatiſts, that he proveth the catholike church by two principal points, which is, univerſalitie and ſucceſſion of biſhops in one Apoſtolical See from time to time. Now thus I will make mine argument.

Univerſalitie and ſucceſſion.

The church of Rome is univerſall and hath her ſucceſſion of Biſhops from time to time.

Ergo, it is the catholike church.

Now anſwer you to this argument?

This conſequence being reduced into a ſyllogiſme of the firſt figure, will ground upon a falſe major.

Da- Vniverſality and ſucceſſion make a true Church.
ri- The Church of Rome hath univerſall ſucceſſion.
i. Ergo, The Church of Rome is the true Church.

Phil. I deny the antecedent, that the catholike church is only known by univerſalitie and ſucceſſion of biſhops.

York. I will prove it, and with that he brought forth a book which he had noted out of the Doctors, and turned to his common places therein of the church, and recited one or two out of S. Auſtin, & ſpecially out of his Epiſtle written againſt the Donatiſts, where S. Auſtin manifeſtly proveth, that the Donatiſts were not the Catholike church, becauſe they have no ſucceſſion of biſhops in their opinion, neither univerſality; and the ſame force hath S. Auſtins argument againſt you.

To this he ſufficiently anſwereth before, look in the latter end of the ſeventh examination.

Univerſality alwaies to be joyned with verity.

Phil. My Lord, I have weighed the force of that argument before now, and I perceive it maketh nothing againſt me, neither cometh it to your purpoſe; for I will ſtand to the triall of S. Auſtin for the approbation of the catholike church whereof I am. For S. Auſtin ſpeaketh of univerſalitie joyned with verity, & of faithfull ſucceſſors of Peter before corruption came into the church. And ſo if you can deduce your argument for the See of Rome now, as S. Auſtin might do in his time, I would ſay it might be of ſome force, otherwiſe not.

Yorke. S. Auſtin proveth the Catholike Church principally by ſucceſſion of Biſhops, and therefore you underſtand not S. Auſtin. For what, I pray you, was the opinion of the Donatiſts, againſt whom he wrote, can you tell? What Countrey were they of?

Not principally by your leave, my Lord.

Phil. They were a certaine ſect of men, affirming among other hereſies, that the dignity of the ſacraments depẽded upon the worthines of the miniſter; ſo that if the miniſter were good, the ſacraments which he miniſtred were available, or elſe not.

The error of the Donatiſts.

Chiche. That was their error, and they had none other but that. And he read another authoritie of S. Auſtin out of a book which he brought, even to to the ſame purpoſe that the other was.

Phil. I challenge S. Auſtin to be with me thorowly in this point, and will ſtand to his judgement, taking one place with another.

Chich. If you will not have the Church to be certain, I pray you by whom will you be judged in matters of controverſie?

The Church may be certai and yet not ti to one place.

Phil. I do not deny the Church to be certain; but I deny that it is neceſſarily tied to any place, longer then it abideth in the word; and for all controverſies the word ought to be judge.

Chich.

August. de doctrina Christ.

Chich. But what if I take it one way, and you another; how then?

Phil. S. Auſtin ſheweth a remedy for that, and willeth, Quod unus locus per plura intelligi debebat; That one place of the Scripture ought to be underſtood by the moe.

Argument, à cauſa non ſufficiente & non totali.

Yorke. How anſwer you to this argument?

Rome hath knowne ſucceſſion of biſhops; which your Church hath not.

Ergo, That is the Catholike Church, and yours is not, becauſe there is no ſuch ſucceſſion can be proved in your Church.

The argument denied.

Phil. I deny (my Lord) that ſucceſſion of Biſhops is an infallible point to know the Church by: for there may be a ſucceſſion of Biſhops knowne in a place, and yet there be no church, as at Antioch and Hieruſalem, & in other places, where the Apoſtles abode as well as at Rome. But if you put to the ſucceſſion of biſhops ſucceſſion of doctrine withall, (as S. Auſtin doth) I will grant it to be a good proofe for the Catholike church; but a locall ſucceſſion onely is nothing availeable.

Local ſucceſſion without ſucceſſion of doctrine nothing availes.

Yorke. You will have no church then I ſee well?

Phil. Yes my Lords I acknowledge the Catholike church, as I am bound by my Creed; but I cannot acknowledge a falſe Church for the true.

Chich. Why is there two catholike churches then?

Phil. No. I know there is but one catholike church, but there have been, and be at this preſent, that take upon them the name of Chriſt and of his church, which be not ſo indeed, as it is written; There be they that cal themſelves Apoſtles, and be not ſo indeed, but the Synagogue of Satan and liers. And now it is with us, as it was with the two women in Solomons time, which lay together, and the one ſuppreſſed her childe, and afterward went about to challenge the true mothers childe.

Apoc. 2.

3 Reg. 3. The mother Church of Rome compared to the woman in Solomons time, that falſly challenged the true mothers childe from her.

Chich. What a babling is here with you now? I ſee you lack humility. You will go about to teach, and not to learne.

Phil. My Lords, I muſt deſire you to beare with my haſtie ſpeech; it is my infirmitie of nature. All that I ſpeak is to learn by, I would you did underſtand all my minde, that I might be ſatisfied by you through better authoritie.

Chich. My Lord, if it pleaſe your Grace, turne the Argument upon him, which you have made, and let him ſhew the ſucceſſion of the Biſhops of his Church, as we can do. How ſay you, can you ſhew the ſucceſſion of biſhops in your church from time to time? I tell you, this Argument troubled Doctor "Ridley ſo ſore, that he could never anſwer it; yet he was a man well learned, I dare ſay you will ſay ſo.

"So ye ſay now, when ye would give him no leave nor time when he was alive to make his anſwers.

Phil. He was a man ſo learned, that I was not worthy to carry his bookes for learning.

Chich. I promiſe you he was never able to anſwer that. He was a man that I loved well, and he me; for he came unto me divers times being in priſon, and conferred with me.

Phil. I wonder, my Lord, you ſhould make this argument which you would turn upon me, for the triall of my church whereof I am, or that you would make B. Ridley ſo ignorant that he was not able to anſwer it, ſince it is of no force. For behold, firſt I denied you, that locall ſucceſſion of Biſhops in one place is a neceſſarie point alone to proue the catholike church by, and that which I have denied you cannot prove: and is it then reaſon that you ſhould put me to the triall of that, which by you is unproved, and of no force to conclude againſt me?

Succeſſion of Biſhops alone is no ſufficient point to prove the Catholike Church.

Chich. I ſee, my Lords, we do but looſe our labours to reaſon with him; he taketh himſelfe better learned then we.

Phil. I take upon me the name of no learning. I boaſt of no knowledge, but of faith and of Chriſt, and that I am bound undoubtedly to know, as I am ſure I do.

Chich. Theſe heretikes take upon them to be ſure of all things they ſtand in. You ſhould ſay rather with humilitie, I truſt I know Chriſt, then that you be ſure thereof.

Leave your reviling termes my Lord, and go to the matter.

Phil. Let him doubt of his faith that liſteth; God give me alwaies grace to beleeve that I am ſure of true faith and favour in Chriſt.

Bath. How wil you be able to anſwer heretikes, but by the determination of the knowne Catholike Church?

Note how theſe men ground their faith, not upon Gods word, but upon the determination of their owne known church.

Phil. I am able to anſwer all heretikes by the word of God and convince them by the ſame.

Chich. How arrogantly is that ſpoken? I dare not ſay ſo.

Phil. My Lord, I pray you beare with me; for I am bold on the truths ſide, and I ſpeake ſomewhat by experience that I have had with heretikes; and I know the Arians be the ſubtilleſt that ever were, and yet I have manifeſt Scriptures to beat them downe withall.

Chich. I perceive now you are the ſame manner of man I have heard of, which will not be ſatisfied by learning.

Phil. Alas, my Lord, why do you ſay ſo? I do deſire moſt humbly to be taught, if there be any better way that I ſhould learne, and hitherto you have ſhewed me no better, therefore I pray your Lordſhip not to miſ-judge without a cauſe.

Bath, If you be the true catholike church, then will you hold with the reall preſence of Chriſt in the ſacrament, which the true church have ever maintained.

Phil. And I, my Lord, with the true church do hold the ſame in the due miniſtration of the ſacrament: but I deſire you, my lord, there may be made a better concluſion in our firſt matter, before we enter into any other; for if the church be proved, we ſhall ſoone agree in the reſt. In the mean while my lord of Yorke was turning his book for moe places to helpe forth his cauſe.

My Lord of Yorke driven to ſeeke his books.

Yorke. I have found at length a very notable place, which I have looked for all this while of Saint Auſtine De ſimplicitate credendi.

Aug. de ſimplicitate credend.

Chich. It is but folly, my Lord, that your Grace doe reade him any more places, for he eſteemeth them not.

Phil. I eſteeme them, inaſmuch as they be of force, as your Lordſhip doth heare me deny no Doctors you bring, but onely require the true application of them, according to the writers meaning, and as by his owne words may be proved.

M. Philpot falſly reported to deny Doctors.

Yorke. I will read him the place, and ſo make an end. After he had read the ſentence, he ſaid, that by foure ſpeciall points here S. Auguſtine proveth the catholike church. The firſt is, By the conſent of all nations, the ſecond, by the Apoſtolike See, the third, by univerſalitie, and the fourth by this word Catholike.

Foure points to prove the Catholike church out of S. Auguſtine.
1. Conſent of all nations.
2. See Apoſtolicall.
3. Univerſality.
4. Catholike.

Chich. That is a notable place indeed, if it pleaſe your Grace.

Phil. I pray you my Lord, of what church doth S. Auguſtine write the ſame, of Rome, or not?

Yorke. Ye he writeth it of the church of Rome.

Phil. I will lay with your Lordſhip as much as I can make it is not ſo; and let the book be ſeen.

Bath. What art thou able to lay, thou haſt nothing?

Yorke. Doth he not make mention here of the Apoſtolike See, whereby he meaneth Rome?

Answer to the Archbiſhops foure points.

Philpot. That is very ſtraitly interpreted my lord, as though the Apoſtolike See had been no where elſe but at Rome. But let it be Rome, and yet you ſhall never verifie the ſame, unleſſe all the other conditions do go therewith, as S. Auguſtine doth proceed withall, whereof none except the Apoſtolike See can now be verified of the Church of Rome. For the faith which that See now maintaineth hath not the conſent of all nations, neither hath had. Beſides that, it cannot have the name of Catholike, becauſe it differeth from the Catholike Churches which the Apoſtles planted, almoſt in all things.

Chriſts Church ceaſeth not to be his Church, albeit in time of perſecution it be hid ſometime in corners. Firſt anſwer to his reaſon, and call him obſtinate afterward.

Yorke. Nay, he goeth about here to prove the Catholike Church by univerſalitie; and how can you ſhew your Church to be univerſall fifty or an hundred yeeres ago?

Phil. That is not materiall, neither any thing againſt ſaint Auguſtine: for my Church (whereof I am) were to be accounted univerſall, though it were but in ten perſons, becauſe it agreeth with the ſame that the Apoſtles did univerſally plant.

Yorke. I perceive you are an obſtinate man in your opinion, and will not be taught; wherefore it is but loſt labor to talke with you any longer, you are a member to be cut off.

Chich. I have heard of you before, how you troubled the good Biſhop of Wincheſter, and now I ſee in you that I have heard.

Phil. I truſt you ſee no evill in me by this; I deſire of you a ſure ground to build my faith on, and if you ſhew me none, I pray you ſpeake not ill of him that meaneth well.

“ Becauſe, my L. you be not able to anſwer him.

Chich. Thou art as “ impudent a fellow as I have communed withall.

Phil. That is ſpoken uncharitably, my Lord, to blaſpheme him whom you cannot juſtly reprove.

Chich. Why you are not God; blaſphemie is counted a rebuke to Godward, and not to man.

Phil. Yes, it may be as well verified of an infamy laid to man, ſpeaking in Gods cauſe, as you now do lay unto me, for ſpeaking freely the truth afore God, to maintaine your vaine religion. You are void of all good ground. I perceive your are blinde Guides, and leaders of the blinde: and therefore (as I am bound to tel you) very hypocrites, tyrannouſly perſecuting the truth, which otherwiſe by juſt order you are by no meanes able to convince. Your own Doctors, and teſtimonies which you bring, be evidently againſt you, and yet you will not ſee the truth.

Chich. Have we this thank for our good will coming to inſtruct thee?

Veritas odium parit. The free heart of I. Philpot in telling truth.

Phil. My Lords, you muſt beare with me, ſince I ſpeake in Chriſts cauſe; and becauſe his glory is defaced, and his people cruelly & wrongfully ſlaine by you, becauſe they will not conſent to the diſhonour of God, and to hypocriſie with you; if I told you not your fault, it would be required at my hands in the day of judgement. Therefore know you, ye hypocrites indeed, that it is the ſpirit of God that telleth you your ſin, and not I; I paſſe not, I thank God, of all your crueltie. God forgive it you, and give you grace to repent: and ſo they departed.

Another talke the ſame day.

Another calling of M. Philpot before the Biſh.

THe ſame day at night before ſupper, the Biſhop ſent for me into his Chappell, in the preſence of the archdeacon Harpsfield, Doctor Chedſey, and other his Chaplaines, and his ſervants; at what time he ſaid:

London. Maſter Philpot, I have by ſundry means gon about to do you good, and I marvell you doe ſo little conſider it. By my truth I cannot tell what to ſay to you: tell me directly whether you will be a conformable man or no, and whereupon you chiefly ſtand.

Phil. I have told your Lordſhip oftentimes plaine enough, whereon I ſtand chiefly, requiring a ſure probation of the Church whereunto you call me.

Concerning theſe foure points anſwered ſufficiently before.

Harpſ. S. Auſtin writing againſt the Donatiſts, declareth foure ſpeciall notes to know the Church by; the conſent of many nations, the faith of the ſacraments confirmed by antiquitie, ſucceſſion of Biſhops, and univerſalitie.

Lon. I pray you Maſter Archdeacon fetch the book hither; it is a notable place, let him ſee it. And the book was brought, and the Biſhop read it, demanding how I could anſwer the ſame.

Phil. My Lord, I like S. Auguſtines foure points for the triall of the Catholike Church, whereof I am: for it can abide every point thereof together, which yours cannot doe.

Harpſ. Have not we ſucceſſion of Biſhops in the See and church of Rome? Wherefore then do you deny our Church to be the Catholike Church?

Phil. Saint Auguſtine doth not put ſucceſſion of Biſhops only to be ſufficient, but he addeth the uſe of the ſacraments according to antiquitie and Doctrine univerſally taught and received of moſt Nations from the beginning of the primitive church, the which your church is far from. But my church can avouch all theſe better then yours; therefore by Saint Auguſtines judgement which you here bring, mine is the Catholike Church, and not yours.

Harpſ. Ched. It is but folly (my Lord) for you to reaſon with him, for he is irrecuperable.

It is beſt for you to ſay ſo, when you have no other way to ſhift off his arguments.

Phil. That is a good ſhift for you to run unto, when you be confounded in your owne ſayings, and have nothing elſe to ſay; you are evidently deceived, and yet will not ſee it when it is laid to your face.

THus have I at large ſet forth as many of the ſaid John Philpot his examinations and privy conferences as are yet come to light, being faithfully written with his own hand. And although he was divers other times after this examined, both openly in the Conſiſtory at Pauls, and alſo ſecretly in the Biſhops houſe; yet what was there ſaid is not yet ſufficiently knowne, either becauſe Maſter Philpot was not himſelfe ſuffered to write, or elſe for that his writings are by ſome kept cloſe, and not brought forth, otherwiſe then as the Biſhops regiſter hath noted, whoſe handling of ſuch matters becauſe it is (either for feare or for favour of his Lord and Maſter) very ſlender, little light of any true meaning can be gathered, eſpecially in the behalfe of the anſwerer; howbeit, ſuch as it is, ſuch thought I good to put forth; requiring the reader to judge hereof according to his anſwers in his former examinations.

The laſt examination of Maſter Philpot in open judgement, with his finall condemnation by Biſhop Boner in the Conſiſtorie at Pauls.

The laſt examinations of M. Philpot in open judgement, with his finall condemnation by B. Boner in the Conſiſtorie at Pauls. December 14.

THe Biſhop having ſufficiently taken his pleaſure with Maſter Philpot in his privat talks, and ſeeing his zealous, learned, and immutable conſtancie, thought it now high time to rid his hands of him, and therefore on the thirteenth and fourteenth dayes of December, ſitting judicially in the Conſiſtory at Pauls, he cauſed him to be brought thither before him and others, as it ſeemeth, more for orders ſake, then for any good affection to juſtice and right judgement. The effect as well of which their two ſundry proceedings, as alſo of one other had the eleventh day of the ſame moneth in his chappell, appeare in a manner to be all one. The Biſhop therefore firſt ſpeaking to Maſter Philpot ſaid:

M. Philpot called into open judgement.

Lond. Maſter Philpot, amongſt other things that were laid and objected unto you, theſe three things ye were eſpecially charged and burdened withall.

Three ſpeciall articles laid to M. Philpot.

The firſt is, that you being fallen from the unitie of Chriſts catholike church, do refuſe and will not come to be reconciled thereunto.

The ſecond is, That you have blaſphemouſly ſpoken againſt the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, calling it idolatrie.

And the third is, that you have ſpoken againſt the

Q. MARIE.

Anno. 1555. December.

the ſacrament of the altar, denying the reall preſence of Chriſts body and blood to be in the ſame.

And according to the will and pleaſure of the Synode Legative, ye have been oft by me invited and required to go from your ſaid errors and hereſies, and to return to the unitie of the Catholique Church, which if ye will now willingly do, ye ſhall be mercifully and gladly received, charitably uſed, and have all the favour I can ſhew you. And now to tell you true, it is aſſigned and appointed me to give ſentence againſt you, if you ſtand herein, and will not return. Wherefore if ye ſo refuſe, I do aſke of you whether you have any cauſe that you can ſhew, why I ſhould not now give ſentence againſt you?

Phil. Under Proteſtation, not to go from my appeal that I have made, and alſo not to conſent to you as my competent judge, I ſay, touching your firſt objection concerning the Catholique Church, I neither was nor am out of the ſame. And as touching the ſacrifice of the maſſe, and the ſacrament of the “altar, I never ſpake againſt the ſame. And as concerning the pleaſure of the ſynod, I ſay, that theſe twenty yeers I have been brought up in the faith of the true Catholique Church, which is contrarie to your Church, whereunto you would have me to come: and in that time I have been many times ſworn (as well in the reign of King Henrie the eight, as in the reign of good King Edward his ſon) againſt the uſurped power of the Biſhop of Rome, which oath I think that I am bound in my conſcience to keep. Quia teneor reddere Domino juramentum. But if you or any of the Synod can by Gods word perſwade me that my ſaid oath was unlawfull, and that I am bound by Gods law to come to your Church, faith, and religion, whereof you be now, I will gladly yeeld, agree, and be conformable unto you, otherwiſe not.

“Here either the Regiſter belieth M. Philpot, or elſe he meant as not offending the law, thereby to be accuſed, for otherwiſe all his former examinations do declare that he ſpake againſt the ſacrament of the altar.

Boner then, not able with all his learned Doctors, to accompliſh this his offered condition, fell to perſwading of him, as well by his accuſtomed vain promiſes, as alſo by bloodie threatnings, to return to their Church; to the which he anſwered.

B. Boner with all his doctors not able to ſatiſfie M. Philpot.

Phil. You and all other of your ſort are hypocrites, and I would all the world did know your hypocriſie, your tyrannie, ignorance, and idolatrie.

Upon theſe words, the Biſhop did for that time diſmiſſe him, commanding that on Munday the 16 day of the ſame moneth, between the hours of one and three in the afternoon, he ſhould again be brought thither, there to have the Definitive ſentence of Condemnation pronounced againſt him, if he remained then in his former conſtancie.

Decem. 16.

The laſt examination of M. Iohn Philpot.

The laſt examination of Io. Philpot.

AT which day and time, M. Philpot being there preſented before the Biſhops of London, Bathe, Worceſter, and Lichfield, Boner biſhop of London began his talk in this manner.

Lond. My Lords, Stokeſley, my predeceſſor, when he went to give ſentence againſt an heretique, uſed to make this prayer.

B. Stokeſleys prayer when he gave ſentence upon any.

Deus qui errantibus, ut in viam poſſint redire, juſtitiæ veritatiſque tuæ lumen oſtendis, da cunctis qui Chriſtiana profeſſione cenſentur, & illa reſpuere quæ huic inimica ſint nomini, & ea quæ ſint apta ſectari per Chriſtum Dominum noſtrum, Amen. Which I will follow. And ſo he read it with a loud voice in Latin. To which M. Philpot, ſaid:

Phil. I would ye would ſpeak in Engliſh, that all men might heare and underſtand you; for Paul willeth that all things, ſpoken in the congregation to edifie, ſhould be ſpoken in a tongue that all men might underſtand.

Whereupon the Biſhop did read it in Engliſh: and when he came to theſe words; to refuſe thoſe things which are foes to his name, Philpot ſaid:

B. Boner praieth againſt himſelf.

Philpot. Then they all muſt turn away from you; for you are enemies to that name (meaning Chriſts name) and God ſave us from ſuch hypocrites as would have things in a tongue that men cannot underſtand.

Lond. Whom do you mean?

Phil. You, and all other that be of your generation and ſect. And I am ſorie to ſee you ſit in the place that you now ſit in, pretending to execute juſtice, and do nothing leſſe, but deceive all men in this Realme.

And then turning himſelf unto the people, he further ſaid; Oh all you Gentlemen, beware of theſe men (meaning the Biſhops) and all their doings, which be contrary unto the primitive church. And I would know of you, my Lord, by what authority you proceed againſt me?

B. Boner hath no authoritie by right to proceed againſt M. Philpot.

Lond. Becauſe I am biſhop of London.

Phil. Well, then ye are not my Biſhop, nor have I offended in your Dioceſſe: and moreover, I have appealed from you, and therefore by your own law you ought not to proceed againſt me, eſpecially being brought hither from another place by violence.

Lond. Why, who ſent you hither to me?

Phil. That did Doctor Story and D. Cook, with other the King and Queens Commiſſioners; and my Lord, is it not enough for you to worrie your own ſheep, but ye muſt alſo meddle with other mens ſheep?

Then the biſhop delivered to Philpot two books, one of the Civill law, and the other of the Canon, out of the which he would have proved that he had authoritie to proceed againſt him in ſuch ſort as he did. M. Philpot then peruſing the ſame, and ſeeing the ſmall and ſlender proof that was there alledged, ſaid unto the biſhop.

Philpot. I perceive your law and divinitie is all one; for you have knowledge in neither of them; and I would ye did know your own ignorance: but ye dance in a net, and think that no man doth ſee you. Hereupon they had much talk, but what it was, it is not yet known. At laſt Boner ſpake unto him and ſaid:

Lond. Philpot, as concerning your objections againſt my juriſdiction, ye ſhal underſtand that both the civill and canon laws make againſt you; and as for your appeal, it is not allowed in this caſe, For it is written in the law, A judice diſpoſitionem juris exequente non eſt appellandum.

Phil. My Lord, it appeareth by your interpretation of the law, that ye have no knowledge therein, and that ye do not underſtand the law; for if ye did, ye would not bring in that Text.

B. Boner noted to be ignorant in the law.

Hereupon the Biſhop recited a law of the Romanes, That it was not lawfull for a Jew to keep a Chriſtian man in captivitie, and to uſe him as his ſlave, laying then to the ſaid Philpots charge, that he did not underſtand the law, but did like a Jew. Whereunto Philpot anſwered:

The law ſeemeth either blindly compared of the biſhop, or elſe not rightly collected of his Regiſter.

Philpot. No, I am no Jew, but you my Lord are a Jew. For you profeſſe Chriſt and maintain Antichriſt; you profeſſe the Goſpel, and maintaine ſuperſtition, and ye be able to charge me with nothing.

Lon. & other Biſh. With what can you charge us?

Phil. You are enemies to all truth, and all your doings be naught, full of idolatrie, ſaving the article of the Trinitie.

Whileſt they were thus debating the matter, there came thither, ſir William Garret knight, then Maior of London, ſir Martin Bowes knight, and Tho. Leigh then Sheriffe of the ſame Citie, and ſat down with the ſaid biſhops in the ſaid Conſiſtorie, where and what time biſhop Boner ſpake theſe words in effect as followeth.

The L. Maior with the ſheriffs aſſiſtant to B. Boner againſt M. Philpot.

London. Philpot, before the coming of my Lord Maior, becauſe I would not enter with you into the matter wherewith I have heretofore, and now intend to charge you withall untill his coming, I did rehearſe unto you a prayer both in Engliſh and in Latine, which Biſhop Stokeſley my predeceſſor uſed when he intended to proceed to give ſentence againſt an Heretique.

And here he did again read the ſaid prayer both in Engliſh, and alſo in Latine: which being ended, he ſpake again unto him and ſaid:

The 3. articles againſt Iohn Philpot again repeated.

Lond. Philpot, amongſt other I have to charge you ſpecially with three things.

1 Firſt, where you have fallen from the unity of Chriſts Catholique church, you have thereupon been invited and required, not onely by me, but alſo by many and divers other Catholique Biſhops, and other learned men, to return and come again to the ſame: and alſo you have been offered by me, that if you would ſo return, and confeſſe your errors and hereſies, you ſhould be mercifully received, and have ſo much favour as I could ſhew unto you.

2 The ſecond is, That you have blaſphemouſly ſpoken againſt the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, calling it idolatrie and abhomination.

3 And thirdly, That you have ſpoken and holden againſt the ſacrament of the altar, denying the reall preſence of Chriſts body and blood to be in the ſame.

This being ſpoken, the Biſhop recited unto him a certain exhortation in Engliſh, the tenor and form whereof is this.

Biſhop Boners Exhortation.

An exhortation of B. Boner to Io. Philpot. December 16.

Maſter Philpot, this is to be told you, that if you not being yet reconciled to the unity of the Catholique Church, from whence ye did fall in the time of the late ſchiſme here in this Realme of England, againſt the See Apoſtolique of Rome, will now heartily and obediently be reconciled to the unitie of the ſame Catholique Church, profeſſing and promiſing to obſerve and keep to the beſt of your power the faith and Chriſtian religion obſerved and kept of all faithfull people of the ſame: and moreover, if ye which heretofore, eſpecially in the yeer of our Lord 1553, 1554 1555. or in one of them have offended and treſpaſſed grievouſly againſt the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, calling it idolatrie and abhominable, and likewiſe have offended and treſpaſſed againſt the ſacrament of the Altar, denying the reall preſence of Chriſts body and blood to be there in the ſacrament of the Altar, affirming alſo withall, materiall bread and materiall wine to be in the ſacrament of the Altar, and not the ſubſtance of the bodie and blood of Chriſt; if ye, I ſay, will be reconciled as is aforeſaid, and will forſake your hereſies and errors before touched, being hereticall and damnable, and will alſo allow the Sacrament of the Maſſe, ye ſhall be mercifully received, and charitably uſed with as much favour as may be; if not, ye ſhall be reputed, taken, and judged for an heretique (as ye be indeed.) Now do you chuſe what ye will do; you are counſelled herein friendly and favourably.

Ita eſt quod Edm. Boner Epiſc. Lond.

The Biſhops Exhortation thus ended, maſter Philpot turned himſelf unto the Lord Maior, and ſaid;

John Philpot anſwereth to the Biſhops exhortation before the Lord Maior.

Phil. To you my Lord Maior bearing the ſword, I am glad that it is my chance now to ſtand before that authoritie that hath defended the Goſpel and the truth of Gods word; but I am ſorrie to ſee, that that authoritie, which repreſenteth the King and Queens perſons, ſhould now be changed, and be at the commandement of Antichriſt; and ye (ſpeaking to the Biſhops) pretend to be the followers of the Apoſtles of Chriſt, and yet be the very Antichriſts and deceivers of the people; and I am glad that God hath given me power to ſtand here this day, and to declare and defend my faith, which is founded on Chriſt.

To the firſt article. Io. Philpot is of the Catholike Church, but not of the Babylonicall church.

Therefore as touching your firſt objection, I ſay that I am of the Catholike church, whereof I was never out, and that your church (which ye pretend to be the Catholike church) is the church of Rome, and ſo the Babylonicall, and not the Catholique Church; of that Church I am not.

To the ſecond article. Io. Philpot ſpeaketh not againſt the true ſacrifice, but againſt the ſacrifice ſet upon the altar, uſed in private Maſſes.

As touching your ſecond objection, which is, that I ſhould ſpeak againſt the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, I do ſay, that I have not ſpoken againſt the true ſacrifice, but I have ſpoken againſt your private maſſes that you uſe in corners, which is blaſphemy to the true ſacrifice; for your ſacrifice daily reiterated is a blaſphemie againſt Chriſts death, and it is a lie of your own invention: and that abhominable ſacrifice which ye ſet upon the altar, and uſe in your private Maſſes in ſtead of the living ſacrifice, is idolatry, and ye ſhall never prove it by Gods Word: therefore ye have deceived the people with that your ſacrifice of the Maſſe; which ye make a Maſquing.

To the third article. Philpot denieth not the ſacrament of the altar of the croſſe, but the ſacrament of the altar of ſtone he defieth.

Thirdly, where you lay to my charge, that I deny the body and blood of Chriſt to be in the Sacrament of the altar, I cannot tell what altar ye mean, whether it be the altar of the croſſe, or the altar of ſtone: and if ye call it the ſacrament of the altar in reſpect of the altar of ſtone, then I defie your Chriſt, for it is a rotten Chriſt.

And as touching your Tranſubſtantiation, I utterly deny it, for it was brought up firſt by a Pope. Now as concerning your offer made from the Synod, which is gathered together in Antichriſts name; prove me that to be of the Catholike Church (which ye ſhall never do) and I will follow you, and do as you would have me to do. But ye are idolaters, and daily do commit idolatrie. Ye be alſo traitors; for in your Pulpits ye rail upon good Kings, as King Henry, and King Edw. his ſon, which have ſtood againſt the uſurped power of the Biſhop of Rome; againſt whom alſo I have taken an oath, which if ye can ſhew me by Gods law that I have taken unjuſtly, I will then yeeld unto you: but I pray God turn the King and Queens heart from your ſynagogue and Church, for you do abuſe that good Queene.

Philpot chargeth the Clergy of Q. Maries time to be Idolaters to God, and traitors to King Henry and K. Edward.

Here the B. of Coventry and Lichfield began to ſhew where the true Church was, ſaying;

D. Banes B. of Coventry ſpeaketh. How can the Apoſtles be of that Church where their doctrine is againſt it?

Covent. The true Catholique Church is ſet upon an high hill.

Philpot. Yea, at Rome, which is the Babylonicall Church.

Cov. No, in our true Catholique Church are the Apoſtles, Evangeliſts, and Martyrs; but before Martin Luther there was no Apoſtle, Evangeliſt, or Martyr of your Church.

Phil. Will ye know the cauſe why? Chriſt did prophecy that in the latter dayes there ſhould come falſe prophets and hypocrites as you be.

Covent. Your Church of Geneva, which ye call the Catholique Church, is that which Chriſt propheſied of.

Phil. I allow the church of Geneva, & the doctrine of the ſame, for it is una, Catholica, & Apoſtolica, and doth follow the doctrine that the Apoſtles did preach; and the doctrine taught and preached in King Edwards dayes was alſo according to the ſame. And are ye not aſhamed to perſecute me and others for your Churches ſake, which is Babylonicall, and contrary to the true Catholique Church?

The Church of England in K. Edwards time.

And after this they had great conference together, aſwell out of the ſcriptures, as alſo out of the Doctors. But when Boner ſaw that by learning they were not able to convince maſter Philpot, he thought then by his defamations to bring him out of credit; and therefore turning himſelf unto the Lord Maior of London, he brought forth a knife, and a bladder full of pouder, and ſaid:

London,

Q. Marie. Anno. 1555. December.

Biſhop Boner chargeth him with falſe ſurmiſes, for want of true matter.

Lond. My Lord, this man had a roſted pig brought unto him, and this knife was put ſecretly between the ſkin and the fleſh thereof, and ſo it was ſent him, being in priſon. And alſo this pouder was ſent unto him, under pretence that it was good and comfortable for him to eat or drink; which pouder was onely to make ink to write withall. For when his Keeper did perceive it, he took it and brought it unto me. Which when I did ſee, I thought it had been Gunpouder, and thereupon I put fire to it, but it would not burn. Then I took it for poyſon, and ſo gave it to a dogge, but it was not ſo. Then I took a little water, and it made as faire inke, as ever I did write withall. Therefore my Lord, you may underſtand what a naughty fellow this is.

Philpot had a knife brought him under a pig: Ergo, the church of Rome is a catholike church.

Phil. Ah my Lord, have ye nothing elſe to charge me withall but theſe trifles, ſeeing I ſtand upon life and death? Doth the knife in the pig prove the church of Rome to be a Catholique church, &c.

Articles concluded in Cambridge and Oxford.

The Catechiſm ſet forth in King Edwards daies

Then the Biſhop brought forth a certain inſtrument containing Articles and Queſtions, agreed upon both in Oxford and Cambridge, whereof you have mention before. Alſo he did exhibit two books in print; the one was the Catechiſme made in King Edwards dayes, Anno 1552. the other concerning the true report of the diſputation in the Convocation houſe, mention whereof is above expreſſed.

The book of report of the diſputation in the Convocation houſe.

Moreover he did bring forth and laid to maſter Philpots charge two letters; the one touching Bartlet Green, the other containing godly exhortations and comforts; which both were written unto him by ſome of his godly friends: the tenour whereof we thought here alſo to exhibite.

A letter exhibited by Boner, written by ſome friend of M. Philpot, and ſent to him concerning the handling of M. Green in Boners houſe at London.

Boner breaketh promiſe.

YOu ſhall underſtand that maſter Green came unto the Biſhop of London on Sunday laſt, where he was courteouſly received; for what policie the ſequell declareth. His entertainment for one day or two, was to dine at my Lords own table, or elſe to have his meat from thence. During thoſe dayes he lay in doctor Chedſeys chamber, and was examined. Albeit in very deed the Biſhop earneſtly and faithfully promiſed many right worſhipfull men (who were ſuters for him, but to him unknown) that he in no caſe ſhould be examined; before which, M. Fecknam would have had him in his friendly cuſtodie, if he would have deſired to have conferred with him, which he utterly refuſed. And in that the Biſhop objected againſt him ſingularitie and obſtinacie, his anſwer thereunto was thus; To avoid all ſuſpition thereof, although I my ſelf am young and utterly unlearned in reſpect of the learned (and yet I underſtand, I thank my Lord) yet let me have ſuch books as I ſhall require: and if I, by Gods ſpirit, do not thereby anſwer all your books and objections contrary thereto, I will aſſent to you. Whereunto the Biſhop and his aſſented, permitting him at the firſt to have ſuch books. Who at ſundry times have reaſoned with him, and have found him ſo ſtrong and rife in the Scripture and godly Fathers, that ſithence they have not onely taken from him ſuch liberty of books, but all other books, not leaving him ſo much as the new Teſtament. Since, they have baited and uſed him moſt cruelly. This M. Fecknam reported; ſaying farther, that he never heard the like young man, and ſo perfect. What ſhall become farther of him God knoweth; but death I think, for he remaineth more and more willing to die, as I underſtand. Concerning your bill, I ſhall conferre with others therein, knowing that the ſame Court is able to redreſſe the ſame. And yet I think it will not be reformed, for that I know few or none that dare or will ſpeak therein, or prefer the ſame, becauſe it concerneth ſpirituall things. Notwithſtanding, I will aſcertain you thereof; commiting you to the holy Ghoſt, who keep you and us all, as his.

A letter written to M. Philpot by the faithfull and Chriſtian Lady, the Lady Vane.

HEarty thanks rendred unto you my welbeloved in Chriſt, for the book ye ſent me, wherein I finde great conſolations, and according to the Doctrine thereof, do prepare my cheeks to the ſtrikers, and my womaniſh back to the burthens of reproof, and ſo in the ſtrength of my God I truſt to leap over the wall; for his ſweetneſſe overcometh me daily, and maketh all theſe potecarie drugs of the world, even medicinelike in my mouth. For the continuance whereof, I beſeech thee (my dear fellow ſouldier) make thy faithfull prayer for me, that I may with a ſtrong and gladſome conſcience finiſh my courſe, and obtain the reward, though it be no whit due to my work. I am not content that you ſo often gratifie me with thanks for that which is none worthie, but dutie on my part, and ſmall relief to you. But if you would love me ſo much, that I might ſupply your lacks, then would I think ye beleeved my offers to be ſuch, as agreed with my heart. And for the ſhort charges ye ſpeak of, the means are not ſo pleaſant, if God (whom my truſt is in) will otherwiſe prepare; but Solomon ſaith, All things have here their time; You to day, and I to morrow, and ſo the end of Adams line is ſoone run out. The mightie G O D give us his grace, that during this time his glorie be not defaced through our weakneſſe. Becauſe you deſire to ſhew your ſelf a worthy ſouldier, if need ſo require, I will ſupply your requeſt for the Scarfe ye wrote of, that ye may preſent my handie work before your Captain, that I be not forgotten in the odours of incenſe, which our beloved Chriſt offered for his own; to whom I bequeath both our bodies and ſouls.

Your own in the Lord, F. E.

Over and beſides theſe letters, the Biſhops did alſo bring forth a Supplication made by maſter Philpot unto the high court of Parliament, whereof mention is made in the firſt of the two letters laſt mentioned; the copie whereof doth here inſue, as followeth.

To the King and Queens Majeſties Highneſſe, the Lords ſpirituall and temporall, and the Commons of this preſent Parliament aſſembled.

A ſupplication of Jo. Philpot to the King and Queene.

IN moſt humble wiſe complaineth unto this honourable Court of Parliamant John Philpot Clark, that where there was by the Queens highneſſe a Parliament called in the firſt yeer of her gracious reign, and after the old cuſtome a Convocation of the Clergy, your ſuppliant then being one of the ſaid Convocation houſe, and matters there riſing upon the uſing of the ſacraments, did diſpute in the ſame, knowing that there almen had and have free ſpeech, and ought not to be after troubled for any thing there ſpoken, and yet, that notwithſtanding, not long after the ſaid Parliament, your ſaid ſuppliant (without any act or matter) was commanded to priſon to the Kings Bench by the late Lord Chancellor, where he hath remained ever ſince, untill now of late that my Lord the Biſhop of London hath ſent for your ſaid ſuppliant to examine him (being none of his Dioceſſe) upon certain matters, wherein they would have your Orator to declare his conſcience, which the ſaid biſhop ſaith he hath authoritie to do, by reaſon of an Act of Parliament made in the firſt and ſecond yeers of the King and Queens Majeſties reigns, for the reviving of three Statutes made againſt them that hold any opinion againſt the Catholique faith: whereby he affirmeth, that every Ordinarie may, ex Officio, examine every mans conſcience: and for that your ſaid Orator hath and doth refuſe, that the ſaid Bi. of London hath any authoritie over your ſaid Orator, for that he is neither his Dioceſan, nor hath publiſhed, preached, nor held any opinion againſt the Catholique faith (notwithſtanding the ſaid Biſhop of London detaineth him in the Cole-houſe in the ſtocks, without either bed or any other thing to lie upon but ſtraw) and for that your ſaid Orator cannot appeal for his relief, from the ſaid Biſhop, to any other judge, but the ſame Biſhop may refuſe the ſame by their law, and therefore hath no ſuccor and help, but by this high Court of Parliament, for the explanation of the ſaid Act; therefore it may pleaſe you, that it may be enacted by the King and Queens Majeſties, the Lords ſpirituall and temporall, and the Commons of this preſent Parliament aſſembled, and by the authoritie of the ſame, that no Biſhop nor Ordinarie ſhall commit or detain in priſon any ſuſpect perſon or perſons for the Catholique faith, except he or they have ſpoken, written, or done ſome manifeſt act againſt the Catholique faith, and the ſame to be lawfully proved againſt every ſuch perſon or perſons, by the teſtimony of two lawful witneſſes, to be brought before the ſaid perſon or perſons ſo accuſed, before he or they ſhall either be committed to priſon, or convict for any ſuch offence or offences; the ſaid former ſtatute, made in the ſaid firſt and ſecond yeer of our ſaid ſoveraigne Lord and Lady notwithſtanding: whereby your ſaid Orator ſhall not onely be ſet at liberty, and divers other moe remaining in priſon; but alſo the blood of divers of the Queens Majeſties true and faithfull ſubjects preſerved.

The ſtraight handling of Io. Philpot in the Biſhops Cole-houſe.

The condemnation of the worthy Martyr of God, Iohn Philpot.

Of this book of diſputation in the Convocation, read before.

Theſe books, letters, ſupplications, and other matters being thus read, the biſhop demanded of him, if the book intituled, The true report of the Diſputation, &c. were of his penning or not? Whereunto Philpot anſwered, That it was a good and true book, and of his own penning and ſetting forth.

The biſhops waxing now weary, and being not able by any ſufficient ground, either of Gods word, or of the true ancient Catholique Fathers, to convince and overcome him, fell by fair and flattering ſpeech to perſwade with him; promiſing, that if he would revoke his opinions, and come home again to their Romiſh and Babylonical church, he ſhould not onely be pardoned that which was paſt, but alſo they would with all favour and cheerfulneſſe of heart receive him again as a true member thereof. Which words when Boner ſaw would take no place; he demanded of M. Philpot (and that with a charitable affection I warrant you) whether he had any juſt cauſe to alledge, why he ſhould not condemne him as an heretique. Well (quoth M. Philpot) your idolatrous ſacrament which you have found out ye would fain defend, but ye cannot, nor ever ſhall.

Ah, my Lord, what needed this queſtion, when no reaſonable anſwer could be allowed?

In the end the Biſhop, ſeeing his unmoveable ſtedfaſtneſſe in the Truth, did pronounce openly the ſentence of condemnation againſt him. In the reading whereof, when he came to theſe words, Teque etiam tanquam hæreticum, obſtinatum, pertinacem, & impœnitentem, &c. Maſter Philpot ſaid, I thank God that I am an heretique out of your curſed Church; I am no heretique before God. But God bleſſe you, and give you once grace to repent your wicked doings, and let all men beware of your bloody Church.

Sentence of condemnation read againſt M. Philpot.

M. Philpots words in reading the ſentence.

Moreover, whiles Boner was about the midſt of the ſentence, the biſhop of Bathe pulled him by the ſleeve, and ſaid; My Lord, my Lord, know of him firſt whether he will recant or no. Then Boner ſaid (full like himſelf) O let him alone; and ſo read forth the ſentence.

M. Philpot delivered to the ſheriffes.

And when he had done, he delivered him to the Sheriffes; and ſo two Officers brought him thorow the Biſhops houſe into Paternoſter Row, and there his ſervant met him, and when he ſaw him, he ſaid; Ah dear maſter.

M. Philpot to his ſervant.

Then M. Philpot ſaid to his man; Content thy ſelf, I ſhall do well enough; for thou ſhalt ſee me again.

M. Philpot brought into Newgate, his man permitted to enter with him.

And ſo the Officers thruſt him away, and had his maſter to Newgate; and as he went, he ſaid to the people; Ah, good people, bleſſed be God for this day; and ſo the Officers delivered him to the Keeper. Then his Man thruſt to go in after his Maſter, and one of the Officers ſaid unto him; Hence Fellow, what wouldeſt thou have? And he ſaid, I would go ſpeak with my maſter. Maſter Philpot then turned him about, and ſaid to him, To morrow thou ſhalt ſpeak with me.

Then the under Keeper ſaid to M. Philpot, Is this your Man? and he ſaid, Yea. So he did licenſe his man to go in with him, and M. Philpot and his man were turned into a little chamber on the right hand, and there remained a little time, untill Alexander the chief Keeper did come unto him; who at his entring greeted him with theſe words; Ah, ſaid he, haſt not thou done well to bring thy ſelf hither. Well, ſaid Maſter Philpot, I muſt be content, for it is Gods appointment; and I ſhall deſire you to let me have your gentle favour; for you and I have been of old acquaintance. Well, ſaid Alexander, I will ſhew thee gentleneſſe and favour, ſo thou wilt be ruled by me. Then ſaid M. Philpot, I pray you ſhew me what you would have me to do.

Talk betwixt M. Philpot and Alexander the Keeper.

He ſaid, If you would recant, I will ſhew you any pleaſure I can. Nay, ſaid M. Philpot, I will never recant whileſt I have my life that which I have ſpoken, for it is moſt certain truth, and in witneſſe hereof I will ſeal it with my blood. Then Alexander ſaid, This is the ſaying of the whole pack of you heretiques. Whereupon he commanded him to be ſet upon the block, and as many irons upon his legs as he could bear, for that he would not follow his wicked minde.

Good Philpot loden with irons becauſe he would not recant at Alexanders bidding.

Then the Clerk told Alexander in his eare, that Maſter Philpot had given his man money. And Alexander ſaid to his Man, What money hath thy Maſter given thee? He anſwered; My Maſter hath given me none. No, ſaid Alexander, hath he given thee none? That will I know, for I will ſearch thee. Do with me what you liſt, and ſearch me all that you can, quoth his ſervant; he hath given me a token or two to ſend to his friends, as to his brother and ſiſters. Ah, ſaid Alexander unto Maſter Philpot, thou art a maintainer of Heretiques; Thy man ſhould have gone to ſome of thine affinity, but he ſhall be known well enough. Nay, ſaid Maſter Philpot, I do ſend it to my friends; there he is, let him make anſwer to it. But good Maſter Alexander be ſo much my Friend, that theſe Irons may be taken off. Well, ſaid Alexander, give me my Fees, and Alexander taketh Philpots tokens from his man.

Alexander the cruell keeper requireth foure pounds of M. Philpot for his irons.

I will take them off; if not, thou ſhalt weare them ſtill.

Then ſaid M. Philpot, ſir, what is your fees? He ſaid, four pound was his fees. Ah, ſaid M. Philpot, I have not ſo much; I am but a poore man, and I have been long in priſon. What wilt thou give me then, ſaid Alexander? Sir (ſaid he) I will give you twenty ſhillings, and that I will ſend my man for, or elſe I will lay my gown to gage; for the time is not long (I am ſure) that I ſhall be with you; for the biſhop ſaid unto me that I ſhould be ſoone diſpatched.

M. Philpot had into Limbo.

Then ſaid Alexander unto him, what is that to me? and with that he departed from him, and commanded him to be had into Limbo, and ſo his commandement was fulfilled; but before he could be taken from the block, the Clarke would have a Groat.

Then one Witterence, Steward of the houſe, took him on his back, and carried him down, his man knew not whither. Wherefore M. Philpot ſaid to his man; go to M. Sheriffe, and ſhew him how I am uſed, and deſire maſter Sheriffe to be good unto me; and ſo his ſervant went ſtraight way, and took an honeſt man with him.

M. Macham ſheriffe, a good man, ſendeth his ring to take off M. Philpots irons, and to reſtore the mans tokens.

And when they came to maſter Sheriffe (which was M. Macham) and ſhewed him how maſter Philpot was handled in Newgate, the Sheriffe hearing this, took his ring off from his finger, and delivered it unto that honeſt man which came with M. Philpots man, and bad him go unto Alexander the Keeper, and commanded him to take off his irons, and to handle him more gently, and to give his man again that which he had taken from him. And when they came again to the ſaid Alexander, and told their meſſage from the Sheriffe, Alexander took the ring, and ſaid; Ah, I perceive that M. Sheriffe is a bearer with him, and all ſuch heretiques as he is, therefore to morrow I will ſhew it to his betters: Yet at ten of the clock he went into M. Philpot where he lay, and took off his irons, and gave him ſuch things as he had taken before from his ſervant.

Note the ſpitefulneſſe of this keeper.

M. Philpot warned by the Sheriffes to prepare him againſt the next day to the fire.

December 18.

Upon Tueſday at ſupper, being the ſeventeenth day of December, there came a meſſenger from the Sheriffes, and bade maſter Philpot make him readie, for the next day he ſhould ſuffer, and be burned at a ſtake with fire. Maſter Philpot anſwered and ſaid, I am readie; God grant me ſtrength, and a joyfull reſurrection. And ſo he went into his chamber, and poured out his ſpirit unto the Lord God, giving him moſt hearty thanks that he of his mercy had made him worthie to ſuffer for his truth.

M. Philpot brought to the place of martyrdome.

In the morning the Sheriffes came according to the order, about eight of the clock, and called for him, and he moſt joyfully came down unto them, And there his man did meet him, and ſaid; Ah dear Maſter farewell: His Maſter ſaid unto him, ſerve God and he will help thee. And ſo he went with the ſheriffes to the place of execution; and when he was entring into Smithfield, the way was foule, and two officers took him up to beare him to the ſtake. Then he ſaid merrily, what? will ye make me a pope? I am content to go to my journeys end on foot. But firſt coming into Smithfield, he kneeled down there ſaying theſe words; I will pay my vows in thee O Smithfield.

And when he was come to the place of ſuffering, he kiſſed the ſtake, and ſaid, Shall I diſdain to ſuffer at this ſtake, ſeeing my Redeemer did not refuſe to ſuffer moſt vile death upon the croſſe for me? And then with an obedient heart full meekly he ſaid the Cvi. Cvii. and Cviii. pſalms: and when he had made an end of all his prayers, he ſaid to the Officers; What have you done for me? and every one of them declared what they had done; and he gave to every of them money.

Then they bound him to the ſtake, and ſet fire unto that conſtant Martyr: Who the eighteenth day of December, in the midſt of the fiery flames, yeelding his ſoul into the hands of Almighty God, and full like a lambe gave up his breath, his bodie being conſumed into aſhes.

Thus haſt thou (gentle Reader) the life and doings of this learned and worthie ſouldier of the Lord, John Philpot; with all his examinations that came to our hands: firſt penned and written with his own hand, being marvellouſly reſerved from the ſight and hand of his enemies; who by all manner meanes ſought not onely to ſtop him from all writing, but alſo to ſpoil and deprive him of that which he had written. For the which cauſe he was many times ſtripped and ſearched in the priſon of his Keeper: but yet ſo happily theſe his writings were conveyed and hid in places about him, or elſe his Keepers eyes ſo blinded, that notwithſtanding all this malicious purpoſe of the biſhops, they are yet remaining, and come to light.

A godly prayer to be ſaid at the time of martyrdome.

MErcifull God and Father, to whom our Saviour Chriſt approached in his feare and need by reaſon of death, and found comfort; Gracious God and moſt bounteous Chriſt, on whom Steven called in his extreme need, and received ſtrength; Moſt benigne holy ſpirit, which in the midſt of all croſſes of death didſt comfort the Apoſtle ſaint Paul, with more conſolations in Chriſt, then he felt ſorrows and terrors, have mercie upon me miſerable, vile, and wretched ſinner, which now draw neer the gates of death, deſerved both in ſoul and bodie eternally, by reaſon of manifold, horrible, old and new tranſgreſſions, which to thine eyes (O Lord) are open and known: Oh be mercifull unto me, for the bitter death and bloodſhedding of thine own onely Son Ieſus Chriſt. And though thy juſtice do require (in reſpect of my ſins) that now thou ſhouldeſt not hear me, meaſuring me in the ſame meaſure I have meaſured thy Majeſtie, contemning thy daily calls; yea let thy mercie which is above all thy works, and wherewith the earth is filled, let thy mercie (I ſay) prevail towards me, through and for the mediation of Chriſt our Saviour. And for whoſe ſake in that it hath pleaſed thee to bring me forth now as one of his witneſſes, and a record bearer of thy veritie and truth taught by him, to give my life therefore (to which dignitie I do acknowledge deare God that there was never any ſo unworthie and ſo unmeet, no not the theefe that hanged with him on the croſſe:) I moſt humbly therefore pray thee that thou wouldeſt accordingly aid, help, and aſſiſt me with thy ſtrength and heavenly grace, that with Chriſt thy Sonne I may finde comfort, with Stephen I may ſee thy preſence, and gratious power, with Paul, and all others which for thy Names ſake have ſuffered affliction and death, I may finde ſo preſent with me thy gracious conſolations, that I may by my death glorifie thy holy Name, propagate, and ratifie thy veritie, comfort the hearts of the heavie, confirm thy Church in thy veritie, convert ſome that are to be converted, and ſo depart forth of this miſerable world, where I do nothing but daily heap ſinne upon ſinne, and ſo enter into the fruition of thy bleſſed mercie; whereof now give and increaſe in me a lively truſt, ſenſe, and feeling, where through the terrors of death, the torments of fire, the pangs of ſinne, the darts of Satan, and the dolors of hell may never depreſſe me, but may be driven away through the working of that moſt gracious ſpirit; which now plenteouſly endue me withall, that through the ſame ſpirit I may offer (as I now deſire to do in Chriſt by him) my ſelf wholly ſoul and bodie, to be a lively ſacrifice, holy and acceptable in thy ſight. Dear Father, whoſe I am, and alwayes have been, even from my mothers wombe, yea even before the world was made, to whom I commend my ſelf, ſoul and bodie, family and friends, countrey and all the whole Church, yea even my very enemies, according to thy good pleaſure; beſeeching thee intirely to give once more to this Realm of England the bleſſing of thy Word again, with godly peace, to the teaching and ſetting forth of the ſame. O deare Father, now give me grace to come unto thee. Purge and ſo purifie me by this fire in Chriſts death and paſſion through thy ſpirit, that I may be a burnt-offering of a ſweet ſmell in thy ſight which liveſt and reigneſt with the Sonne and the holy Ghoſt, now and for evermore world without end, Amen.

He prayeth for reſtoring of the Goſpel & peace in England.

Letters of M. Philpot.

A letter which he ſent to the Chriſtian congregation, exhorting them to refrain from the idolatrous ſervice of the Papiſts, and to ſerve God after his word.

A letter of M. Philpot to the congregation.

IT is a lamentable thing to behold at this preſent in England the faithleſſe departing both of men and women from the true knowledge and uſe of Chriſts ſincere religion, which ſo plentifully they have been taught and do know, their own conſciences bearing witneſſe to the veritie thereof. If that earth be curſed of God, which eftſoons receiving moiſture and pleaſant dews from heaven, doth not bring forth fruit accordingly; how much more grievous judgement ſhall ſuch perſons receive, which having received from the Father of heaven the perfect knowledge of his word by the miniſtrie thereof, do not ſhew forth Gods worſhip after the ſame? If the Lord will require in the day of judgement a godly uſurie of all maner of talents which he lendeth unto men and women, how much more will he require the ſame of his pure Religion revealed unto us (which is of all other talents the chiefeſt and moſt pertaining to our exerciſe in this life) if we hide the ſame in a napkin, and ſet it not forth to the uſury of Gods glory, and edifying of his Church by true confeſſion? God hath kindled the bright light of his Goſpel, which in times paſt was ſuppreſſed and hid under the vile aſhes of mans traditions, and hath cauſed the brightneſſe thereof to ſhine in our hearts, to the end that the ſame might ſhine before men to the honour of his name. It is not onely given us to beleeve, but alſo to confeſſe and declare what we beleeve in our outward converſation. For as ſaint Paul writeth to the Romanes, The beleef of the heart juſtifieth, and to acknowledge with the mouth maketh a man ſafe. It is all one before God, not to beleeve at all, and not to ſhew forth the lively works of our beleef. For Chriſt ſaith, Either make the tree good and his fruits good: Or elſe make the tree evil and the fruits evill, becauſe a good tree bringeth forth good fruits, as an evill tree doth evill fruits. So that the perſon which knoweth his Maſters will and doth it not, ſhall be beaten with many ſtripes. And not all they which ſay Lord, Lord, ſhall enter into the kingdome of God, but he that doth the will of the Father. And whoſoever in the time of triall is aſhamed of me (ſaith Chriſt) and of my words, of him the Son of man will be aſhamed before his Father. After that we have built our ſelves into the true Church of God, it hath pleaſed him by giving us over into the hands of the wicked ſynagogues to prove our building, and to have it knowne as well to the World as to our ſelves, that we have beene wiſe builders into the true Church of God upon the rock, and not on the ſand, and therefore now the tempeſt is riſen, and the ſtorms do mightily blow againſt us, that we might notwithſtanding ſtand upright, and be firme in the Lord, to his honor and glory, and to our eternall felicitie. There is no new thing happened unto us, for with ſuch tempeſts and dangerous weathers the church of God hath continually been exerciſed. Now once againe as the Prophet Aggeus telleth us, The Lord ſhaketh the earth, that thoſe might abide for ever, which be not overcome.

Wiſdome of the fleſh not to be hearkned unto.

Math. 16.

Therefore my dearely beloved, be ſtable and immoveable in the word of God, and in the faithfull obſervation thereof, and let no man deceive you with vaine words, ſaying, that you may keep your faith to your ſelves, and diſſemble with Antichriſt, and ſo live at reſt and quietneſſe in the world, as moſt men do, yeelding to neceſſitie. This is the wiſdome of the fleſh; but the wiſdome of the fleſh is death and enmitie to God, as our Saviour for enſample aptly did declare in Peter, who exhorteth Chriſt not to go to Ieruſalem to celebrate the Paſſeover and there to be ſlain, but counſelled him to look better to himſelfe.

Heb. 11.
Pſal. 116.

Death for righteouſnes bringeth felicitie.

Likewiſe the world would not have us to forſake it, neither to aſſociate our ſelves to the true church, which is the body of Chriſt, whereof we are lively members, and to uſe the ſacraments after Gods word with the danger of our lives. But we muſt learn to anſwer the world, as Chriſt did Peter, and ſay, Goe behinde me Satan, thou ſavoureſt not the things of God. Shall I not drinke of the cup which the Father giveth me? For it is better to be afflicted and to be ſlaine in the Church of God, then to be counted the ſonne of the King, and the ſynagogue of falſe religion. Death for righteouſneſſe is not to be abhorred, but rather to be deſired, which aſſuredly bringeth with it the crowne of everlaſting glory. Theſe bloudy executioners doe not perſecute Chriſts Martyrs, but crowne them with everlaſting felicitie; we were borne into this world to be witneſſes unto the truth, both learned and unlearned.

Godly counſell.

3 Reg. 31.
God will not be ſerved after mans imagination, but as himſelf preſcribeth.

Now ſince the time is come that we muſt ſhew our faith, and declare whether we will be Gods ſervants in righteouſneſſe and holineſſe, as we have beene taught and are bound to follow, or elſe with hypocriſie to ſerve unrighteouſneſſe: let us take good heed that we be found faithfull in the Lords covenant, and true members of his Church, in the which through knowledge we are ingraffed; from the which if we fall by tranſgreſſion with the common ſort of people, it will more ſtraightly be required of us, then many yet doe make account thereof. We cannot ſerve two Maſters; we may not halt on both ſides, and thinke to pleaſe God; we muſt be fervent in Gods cauſe, or elſe he will caſt us out from him. For by the firſt commandement we are commanded to love God with all our heart, with all our minde, with all our power and ſtrength: but they are manifeſt trangreſſors of this commandement, which with their heart, minde, or bodily power, doe communicate with a ſtrange religion, contrarie to the word of God, in the Papiſticall Synagogue, which calleth it ſelfe the Church, and is not. As greatly doe they offend GOD now which ſo doe, as the Iſraelites did in times paſt by forſaking Ieruſalem the true Church of God, and by going to Bethel to ſerve God in a Congregation of their own ſetting up, and after their owne imaginations and traditions: for the which doing God utterly deſtroyed all Iſrael, as all the Prophets almoſt doe teſtifie. This happened unto them for our enſample, that we might beware to have any fellowſhip with any like congregation to our deſtruction.

Pſal. 26.

God hath one Catholike Church diſperſed throughout the world, and therefore we are taught in our Creede to beleeve one Catholike Church, and to have communion therewith: which Catholike church is grounded upon the foundation of the Prophets, and of the Apoſtles, and upon none other, as St. Paul witneſſeth to the Epheſians. Therefore whereſoever we perceive any people to worſhip God truely after his word, there we may be certaine the church of Chriſt to be; unto the which we ought to aſſociate our ſelves, and to deſire with the Prophet David, to praiſe God in the middeſt of his church. But if we behold through the iniquitie of time, ſegregations to be made with counterfeit religion, otherwiſe then the word of God doth teach, we ought then if we be required to be companions thereof, to ſay againe with David, I have hated the Synagogue of the malignant, and will not ſit with the wicked. In the Apocalyps the church of Epheſus is highly commended, becauſe ſhe tryed ſuch as ſaid they were Apoſtles, and were not indeed, and therefore would not abide the company of them. Further, God commanded his people that they ſhould not ſeeke Bethel, neither enter into Gilgal where Idolatry was uſed, by the mouth of his Prophet Amos. Alſo we muſt conſider that our bodies be the Temple of God, and whoſoever (as S. Paul teacheth) doth prophane the Temple of God, him the Lord will deſtroy. May we then take the Temple of Chriſt and make it the member of an harlot? All ſtrange religion and idolatrie is counted whoredome with the Prophets, and the more deteſtable in the ſight of God, then the adventurous abuſe of the body.

Apoc. 2.

Amos 5.

2 Cor. 3.

Not lawfull for a true chriſtian to come to the maſſe.

Therefore the Princes of the earth, in the Revelation of St. Iohn, be ſaid to go a whoring, when they are in love with falſe religion, and follow the ſame. How then by any meanes may a Chriſtian man thinke it tolerable to be preſent at the Popiſh private Maſſe (which is the very prophanation of the ſacrament of the body and bloud of Chriſt) and at other idolatrous worſhippings and rites, which be not after the worde of God, but rather to the derogation thereof, in ſetting mans traditions above Gods precepts, ſince GOD by his word judgeth all ſtrange religion, which is not according to his inſtitution, for whoredome and advoutry?

Some fondly thinke that the preſence of the body is not materiall, ſo that the heart doe not conſent to their wicked doings. But ſuch perſons little conſider what S. Paul writeth to the Corinthians, commanding them to glorifie God as well in body as in ſoule.

Not enough to confeſſe God in heart, but in mouth alſo.

A leſſon for large conſciences.

Moreover, we can doe no greater injurie to the true church of Chriſt, then to ſeeme to have forſaken her, and diſallow her by cleaving to her adverſarie: whereby it appeareth to others which be weake, that we allow the ſame, and ſo contrary to the word, doe give a great offence to the Church of God, and doe outwardly ſlander, as much as men may, the truth of Chriſt. But woe be unto him by whom any ſuch offence cometh. Better it were for him to have a milſtone tied about his neck, and to be caſt into the bottome of the ſea. Such be traytors to the truth, like unto Iudas, who with a kiſſe betrayed Chriſt. Our God is a jealous God, and cannot be content that we ſhould be of any other then of that unſpotted church, whereof he is the head onely, and wherein he hath planted us by baptiſme. This jealouſie which God hath towards us, will cry for vengeance in the day of vengeance, againſt all ſuch as now have ſo large conſciences to do that which is contrarie to Gods glory, and the ſinceritie of his word, except they doe in time repent, and cleave unſeparably to the Goſpel of Chriſt, how much ſoever at this preſent both men and women otherwiſe in their owne corrupt judgement, doe flatter themſelves. God willeth us to judge uprightly, and to allow and follow that which is holy and acceptable in his ſight, and to abſtaine from all manner of evill, and therefore Chriſt commandeth us in the Goſpel to beware of the leaven of the Phariſees, which is hypocriſie.

Heb. 10.

Epheſ. 5.

St. Paul to the Hebrewes ſaith, If any man withdraw himſelfe from the faith, his ſoule ſhall have no pleaſure in him: therefore he ſaith alſo, That we are none ſuch as doe withdraw our ſelves unto perdition, but we belong unto faith, for the attainment of life. St. Iohn in the Apocalyps telleth us plainly, that none of thoſe, who are written in the booke of life, doe receive the marke of the beaſt, which is of the Papiſticall Synagogue, either in their foreheads, or elſe in their hands, that is apparently or obediently.

Phil. 2.

2 Cor. 6.

St. Paul to the Philippians affirmeth, that we may not have any fellowſhip with the workes of darknes, but in the midſt of this wicked and froward generation we ought to ſhine like lights upholding the word of truth. Further he ſaith, that we may not touch any unclean thing; which ſignifieth that our outward converſation in forreine things ought to be pure and undefiled as well as the inward, that with a clean ſpirit and rectified body we might ſerve God juſtly in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe all the daies of our life.

Apoc. 18.

2 Theſ. 3.

Finally in the 18. of the Apocalyps, God biddeth us plainly to depart from the Babylonicall Synagogue, and not to be partakers of her treſpaſſe. S. Paul to the Theſſ. commandeth us in the name of the Lord Ieſus Chriſt, to withdraw our ſelves from every brother that walketh inordinately, and not according to the inſtitution which he hath received of him.

Matth. 24.

A curſed thing to ſin upon hope of forgiveneſſe.

Pſal. 102. 146.

Ponder ye therefore well, good brethren & ſiſters, theſe Scriptures which be written for your erudition and reformation, whereof one jot is not written in vaine: which be utterly againſt all counterfeit illuſion to be uſed of us with the Papiſts in their phantaſticall religion, and be adverſaries to all them that have ſo light conſciences in ſo doing: and if they doe not agree with this adverſarie (I meane the word of God) which is contrary to their attempts, he will (as it is ſignified in the Goſpel) deliver them to the judge, which is Chriſt, and the judge will deliver them to the executioner, that is to the devill, and the devill ſhall commit them to the horrible priſon of hell fire (where is the portion of all hypocrites) with ſulphure and brimſtone, with wailing and gnaſhing of teeth world without end. But yet many will ſay for their vaine excuſe; God is mercifull, and his mercy is over all. But the Scripture teacheth us, That curſed is he that ſinneth upon hope of forgiveneſſe: Truth it is, that the mercy of God is above all his workes, and yet but upon ſuch as feare him: for it is written in the Pſalmes, The mercy of God is on them that feare him, and on ſuch as put their truſt in him. Where we may learne, that they onely put their truſt in God, that ſerve him; and to feare God, is to turne from evill and doe that is good. So that ſuch as doe looke to be partakers in Gods mercy, may not abide in that which is knowne to be manifeſt evill and deteſtable in the ſight of God.

Obedience to Magiſtrates what, and how farre.

Acts 4.

Another ſort of perſons doe make them a cloak for the raine under the pretence of obedience to the magiſtrates, whom we ought to obey although they be wicked. But ſuch muſt learne of Chriſt to give to Cæſar that is Cæſars, and to God that is due to God, and with S. Peter to obey the higher powers in the Lord, albeit they be evill, if they command nothing contrary to Gods word, otherwiſe we ought not to obey their commandements, although we ſhould ſuffer death therefore: as we have the Apoſtles for our example herein to follow, who anſwered the Magiſtrates as we ought to doe in this caſe, not obeying their wicked precepts, ſaying, Iudge you whether it be more righteous that we ſhould obey man rather then God.

Daniel 6.

Matth. 15.

Againſt ſuch as ſin willingly upon hope of election.

Rom. 3.

Epheſ. 1.

Alſo Daniel choſe rather to be caſt into the den of Lions to be devoured, then to obey the Kings wicked commandements. If the blinde leade the blinde, both fall into the ditch. There is no excuſe for the tranſgreſſion of Gods word, whether a man doe it voluntarily or at commandement, although great damnation is to them, by whom the offence cometh. Some others there be that for an extreme refuge in their evill doings, doe runne to Gods predeſtination and election, ſaying, that if I be elected of God to ſalvation, I ſhall be ſaved, whatſoever I doe. But ſuch be great tempters of God, and abominable blaſphemers of Gods holy election, and caſt themſelves downe from the pinacle of the Temple in preſumption, that GOD may preſerve them by his Angels through predeſtination. Such verily may reckon themſelves to be none of Gods elect children, that will doe evill that good may enſue; whoſe damnation is juſt, as Saint Paul ſaith. Gods predeſtination and election ought to be with a ſimple eye conſidered, to make us more warily to walke in good and godly converſation according to Gods word, and not ſet cock in the hoope, and put all on Gods back to doe wickedly at large: for the elect children of God muſt walke in righteouſneſſe and holineſſe after that they be once called to true knowledge. For ſo ſaith Saint Paul to the Epheſ. That God hath choſen us before the foundations of the world were laid, that we ſhould be holy and blameleſſe in his ſight.

Prov. 24.

Therefore Saint Peter willeth us through good workes to make our vocation and election certaine to our ſelves, which we know not but by the good working of Gods ſpirit in us, according to the rule of the Goſpel; and he that conformeth not hinſelfe to the ſame in godly converſation, may juſtly tremble, and doubt that he is none of the elect children of God, but of the viperous generation, and a childe of darknes. For the children of light will walke in the works of light and not of darkneſſe; though they fall, they do not lie ſtill.

Iohn 12.

Iohn 3.

Heb. 10.

Let all vaine excuſations be ſet apart, and whiles ye have light, as Chriſt commandeth, beleeve the light and abide in the ſame, leſt eternall darkneſſe overtake you unawares. The light is come into the world, but (alas) men love darkneſſe more then the light. God give us his pure eye-ſalve to heale our blindneſſe in this behalfe. O that men and women would be healed, and not ſeeke to be wilfully blinded. The Lord open their eies, that they may ſee how dangerous a thing it is to decline from the knowledge of truth, contrarie to their conſcience.

Large conſcience.

But what ſaid I, conſcience? many affirme their conſcience will beare them well enough to do all that they doe, and to go to the idolatrous church to ſervice; whoſe conſcience is very large to ſatisfie man more then GOD. And although their conſcience can beare them ſo to doe, yet I am ſure that a good conſcience will not permit them ſo to doe; which cannot be good, unleſſe it be directed after the knowledge of Gods word: and therefore in Latine this feeling minde is called Conſcientia, which ſoundeth by interpretation, as much as with knowledge.

And therefore if our conſcience be led of her ſelfe, and not after true knowledge, yet we are not ſo to be excuſed, as Saint Paul beareth witneſſe, ſaying, Although my conſcience accuſeth me not,

1 Cor. 4. 1 Tim. 1.

not, yet in this I am not juſtified. And he joyneth a good conſcience with theſe three ſiſters, charitie, a pure heart, and unfained faith. Charitie keepeth Gods commandements, a pure heart loveth and feareth God above all, and unfained faith is never aſhamed of the profeſſion of the Goſpel, whatſoever damage he ſhall ſuffer in body thereby. The Lord which hath revealed his holy will unto us by his word, grant us never to be aſhamed of it, and give us grace ſo earneſtly to cleave to his holy word and true church, that for no manner of worldly reſpect we become partakers of the works of hypocriſie, which God doth abhor; ſo that we may be found faithfull in the Lords Teſtament to the end, both in heart, word, and deed, to the glory of God and our everlaſting ſalvation, Amen.

Iohn Philpot, priſoner in the Kings Bench for the teſtimonie of the truth. 1555.

To his deare friend in the Lord, Iohn Careleſſe priſoner in the Kings Bench.

Another letter of M. Philpot to I. Careleſſe.

My dearely beloved brother Careleſſe, I have receſved your loving letters full of love and compaſſion, inſomuch that they made my hard heart to weep, to ſee you ſo carefull for one that hath been ſo unprofitable a member as I have been, and am in Chriſts church. God make me worthy of that I am called unto, and I pray you ceaſe not to pray for me, but ceaſe to weep for him who hath not deſerved ſuch gentle teares: and praiſe God with me, for that I now approach to the company of them, whoſe want you may worthily lament; God give your pittifull heart his inward conſolation. Indeed my deare Careleſſe, I am in this world in hel, and in the ſhadow of death; but he that hath brought me for my deſerts down into hell, ſhall ſhortly lift me up to heaven, where I ſhall looke continually for your coming and others my faithfull brethren in the Kings Bench. And though I tell you that I am in hell in the judgement of this world, yet aſſuredly I feele in the ſame the conſolation of heaven, I praiſe God; and this loathſome and horrible priſon is as pleaſant to me, as the walk in the garden of the Kings Bench.

Experience of the Lords comfort in trouble.

You know brother Careleſſe, that the way to heaven out of this life is very narrow, and we muſt ſtrive to enter in at a narrow gate. If God doe mittigate the ouglineſſe of mine impriſonment, what will he doe in the rage of the fire whereunto I am appointed? And this hath happened unto me, that I might be hereafter an enſample of comfort, if the like happen unto you, or to any other of my deare brethren with you in theſe cruell dayes, in the which the devill ſo rageth at the faithfull flock of Chriſt, but in vaine (I truſt) againſt any of us: who be perſwaded that neither life, neither death is able to ſeparate us from the love of Chriſts Goſpel, which is Gods high treaſure committed to our brittle veſſels to glorifie us by the ſame. God of his mercy make us faithfull ſtewards to the end, and give us grace to feare nothing whatſoever in his good pleaſure we ſhall ſuffer for the ſame. That I have not written unto you erſt, the cauſe is our ſtrait keeping and the want of light by night: for the day ſerveth us but a while in our darke cloſet. This is the firſt letter that I have written ſince I came to priſon, beſides the report of mine examinations; and I am faine to ſcribble it out in haſte.

Example of Chriſts comfort, to be taken by M. Philpot.

Commend me to all our faithfull brethren, and bid them with a good courage looke for their redemption, and frame themſelves to be hearty ſouldiers in Chriſt. They have taken his preſt money a great while, and now let them ſhew themſelves ready to ſerve him faithfully, and not to flie out of the Lords campe into the world, as many doe. Let them remember that in the Apocalyps the fearefull be excluded the Kingdome. Let us be of good cheere, for our Lord overcame the world, that we ſhould doe the like. Bleſſed is the ſervant, whom when the Lord cometh, he findeth watching. O let us watch and pray earneſtly one for another, that we be not led into temptation. Be joyfull under the croſſe and praiſe the Lord continually, for this is the whole burnt ſacrifice which the Lord delighteth in. Commend me to my father Hunt, and deſire him to love and continue in the unitie of Chriſts true church, which he hath begun, and then ſhal he make me more & more to joy under my croſſe with him. Tell my brother Clements that he hath comforted me much by his loving token in ſignification of an unfained unitie with us; let him increaſe my joy unto the end perfectly. The Lord of peace be with you all. Salute all my loving friends, M. Mering, M. Crooch, with the reſt, and ſpecially M. Marſhall, and his wife, with great thankes for his kindneſſe ſhewed unto me. Farewell my deare Careleſſe. I have dallied with the devill awhile, but I am over the ſhooes: God ſend me well out.

Apoc. 21.

Out of the Colehouſe, by your brother, Iohn Philpot.

Another letter to Iohn Careleſſe, profitable to be read of all them which mourne in repentance for their ſinnes.

Another letter of M. Philpot to the ſame partie.

The God of all comfort, and the Father of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, ſend unto thee my deare brother Careleſſe, the inward conſolation of his holy ſpirit, in all the malicious aſſaults and troublous temptations of our common adverſarie the Devill, Amen.

That God giveth you ſo contrite a heart for your ſins I cannot but rejoyce to behold the lively marke of the children of God, whoſe property is to thinke more lowly and vilely of themſelves then of any other, and oftentimes doe ſet their ſins before them, that they might the more be ſtirred to bring forth the fruits of repentance, and learn to mourn in this world, that in another they might be glad and rejoyce. Such a broken heart is a pleaſant ſacrifice unto God: O that I had the like contrite heart. God mollifie my ſtonie heart, which lamenteth not in ſuch wiſe my former deteſtable iniquities. Praiſed be God that he hath given you this ſorrowfull heart in reſpect of righteouſneſſe, and I pray you let me be partaker of theſe godly ſorrowes for ſinne, which be the teſtimonie of the preſence of the holy Ghoſt. Did not the ſword of ſorrow pierce the heart of the elect and bleſſed mother of our Lord? Did not Peter weepe bitterly for his ſinnes, which was ſo beloved of Chriſt? Did not Mary Magdalen waſh the feet of our Saviour with her teares, and received therewith all remiſſion of her ſeven fold ſinnes?

To this letter Careleſſe maketh a very godly anſwer, which you ſhall ſee afterward in his ſtory. Pſal. 51.

Be of good comfort therefore mine owne deare heart, in this thy ſorrow, for it is the earneſt penie of eternall conſolation. In thy ſorrow laugh, for the Spirit of God is with thee: Bleſſed be they (ſaith Chriſt) that mourne, for they ſhall be comforted. They went forth and wept, ſaith the Prophet, ſuch ſhall come againe, having their gripes full of gladneſſe. And although a ſorrowfull heart, in conſideration of his ſinne, be an acceptable ſacrifice before GOD, whereby we are ſtirred up to more thankfulneſſe unto God, knowing that much is forgiven us that we might love the more, yet the man of God muſt keepe a meaſure in the ſame, leſt he be ſwallowed up by much ſorrow. Saint Paul would not the Theſſalonians to be ſory as other men which have no hope: ſuch a ſorrow is not commendable, but worketh damnation, and is farre from the children of God, who are continually ſorrowfull in God when they looke upon their owne unworthineſſe, with hope of forgiveneſſe. For God to this end by his ſpirit ſetteth the ſinnes of his elect ſtill before them, that where they perceive ſinne to abound, there they might be aſſured that grace ſhall ſuperabound; and bringeth them downe unto hell, that he might lift them up with greater joy unto heaven. Wherefore mine owne bowels in Chriſt, as long as you are not void altogether of hope, be not diſmaied through your penſive heart for your ſinnes, how huge ſoever they have been, for God is able to forgive more then you are able to ſinne: yea, and he will forgive him, which with hope is ſorry for his ſinnes.

Satans practiſe to bring the godly repentance of a ſinner to deſperation.

But know brother, that as oft as we doe goe about, by the helpe of Gods ſpirit, to doe that is good, the evill ſpirit Satan layeth hard wait to turne the good unto evill, and goeth about to mixe the deteſtable darnell of deſperation with the godly ſorrow of a pure penitent heart. You be not ignorant of his malicious ſubtiltie, and how that continually he aſſaulteth that good which the grace of God planteth. I ſee the battell betwixt you and him, but the victory is yours, yea and that daily: For you have laid hold upon the anchor of ſalvation, which is hope in Chriſt, the which will not ſuffer you to be made aſhamed.

This ſtrife againſt ſinne is a ſufficient teſtimonie that you are the childe of God: for if you were not, you ſhould feele no ſuch malice as he now troubleth you withall. When this ſtrong Goliah hath the hold, all things are in peace which he poſſeſſeth: and becauſe he hath you not, he will not ſuffer you unaſſaulted. But ſtand faſt, and hold out the buckler of faith, and with the ſword of Gods promiſes ſmite him on the ſcalpe: that he may receive a deadly wound, and never be able to ſtand againſt you any more. Saint James telleth you that he is but a coward, ſaying, Reſiſt the devill, and he will flye from thee. It is the will of God that he ſhould thus long tempt you and not go away as yet, or elſe he had done with you long ere this. He knoweth already that he ſhall receive the foile at your hands, and increaſe the crowne of your glorie: for he that overcometh ſhall be crowned. Therefore glorie in your temptations, ſince they ſhall turne to your felicitie. Be not afraid of your continuall aſſaults which be occaſions of your daily victorie. The word of God abideth for ever, In what houre ſoever a ſinner repenteth him of his ſins, they be forgiven. Who can lay any thing to the charge of Gods elect? Do you not perceive the manifeſt tokens of your election? Firſt, your vocation to the Goſpel, and after your vocation, the manifeſt gifts of the ſpirit of God given unto you above many other of your condition, with godlineſſe which beleeveth and yeeldeth to the authoritie of the Scriptures, and is zealous for the ſame? Seeing you are Gods owne dearling, who can hurt you? Be not of a deject minde for theſe temptations, neither make your unfained friends to be more ſorrowfull for you then need doth require.

Strife againſt ſin is a token of Gods childe. Luke 11.

Iames 4.

Since God hath willed you at your baptiſme in Chriſt to be careleſſe, why doe you make your ſelfe carefull? Caſt all your care on him. Set the Lord before your eyes alwaies, for he is on your right ſide, that you ſhould not be then moved. Behold the goodneſſe of God toward me. I am careleſſe, being faſt cloſed in a paire of ſtockes, which pinch me for very ſtraitneſſe; and will you be carefull? I will not have that unſeemely addition to your name. Be as your name pretendeth, for doubtleſſe you have no other cauſe but ſo to be. Pray, I beſeech you, that I may be ſtill careleſſe in my carefull eſtate, as you have cauſe to be careleſſe in your eaſier condition. Be thankfull and put away all care, and then I ſhall be joyfull in my ſtrait preſent care. Commend me to all our brethren, and deſire them to pray for me, that I may overcome my temptations: for the devill rageth againſt me: I am put in the ſtocks in a place alone, becauſe I would not anſwer to ſuch articles, as they would charge me withall in a corner at the Biſhops appointment, and becauſe I did not come to Maſſe when the Biſhop ſent for me. I will lye all the daies of my life in the ſtocks, by Gods grace, rather then I will conſent to the wicked generation. Praiſe God, and be joyfull, that it hath pleaſed him to make us worthy to ſuffer ſomewhat for his names ſake. The devill muſt rage for tenne daies. Commend me to Maſter F. and thanke him for his Law bookes: but neither law nor equitie will take any place among theſe blood-thirſtie. I would for your ſake their unjuſt dealing were noted unto the Parliament houſe, if it might availe. God ſhorten theſe evill daies. I have anſwered the Biſhop meetly plain already, & I ſaid to him, if he will call me in open judgement, I will anſwer him as plainely as he will require: otherwiſe I have refuſed, becauſe I feare they will condemne me in hugger mugger. The peace of God be with you my deare brother. I can write no more for lack of light, and that I have written I cannot reade my ſelfe, and God knoweth it is written far uneaſily. I pray God you may picke out ſome underſtanding of my minde towards you. Written in a Cole-houſe of darkneſſe, out of a paire of painfull ſtocks, by thine owne in Chriſt,

True Chriſtians how they ought to be careleſſe in their carefull eſtate.

Another letter of Maſter Philpot, to certaine godly women, forſaking their owne Countrey for the Goſpel, full of fruitfull precepts and leſſons for all good women.

Another letter of M. Philpot to certaine godly women.

THe ſpirit of truth, revealed unto you my dearely beloved, by the Goſpel of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, be continually abiding with you, and augmented into a perfect building of you into the lively Temple of God, through the mightie operation of his holy power. Amen.

I read in the Evangeliſts, of certaine godly women, that miniſtred unto Chriſt, following him in the daies of his paſſion, and never forſooke him, but being dead in his grave, brought oyle to annoint him, untill that he had ſhewed himſelfe unto them after his reſurrection, and bidden them ſhew unto his Diſciples, which at his paſſion were diſperſed, and tell them that he was riſen, & that they ſhould ſee him in Galile. To whom I may juſtly compare you (my loving ſiſters in Chriſt) who of late have ſeene him ſuffer in his members, and have miniſtred to their neceſſitie, annointing them with the comfortable oyle of your charitable aſſiſtance, even to the death: and now ſince ye have ſeen Chriſt to live in the aſhes of them, whom the tyrants have ſlaine, he willed you to goe away upon juſt occaſion offered you, and to declare to our diſperſed brethren and ſiſters, that he is riſen, and liveth in his elect members in England, and by death doth overcome infidelitie, and that they ſhall ſee him in Galile, which is by forſaking this world, and by a faithfull deſire to paſſe out of this world by thoſe waies, which he with his holy martyrs hath gone on before.

Wholeſome and godly precepts of life.

God therefore (intire ſiſters) direct your way, as he did Abraham & Tobias unto a ſtrange land: God give you health both of body and ſoule, that ye may goe from vertue to vertue, and grow from ſtrength to ſtrength, untill ye may ſee face to face the God of Sion in his holy hill, with the innumerable company of his bleſſed Martyrs and Saints. Let there be continuall aſcenſious unto heaven in your hearts. Let there be no decreaſe of any vertue, which is already planted in you. Be as the light of the juſt, ſuch as Solomon ſaith, increaſeth to the perfect day of the Lord. Let the ſtrength of God be commended in your weake veſſels, as it is. Be examples of faith and ſobriety, to all that ye ſhall come in company withall. Let your godly converſation ſpeake where your tongue may not, in the congregation. Be ſwift to heare, and ſlow to ſpeake, after the counſell of Saint James. Be not curious about othermens doings, but be occupied in prayer, and continuall meditation, with reverent talking of the word of God, without contention amongſt the Saints. Let your faith ſhine in a ſtrange countrey, as it hath done in your own, that your Father which is in heaven, may be glorified by you to the end.

This farewell I ſend you, not as a thing needful (which know already what your dutie is, and be deſirous to performe the ſame) but as one that would have you underſtand that he is mindefull of your godly converſation, whereof he hath had good experience, and therefore writeth this to be a perpetuall memoriall betwixt you and him, untill our meeting together before God, where we ſhall joy that we have here lovingly put one another in memorie of our dutie to performe it.

Farewell againe mine owne bowels in Chriſt, and take me with you whereſoever you go, & leave your ſelves with me, that in ſpirit we may be preſent one with another. Commend me to the whole congregation of Chriſt, willing them not to leave their Countrey without witneſſe of the Goſpel, after that we all be ſlaine, which already be ſtalled up and appointed to the ſlaughter, & in the mean ſeaſon to pray earneſtly for our conſtancie, that Chriſt may be glorified in us and in them, both by life and death. Farewell in the Lord.

Yours for ever, Iohn Philpot.

An exhortation to his owne ſiſter, conſtantly to ſtick to the truth, which ſhe had fruitfully profeſſed.

Another letter of M. Philpot to his own ſiſter full of fruitfull exhortations.

GOd the eternall Father, who hath juſtified you by the bloud of his Son Jeſus Chriſt, and called you to hallow his name through a good converſation and profeſſion of life, he ſanctifie you with daily increaſe of vertue and faith by his holy ſpirit, that you may appeare a veſſell of ſanctification, in the midſt of this wicked and perverſe generation, to the laud and praiſe of the Goſpel. Amen.

I have occaſion (mine owne deare ſiſter) to praiſe God in you for two cauſes: the one, that to your abilitie you are ready to ſhew your ſelfe a naturall loving ſiſter to me your poore afflicted brother, as by your gentle tokens you have eftſoones teſtified being abſent, and alſo preſently viſiting me; which well declareth that you be a very natural ſiſter indeed, and to be praiſed in this behalf.

Spirituall conſanguinitie and naturall compared.

But in the other, that you be alſo a ſiſter to me in faith after Chriſts Goſpel, I am occaſioned to thanke God ſo much the more, how much the one excelleth the other, and the ſpirituall conſanguinitie is more perdurable then that which is of fleſh and bloud, and is a worker of that which is by nature: for commonly ſuch as be ungodly, be unnaturall, and onely lovers of themſeves, as daily experience teacheth us. The living Lord, which through the incorruptible ſeed of his word hath begotten you to be my leige ſiſter, give you grace ſo to grow in that generation, that you may increaſe to a perfect age in the Lord, to be my ſiſter with Chriſt for ever.

Look therefore that you continue a faithful ſiſter as you are called and are godly entered, not onely to me, but to all the church of Chriſt, yea to Chriſt himſelfe, who voucheth you in this your unfained faith, worthy to be his ſiſter. Conſider this dignity to ſurmount all the vaine dignities of the world, and let it accordingly prevaile more with you then all earthly delights: For thereby you are called to an equall portion of the everlaſting inheritance of Chriſt, if now in no wiſe you doe ſhew your ſelfe an unnaturall ſiſter to him in forſaking him in trouble, which I truſt you will never for any kinde of worldly reſpect doe. You are under dangerous temptations to be turned from that naturall love you owe unto Chriſt, and you ſhall be tried with Gods people through a ſieve of great affliction: for ſo Satan deſireth us to be ſifted, that through feare of ſharpe troubles we might fall from the ſtableneſſe of our faith, and ſo be deprived of that honor, joy, and reward, which is prepared for ſuch as continue faithfull brothers and ſiſters in the Lords covenant to the end. Therefore the wiſe man in the book of Eccleſiaſticus, biddeth them that come to the ſervice of the Lord,

The ſieve of afflictions. Luke 22.

To prepare themſelves to ſuffer temptations.

Eccleſ. 2.

Chriſt our firſt borne brother.

Since then that for the glory of God and our faith, we are called now to abide the brunt of them, and that when our adverſarie hath done all that he can, yet we may be ſtable and ſtand; this Chriſt our firſt begotten brother looketh for at our hands, and all our brethren and ſiſters in heaven deſire to ſee our faith through afflictions to be perfect, that we might fulfill their number: and the univerſall Church here militant, rejoyceth at our conſtancie, all whom by the contrary we ſhould make ſory, to the danger of the loſſe both of body and ſoule. Feare not therefore, whatſoever be threatned of the wicked world; prepare your back, and ſee it be ready to carrie Chriſts Croſſe. And if you ſee any untowardneſſe in you (as the fleſh is continually repugnant to the will of God) aſk with faithful prayer, that the good ſpirit of God may leade your ſinfull fleſh whither it would not: for if we will dwell in the fleſh and follow the councell thereof, we ſhall never doe the will of God, neither work that tendeth to our ſalvation.

A Chriſtian mans back ſhould alwaies be ready to beare Chriſts croſſe.

You are at this preſent in the confines and borders of Babylon, where you are in danger to drinke of the whores cup, unleſſe you be vigilant in prayer. Take heed the Serpent ſeduce you not from the ſimplicitie of your faith, as he did our firſt mother Eve. Let no worldly fellowſhip make you partaker of iniquitie. He that toucheth Tar, cannot but be defiled thereby. With ſuch as be perverſe, a man ſhall ſoone be perverted; with the holy you ſhall be holy. Therefore ſay continually with the Prophet David, Pſalme 35

Vnto the Saints that be on the earth, all my will is on them.

You have been ſanctified and made pure through the truth; take heed you be not unholied and defiled, leſt the laſt be not worſe then the firſt. I write not this becauſe I ſtand in any doubt of your ſincere continuance, of the which I have had ſo good experience. But becauſe the dayes be evill, and in the ſame it is the dutie of every of us to exhort and ſtirre up one another; I am bold to put you (my good ſiſter) in remembrance of that which doth not a little comfort me to remember, in my troubles and daily temptations. Wherefore I doubt not, you will take that in good part which cometh from your brother both in ſpirit and body, who tendreth your ſalvation as earneſtly as his owne, that we might joy together eternally with ſuch joy as the world ſhall never be able to take from us. Thankes be unto God, you have begun to runne a good and a great time well in the waies of the Lord: runne out the race to the end, which you have begun, and then ſhall you receive the crown of glory. None ſhall be crowned, but ſuch as lawfully ſtrive. Be not overcome of evill, but overcome evill with good, and the Lord ſhall make you one of thoſe faithfull Virgins that ſhall follow the Lambe whereſoever he goeth; the which Chriſt grant both you and me, Amen.

2 Tim. 2.

Apoc. 14.

This was for the firſt fruits of his Archdeaconry, whereof all the time of his impriſonment he had no commodity, and yet his ſureties were compelled to pay the ſame.

Commend me to all them that love me in the Lord unfainedly. God increaſe our faith, and give us never to be aſhamed of his Goſpel. That ſame requeſt which I have made to my brother Thomas, I make alſo to you, deſiring you by all meanes you can to accompliſh my requeſt, that my ſureties might be ſatisfied with that is mine own, to the contentation of my minde, which cannot be quiet untill they be diſcharged: therefore I pray you helpe to purchaſe quietneſſe, that I might depart out of this world in peace. My diſſolution I look for daily, but the Lord knoweth how unworthy I am of ſo high an honour, as to die for the teſtimonie of his truth. Pray that God would vouchſafe to make me worthy, as he hath done, of long impriſonment, for the which his name be praiſed for ever. Pray and look for the coming of the Lord, whoſe wrath is great over us, and I wil pray for you as long as I live. The 9. of July in the Kings Bench.

Your owne loving brother as well in faith as in body, Iohn Philpot.

Another letter of Iohn Philpot to certaine godly brethren.

Another letter of M. Philpot containing godly exhortations.

THe grace of God the Father, and the peace of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt his eternall Sonne, and the conſolation of the holy Ghoſt our comforter, ſtrengthen your hearts, and comfort your mindes, that you may rejoyce, and live in the truth of Chriſts Goſpel to the end, Amen.

He commendeth their faithfull zeale to Gods word.

I doe much rejoyce, dearely beloved in the Lord, to heare of your conſtant faith in the word of God, which you have ſo purely received; which doe not with the worldlings decline from the puritie thereof, albeit ye ſuffer griefe and trouble thereby; for the which I praiſe God moſt heartily: and the Lord of all ſtrength, who hath begun this good work in you, make it perfect to the end, as I doubt not but he will, for the faithfull zeale ye have to his truth & to his afflicted Church. Therefore that ye may the better ſtand & beare the brunt of many temptations, which you are like to be aſſaulted withall in theſe wicked & ſtormy dayes; I thought it good, as it is the dutie of one chriſtian man to exhort another in the time of trouble, to put you in remembrance thereof, & to will you with the wiſe man to prepare your ſelves to temptations; and to beware that ye, which yet do ſtand by the goodneſſe of God, may not fall from your lively knowledge and hope. It is an eaſie thing to begin to doe well, but to continue out in well doing, is the onely propertie of the children of God, and ſuch as aſſuredly ſhal be ſaved. For ſo ſaith our Saviour in his Goſpel, Bleſſed are they that perſevere to the end.

He exhorteth them to continue and to ſtand faſt.

Matth. 13.

Let not therefore this certaintie of your ſalvation, which is continuance in the ſinceritie of faith, ſlide from you. Eſteeme it more then all the riches and pleaſures of this world, for it is the moſt acceptable treaſure of eternall life. This is that precious ſtone, for the which the wiſe Merchant man, after the Goſpel, doth ſell all that he hath, and buyeth the ſame. God in the 3. of the Apocal. doth ſignifie to the Church, that there ſhall come a time of temptation upon the whole world, to try the dwellers on the earth. From the danger of the which temptation all ſuch ſhall be delivered as obſerve his word: which word there is called the word of patience; to give us to underſtand that we muſt be readie to ſuffer all kinde of injuries and ſlanders for the profeſſion thereof.

Apoc. 3.

The word of patience.

1 Pet. 1.

Therefore God commandeth us there to hold it faſt, that no man might bereave us of our crowne of glory, and Saint Peter telleth us now we are afflicted with divers aſſayes, as it is need it ſhould ſo be. That the triall of our faith being much more precious then gold that periſheth, and yet is tried by fire, might redound to the laud, glory, and honour of Jeſus Chriſt. Saint Paul to the Hebrews ſheweth us, that Chriſt our Saviour was in his humanitie made perfect by afflictions, that we being called to perfection in him, might more willingly ſuſtaine the troubles of the world, by the which God giveth all them that be exerciſed in the ſame for his ſake, his holineſſe. And in the 12. Chapter of the ſaid Epiſtle is written, My ſonne, refuſe not the correction of the Lord, nor ſhrinke when thou art rebuked of him: for the Lord doth chaſtiſe every ſonne whom he receiveth, &c. Chriſt in the Goſpel of Saint John biddeth his Diſciples to look after afflictions, ſaying, In the world ye ſhall have trouble, but in me ye ſhall have joy. And therefore in the middeſt of their trouble, in the 21. of Saint Luke he biddeth them looke up and lift up their heads, for your redemption, ſaith he, is at hand. And in the 22. he ſaith to all ſuch as be afflicted for him, You are thoſe that have abidden with me in my temptations, and therefore I appoint unto you a kingdome, as my Father hath appointed for me, to eate and drink upon my table in my Kingdome.

Heb. 2.

John 16.

Luke 21.

Luke 22.

The fruit that cometh by bearing of the croſſe.

Oh how glorious be the croſſes of Chriſt, which bring the bearers of them unto ſo bleſſed an end. Shal we not be glad to be partakers of ſuch ſhame as may bring us to ſo high a dignitie? God open our eyes to ſee all things as they be, and to judge uprightly. Then doubtleſſe we would think with Moſes, that it is better to be afflicted with the people of God, then to be counted the King of Egypts ſonne. Then ſhould we joyfully ſay with David in all our adverſities and troubles, It is good (O Lord) thou haſt brought me low, to the end I might learne thy righteouſneſſe. Therefore S. Paul would not glory in any other thing of the world, but in the Croſſe of Chriſt, and in other his infirmities: We have the commandement of Chriſt, daily to take up his Croſſe and follow him. We have the godly enſamples of all his Apoſtles and holy Martyrs, which with great joy and exultation have ſuffered the loſſe of lands, goods, and life, for the hope of a better reward: which is laid up for all thoſe in heaven, that unfainedly cleave to the Goſpel, and never be aſhamed thereof.

The delights of the world nothing comparable to them that are to come.

Great is the felicitie of the world to the outward man, and very pleaſant are the tranſitorie delights thereof: but the reward of the righteous after the word of God, doth incomparably excell them all, inſomuch that S. Paul to the Romanes doth plainly affirme, that all the tribulations of this world cannot deſerve that glory which ſhall be ſhewed unto us.

Conſideration of joyes to come

The note of a true Chriſtian.

How a chriſtian man gaineth an hundred fold in this life.

Phil. 4.

A compariſon between the loſſe and gain that cometh by following of Chriſt.

Peace with God a thing incomparable.

The lack of Gods peace a thing moſt miſerable.

Let us therefore (good brethren and ſiſters) be merrie and glad in theſe troubleſome dayes, the which be ſent of God to declare our faith, and to bring us to the end and fruition of that which we hope for. If we would enter into the Lords Sanctuarie, and behold what is prepared for us, we could not but deſire the Lord to haſte the day of our death, in the which we might ſet forth by true confeſſion his glorie. Neither ſhould we be afraid to meet our adverſaries, which ſo earneſtly ſeek our ſpoil and death, as Chriſt did Iudas and that wicked rout, which came to apprehend him, ſaying; I am he whom ye ſeek. It is commanded us by the Goſpel, not to fear them that can kill the bodie, but to feare God, who can caſt both bodie and ſoul into hell fire. So much we are bound to obſerve this commandement as any other which God hath given us. The Lord increaſe our faith, that we fear God more then man. The Lord give us ſuch love towards him and his truth, that we may be content to forſake all and follow him. Now will it appeare what we love beſt; for to that we love, we will ſtick. There is none worthy to be counted a Chriſtian, except he can finde in his heart for Chriſts ſake, if the confeſſion of his truth doth require it, to renounce all which he hath and follow him; and in ſo doing he gaineth an hundred fold more in this life (as our Saviour ſaid to Peter) and hereafter is aſſured of eternall life. Behold, I pray you, what he loſeth, which in this life receiveth an hundred for one, with aſſurance of eternall life. O happie exchange. Perchance your outward man will ſay; If I were ſure of this great recompence here, I could be glad to forſake all. But where is this hundred fold in this life to be found? Yes truly; for in ſtead of worldly riches which thou doeſt forſake, which be but temporall, thou haſt found the everlaſting riches of heaven, which be glorie, honour, and praiſe, both before God, Angels, and men; and for an earthly habitation, haſt an eternall manſion with Chriſt in heaven; for even now thou art of the Citie and Houſhold of the Saints with God, as it is verified in the fourth to the Philippians. For worldly peace, which can laſt but a while, thou doeſt poſſeſſe the peace of God, which paſſeth all underſtanding; and for the loſſe of a few friends, thou art made a fellow of the innumerable companie of heaven, and a perpetuall friend of all thoſe that have died in the Lord, from the beginning of the world. Is not this more then an hundred fold? Is not the peace of God which we in this world have through faithfull imitation of Chriſt (which the world cannot take from us) ten thouſand fold more, then thoſe things that moſt highly be eſteemed in the world, without the peace of God? All the peace of the world is no peace, but a meere anguiſh and a gnawing furie of hell: As of late GOD hath ſet example before our eyes, to teach us how horrible an evill it is to forſake the peace of Chriſts truth, which breedeth a worme in conſcience that never ſhall reſt.

2. Tim. 2.

O that we would weigh this with indifferent ballances. Then ſhould we not be diſmayed of this troublous time, neither ſorrow after a worldly manner, for the loſſe which we are now like to ſuſtain, as the weak faithleſſe perſons do, which love their goods more then God, and the things viſible above thoſe which be inviſible: but rather would heartily rejoyce and be thankfull, that it pleaſed God to call us to be ſouldiers in his cauſe againſt the works of hypocriſie, and to make us like unto our Saviour Chriſt in ſuffering, whereby we may aſſure our ſelves of his eternall glory: For bleſſed are they, ſaith Chriſt, that ſuffer perſecution for righteouſneſſe ſake. And as S. Paul witneſſeth to Timothy; If we die with Chriſt, we ſhall live with Chriſt; and if we denie him, he will deny us.

Philip. 3.

He exhorteth to be joyfull in afflictions.

O that we would enter into the veile of Gods promiſes. Then ſhould we with S. Paul to the Philippians, reject all, and count all things but for droſſe, ſo that we may gaine Chriſt. God which is the lightner of all darkneſſe, and putter away of all blindneſſe, anoint our eyes with the true eyeſalve, that we might behold his glory, and our eternall felicity, which is hidden with Chriſt, and prepared for us that do abide in his Teſtament: for bleſſed is that ſervant, whom the maſter when he cometh (as Chriſt ſaid) doth finde faithfull. Let us therefore watch and pray one for another, that we yeeld not in any point of our religion to the Antichriſtian Synagogue, and that we be not overthrown of theſe temptations. Stand therefore, and be no cowards in the cauſe of your ſalvation; for his ſpirit that is in us, is ſtronger then he which in the world doth now rage againſt us. Let us not put out the ſpirit of God from us, by whoſe might we ſhall overcome our enemies, and then death ſhall be as great a gaine to us as it was to the bleſſed Apoſtle Saint Paul. Why then do ye mourn? why do ye weep? why be ye ſo carefull, as though God had forſaken you? he is never more preſent with us, then when we be in trouble, if we do not forſake him. We are in his hands, and no body can do us any injurie or wrong without his good will and pleaſure. He hath commanded his Angels to keep us, that we ſtumble not at a ſtone without his divine providence. The Devil cannot hurt any of us, and much leſſe any of his miniſters, without the good will of our eternall Father.

To be patient, and not to murmure in affliction.

Therefore let us be of good comfort, and continually give thanks unto God for our eſtate, whatſoever it be; for if we murmure againſt the ſame, we murmure againſt God, who ſendeth the ſame: which if we do, we kicke but againſt the pricke, and provoke more the wrath of God againſt us; which by patient ſuffering, otherwiſe would ſooner be turned into our favour through faithfull prayer.

Iob 1.

Genes. 22.

How to ſacrifice our Iſaac to God.

I beſeech you with Saint Paul, to give your bodies pure and holy ſacrifices unto God. He hath given us bodies to beſtow unto his glory, and not after our own concupiſcence. If many yeers God hath ſuffered us to uſe our bodies, which be his temples, after the luſt of the fleſh, in vaine delights, not according to his glorie; is it not our dutie in the latter end of our life, the more willingly to yeeld unto Gods glorie our bodies, with all that we have, in demonſtration of true repentance of that we have evill ſpent before? Cannot the enſample of the bleſſed man Iob horribly afflicted, cauſe us to ſay? The Lord hath given it, the Lord hath taken it: bleſſed be the name of the Lord. Even as it hath pleaſed the Lord, ſo is it come to paſſe: If we caſt our whole care likewiſe upon God, he will turne our miſerie into felicitie, as well as he did to Iob. God tempteth us now as he did our father Abraham, commanding him to ſlay his ſonne Iſaac in ſacrifice to him; which Iſaac by interpretation doth ſignifie mirth and joy. Who by his obedience preſerved Iſaac unto long life, and offered in his ſtead a Ramme that was tied by the hornes in the brambles. Semblably we are all commanded to ſacrifice unto God our Iſaac, which is our joy and conſolation: the which if we be readie to do, as Abraham was, our joy ſhall not periſh, but live, and be increaſed, although our Ramme be ſacrificed for our Iſaac; which doth ſignifie that the pride and concupiſcence of our fleſh intangled through ſinne, with the cares of this ſtinging world, muſt be mortified for the preſervation and perfect augmentation of our mirth and joy, which is ſealed up for us in Chriſt.

Remedies againſt the temptations of the devil and the world.

And to withſtand theſe preſent temptations wherewithall we are now incombred, ye cannot have a better remedie then to ſet before your eyes how our Saviour Chriſt overcame them in the deſart, and to follow his enſample; that if the Devil himſelf or any other by him, willeth you to make ſtones bread, that is, to take ſuch a worldly wiſe way, that you may have your faire houſes, lands, and goods to live on ſtill; ye muſt ſay, that man liveth not onely by bread, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

Chriſts temptations myſtically applied.

Again, if the devil counſelleth you to caſt your ſelves down to the earth, as to revoke your ſincere beliefe and godly converſation, and to be conformable to the learned men of the world, pretending that God will be well enough content therewith; ye muſt anſwer that it is written, that a man ſhall not tempt his Lord God.

Further, if the Devill offer you large promiſes of honour, dignitie, and poſſeſſions, ſo that ye will worſhip Idols in his Synagogue, ye muſt ſay; Go behinde me Satan, for it is otherwiſe written, that a man muſt worſhip his Lord God, and ſerve him onely.

Finally, if your mother, brother, ſiſter, wife, childe, kinſman, or friend, do ſeek of you to do otherwiſe then the word of God hath taught you, ye muſt ſay with Chriſt, that they are your mothers, brothers, ſiſters, wives, children, and kinſmen, which do the will of God the Father. To the which will the Lord for his mercie conform us all unfainedly to the end, Amen.

Your loving and faithfull brother in Chriſt, in captivity, Iohn Philpot, Anno 1555.

To his friend and faithfull brother in the Lord, Maſter Robert Harrington.

Another letter of Io. Philpot to M. Harrington his friend.

GEntle maſter Harrington, I cannot tell what condigne thanks I may give unto God for you, in reſpect of the great gentleneſſe and paine which you have taken for the reliefe of me and of other our afflicted brethren in Chriſt. God be praiſed for his mercie, whoſe loving providence we have ſeene towards us by ſuch faithfull ſtewards as you have been towards a great many. Bleſſed be you of God for the loving care which you have taken for his poore flock. God hath reſerved your reward of thanks in heaven, and therefore I go not about to render you any, leſt I might ſeeme to judge that you looked for that here, which is reſerved to a better place. I thank God for that I have found by your faithfull and diligent induſtry, and God forgive me my unworthineſſe for ſo great benefits. God give me grace to ſerve him faithfully, and to run out my race with joy. Glorious is the courſe of the Martyrs of Chriſt at this day. Never had the elect of God a better time for their glorie then this is. Now may they be aſſured under the Croſſe, that they are Chriſts Diſciples for ever.

Iohn 21.

Me think I ſee you deſiring to be under the ſame. The fleſh draweth backe, but the ſpirit ſaith, it muſt be brought whither it would not. Here is the victory of the world: here is true faith and everlaſting glorie. Who is he which deſireth not to be found faithfull to his Maſter? And now is the time that every faithfull ſervant of Chriſt hath juſt opportunitie to ſhew himſelfe a glorious ſouldier in the Lords fight. Now do the Amalechites invade the true Iſraelites, that the Iſraelites might with ſpeed be glorified. I need not for want of underſtanding to admoniſh you hereof, but as a willing ſouldier in Chriſt, to exhort you ſo to runne as you may get the victorie, and that ſpeedily with us. A man that is bid to a glorious feaſt, wiſheth his friend to go with him, and be partaker thereof. God doth call me moſt unworthy, among other, to drink of the Bride cup of his Son, whereby we ſhall be made worthy (as many of our brethren have been before us) to ſit at the right hand and at the left hand of Chriſt. O what unſpeakable condition is that? May any worldly thing ſtay us from the deſire thereof? Since we ſeek the kingdome of God, why do we not apprehend it, being ſo neer offered unto us?

Let us approach neer unto God, and God will draw neer unto us. God draw us after him, that we may all run after the ſavour of his ſweet ointments. Chriſt anoint us, that we may be ſuppled in theſe evil dayes to run lightly unto the glorie of the Lord. Shame, impriſonment, loſſe of goods, and ſhedding of our blood, be the juſt price which we muſt willingly beſtow for the ſame. Wherefore (dearly beloved in the Lord) let not the great charges keep you back from buying this glorie: for the reward is ten thouſand fold greater then the price.

Reward greater then the price.

Godly matrimony how to be uſed.

That you have married a wife, whom GOD bleſſe, I cannot excuſe you from this Mart, but you muſt bring your wife for a uſurie to the Lord, whoſe pleaſure is in godly yoke-fellows. I wiſh you to be as I am, except theſe horrible bands, but yet moſt comfortable to the ſpirit, aſſuring you that we are made worthie through Chriſt of the kingdome for the which we ſuffer. Praiſed be the Lord for the affliction which we ſuffer, and he give us ſtrength to continue to the end.

Commend me to M. Heath, and tell him that I would wiſh him with me, to prove how apt he is to carrie the Croſſe of Chriſt. I pray for his continuance in Chriſt, as for mine own. Commend me to his wife, and to miſtreſſe Hall, certifying them that I am brought to the gates of hell, that I might never enter into the ſame, but be raiſed up from hell to heaven, through the word that ſanctifieth us. Commend me to maſter Elſing and his wife, and thank them that they remembred to provide me ſome eaſe in priſon, and tell them that though my Lords Cole-houſe be but verie black, yet it is more to be deſired of the faithfull, then the Queens palace. God make her a joyfull mother, and preſerve them both to the comfort of Gods people. Thus for this time farewell deare brother. Written in poſte-haſte becauſe of ſtrait keeping.

This day I look to be called before the commiſſioners again. Pray (deare brother) for the ſpirit of wiſdome to remain with me. Commend me to your wife, and I thank you both for your tokens. Your token I have ſent to your wife; and my token unto you, is my faithfull heart with this letter. Commend me to all my friends, and tell them I thank God I am cheerfull in Chriſt, wiſhing them to fear God more then man, and to learne to deſpiſe earneſtly the vanities of this world; deſiring you all to pray for me, that I may end my journey with fidelitie, Amen.

Iohn Philpot.

Here followeth another letter of M. Philpot to the Lady Vane: which becauſe for the length I could not wholly inſert, I have excerpted certain ſpecialties thereout, as followeth.

THe principall Spirit of God the Father, given unto us by Chriſt our mercifull Saviour, confirm, ſtrengthen, and ſtabliſh you in the true knowledge of the Goſpel, that your faithfull heart (worſhipfull and dear ſiſter in the Lord) may attain and taſte with all the ſaints what is the height, the depth, the length, and the breadth of the ſweet Croſſe of Chriſt, Amen, &c.

Oh, happy are you amongſt all other women, that have found this precious ſtone which is hidden in the Goſpel; for the which we ought to ſell all other things, and to purchaſe the ſame. Oh happy woman, whoſe heart God hath moved and inlarged to be in the profeſſion thereof. Other ſeek worldly goods, honours, and delights; but you ſeek with a good underſtanding to ſerve God in ſpirit and veritie. This is the gate that leadeth to heaven; this is your portion for ever. By this you ſhall ſee God face to face (which ſight is unſpeakable joy) and by this ſhall ye ſee a full ſight of all the beautifull heavenly powers, and of all the celeſtiall Paradiſe. By this ſhall you know them that you never knew, and be joyous and glad with thoſe which you have known here in God, world without end, &c.

He bewaileth the ſtate of England. Plagues propheſied to England though the Goſpel be reſtored again.

Ah, I lament the infidelitie of England, that after ſo great light is ſtept into ſo huge darkneſſe again. The ſervant that knoweth his Maſters will and doth it not, ſhall be beaten with many ſtripes. Ah, great be the plagues that hang over England, yea though the Goſpel ſhould be reſtored againe. Happie ſhall that perſon be whom the Lord ſhall take out of this world, not to ſee them. Ah the great perjurie which men have runne into ſo wilfully againſt God, by receiving Antichriſt againe and his wicked laws; which do threaten a great ruine unto England. Oh that the Lord would turne his juſt judgements upon the authors of the truce breaking betweene God and us, that they might be brought low (as Nabuchadonoſor was) that his people might be delivered, and his glorie exalted. God grant that that good lucke which you hope ſhortly to come upon the houſe of GOD, be a true propheſie, and not a well wiſhing onely. Ah Lord, take away thy heavie hand from us, and ſtretch it out upon thine enemies theſe hypocrites, as thou haſt begun, that they may be confounded. O let not the weake periſh for want of knowledge through our ſinnes. Although thou kill us, yet will we put our truſt in thee.

Good luck foreſhewed in reſtoring again the Goſpel.

Thus (deare heart) you teach me to pray with you in writing. God heare our prayers, and give us the ſpirit of effectuall prayer, to poure out our hearts continually together before God, that we may finde mercie both for our ſelves, and for our afflicted brethren and ſiſters. I cannot but praiſe God in you, for that pitifull heart that taketh other folks calamities to heart, as your own. Bleſſed be they that mourne; for ſuch ſhall be comforted. God wipe away all tears from your pitifull eyes, and ſorrow from your mercifull heart, that you may (as doubtleſſe you ſhall do ſhortly) rejoyce with his elect for ever. You have ſo armed me to the Lords battell both inwardly and outwardly, that except I be a verie coward, I cannot faint, but overcome by death. You have appointed me to ſo good and gracious a Generall of the field, to ſo victorious a Captaine, and to ſo favourable a Marſhall, that if I ſhould not go on luſtily, there were no ſpectacle of heavenly manhood in me. I will preſent your coat-armour before my Captaine, and in the ſame I truſt by him to overcome. The Scarfe I deſire as an outward ſigne to ſhew our enemies, who ſee not our glorious end, neither what God worketh inwardly in us, through the blindneſſe of their hearts, that they perſecute Chriſts Croſſe in us, whereby he hath ſealed up the truth of his Goſpel by his death unto us, that we by our death (if need be) might confirme the ſame, and never be aſhamed whatſoever torment we do ſuffer for his Names ſake; and our weake brethren ſeeing the ſame might be more incouraged to take up Chriſts Croſſe, and to follow him. God give us grace to do all things to his glorie, Amen, &c.

Philpots ſcarfe.

The world wondreth how we can be merrie in ſuch extreme miſerie, but our God is omnipotent, which turneth miſerie into felicitie. Beleeve me (deare ſiſter) there is no ſuch joy in the world as the people of Chriſt have under the Croſſe. I ſpeak by experience; therefore beleeve me, and fear nothing that the world can do unto you. For when they impriſon our bodies, they ſet our ſouls at libertie with God. When they caſt us down, they lift us up; yea, when they kill us, then do they bring us to everlaſting life. And what greater glorie can there be, then to be at conformitie with Chriſt? which afflictions do work in us.

Experience of Gods comfort in the time of affliction. Perſecuters when they priſon mens bodies, they ſet their ſouls at libertie.

God open our eyes to ſee more and more the glory of God in the Croſſe of Ieſus Chriſt; and make us worthy partakers of the ſame. Let us rejoyce in nothing with S. Paul, but in the Croſſe of Ieſus Chriſt, by whom the world is crucified unto us, and we to the world. The Croſſe of Chriſt be our ſtandard to fight under for ever. Whiles I am thus talking with you of our common conſolation, I forget how I trouble you with my rude and unordinate tediouſneſſe: but you muſt impute it to love which cannot quickly depart from them whom he loveth, but deſireth to poure himſelf into their boſomes.

Therefore though your fleſh would be offended (as it might juſtly be) at ſuch rudeneſſe, yet your ſpirit will ſay nay, which taketh all things in good part that cometh of love. And now I am departing; yet will I take my leave ere I go, and would faine ſpeak ſomewhat that might declare my ſincere love to you for ever: farewell. O elect veſſel of the Lord, to the comfort of his afflicted flock, farewell on earth, whom in heaven I am ſure I ſhall not forget. Farewell under the Croſſe moſt joyfully, and untill we meet, alwayes remember what Chriſt ſaith; Be of good cheer, for I have overcome the world, &c.

God poure his ſpirit abundantly upon you mine own deare bowels in Chriſt, untill you may come to ſee the God of all gods with his elects in the everlaſting Sion. I ſend to you the kiſſe of peace, with the which I do moſt entirely take my leave of you at this preſent. It is neceſſarie we depart hence, or elſe we could not be glorified. Your heart is heavie becauſe I ſay I muſt depart from you. It is the calling of the mercifull Father, wherewithall you are content, and ſo am I. Be of good comfort, hold out your buckler of faith; for by the ſtrength thereof we ſhall ſhortly meet in eternall glory: to the which Chriſt bring both us, Amen, Amen. The 10. of December. 1555.

Death why ſhould I fear thee? ſince thou canſt not hurt me, but rid me from miſerie unto eternall glory.

Dead to the world, and living to Chriſt, your owne brother, ſealed up in the veritie of the Goſpel for ever.

Iohn Philpot.

Another Letter of maſter Philpot, written to the ſame Ladie, being a great ſupporter of him.

Another letter of M. Philpot to a certain godly Lady.

I Cannot but moſt heartily give God thankes for theſe his gifts in you, whoſe brightneſſe many beholding that are weake, are much encouraged to ſeeke God likewiſe, and to cleave to him, having the enſample of ſo faithfull and conſtant a Gentlewoman before their eyes. If the Queene of the South ſhall riſe with the men of Chriſts generation, and condemne them, for that ſhe came from the end of the world to heare the wiſedome of Solomon; then ſhall your ſincere and godly converſation, thus ſhining in this dangerous time of the triall of Chriſts people (being a woman of right worſhipfull eſtate and wealthy condition) condemne in the latter day a great many of theſe faint-hearted Goſpellers, which ſo ſoone be gone back and turned from the truth, at the voice of a hand-maiden; ſeeing that neither the fear of impriſonment, neither the poſſeſſions of the world, (wherewithall you are ſufficiently indued above a great many) can ſeparate you from the love of the truth, which God hath revealed unto you. Whereby it appeareth that the ſeed of Gods word which was ſown in you, fell neither in the high way, neither among the thorns, neither upon the ſtones, but upon a good ground, which is bleſſed of God, and bringeth forth fruit with great affliction, an hundred fold to the glory of God, and the increaſe of his Church, &c.

Againſt faint-hearted Goſpellers.

In conſideration whereof Saint James biddeth us highly to rejoyce, whenſoever we fall into many temptations, knowing that it is but the triall of our faith, that we might bring forth that excellent vertue patience, by the which we are made like to our Redeemer Chriſt, with whom we here being like in ſuffering, aſſuredly ſhall hereafter be partakers of his eternall glorie. Therefore Saint Paul ſaith; God forbid that I ſhould glory in any thing but in the Croſſe of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. I that am under the Croſſe with you (thanks be given to God therefore) have felt in the ſame more true joy and conſolation, then ever I did by any benefit that God hath given me in my life before. For the more the world doth hate us, the nigher God is unto us, and there is no perfect joy but in God. Wherefore Chriſt ſaid; In me you ſhall have joy, but in the world affliction. Bleſſed be God which ſendeth us this affliction, that we might perfectly joy in him. For this cauſe in the ripeſt time of iniquitie, and in the moſt fervent ſeaſon of perſecution of the true Church, which Chriſt in the 21. of Luke propheſied to come, he willeth us to be of good cheere, and to lift up our heads, for our redemption is at hand.

Iohn 16.

Luke 21.

Oh that the Lord would come and deliver us from this world, which is a vale of miſerie, unto his owne kingdome, where floweth perpetuall joy and conſolation. And verily that is the true and onely joy which is conceived, not of the creature, but of the Creator, the which when we do poſſeſſe, no bodie can take it away from us. To the which joy all other joyes being compared, are but mournings, all delights ſorrow, all ſweetneſſe ſowre, all beautie filth, and finally all other things that be counted pleaſant, are tediouſneſſe. Your owne ſelfe is better witneſſe of this then I: aſke your ſelfe, with whom you are beſt acquainted. Doth not the holy Ghoſt ſpeake the ſame in your heart? Have you not perſwaded your ſelfe this to be true, before I wrote thereof? For how ſhould you being a woman, and a young Gentlewoman, beautifull, and at your owne libertie, have overcome this your frail kinde and age, and deſpiſed your excellent beautie and eſtate, unleſſe all thoſe things which be ſubject to the ſenſes had been counted of you vile, and little to be eſteemed in compariſon of thoſe things which inwardly do comfort you, to overcome the fleſh, the world, and the devill. &c.

Perfect joy conſidered.

Compariſon between the joy in God, and the joy in this world.

God increaſe your joy in all ſpirituall things, and ſtabliſh your hope to the day of eternall reſt. You have forſaken darkneſſe, and are entred into light, God grant the ſame may ſhine ſtill in you, untill the perfect day come of the Lord, in the which is all our conſolation. Here we muſt be darkned, that there we may appeare as bright as the Sunne in the face of the whole world, and of all them that now condemne us for our well-doing; whoſe Judges then we ſhall be, to their horrible griefe, though now wrongfully they judge us. Pray heartily, and that often, that God once again for his Chriſts ſake would be mercifull to his afflicted Church in England. Faithfull prayer is the onely remedie that we have againſt the fierie darts of the Devill, that be kindled againſt us. By prayer the Amalechites ſhall be overcome, and the roarings of the Lion, which ſeeketh ſtill to devoure us, ſhall be ſtopped and put to ſilence. The Lord ſtop Leviathans mouth, that he ſwallow not up Gods ſeely people, according to his expectation.

Gods ſaints ſhal be as Judges againſt their adverſaries.

Praiſe the Lord for the faithfull teſtimonie and ſacrifice which two of our brethren of late have through fire rendred to the truth of the Goſpel, which now triumpheth by the death of godly Martyrs. The Lord is at hand, therefore watch and pray. The laſt of May. 1555. Captive in the Kings Bench.

The Goſpel triumpheth by the death of Martyrs.

Yours with heart in Chriſt,
Iohn Philpot.

Another Letter of maſter Philpot to the godly Lady Vane.

GOD the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt increaſe in your godly heart the faith of the Goſpel, which is your eternall inheritance, and the holy Ghoſt comfort your ſpirit with all ſpiritual conſolation, to the day of the Lord, Amen.

Another letter of Jo. Philpot to the Lady Vane.

I cannot but praiſe God moſt highly and earneſtly (my deare and faithfull Lady) for the great and unfained love which you beare unto me in Chriſt, declared oftentimes, as well now as of late, by manifeſt and liberall tokens. Bleſſed be God that hath made you ſo worthy a member in his kingdome. For it cannot be but ſuch ſhall reap with abundance in time of reward, that here do ſowe ſo plenteouſly in well doing. Albeit I am moſt unworthy to receive any ſuch benefit at your hands, as in reſpect of a pillar of Chriſts Church, which am ſcarce a ſhadow thereof. But the zeal of Chriſts Church in you wiſheth me to be ſuch a one as the time doth require. God fulfill your deſire of me, that I may be found conſtant, and no wandring ſtarre. I am not worthy of the name of a Prophet, or of a Miniſter of Gods word, for that I have (being letted by the iniquitie of the time) little or nothing laboured therein. I am a friend of our common Spouſe Jeſus, and do rejoyce of the veritie of his word; for the which (praiſed be his name) he hath counted me worthie to ſuffer: and indeed who that giveth a draught of water in the name of a Diſciple (as Chriſt hath promiſed) ſhall not loſe his reward. Therefore that your gentleneſſe doth in the name of him, which I am not, the Lord recompence unto you in all his bleſſings, which he is accuſtomed to poure on them which love his flock unfainedly.

Lady Vane a liberall benefactor to Gods Saints.

Mark 7.

Good Ladie, you have to joy that the kingdome of God is thus continually before your eyes, and that you are not aſhamed of the bands of Chriſt, which you with his people in part do ſuffer. They may be aſſured of the glorie everlaſting, which here are not aſhamed to take up the Croſſe of Chriſt, and to follow him. Here we muſt weepe and lament, whiles the world laugheth and triumpheth over us; but our teares ſhall ſhortly be turned into unſpeakable joy, and we ſhall eternally be merrie together, when the world ſhall lament their infidelitie without end, &c.

I would I were able to do any thing that might ſhew condigne thankes for that ſincere love you beare unto me in Chriſt: you adjure me (as it were) by your gentle letters to be bold on you in all my needes. I thanke God which ceaſeth not to provide for his, I lacke nothing at this preſent, but onely habilitie to thanke your faithfull heart for your goodneſſe towards me. I love you and not yours, as it is meet Chriſtians to love one another in God; and your faith which I behold in you, is more worth unto me then all your poſſeſſions. And I think I ſhall not need long to be chargeable unto you, for that this week I look for Commiſſioners to ſit on me, and my fellow-priſoners in priſon, leſt the ſpirit of our breath might blow further abroad. The will of God be done. We are not ſo good as John the Baptiſt which was beheaded in priſon. Darkneſſe cannot abide the light. Therefore their doings muſt declare what they are. We are as ſheep appointed for a ſacrifice to the Lord. We muſt not fear the fire, for our Lord is a conſuming fire, which will put out the fierceneſſe of raging torments from us. Be not afraid of them that can kill the bodie, but fear him that can caſt both bodie and ſoul into hell fire. God forbid that we ſhould rejoyce otherwiſe then in the Croſſe of Chriſt, and pray that he would make us worthie to ſuffer for his ſake. God will have our faith tried and knowne; and therefore let us willingly humble our ſelves under the mightie hand of God, that he may gloriouſly lift us up in his good time. There is none perfectly faithfull indeed till he can ſay with ſaint Paul, I am perſwaded that neither death, neither life, neither angels, neither princes or powers, neither things preſent, neither things to come, neither highneſſe, neither lowneſſe, neither any other creature is able to ſeparate us from the love of God which is in Chriſt Ieſus our Lord. This faith GOD plant both in you and me unmoveably. In this faith we have to rejoyce, and in none other.

A perfect chriſtian man how he is known. Rom. 8.

All the tribulations of the world are not worthy of the eternall weight of glorie which is prepared for them, that here do with patience abide the Croſſe. Wherefore let us be ſtrong with the ſtrength in him, that is able to make us ſtrong, and lament the weakneſſe, I might ſay the infidelitie of our faint Goſpellers. Chriſt, whom we would pretend to have put upon us, is the ſtrength of God, and how then may they be weake where Chriſt is? We have more to be glad, touching our ſelves, of this time, then we have had of any time before, in the which we have ſo readie a way to go unto God, and ſo good occaſion to ſhew our dutie in glorifying his holy name. For if we be impriſoned in this cauſe, we are bleſſed. If we loſe all that we have, we are bleſſed an hundred fold. If we die, we are bleſſed eternally; ſo that in ſuffering of perſecutions, all is full of bleſſings. Be bleſſed therefore (O elect Ladie) of God, with the bleſſed of God, and flee (as you do) the concupiſcence of the world. Embrace that which is perfect, and joyfully look for the coming and croſſe of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, &c. Thus deſiring God to preſerve you to his true peace, and to give you victorie of that temptation which now is come to trie our faith, Chriſt be with you, and bleſſe you both in bodie and ſoule; and my prayer ſhall follow you whereſoever you go, as I deſire that you may be with me. The laſt week I ſent your beneficence to Oxford; I could not before have a convenient meſſenger. As ſoone as I have word, you ſhall be ſatisfied of your requeſt. Love me as you do, and the God of love be with you. The twentieth day of Auguſt.

The time of tribulation better for a Chriſtian then the time of joy.

By yours with all his power in the Lord,
Iohn Philpot.

Another Letter full of ſpirituall conſolation to the ſaid Lady.

Another letter of M. Philpot to the ſame lady.

THe mercie of God the Father, and the conſolation of the holy Ghoſt through Jeſus Chriſt, be with you, and ſtrengthen you my dear mother and ſiſter in the Lord, in theſe dangerous dayes, to the crowne of eternall glorie which is now offered to all faithfull ſouldiers in the Goſpel, Amen.

As your good Ladiſhip doth deſire to heare from me, ſo am I deſirous to write, as your gentleneſſe and daily goodneſſe bindeth me. But Satan of late hath letted me, who envying all good exerciſes which I have had and received by mine eaſie impriſonment in times paſt, hath brought me out of the Kings Bench into the Biſhop of Londons Cole-houſe, a dark and an ugly priſon as any is about London (but my darke bodie of ſinne hath well deſerved the ſame, and the Lord now hath brought me into outward darkneſſe, that I might the more be lightned by him, as he is moſt preſent with his children in the middeſt of darkneſſe) where I cannot be ſuffered to have any candle light, neither inke nor paper, but by ſtealth. Wherefore I cannot write to you as I would, neither as my dutie is. As Chriſt my Maſter was ſent from Annas to Caiphas, ſo am I ſent from Wincheſter Dioceſſe to London, I truſt to make a ſpeedie end of my courſe; God give me grace and patience to be a faithfull follower of my Maſter. I have been alreadie this ſeven-night in his Cole-houſe, and have of late been foure times called to mine anſwer, but hitherto not called to judgement, which I do daily look for, but I feare they will prolong me, and trie me by ſtrait impriſonment a while, in the which Gods will be done.

Pray (deare Ladie) that my faith faint not, which I praiſe God is preſently more lively with me then it hath been in times paſt. I taſte and feele the faithfulneſſe of God in his promiſe, who hath promiſed to be with his in their trouble, and to deliver them. I thanke the Lord, I am not alone, but have ſix other faithfull companions; who in our darkneſſe do cheerfully ſing Hymnes and praiſes unto GOD for his great goodneſſe. We are ſo joyfull, that I wiſh you part of my joy. For you that are ſo carefull of my bodily reliefe, how can I but wiſh your ſpirituall conſolation, and that abundantly? Let not (deare heart) my ſtrait impriſonment any thing moleſt you: for it hath added and daily doth unto my joy; but rather be glad, and thankfull unto God with me, that it hath pleaſed him to make me moſt wretched ſinner, worthy to ſuffer any thing for his ſake. Hitherto we have not reſiſted unto blood. God make us never to count our blood more precious in our eyes then his truth.

Ah my deare ſiſter, I thanke you againe for your laſt letter you ſent me; it is a ſingular comfort unto me, as oft as I reade the ſame. I have it in my boſome, and will carrie the ſame even to the ſtake with me, in witneſſe that Chriſt hath ſo conſtant and faithfull a Ladie in England. God ſuccour and keepe that ſpirit in you; for it is the verie ſpirit of adoption of the childe of God. Such cheerfull and holy ſpirits under the Croſſe be acceptable ſacrifices in the ſight of God; for Chriſt came to caſt fire into the earth, and looketh that it ſhould be kindled. Be you fervent in ſpirit in our Chriſts cauſe, as you have begun, for that is the principall ſpirit wherewithall David deſired to be confirmed. O how I do rejoyce your Ladiſhip to go arme in arme with me unto Chriſt, or rather before me. I cannot but joy of ſuch a worſhipfull fellow. Me thinketh I ſee you to mourne, and deſire to be looſed out of the earthly and fraile habitacle of this bodie. O how amiable and pleaſant is it to dwell in the Lords tabernacle? Our Chriſt and his heavenly companie looke for us; let us haſte and runne thereto, for behold the Lord is readie to embrace us. Mine owne bowels in the Lord, be merrie in the Lord with your afflicted brother, who daily offereth your mercifull alms, which moſt unworthily I do receive ſtill of you, unto the Lord. But now (dear mother) you need not to burthen ſo much your ſelf (as my laſt letters did ſignifie) for that my chargeable impriſonment is cut off, and a little now ſerveth me; wherefore I pray you ſend no more untill I ſend to you, for I have ſufficient and abound. Gods peace be with you for ever. Out of my Lord of Londons Cole-houſe, the laſt of October.

Your own, Iohn Philpot.

Another letter of M. Philpot to the ſaid Lady, wherein partly he complaineth of the diſſimulation and perjury of Engliſhmen, falling again to the Pope, and partly he expreſſeth his joy in his afflictions.

Another letter of M. Philpot. By this Senacherib, he meaneth the death of the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

I Cannot but joy with you (my heartily beloved in Chriſt) of the fall of Senacherib: ſince it is to the glorie of God, and to the conſolation of his Church, to ſee the fall of their enemies before their face, according as it is written; The juſt ſhall rejoyce, when he ſeeth the vengeance of the wicked. God make this your joy perfect; for as concerning my ſelf, I count not to ſee thoſe good dayes whereof you have a glimmering in this life. For although the Cockatrice be dead, yet his peſtilent chickens, with the Whore of Babylon, ſtill liveth. But a great hope there is of their ſhort confuſion, becauſe God doth not proſper their doings according to their expectation. Moſt happie ſhall he be, whom the Lord ſhall ſooneſt take out of this life, that he may not ſee the plagues which the manifeſt perjurie, and the manifold Idolatry and deteſtable diſſimulation, and that of ſuch as do know the truth, do threaten to come.

The Lord is juſt, and all unrighteouſneſſe diſpleaſeth him, and either here or elſe in another world he will puniſh this groſſe infidelitie of the world: but his elect, and ſuch as he loveth, will he puniſh here, that they ſhould not be condemned hereafter with the world eternally: we have nothing ſo much to rejoyce in, as in the Croſſe of Ieſus Chriſt, and in that we are partakers of his afflictions, which be the earneſt penie of that eternall Kingdome, which he upon the Croſſe for us hath purchaſed. For as Paul his faithfull witneſſe ſaith, If we ſuffer with him, we ſhall reigne with him. If we die with him, we ſhall live with him.

Wherefore (mine owne deare bowels) praiſe God with me moſt intirely, that it hath pleaſed him now mercifully to viſit the ſins of my youth, and my huge unthankfulneſſe, and by the ſame doth give me much conſolation, that he aſſureth me of his great goodneſſe and mercie, and turneth his fatherly caſtigation into my crown of glory. O good God, what am I on whom he ſhould ſhew this great mercie? To him that is immortall, inviſible, and onely wiſe, be all honour, praiſe, and glorie therefore, Amen.

He expreſſeth the great joy which Gods priſoners feele in their ſufferings.

This is the day that the Lord hath made, let us rejoyce and be glad in the ſame. This is the way, though it be narrow, which is full of the peace of God, and leadeth to eternall bliſſe. O how my heart leapeth for joy, that I am ſo neer the apprehenſion thereof. God forgive me mine unthankfulneſſe and unworthineſſe of ſo great glory. The ſwords which pierced Maries heart in the paſſion of our Saviour, which daily alſo go through your faithfull heart, be more glorious and to be deſired then the golden Scepters of this world. O bleſſed be they that mourn in this world to God ward, for they ſhall eternally be comforted. God make my ſtony heart to mourn more then it doth. I have ſo much joy of the reward that is prepared for me moſt wretched ſinner, that though I be in place of darkneſſe and mourning, yet I cannot lament, but both night and day am ſo joyfull, as though I were under no croſſe at all: yea in all the daies of my life I was never ſo merrie, the name of the Lord be praiſed therefore for ever and ever, and he pardon mine unthankfulneſſe. Our enemies do fret, fume, and gnaſh their teeth to ſee and hear that we, under this grievous affliction in the world, can be ſo merrie. We are of them counted as deſperate perſons, for the certain hope and feeling which we have of our everlaſting ſalvation: and it is no marvell, for the worldly men cannot perceive the things of God, it is meere fooliſhneſſe and abomination to them.

Iohn Philpot never ſo merry in all his life before.

Be thankfull unto our God (mine owne deare helper) for his wonderous working in his choſen people. Pray inſtantly that this joy be never taken from us, for it paſſeth all the delights of this world. This is the peace of God which ſurmounteth all underſtanding: this peace, the more his choſen be afflicted, the more they feel, and therefore cannot faint, neither for fire, neither for water. Let us pray for our weak brethren and ſiſters ſake, that it may pleaſe God to alleviate the grievous and intolerable burden of theſe cruell dayes. But touching our ſelves, let us heartily beſeech our Saviour to vouchſafe to give us this glorious gift to ſuffer for his Goſpels ſake, and that we may thinke the ſhame of the world to be our glorie, as it is indeed. God increaſe our faith, and open our eyes to behold what is prepared for us. I lack nothing, praiſe be to God. I truſt my marriage garment is readie. I will ſend you my examinations as ſoon as I can get them written, if you be deſirous of them.

God of his mercy fill your mercifull heart with all joy and conſolation of the hope to come. Out of the Cole-houſe the 19. of November.

Your own lover, Iohn Philpot.

A Letter of maſter Philpot to a friend of his, priſoner the ſame time in Newgate: wherein is debated and diſcuſſed the matter or queſtion of Infants to be baptized.

A letter of M. Philpot, ſtabliſhing a certain brother in the matter of baptizing of infants.

THe God of all light and underſtanding lighten your heart with all true knowledge of his word, and make you perfect to the day of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, whereunto you are now called, through the mighty operation of his holy Spirit, Amen.

I received yeſternight from you (deare brother ſaint and fellow-priſoner for the truth of Chriſts Goſpel) a letter, wherein you gently require my judgement concerning the Baptiſme of Infants, which is the effect thereof. And before I do ſhew you what I have learned out of Gods word and of his true and infallible Church touching the ſame, I think it not out of the matter firſt to declare what viſion I had the ſame night whiles muſing on your letter I fell aſleep, knowing that God doth not without cauſe reveal to his people who have their mindes fixed on him, ſpeciall and ſpirituall revelations to their comfort, as a taſte of their joy and kingdome to come, which fleſh and blood cannot comprehend.

A viſion revealed to M. Philpot upon a letter to be anſwered.

Being in the middeſt of my ſweet reſt, it ſeemed me to ſee a great beautifull Citie all of the colour of azure, and white, foure ſquare in a marvellous beautifull compoſition in the midſt of the ſkie, the ſight whereof ſo inwardly comforted me, that I am not able to expreſſe the conſolation I had thereof, yea the remembrance thereof cauſeth as yet my heart to leap for joy: and as charitie is no churle, but would others to be partakers of his delight, ſo me thought I called to others (I cannot tell whom) and whiles they came and we together beheld the ſame, by and by to my great griefe it vaded away.

The viſion expounded.

This dreame I think not to have come of the illuſion of the ſenſes, becauſe it brought with it ſo much ſpirituall joy, and I take it to be of the working of Gods ſpirit for the contentation of your requeſt, as he wrought in Peter to ſatisfie Cornelius. Therefore I interpret this beautifull Citie to be the glorious Church of Chriſt, and the appearance of it in the skie, ſignifieth the heavenly ſtate thereof, whoſe converſation is in heaven, and that according to the Primitive Church which is now in heaven, men ought to meaſure and judge the Church of Chriſt now in earth, for as the Prophet David ſaith; The foundations thereof be in the holy hils, and glorious things be ſpoken of the Citie of God. And the marvellous quadrature of the ſame, I take to ſignifie the univerſall agreement in the ſame, and that all the Church here militant ought to conſent to the Primitive Church throughout the foure parts of the world, as the Prophet affirmeth, ſaying; God maketh us to dwell after one manner in one houſe. And that I conceived ſo wonderfull joy at the contemplation thereof, I underſtand the unſpeakable joy which they have that be at unitie with Chriſts Primitive Church: For there is joy in the holy Ghoſt, and peace, which paſſeth all underſtanding, as it is written in the Pſalmes; As of joyfull perſons is the dwelling of all them that be in thee. And that I called others to the fruition of this viſion, and to behold this wonderfull Citie, I conſtrue it by the will of God this viſion to have come upon me muſing on your letter, to the end, that under this figure I might have occaſion to move you with many others, to behold the Primitive Church in all your opinions concerning faith, and to conforme your ſelf in all points to the ſame, which is the pillar and ſtabliſhment of truth, and teacheth the true uſe of the Sacraments, and having with a greater fulnes then we have now, the firſt fruits of the holy Ghoſt, did declare the true interpretation of the Scriptures according to all veritie, even as our Saviour promiſed to ſend them another Comforter, which ſhould teach them all truth.

The Primitive example for us to follow.

Pſal. 67.

And ſince all truth was taught and revealed to the Primitive Church, which is our mother, let us all that be obedient children of God, ſubmit our ſelves to the judgement of the Church for the better underſtanding of the articles of our faith, and of the doubtfull ſentences of the Scripture. Let us not go about to ſhew in us, by following any private mans interpretation upon the Word, another ſpirit then they of the Primitive Church had, leſt we deceive our ſelves. For there is but one faith and one ſpirit, which is not contrarie to himſelfe, neither otherwiſe now teacheth us then he did them. Therefore let us beleeve as they have taught us of the Scriptures, and be at peace with them, according as the true Catholike Church is at this day: and the God of peace aſſuredly will be with us, and deliver us out of all our worldly troubles and miſeries, and make us partakers of their joy and bliſſe, through our obedience to faith with them.

Therefore God commandeth us in Job, to aske of the elder generation, and to ſearch diligently the memory of the fathers. For we are but yeſterdaies children, & be ignorant, and our daies are like a ſhadow, & they ſhal teach thee (ſaith the Lord) and ſpeak to thee, & ſhal utter words from their hearts. And by Solomon we are commanded, not to reject the direction of our mother. The Lord grant you to direct your ſteps in all things after her, and to abhorre contention with her. For as Saint Paul writeth; If any man be contentious, neither we, neither the Church of God hath any ſuch cuſtome.

Job 8.

Prov. 6.

1 Cor. 11.

Hitherto I have ſhewed you (good brother S.) my judgement generally of that you ſtand in doubt and diſſent from others, to the which I wiſh you as mine own heart to be conformable, and then doubtleſſe you cannot erre, but boldly may be glad in your troubles, and triumph at the houre of your death, that you ſhall die in the Church of God a faithfull Martyr, and receive the crowne of eternall glory. And thus much have I written upon the occaſion of a viſion before God unfained. But that you may not thinke that I go about to ſatisfie you with uncertaine viſions only, and not after Gods word, I will take the ground of your letter, and ſpecially anſwer to the ſame by the Scriptures, and by infallible reaſons deduced out of the ſame, and prove the Baptiſme of Infants to be lawfull, commendable, and neceſſarie, whereof you ſeeme to ſtand in doubt.

Proofe by teſtimonies and Scriptures.

Indeed if you looke upon the Papiſticall Synagogue onely, which hath corrupted Gods word by falſe interpretations, and hath perverted the true uſe of Chriſts ſacraments, you might ſeeme to have good handfaſt of your opinion againſt the Baptiſme of Infants. But for as much as it is of more antiquitie, and hath his beginning from Gods word, and from the uſe of the Primitive Church, it muſt not in reſpect of the abuſe in the Popiſh Church be neglected, or thought not expedient to be uſed in Chriſts Church. Auxentius, one of the Arrians ſect, with his adherents, was one of the firſt that denied the Baptiſme of children, and next after him Pelagius the heretike, and ſome other there were in Saint Bernards time, as it doth appeare by his writings, and in our dayes the Anabaptiſts, an inordinate kinde of men ſtirred up by the Devill, to the deſtruction of the Goſpel. But the Catholike truth delivered unto us by the Scriptures, plainly determineth, that all ſuch are to be baptized, as whom God acknowledgeth for his people, and voucheth them worthy of ſanctification or remiſſion of their ſinnes. Therefore ſince that infants be in the number or ſcroll of Gods people, and be partakers of the promiſe by their purification in Chriſt, it muſt needs follow thereby, that they ought to be baptized as well as thoſe that can profeſſe their faith. For we judge the people of G O D as well by the free and liberall promiſe of God, as by the confeſſion of faith. For to whomſoever God promiſeth himſelfe to be their God, and whom he acknowledgeth for his, thoſe no man without great impiety may exclude from the number of the faithfull. But God promiſeth, that he will not onely be the God of ſuch as do profeſſe him, but alſo of infants, promiſing them his grace and remiſſion of ſinnes, as it appeareth by the words of the Covenant made unto Abraham. I will ſet my covenant betweene thee and me (ſaith the Lord) and betweene thy ſeed after thee in their generations, with an everlaſting covenant, to be thy God, and the God of thy ſeed after thee. To the which Covenant circumciſion was added to be a ſigne of ſanctification as well in children as in men; and no man may thinke that this promiſe is abrogated with circumciſion and other ceremoniall lawes. For Chriſt came to fulfill the promiſes, and not to diſſolve them. Therefore in the Goſpel he ſaith of Infants, that is, of ſuch as yet beleeved not; Let the little ones come unto me, and forbid them not, for of ſuch is the Kingdome of Heaven. Againe, It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that any of theſe little ones doe periſh. Alſo; He that receiveth one ſuch little childe in my name, receiveth me. Take heed therefore that ye deſpiſe not one of theſe babes, for I tell you, their Angels doe continually ſee in heaven my Fathers face. And what may be ſaid more plainer then this; It is not the will of the hea-

Baptiſme of infants of old antiquitie in the Church.

Every thing abuſed in the Popes Church is not to be rejected, but the antiquity thereof to be ſearched and to be reduced againe to the ſame.

The people of God is to be judged by his free promiſes, and not by their confeſſion.

venly Father, that the Infants ſhould periſh? whereby we may gather that he receiveth them freely unto his grace, although as yet they confeſſe not their faith. Since then that the word of the promiſe, which is contained in baptiſme, pertaineth as well to children as to men, why ſhould the ſigne of the promiſe, which is baptiſme in water, be withdrawne from children, when Chriſt himſelfe commandeth them to be received of us, and promiſeth the reward of a Prophet to thoſe that receive ſuch a little infant, as he for an example did put before his Diſciples?

Math. 28. Arguments proving the baptiſme of children to be of God, and that the Apoſtles baptized children.

Now will I prove with manifeſt arguments that children ought to be baptized, and that the Apoſtles of Chriſt did baptize children. The Lord commanded his Apoſtles to baptize all nations; therfore alſo children ought to be baptized, for they are comprehended under this word, All nations.

Acts 10.

Further, whom God doth account among the faithfull, they are faithfull, for it was ſaid to Peter, That thing which God hath purified, thou ſhalt not ſay to be common or uncleane: But God doth repute children among the faithfull: Ergo, they be faithfull, except we had rather to reſiſt God, and ſeeme ſtronger and wiſer then he.

Another argument. 1 Cor. 1.

And without all doubt the Apoſtles baptized thoſe which Chriſt commanded: but he commanded the faithfull to be baptized, among the which infants be reckoned: The Apoſtles then baptized infants.

1 Cor. 1. Another argument.

The Goſpel is more then Baptiſme, for Paul ſaid; The Lord ſent me to preach the Goſpel, and not to baptize: not that he denied abſolutely that he was ſent to baptize, but that he preferred doctrine before baptiſme, for the Lord commanded both to the Apoſtles: but children be received by the doctrine of the Goſpel of God, and not refuſed: therefore what perſon being of reaſon may denie them baptiſme, which is a thing leſſer then the Goſpel? for in the Sacraments be two things to be conſidered, the thing ſignified, and the ſigne, and the thing ſignified is is greater then the ſigne, and from the thing ſignified in baptiſme, children are not excluded; who therefore may denie them the ſigne, which is baptiſme in water?

In ſacraments two things to be conſidered.

Saint Peter could not denie them to be baptized in water, to whom he ſaw the holy Ghoſt given, which is the certaine ſigne of Gods people: For he ſaith in the Acts, May any body forbid them to be baptized in water, who have received the holy Ghoſt as well as we? Therefore S. Peter denied not baptiſme to infants, for he knew certainly both by the doctrine of Chriſt, and by the Covenant which is everlaſting, that the Kingdome of heaven pertained to infants.

Acts 10. Another reaſon.

Another reaſon. Rom. 8.

None be received into the Kingdome of heaven, but ſuch as God loveth, and which are indued with the ſpirit: for whoſo hath not the ſpirit of God, he is none of his. But infants be beloved of God, and therefore want not the ſpirit of God: wherefore if they have the ſpirit of God as well as men, if they be numbred among the people of God as well as we that be of age, who (I pray you) may well withſtand children to be baptized with water, in the name of the Lord?

Another reaſon. Math. 10.

The Apoſtles in times paſt being yet not ſufficiently inſtructed, did murmure againſt thoſe which brought their children unto the Lord, but the Lord rebuked them, and ſaid; Let the Babes come unto me. Why then doe not theſe rebellious Anabaptiſts obey the commandement of the Lord? For what doe they now adaies elſe that bring their children to baptiſme, then that they did in times paſt, which brought their children to the Lord, and our Lord received them, and putting his hands on them, bleſſed them, and both by words and by gentle behaviour towards them, declared manifeſtly that children be the people of God, and entirely beloved of GOD. But ſome will ſay, Why then did not Chriſt baptize them? Becauſe it is written, Ieſus himſelfe baptized not, but his Diſciples.

Objection. Iohn 4.

Moreover, Circumciſion in the old Law was miniſtred to infants; therefore baptiſme ought to be miniſtred in the new Law unto children. For baptiſme is come in the ſtead of circumciſion, as Saint Paul witneſſeth, ſaying to the Coloſſians; By Chriſt ye are circumciſed with a circumciſion which is without hands, when ye put off the body of ſinne of the fleſh, by the circumciſion of Chriſt, being buried together with him through baptiſme. Behold, Paul calleth baptiſme the circumciſion of a Chriſtian man, which is done without hands, not that water may be miniſtred without hands, but that with hands no man any longer ought to be circumciſed, albeit the myſterie of circumciſion doe ſtill remaine in faithfull people.

Another reaſon. Coloſſ. 2.

Another reaſon. Ioſ. 5.

To this I may adde, that the ſervants of God were alwaies ready to miniſter the ſacraments to them, for whom they were inſtituted. As for an example, we may behold Ioſua, who moſt diligently procured the people of Iſrael to be circumciſed before they entred into the land of promiſe; but ſince the Apoſtles were the Preachers of the word, and the very faithfull ſervants of Ieſus Chriſt, who may hereafter doubt that they baptized infants, ſince baptiſme is in place of circumciſion?

Another reaſon.

Item, the Apoſtles did attemperate all their doings to the ſhadowes and figures of the old Teſtament: therefore it is certaine that they did attemperate baptiſme accordingly to circumciſion, and baptized children becauſe they were under the figure of baptiſme; for the people of Iſrael paſſed through the red ſea, and the bottome of the water of Iordan, with their children. And although the children be not alwaies expreſſed, neither the women in the holy Scriptures, yet they are comprehended and underſtood in the ſame.

Another reaſon.

Alſo the Scripture evidently telleth us, that the Apoſtles baptized whole families or houſholds: But the children be comprehended in a family or houſhold, as the chiefeſt and deareſt part thereof: Therefore we may conclude, that the Apoſtles did baptize infants or children, and not onely men of lawfull age. And that the houſe or houſhold is taken for man, woman, and childe, it is manifeſt in the 17. of Geneſis, and alſo in that Ioſeph doth call Iacob with all his houſe, to come out of the land of Canaan into Egypt.

Arguments of example and of antiquitie.

Finally, I can declare out of ancient Writers, that the baptiſme of Infants hath continued from the Apoſtles time unto ours, neither that it was inſtituted by any Councels, neither of the Pope, nor of other men, but commended from the Scripture by the Apoſtles themſelves. Origen upon the declaration of Saint Pauls Epiſtle to the Romanes, expounding the ſixth chapter, ſaith, That the Church of Chriſt received the baptiſme of Infants from the very Apoſtles. Saint Hierome maketh mention of the baptiſme of Infants, in the third booke againſt the Pelagians, and in his Epiſtle to Leta. S. Auguſtine reciteth for this purpoſe a place out of Iohn Biſhop of Conſtantinople, in his firſt booke againſt Iulian, chapter 2. and he againe writing to Saint Hierome Epiſt. 28. ſaith, That Saint Cyprian not making any new decree, but firmely obſerving the faith of the Church, judged with his fellow Biſhops, that as ſoone as one was borne, he might be lawfully baptized. The place of Cyprian is to be ſeen in his Epiſtle to Fidus.

the baptiſme of infants was not derived from the authoritie of man, neither of Councels, but from the tradition or doctrine of the Apoſtles.

Cyrill upon Leviticus chapter 8. approveth the baptiſme of children, and condemneth the iteration of baptiſme. Theſe authorities of men I doe alledge, not to tie the baptiſme of children unto the teſtimonies of men, but to ſhew how mens teſtimonies doe agree with Gods word, and that the veritie of antiquitie is on our ſide, and that the Anabaptiſts have nothing but lies for them, and new imaginations, which feigne the baptiſme of children to be the Popes commandement.

After this will I anſwer to the ſumme of your arguments for the contrarie. The firſt which includeth all the reſt, is, It is written, Goe ye into all the world, and preach the glad tidings to all creatures. He that beleeveth and is baptized, ſhall be ſaved: but he that beleeveth not, ſhall be damned, &c.

Matth. 18.

Righteouſneſſe and acceptation is onely by imputation and meere grace.

To this I anſwer, that nothing is added to Gods word by baptiſme of children, as you pretend, but that is done which the ſame word doth require, for that children are accounted of Chriſt in the Goſpel among the number of ſuch as beleeve, as it appeareth by theſe words; He that offendeth one of theſe little babes which beleeve in me, it were better for him to have a millſtone tyed about his neck, and to be caſt into the bottome of the ſea. Where plainly Chriſt calleth ſuch as be not able to confeſſe their faith, beleevers; becauſe of his meere grace he reputeth them for beleevers. And this is no wonder ſo to be taken, ſince God imputeth faith for righteouſneſſe unto men that be of riper age: for both in men and children, righteouſneſſe, acceptation, or ſanctification is of mære grace and by imputation, that the glory of Gods grace might be praiſed.

“ Marke 1.

And that the children of faithfull parents are ſanctified, and among ſuch as doe beleeve, is apparent in the 1 Cor. 7. And whereas you doe gather by the order of the words in the ſaid commandement of Chriſt, that children ought to be taught before they be baptized, and to this end you alledge many places out of the Acts, proving that ſuch as confeſſed their faith firſt, were baptized after: I anſwer, that if the order of words might weigh any thing in this cauſe, we have the Scripture that maketh as well for us. For in “ Saint Marke we reade, that John did baptize in the deſart, preaching the baptiſme of repentance. In the which place we ſee baptizing go before, and preaching to follow after.

Matth. 28.

And alſo I will declare this place of Matthew exactly conſidered, to make for the uſe of baptiſme in children, for S. Matthew hath it written in this wiſe; All power is given me (ſaith the Lord) in heaven and in earth, therefore going forth μαθητεύσατε, that is, Diſciple ye, (as I may expreſſe the ſignification of the word;) that is, make or gather to me Diſciples of all nations. And following, he declareth the way how they ſhould gather to him Diſciples out of all nations, baptizing them and teaching; by baptizing and teaching ye ſhall procure a Church to me. And both theſe aptly and briefly ſeverally he ſetteth forth, ſaying, Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt, teaching them to obſerve all things whatſoever I have commanded you. Now then baptiſme goeth before doctrine.

The place of Matthew 28. (He that beleeveth and is baptized) opened.

But hereby I doe not gather, that the Gentiles which never heard any thing before of God, and of the Sonne of God, and of the holy Ghoſt, ought to be baptized, neither they would permit themſelves to be baptized before they knew to what end. But this I have declared to ſhew you upon how feeble foundation the Anabaptiſts be grounded. And plainly it is not true which they imagine of this text, that the Lord did onely command ſuch to be baptized whom the Apoſtles had firſt of all taught. Neither here verily is ſignified who onely be to be baptized, but he ſpeaketh of ſuch as be of perfect age, and of the firſt foundations of faith, and of the Church to be planted among the Gentiles, which were as yet rude and ignorant of religion.

Such as be of age may heare, beleeve, and confeſſe that which is preached and taught, but ſo cannot infants; therefore we may juſtly collect, that he ſpeaketh here nothing of infants or children. But for all this they be not to be excluded from baptiſme.

It is a generall rule; He that doth not labour, muſt not eate. But who is ſo barbarous that might think hereby, that children ſhould be famiſhed?

In the firſt converting of Infidels, beleeving ought to goe before baptizing: but where faith is received, Gods grace and ſacraments goe not by age, but as well be children of the faithfull received as the fathers.

The Lord ſent his Apoſtles at the beginning of the ſetting up his true religion unto all nations, unto ſuch as were both ignorant of God, and were out of the Covenant of God; and truly ſuch perſons it behooved not firſt to be baptized, and afterward taught; but firſt to be taught, and after baptized. If at this day we ſhould goe to the Turkes to convert them to the faith of Chriſt, verily firſt we ought to teach them, and afterward baptize ſuch as would yeeld to be the ſervants of Chriſt. Likewiſe the Lord himſelfe in times paſt did, when firſt he renued the Covenant with Abraham, and ordained circumciſion to be a ſeale of the Covenant after that Abraham was circumciſed. But he, when he perceived the infants alſo to pertaine to the Covenant, and that circumciſion was the ſealing up of the Covenant, did not onely circumciſe Iſmael his ſon that was 13. yæres of age, but all other Infants that were born in his houſe, among whom we reckon Iſaac.

Why children of chriſtian parents be received to baptiſme.

Catechumeni, is as much to ſay, as young Novices and beginners in Chriſts faith.

Even ſo faithfull people which were converted from heathen Idolatrie by the preaching of the Goſpel, and confeſſing the faith, were baptized; when they underſtood their children to be counted among the people of GOD, and that baptiſme was the token of the people of God, they procured alſo their children to be baptized. Therefore as it is written; Abraham circumciſed all the male children of his houſe. Semblably we reade in the acts and writings of the Apoſtles, that after the maſter of the houſe was turned to the faith, all the whole houſe was baptized. And as concerning thoſe which of old time were compelled to confeſſe their faith before they received baptiſme, which were called Catechumeni, they were ſuch as with our fore-fathers came from the Gentiles in the Church, who being yet rude of faith, they did inſtruct in the principles of their beliefe, and afterward they did baptize them; but the ſame ancient fathers notwithſtanding did baptize the children of faithfull men, as I have already partly declared.

And becauſe you doe require a haſtie anſwer of your letter of one that is but a dull writer, I am here enforced to ceaſe particularly to goe through your letter in anſwering thereto, knowing that I have fully anſwered every part thereof, in that I have already written, although not in ſuch order as it had beene mæte, and as I purpoſed. But foraſmuch as I underſtand that you will be no contentious man, neither in this matter, neither in any other, contrarie to the judgement of Chriſts primitive church, which is the body and fulneſſe of Chriſt, I deſire you in the intire love of him, or rather Chriſt deſireth you by me (that your joy may be perfect, whereto you are now called) to ſubmit your judgement to that church, and to be at peace and unity with the ſame; that the coate of Chriſt which ought to be without ſeame, but now alas moſt miſerably is torne in peeces by many dangerous ſects and damnable opinions, may appeare by you in no part to have beene rent, neither that any giddy head in theſe dogge-daies, might take an enſample by you to diſſent from Chriſts true Church: I beſeech thee deare brother in the Goſpel, follow the ſteps of the faith of the glorious martyrs in the Primitive Church, and of ſuch as at this day follow the ſame; decline from them neither to the right hand nor to the left. Then ſhall death, be it never ſo bitter, be more ſweeter then this life; then ſhall Chriſt with all the heavenly Hieruſalem triumphantly imbrace your ſpirit with unſpeakable gladneſſe and exaltation, who in this earth was content to joyne your ſpirit with their ſpirits, according as it is commanded by the word, that the ſpirit of the Prophets ſhould be ſubject to the Prophets. One thing aſk with David ere you depart, and require the ſame, that you may dwell with a full accord in his houſe, for there is glory and worſhip: and ſo with Simeon in the temple embracing Chriſt, depart in peace: to the which peace Chriſt bring both you and me, and all our loving brethren that love God in the unitie of faith, by ſuch waies as ſhall pleaſe him, to his glory. Let the bitter paſſion of Chriſt which he ſuffered for your ſake, and the horrible torments which the godly Martyrs of Chriſt have endured before us, and alſo the ineſtimable reward of your life to come, which is hidden yet a little while from you with Chriſt, ſtrengthen, comfort, and encourage you to the end of that glorious race which you are in. Amen.

1 Cor. 14.

Concerning the partie to whom this letter was written, note that he was converted, and afterward died in the ſame faith as this letter did perſwade him.

Your yoke-fellow in captivity for the veritie of Chriſts Goſpel, to live and die with you in the unitie of faith,
Iohn Philpot

Woe be unto the Idolatrous Shepherds of England that feede themſelves. Should not the Shepherds feede the flock? but ye have eaten the fat, ye have clothed you with the wooll, the beſt fed have ye ſlaine, but the flocke have ye not nouriſhed, the weake have ye not holden up, the ſick have ye not healed, the broken have ye not bound together, the out-caſts have ye not brought againe, the loſt have ye not ſought, but churliſhly and cruelly have ye ruled them, Ezek. 34.

FOraſmuch (my Lord) as my buſineſſe is ſuch that I cannot come to your Lordſhip according to my promiſe, I have been ſo bold to write theſe few words unto you, partly to excuſe mine abſence, and partly to anſwer your Lordſhips demands at my laſt moſt happy departure from you. As touching the breach of my promiſe with you in not coming againe at the houre appointed, your Lordſhip ſhall underſtand that I take the counſell of the Angel, which warned the wiſe men not to come againe to Herod according to their promiſe, but to turne home againe another way. Now my Lord I perceiving your Lordſhip to be a more cruell Tyrant then ever was Herod, and more deſirous to deſtroy Chriſt in his poore members then ever was he, which to deſtroy Chriſt killed his own ſon, I thought good to take the Angels counſell, and to come no more at you; for I ſee that you are ſet all in a rage like a ravening Wolfe againſt the poore Lambes of Chriſt appointed to the ſlaughter for the teſtimonie of the truth. Indeede you are called the common cut-throate and generall ſlaughter-ſlave to all the Biſhops of England; and therefore it is wiſdome for me and all other ſimple ſheepe of the Lord, to keepe us out of your Butchers ſtall as long as we can: eſpecially ſeeing that you have ſuch ſtore alreadie, that you are not able to drinke all their bloud, leſt you ſhould breake your belly; and therefore let them lie ſtill and die for hunger. Therefore (my Lord) I thought it good to tarrie a time untill your Lordſhips ſtomacke were come to you a little better; for I doe perceive by your great fat cheekes that you lacke no Lambes fleſh yet, and belike you are almoſt glutted with ſupping ſo much bloud, and therefore you will let ſome of the leaneſt die in priſon, which will then be meate good enough for your barking Beagles, Harpsfield and his fellowes: but yet my Lord it were a great deale more for your Lordſhips honour, if your Chaplaines might have the meate roaſted in Smithfield at the fier of the ſtake, yea, and when it is ſomething fat and faire liking; for now they have nothing but skinne and bones, and if the dogges come haſtily to it, they may chance ſhortly to be choaked, and then your hunting will be hindered greatly, if it be not altogether marred. I heare ſay my Lord that ſome of the Butcherly Curres came of late to my houſe to ſeeke their prey, and that they goe round about the Citie (as David ſaith) grinning and grudging that they have not meate enough; therefore belike they have killed my poore brethren and ſiſters that have lien ſo long upon the Butcherly ſtall, and eaten them up: for I heare ſay their friends could not be ſuffered to ſee them theſe three daies and more; therefore I perceive now that if I had come againe according to my promiſe, your Lordſhip like a ravening Wolfe, or elſe ſome of your Helhounds would quickly have worried me: but I ſee well my appointed time is not yet come, therefore I will yet live and thank him for my deliverance, with continuall ſongs of laud and praiſe. Thus have I beene bold to trouble your Lordſhip with telling you the truth, and the very cauſe that I came not to you againe according to my unpurpoſed promiſe. I truſt your Lordſhip will take this in good part, and accept it as a lawfull excuſe, and not doubting but your Lordſhip would have done the like, if you had beene in my caſe.

Now as concerning the ſecond part that cauſed me to write unto your Lordſhip, which is to anſwer unto your ſubtle or rather cruell demand of my judgement of the death of that bleſſed Martyr of Chriſt Jeſus, good Maſter John Philpot, I will anſwer your Lordſhip ſimply and plainly, what perill ſoever ſhall come thereof. Truly my Lord I doe not only thinke, but I am alſo moſt certaine and ſure, that he as a very man of God, died a true Martyr and conſtant Confeſſor of his deare Lord and Saviour Jeſus

Chriſt, to whom he did moſt faithfully commit his ſweet ſoule, who will ſurely keepe the ſame with him in joy and felicitie for evermore. Alſo my Lord, I doe verily beleeve and know that your Lordſhip hath committed an horrible and moſt cruell murder in the unjuſt condemning and killing of him, and that you ſhall make as heavie an account for his bloud, which ſhortly ſhall be required at your hands, as ever your great Grandfather cruell Caine did or ſhall doe for his innocent brother Abel. Moreover, becauſe I am credibly informed that your Lordſhip doth beleeve, and have in ſecret ſaid, that there is no hell, I certifie you that your Lordſhip did never any thing in all your life that ſo much did redound to your Lordſhips diſhonour, and perpetuall ſhame and infamie, as your killing the body of this bleſſed Prophet doth; eſpecially ſeeing that he was none of your Dioceſſe, nor had offended any of your Lordſhips devilliſh and cruell lawes. Verily I heare almoſt every body ſay in all places where I come, that your Lordſhip is made the common ſlaughter-ſlave to all your fellowes, Biteſheep, Biſhops I would ſay; yea, the very Papiſts themſelves begin now to abhorre your bloud-thirſtineſſe; and ſpeake ſhame of your tyrannie. Like tyrannie beleeve me my Lord; every childe that can any whit ſpeake, can call upon by your name and ſay, Bloudy Boner is Biſhop of London, and every man hath it as perfect upon his fingers ends, as his Pater noſter, how many you for your part have burned with fire, and famiſhed in priſon; they ſay the whole ſumme ſurmounteth to fortie perſons within this three quarters of this yeer. Therefore, my Lord, though your Lordſhip beleeveth that there is neither heaven, nor hell, nor God, nor Devill: yet if your Lordſhip love your owne honeſtie, which was loſt long agone, you were beſt to ſurceaſe from this cruell burning of true Chriſtian men, and alſo from murdering of ſome in priſon; for that indeed offendeth mens mindes moſt, yea even your old friends the rankeſt Papiſts that be. For ſay they, Felix the Heathen Ruler did not forbid Pauls friends to viſit him in priſon, and to bring him neceſſarie reliefe; and therefore it is a very great ſhame and ſinne, to ſee a Biſhop that beareth the name of a Chriſtian, to be more cruell upon his poore brethren, then an Heathen, Turke, or Infidell.

Your deeds declare and beare witneſſe to the ſame.

This is mens ſayings in every place, not onely of this Realme, but alſo of the moſt part of the world, and the common talke they have of your Lordſhip; therefore I thought to be ſo bold with your Lordſhip, as to tell you of it, though perchance you will give me but ſmall thankes for my labour. Well, as for that, I put it to your Lordſhips choice, for I have as much already as I looke for: Finally, my Lord, I will give you to underſtand, that the death of this conſtant Martyr and valiant ſouldier of Jeſus Chriſt hath given a greater ſhake towards the overthrowing of your Papiſticall Kingdome, then you ſhall ever be able to recover againe theſe ſeven yeeres, doe the beſt ye can, and ſet as many craftie dawbers to patch it up with untempered clay as you will; yea, though prating Pendleton, that wicked Apoſtata, apply all his wily wits to helpe them. Verily, my Lord, by all mens reports, his bleſſed life could never have done the like ſorrow to Satans Synagogue, whereof ſome ſay your Lordſhip is a mightie member, as his happie death hath done. You have broken a pot indeed, but the precious word contained therein is ſo notably therewithall ſhed abroad, that the ſweet ſavour thereof hath wonderfully well refreſhed all the true houſhold or congregation of Chriſt, that they cannot abide any more the ſtinking ſavour of your filthy ware that came from the dunghill of Rome, though your Lordſhips Judaſſes doe ſet them to ſale every where to fill your bagges. I put your Lordſhip out of doubt, that if you do breake any moe ſuch pots, you will marre your owne market altogether: for I promiſe you, moſt men begin to miſlike your devilliſh doings, and wonderfully to loath your Popiſh Pedlarie wares.

Thus have I (according to your lordſhips commandements) ſhewed you ſimply what I thinke of that good mans death, whoſe bloud crieth for vengeance againſt your Lordſhips butcherly bloudie proceedings in the eares of the Lord of hoſtes, who will ſhortly revenge the ſame upon your pillid pate, and upon the reſt of all your poll-ſhorne brethren, the very marked cattell of the great Antichriſt of Rome. The meaſure of your iniquitie is filled up to the brimme, therefore will God ſhortly poure in double unto your deſerved deſtruction. And then I weene your new made Proſelytes will be glad to cover their crownes with a Cow turde (ſaving your Lordſhips reverence I ſhould have ſaid firſt.) Well, I rather deſire their converſion then confuſion, the Lord ſend the one of them ſhortly as may be moſt to his glory, Amen.

I ſignifie alſo unto your Lordſhip, that the railing words which your lying Preacher ſhewed forth of his filthy fountaine upon Sunday againſt the deare ſervant of God, good Maſter Philpot, doe greatly redound to your Lordſhips diſhoneſtie, and much deface your ſpirituall honour. Verily I ſee that the great wrath of G O D hath ſo blinded your eyes, that you ſee not what is with you, nor what is againſt you, but ſtill you vomit out your owne ſhame, and make all the world wonder upon you. Was it not enough for you to condemne him moſt unjuſtly, yea contrarie to your owne lawes, and to kill his innocent body moſt tyrannouſly, but you muſt alſo ſet a lying limbe of the Devill to blaſpheme, ſlander, and belie him now he is dead? Oh viperous generation, ſeede of the ſerpent, and right children of the Devill, full well doe you counterfeit your fathers ſteps, whom Chriſt calleth a murderer, and a lier from the beginning, which two things be the onely weapons of your warre, wherewith you maintaine all your miſchiefe, that is to ſay, lying and murder; for thoſe whom ye cannot overcome with your lying perſwaſions, them you kill moſt cruelly, and then blaſpheme and belie them with railing ſentences when they are dead. But all this will not blinde the people of God, nor yet make them any whit the leſſe beleeve the truth, nor abate their love from the true Preachers thereof, yea it is a true ſigne and a token that they are the verie Diſciples of Chriſt; for he hath ſaid, Bleſſed are ye when men revile you, and ſay all manner of evill ſayings againſt you for my names ſake. Rejoyce and be glad, for great is your reward in heaven. And doubtleſſe great is the good mans reward in heaven by this time, as your Lordſhips damnation ſhall be great in hell, except you repent and ſurceaſe from ſhedding innocent bloud. But it is to be feared your heart is hardened as Pharaohs was, ſeeing that with Judas ye have ſold and betraied your Maſter. Take heed my lord leſt you come to the ſame end or a worſe then he did. For verily I cannot perceive how you ſhould eſcape it long; therefore ſay not but a woman gave you warning if you liſt to take it. And as for the obtaining of your popiſh purpoſe in ſuppreſſing the truth, I put you out of doubt, you ſhall not obtaine it ſo long as you goe this way to worke as ye doe; for verily I beleeve that you have loſt the hearts of 20000. that were ranke Papiſts within this twelve moneths.

It is found very true that one holy Doctor ſaith, The blood of the Martyrs is the ſeede of the Goſpel; when one is put to death a thouſand doth riſe for him. And that this is true, you may well perceive by the heartie love that the people ſhewed unto good Maſter Philpot at his going to his death. They went not about to make an Idoll of him, as your Adders brood would beare men in hand; but they worſhipped GOD which gave ſuch ſtrength to his deare childe, to die ſo conſtantly for the teſtimonie of his truth, unto the utter deſtruction of that deteſtable Idolatry which your lordſhip doth moſt devilliſhly maintain with the force of fire, fagots, and ſword: yea, and rather then faile, to famiſh men in priſon againe, as ye have done already. It is reported of your owne tormentors, that the ſix priſoners that you have in your priſon, be put in ſix ſeverall places all the day, and every night brought together, and ſet in the Stocks. Forſooth my Lord this doth get you a foule name all abroad the countrey, and yet all will not helpe your Lordſhips peſtilent purpoſe, but every way hinder the ſame. For Zorobabel will be found no lyar, which ſaid, The truth ſhall have victorie. You doe but ſtrive againſt the ſtreame, and kick againſt the prick; the Lord doth laugh your doings to ſcorn, and will bring all your counſels and devices to naught (as knoweth the Lord God) who of his great mercy ſhortly convert your lordſhip, or utterly confound you, and get his name a glory over you, Amen.

Your Lordſhips Orator, who prayeth daily to God that he may reward you according to your deeds. Anno 1556.

The ſtory of ſeven Martyrs ſuffering together at London for the like teſtimony of Chriſts Goſpel.

THe Catholike Prelates of the Popes band being as yet not ſatisfied with this their one yeeres bloudy murdering of the reverend, learned, and principall members of Chriſts church (whereof there were now very few, which either were not conſumed by moſt cruell fire, or elſe, for the avoyding of their Popiſh rage, compelled to flee their naturall Countrey) continued ſtill this next yeere alſo, which was Anno 1556. in no leſſe crueltie towards the poore ſimple and inferiour ſort of people (I meane in degree, though God be praiſed, not in ſtedfaſtneſſe) having yet ſometimes amongſt them ſuch as were both learned and of good eſtimation, as in continuance of this ſtorie ſhall appeare.

Wherefore (as the firſt fruits thereof) to begin this yeere withall, about the 27. day of Januarie were burned in Smithfield at London theſe ſeven perſons hereafter following, to wit:

7. Godly Martyrs ſuffering together in Smithfield, Anno 1556. Januarie 27.

Thomas Whittle, Prieſt.
Bartlet Greene, Gentleman.
Iohn Tudſon, Artificer.
Iohn Went, Artificer.
Thomas Browne.
Iſabel Foſter, wife.
Ioan Warne, alias Laſhford, Mayd.

All which ſeven as they were burned together in one fire, ſo were they likewiſe all upon one ſort and forme of Articles condemned in one day. Howbeit, foraſmuch as the gifts of GOD in them were divers (ſome more abounding in knowledge then others) their dealings withall were alſo divers, as ſhall be more plainly perceived in the diſcourſing of their ſeverall proceſſes hereafter following. And therefore for the better underſtanding hereof, I will firſt (by the leave of the Lord) paſſing over their private Articles and examinations had at ſundry times in the Biſhops houſe, ſet forth their generall examinations in the publike Conſiſtorie, upon the Biſhops articles there miniſtred unto them, with their anſwers alſo unto the ſame, according as they all agreed after one manner and ſort together, as here by the words both of the articles and their anſwers under written, may appeare.

The forme and words of Boners Articles miniſtred to the ſeven perſons above mentioned in his Conſiſtory.

AND firſt to behold the manner of ſpeech in theſe Biſhops, ſitting in their majeſtie to terrifie the eares of the ſimple withall, let us heare the Pontificall phraſe of this Biſhop, beginning in this ſort.

The within written Articles, and every of them, and every part and parcell of them, we Edmund by the permiſſion of God Biſhop of London, doe object and miniſter to thee Thomas Whittle, &c. of our meere office, for thy ſoules health, and for the reformation of thine offences and miſdemeanours, moniſhing thee in the vertue of obedience, and under the pains of both cenſures of the Church, and alſo of other paines of the law, to anſwer fully, plainly, and truly to all the ſame.

1 FIrſt, that thou N. haſt firmely, ſtedfaſtly and conſtantly beleeved in times paſt, and ſo doeſt now beleeve at this preſent, that there is here in Earth a Catholike Church, in the which Catholike Church the faith and religion of Chriſt is truly profeſſed, allowed, received, kept and retained of all faithfull and true Chriſtian people.

7. Sacraments.

2 Item, that thou the ſaid N. in times paſt haſt alſo beleeved, and ſo doeſt beleeve at this preſent, that there are in the Catholike Church ſeven Sacraments, inſtituted and ordained by God, and by the conſent of the holy Church allowed, approved, received, kept, and retained.

The Godfathers faith.

3 Item, that thou the ſaid N. waſt in times paſt baptized in the faith of the ſaid Catholike Church, profeſſing by thy Godfathers and Godmother, the faith and religion of Chriſt and the obſervation thereof, renouncing there the Devill and all his pompes and workes, and was by the ſaid ſacrament of Baptiſme incorporate to the Catholike Church, and made a faithfull member thereof.

4 Item, that thou the ſaid N. coming to the age of foureteen yeeres, and ſo to the age of diſcretion, didſt not depart from the ſaid profeſſion and faith, nor diddeſt miſlike any part of the ſame faith or doings, but diddeſt like a faithful chriſtian perſon abide and continue in all the ſame, by the ſpace of certain yeers, ratifying and confirming all the ſame.

Sacrifice of the Maſſe.

5 Item, that thou the ſaid N. notwithſtanding the premiſſes, haſt of late, that is to ſay, within theſe two yeeres laſt paſt, within the Citie and Dioceſſe of London, ſwarved at the leaſt way from ſome part of the ſaid Catholike faith and religion: and amongſt other things thou haſt miſliked and earneſtly ſpoken againſt the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, the ſacrament of the Altar, and the unitie of the Church, railing and maligning the authoritie of the See of Rome, and the faith obſerved in the ſame.

See of Rome.

6 Item, that thou the ſaid N. haſt heretofore

refuſed, and doſt refuſe at this preſent to be reconciled again to the unitie of the Church, not knowledging and confeſſing the authoritie of the ſaid See of Rome to be lawfull.

See of Rome.

7 Item, that thou the ſaid N. miſliking the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, and the ſacrament of the altar, haſt refuſed to come to thy Pariſh Church to hear Maſſe, and to receive the ſaid ſacrament, and haſt alſo expreſly ſaid, that in the ſaid ſacrament of the altar, there is not the very body and blood of our Saviour Chriſt, really, ſubſtantially, and truly, but haſt affirmed expreſly, that the Maſſe is idolatrie and abomination, and that in the Sacrament of the altar there is none other ſubſtance, but onely materiall bread, and materiall wine, which are tokens of Chriſts body and blood onely, and that the ſubſtance of Chriſts body and blood is in no wiſe in the ſaid ſacrament of the altar.

The ſacrament of altar.

8 Item, that thou the ſaid N. being convented before certain Judges or Commiſſioners, for thy diſorder herein, and being found obſtinate, wilfull and heady, waſt by their commandement ſent unto me and my priſon, to be examined by me, and proceſſe to be made againſt thee for thy offence herein.

9 Item, that all and ſingular the premiſſes have been, and be true and manifeſt, and thy ſelfe not onely infamed and ſuſpected thereof, but alſo culpable therein; and by reaſon of the ſame, thou waſt and art of the juriſdiction of me Edmund Biſhop of London, and before me, accordingly to the order of the Eccleſiaſticall Laws, are to be convented, and alſo by me to be puniſhed and reformed.

Here follow likewiſe their anſwers, in generall, made to the articles above rehearſed.

And firſt concerning the firſt article, in beleeving there is a Catholique Church.

Anſwer to the 1. article.

TO the firſt article they altogether agreeing, affirmed the ſame to be true: John Tudſon, and Thomas Brown, further adding, that the Church of England, as it was at that preſent uſed, was no part of the true Catholique Church.

Concerning the ſecond article, that there be in the Church ſeven Sacraments.

To the 2. article

To the ſecond article they anſwered, that they acknowledged but onely two Sacraments in Chriſts Catholique Church, that is to ſay, Baptiſme, and the Supper of the Lord; John Went and Tudſon affirming, that the Sacrament of the Altar, as it is uſed, is an Idoll, and no ſacrament at all.

Concerning the third article, that they were firſt baptized in the faith of the Catholique Church, profeſſing by their god-fathers the profeſſion of the ſame, &c.

To the 3. article

To the third article they all agreed, and confeſſed it to be true, that they were baptized in the faith of Chriſt and of the Church then taught; and afterward during the time of King Edward the ſixth, they hearing the Goſpel preached, and the truth opened, followed the order of the religion and doctrine then uſed and ſet forth in the reigne of the ſaid King Edward.

Concerning the fourth article, that they for the ſpace of certain yeers did ratifie or allow, and not depart from any part of the profeſſion of the ſame Church.

To the 4. article.

To this fourth article they granted alſo and agreed; John Went adding moreover, that about ſeven yeeres paſt, he then, being about twenty yeeres of age, began to miſlike certain things uſed in the Church of England, as the miniſtration of the ſacrament of the altar; likewiſe all the ceremonies of the ſaid Church, and did likewiſe at that preſent time miſlike the ſame as they were uſed, although his god-fathers and god-mother promiſed for him the contrary.

The faith which they were baptized in, was in the name of the Father, the Son, and the holy Ghoſt, beleeving the articles of the Creed, with promiſe made to abrenounce the devil, the fleſh, and the world: of the which faith their godfathers and godmothers were ſureties for them, and in this faith they continue ſtill. As for other ceremonies and abuſes of the Church, they never made any promiſe in their baptiſme.

John Tudſon added alſo in much like ſort, and ſaid, that when he came to the yeers of diſcretion, that is, about nine yeers paſt, being about eighteen yeers of age, he did miſlike the doctrine and religion then taught and ſet forth in the Church of England, ſaving in King Edwards time, in whoſe time the Goſpel was truly ſet forth: and further ſaid, that the doctrine ſet forth in the Queenes reign was not agreeable to Gods word, nor yet to the true Catholique Church that Chriſt ſpeaketh of, &c.

Iſabel Foſter with other granted, adding likewiſe, and ſaying to the ſaid foure articles, that ſhe continued in the ſame faith and religion which ſhe was baptized in, after ſhe came to the yeers of diſcretion as other common people did; howbeit, blindly and without knowledge, till the reigne of King Edward the ſixth: at which time ſhe hearing the Goſpel truly preached and opened to the people, received thereupon the faith and religion then taught and ſet forth, &c.

Concerning the fifth article, that they of late yeers have ſwerved and gone away, miſliked, and ſpoken againſt the profeſſion of the ſame Church, at leaſt ſome part thereof, eſpecially the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, the ſacrament of the Altar, and the Authoritie of the Church of Rome.

To the fifth article, they anſwered the ſame to be true, according to the contents thereof: Thomas Whittle adding moreover, that he had ſwerved and gone away, and not in whole but in part, not from the whole Catholique Church, but from the church of Rome, in ſpeaking againſt the maſſe, the ſacrifice thereof, and the See of Rome.

To ſwerve from the corruptions of the See of Rome, and ſacrifice of the Maſſe, is not to go from the Catholike Church of Chriſt.

Joan Laſhford (alias, Joan Warn) granting with the other the ſaid article, addeth moreover, that ſhe never hitherto ſwerved or went away, nor yet doth, from any part of Chriſts Catholique faith and religion; but ſaith, that from the time ſhe was xi. yeers of age, ſhe hath miſliked the ſacrifice of the maſſe, the ſacrament of the altar, and the authority of the See of Rome, with the doctrine thereof, becauſe they be againſt Chriſts Catholike Church, and the right faith of the ſame.

Bartlet Greene anſwering with the other to this article, addeth and ſaith, that he ſwerved not from the Catholique faith, but onely from the Church of Rome, &c.

Concerning the ſixth article, that they refuſe to be reconciled to the unitie of the ſaid Church of Rome.

To the 6. article.

To the ſixth article they anſwer and confeſſe the ſame to be true, rendring the cauſe thereof, becauſe (ſay they) the ſame Church and doctrine therein ſet forth and taught, diſagreeth from the unitie of Chriſts word, and the true Catholique faith, &c.

The Catholike Church, and the Church of Rome, are two things.

Whereunto Bartlet Green anſwered, that he is contented to be reconciled to the unitie of Chriſts Catholike Church, but not of the Church of Rome.

In like manner added alſo John Went.

Concerning the ſeventh article, that they refuſe to come to heare Maſſe, and to receive the ſaid

Sacrament, calling it an Idoll, &c.

To the 7. article

The Maſſe diſſonant from the word of the Goſpel.

The maſſe full of idolatry.

To the ſeventh article they anſwer, and confeſſe the contents thereof to be true, giving withall the reaſon and cauſe of this their ſo doing, for that the Maſſe with the ſacrament thereof, as it was then uſed and ſet forth in the Church of England, is diſſonant to the word and teaching of the goſpel, &c.

John Went repenteth his going to Maſſe.

John Went furthermore ſaid, as concerning the Maſſe, that he beleeveth no leſſe, but the Maſſe which he calleth the Supper of the Lord, as it is now uſed in the Realme of England, is naught, full of idolatrie, and againſt Gods word ſo farre as he ſeeth it; howbeit, he ſaith that ſince the Queens Coronation by chance he hath been preſent where the Maſſe hath been ſaid, whereof he is ſorie.

Iſabel Foſter alſo anſwering to the ſaid articles, with the other before, confeſſed moreover, that ſince Queene Maries reigne ſhe hath not heard Maſſe, nor received the ſacrament, but hath refuſed to come in place where it was miniſtred: for ſhe knoweth no ſuch ſacrament to be. And being demanded of her beliefe in the ſame, ſhe ſaith, that there is but onely materiall bread, and materiall wine, and not the reall ſubſtance of the bodie of Chriſt in the ſame ſacrament: for ſo ſhe hath been taught to beleeve by the Preachers in the time of King Edward, whom ſhe beleeveth to have preached the truth in that behalf.

¶ Concerning the 8. Article, that they were ſent by the Commiſſioners to the Biſhop to be examined and impriſoned.

To the 8. article

To the 8. Article they grant the ſame, and the contents thereof to be ſo.

Thomas Whittle adding and affirming that the Lord Chancellor that then was, ſent him up to the Biſhop there preſent.

Bartlet Greene added, that he was ſent up to the ſaid Biſhop, but for no offence herein articulate.

John Went ſaid that Doctor Story, Q. Maries commiſſioner, examined him upon the ſacrament, and becauſe he denied the real preſence, he preſented this examinate to the Biſhop.

John Tudſon likewiſe examined by M. Cholmley and Doctor Story, upon the ſame matters, and for not coming to the Church, and accuſed by the ſame, becauſe he would not agree to them, was ſent to the Biſhop.

Thomas Browne alſo ſaid, that he for not coming to the church of S. Brides, was brought by the Conſtable to the Biſhop, &c.

Of this Joan Warne read before.

Joan Warne confeſſed that ſhe was ſent by D. Story to the B. of London, about twelve weeks ago, ſince which time ſhe hath continued with the ſaid Biſhop.

Concerning the 9. Article.

To the 9. article

To the 9. Article they confeſſe and ſay, that as they beleeve the premiſſes before by them confeſſed to be true, ſo they denie not the ſame to be manifeſt, and that they be of the juriſdiction of London.

And thus having expreſſed their Articles, with their anſwers joyntly made unto the ſame, it remaineth further more fully to diſcourſe the ſtories, and handling of all the ſeven aforeſaid Martyrs ſeverally and particularly by themſelves, firſt beginning with Thomas Whittle.

The ſtory of all theſe ſeven Martyrs, particularly deſcribed, in order here followeth, and firſt of Thomas Whittle, who firſt recanting, then returning again, with great conſtancy and fortitude ſtood to the defence of Chriſts doctrine againſt the Papiſts, to the fire.

Tho. Whittle Martyr.

In the ſtory of maſter Philpot, mention was made before, of a married prieſt, whom he found in the Cole-houſe at his firſt coming thither, in heavineſſe of minde and great ſorrow, for recanting the doctrine which he had taught in King Edwards dayes, whoſe name was Thomas Whittle of Eſſex; and thus lieth his ſtory. This Thomas Whittle, after he had been expulſed from the place in Eſſex where he ſerved, went abroad where he might, now here and there, as occaſion was miniſtred, preaching and ſowing the Goſpel of Chriſt. At length being apprehended by one Edmund Alablaſter, in hope of reward and promotion, which he miſerably gaped after, he was brought firſt as priſoner before the Biſhop of Wincheſter, who then was fallen lately ſick of his diſeaſe, whereof not long after he died moſt ſtrangely. But the apprehender for his profered ſervice was highly checked and rated of the biſhop, aſking if there were no man unto whom he might bring ſuch Raſcals, but to him? Hence (quoth he) out of my ſight thou varlet, what doeſt thou trouble me with ſuch matters? The greedie cormorant being thus defeated of his deſired prey, yet thinking to ſeek and to hunt further, carried his priſoner to the Biſhop of London, with whom what an evil meſſe of handling this Whittle had, and how he was by the Biſhop all to beaten and buffeted about the face, by this his own narration in a Letter ſent unto his friend, manifeſtly may appeare.

Edmund Alablaſter, after a promoter and perſecuter.

Tho. Whittle reporteth of the manner of his handling with B. Boner.

Upon Thurſday which was the tenth of January, the Biſhop of London ſent for me Thomas Whittle Miniſter, out of the Porters lodge, where I had been all night, lying upon the earth, upon a pallet where I had as painfull a night of ſickneſſe as ever I had, God be thanked. And when I came before him, he talked with me many things of the ſacrament ſo groſly, as is not worthy to be rehearſed. And amongſt other things he aſked me if I would have come to Maſſe that morning if he had ſent for me. Whereunto I anſwered, that I would have come to him at his commandement, but to your Maſſe (ſaid I) I have ſmall affection. At which anſwer he was diſpleaſed ſore, and ſaid I ſhould be fed with bread and water. And as I followed him through the great Hall, he turned backe and beat me with his fiſt, firſt on the one cheek, and then on the other, as the ſigne of my beating did many dayes appeare. And then he led me into a little ſalt-houſe, where I had no ſtraw nor bed, but lay two nights on a table, and ſlept ſoundly, I thanke God.

Tho. Whittle beaten on the face by Boner.

Epiſcopum non percuſſorem eſſe oportet. Tit. 1.

Then, upon the Friday next after, I was brought to my Lord, and he then gave me many faire words, and ſaid he would be good to me. And ſo he going to Fulham, committed me to Doctor Harpsfield, that he and I in that afternoone ſhould commune together, and draw out certain articles, whereunto if I would ſubſcribe, I ſhould be diſmiſſed. But Doctor Harpsfield ſent not for me till night, and then perſwaded me very ſore to forſake my opinions. I anſwered, I held nothing but the truth, and therefore I could not ſo lightly turne there-from. So I thought I ſhould at that time have had no more ado: but he had made a certain Bill, which the Regiſter pulled out of his boſome, and read it. The Bill indeed was very eaſily made, and therefore more dangerous: for the effect thereof was, to deteſt all errours and hereſies againſt the Sacrament of the Altar, and other Sacraments, and to beleeve the faith of the Catholique Church, and live accordingly.

Tho. Whittle convented before D. Harpsfield.

The copy of this bill here mentioned, if it pleaſe the gentle Reader to peruſe, ſo as it came to our hands we have hereunto adjoyned, written, and contained in their own words, as followeth to be ſeen.

The bill of ſubmiſſion offered to Thomas Whittle to ſubſcribe.

The bill of ſubmiſſion put to T. Whittle to ſubſcribe unto.

I Thomas Whittle Prieſt, of the Dioceſſe of London, knowledge and confeſſe with my mouth agreeing with my heart before you reverend Father in God, Edmund Biſhop of London my Ordinarie, that I do deteſt and abhorre all manner of hereſies and errors againſt the Sacrament of the Altar, or any of the Sacraments of the church, which hereſies and errors have heretofore been condemned in any wiſe by the Catholique church: and I do proteſt and declare by theſe preſents, that I do both now hold, and alſo intend by Gods grace alwayes hereafter to hold, obſerve, and keep, in all points the Catholique faith and beliefe of Chriſts Church, according as this Church of England, being a member of the ſaid Catholique Church, doth now profeſſe and keep, and in no wiſe to ſwerve, decline, or go from the ſaid faith, during my naturall life, ſubmitting my ſelfe fully and wholly to you reverend Father my ſaid Ordinarie, in all things concerning my reformation and amendment at all times. In witneſſe whereof I the ſaid Thomas Whittle Prieſt, have hereunto ſubſcribed my name, written &c.

Tho. Whittle though infirmity ſubſcribeth to the bill.

Tho. Whittle compuncted in conſcience, for forſaking of the croſſe of Chriſt. A good warning for all faithfull Chriſtians not to fall into the crafty hands of the Papiſts.

To this bill I did indeed ſet my hand, being much deſired and counſelled ſo to do, and the fleſh being alwayes deſirous to have libertie. I conſidered not throughly the inconvenience that might come thereupon; and reſpite I deſired to have had, but earneſtly they deſired me to ſubſcribe. Now when I had ſo done, I had little joy thereof. For by and by my minde and conſcience told me by Gods word that I had done evill, by ſuch a ſleight means to ſhake off the ſweet Croſſe of Chriſt: and yet it was not my ſeeking, as God he knoweth, but altogether came of them. Oh the crafty ſubtiltie of Satan in his members. Let every man that God ſhall deliver into their hands, take good heed, and cleave faſt to Chriſt: for they will leave no corner of his conſcience unſought, but will attempt all guilefull and ſubtle meanes to corrupt him, to fall both from God and his truth. But yet let no man deſpair of Gods help, for Peter did fall and riſe againe. And David ſaith, A righteous man though he fall, he ſhall not be caſt away: for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand. For I for my part have felt my infirmities, and yet have I found Gods preſent help and comfort in time of need, I thank him therefore.

The night after I had ſubſcribed, I was ſore grieved, and for ſorrow of conſcience could not ſleep. For in the deliverance of my bodie out of bonds, which I might have had, I could finde no joy nor comfort, but ſtill was in my conſcience tormented more and more, being aſſured by Gods ſpirit and his word, that I through evill counſell and addviſement had done amiſſe. And both with diſquietneſſe of minde, and with my other cruell handling, I was ſickly, lying upon the ground when the Keeper came; and ſo I deſired him to pray Doctor Harpsfield to come to me, and ſo he did.

Comfort againſt deſpair. T. Whittle repenteth his recantation.

And when he came, and the Regiſter with him, I told him that I was not well at eaſe, but eſpecially I told him I was grieved very much in my conſcience and minde, becauſe I had ſubſcribed. And I ſaid that my conſcience had ſo accuſed me, through the juſt judgement of God and his word, that I had felt hell in my conſcience, and Satan readie to devoure me: and therefore I pray you maſter Harpsfield (ſaid I) let me have the bill again, for I will not ſtand to it. So he gently commanded it to be fetched, and gave it me, and ſuffered me to put out my name, whereof I was right glad when I had ſo done, although death ſhould follow. And hereby I had experience of Gods providence and mercie towards me, who trieth his people, and ſuffereth them to fall, but not to be loſt: for in the midſt of this temptation and trouble, he gave me warning of my deed, and alſo delivered me, his name be praiſed for evermore. Amen.

Experience of Gods providence, ſuffering his people to fall, but not to be loſt.

Peace of conſcience a great treaſure.

Neither devill nor cruell tyrant can pluck any of Chriſts ſheep out of his hand. Of the which flock of Chriſts ſheep I truſt undoubtedly I am one by meanes of his death and blood-ſhedding, which ſhall at the laſt day ſtand at his right hand, and receive with other his bleſſed benediction. And now being condemned to die, my conſcience and minde, I praiſe God, is quiet in Chriſt, and I by his grace am very well willing and content to give over this bodie to the death, for the teſtimonie of his truth and pure religion, againſt Antichriſt and all his falſe religion and doctrine. They that report otherwiſe of me, ſpeak not truly. And as for Fountain I ſaw him not all this while.

By me Thomas Whittle, Miniſter.

¶ Concerning the troubled minde of this godly man, and tearing of his name out of the Bill, here followeth the report of the ſame, written in the letters both of the ſaid Harpsfield, and alſo of Johnſon the Regiſter, being then preſent thereat, and reporters of the ſame unto the Biſhop, as in their letters hereto annexed is to be ſeen.

The copie of Nicholas Harpsfields letter, touching maſter Whittle, written to Boner Biſhop of London.

A letter of N. Harpsfield declaring how Tho. Whittle rent his ſubſcription out of the Biſhops Regiſter.

PLeaſeth your good Lordſhip to underſtand, that yeſterday I dined with my Lord of Exceter, who ſoone after my firſt coming to him, asked me what news? I anſwered none but good that I had heard. No, ſaith he. Why, it is a rumor in the Citie, that to morrow the Queenes grace will take her journey towards the King. I anſwered, that I thought it not to be any whit true, but an invention of heretiques: yea and further, ſaith he, there is report made abroad of my Lord our Maſter, that he is in diſcomfort, and therefore will ſuffer no man to come unto him. When I heard thus much, I began to laugh, and to declare how untrue this report was: ſo that my Lord (who before was verie ſad) afterward knowing the truth, rejoyced much to heare that all was well with your Lordſhip, and deſired me to have his hearty commendations to your Lordſhip.

One of my Lord of Penbrokes retinue, a verie hanſome man, and as farre as I can yet learne, a Catholique, is a ſuter to your Lordſhip to have licence to erect a ſchool: and the order which he intendeth to uſe, is contained in this printed paper, which I ſend here incloſed to your Lordſhip. I would be glad for my Lord of Penbrokes ſake that he underſtood, that upon my motion your Lordſhip were content he ſhould teach as he intendeth. Maſter Johnſon and I have travelled with the Prieſt, and he hath ſubſcribed his name to this draught which is herein incloſed, and hath promiſed he will ſtand to the ſame before your Lordſhip.

When I had written this much, ſuddenly came tidings to me, that Iordanis converſus eſt retrorſum. Cluney coming to the Prieſt, found him lying proſtrate, and groning as though he ſhould have died forthwith. Then Cluney took him up, and ſet him upon a ſtool, and came to me, and told me of this revell. It chanced that maſter Johnſon was with me, and we went to this fond heretique, and found him lying all along, holding his hands up, and looking hypocritically towards heaven. I cauſed Thomas More and Cluney to ſet him on the ſtool, and with much ado at length he told me that Satan had been with him in the night, and told him that he was damned, and weeping he prayed maſter Johnſon and me to ſee the bill, whereunto he ſubſcribed, and when he ſaw it, he tare out his name, è libro ſcilicet viventium. Me thinketh by him he will needs burne a fagot, neither is there any other likelihood of the young woman. I have enquired of the two perſons which ſue to have a licence to eat fleſh. And the woman of Chriſt-church is indeed very much diſeaſed, and hath been long diſeaſed, and ſhe and her huſband both Catholike. Of the other yet I can learn nothing. Thus Jeſus evermore preſervs your good Lordſhip, and my Miſtreſſe your Lordſhips ſiſter, with all yours. This preſent Saturday.

This yong woman was Joan Warne, otherwiſe named Joan Laſhford, who was burned alſo with the ſame Whittle.

Your Lordſhips moſt bounden ſervant, Nicholas Harpsfield.

Here followeth another letter of Robert Iohnſon Regiſter, touching Thomas Whittle, written to Boner Biſhop of London.

Another letter of Johnſon touching the ſaid Tho. Whittle.

My bounden dutie premiſed, pleaſeth your Lordſhip to underſtand, that this laſt Friday in the afternoon, maſter Archdeacon of London did diligently travell with Sir Thomas Whittle. I being preſent, and perceiving his conformitie, as outwardly appeared, deviſed a ſubmiſſion, and he being content therewith did ſubſcribe the ſame. But now this Saturday morning maſter Archdeacon and I, upon Cluneyes report, declaring that he fained himſelfe to be diſtracted of his ſenſes, went unto him, to whom he declared that Satan in the night time appeared unto him, and ſaid that he was damned, for that he had done againſt his conſcience in ſubſcribing to the ſaid ſubmiſſion, with other like words, &c. And then maſter Archdeacon, at his earneſt requeſt, delivered unto him the ſubmiſſion. And thereupon the ſaid Whittle did teare out his ſubſcription, made in the foot of the ſame, as your Lordſhip ſhall perceive by the ſubmiſſion ſent now unto your Lordſhip by maſter Archdeacon; wherewith the ſaid Whittle was ſomewhat quieted.

Touching Joan Laſhford.

And as touching Joan Laſhford, maſter Archdeacon did likewiſe travell with her, and ſhewing her ſir Thomas ſubmiſſion, which I read unto her two times, demanded if ſhe could be content to make the like ſubmiſſion, and ſhe deſired reſpite untill this morning. And being now eftſoones demanded, in likewiſe ſaith, that ſhe will not make any thing in writing, nor put any ſigne thereunto. Maſter Archdeacon and I intend this afternoon to examine the ſaid ſir Thomas upon articles: for as yet there doth appeare nothing in writing againſt him, as knoweth almightie GOD, who preſerve your good Lordſhip in proſperitie long with honour to endure.

From London this Saturday.

By your Lordſhips daily beadſman, and bounden ſervant,
Robert Iohnſon.

{Q. MARIE.}

The condemnation, death, and martyrdome of Thomas Whittle.

{Anno. 1556.}

The laſt examination of Tho. Whittle.

Concerning the words and anſwers of the ſaid Thomas Whittle at his laſt examination before the Biſhop, upon the fourteenth day of January, the yeer above expreſſed, Boner with other his fellow Bonerlings ſitting in his Conſiſtorie at afternoon, firſt called forth Thomas Whittle, with whom he began in effect as followeth. Becauſe ye be a Prieſt (ſaith he) as I and other Biſhops here be, and did receive the order of Prieſthood, after the right and form of the Catholique Church, ye ſhall not think but I will miniſter juſtice as well unto you, as unto other. And then the ſaid Boner in further communication did charge him, that where in times paſt he had ſaid Maſſe according to the order then uſed, the ſame Whittle now of late had rayled and ſpoken againſt the ſame, ſaying that it was idolatrie and abomination. Whereunto Thomas Whittle anſwering again ſaid, that at ſuch time as he ſo ſaid Maſſe, he was then ignorant, &c. adding moreover, that the elevation of the Sacrament at the Maſſe giveth occaſion of idolatry to them that be ignorant and unlearned.

Elevation of the ſacrament cauſe of idolatry.

After this the Biſhop making haſte to the articles (which in all his examinations ever he harped upon) came to this article; That thou waſt in times paſt baptized in the faith of the Catholique Church.

B. Boners argument: He was baptized in the faith of the Catholique Church: Ergo, he was baptized in the faith of Rome.

To this the ſaid Whittle inferred again; I was baptized in the faith of the Catholike church, although I did forſake the Church of Rome. And ye my Lord do call theſe hereſies, that be no hereſies, and do charge me therewith as hereſies, and ye ground your ſelfe upon that religion, which is not agreeable to GODS word, &c.

Then the ſaid victorious ſouldier and ſervant of our Saviour, conſtant in the verity received and profeſſed, was again admoniſhed, and with perſwaſions intreated by the Biſhop; who becauſe he would not agree unto the ſame, the Biſhop forthwith proceeded, firſt to his actuall degradation, that is, to unprieſt him of all his Prieſtly trinkets, and Clerkly habit. The order and maner of which their Popiſh and moſt vaine degradation, before in the ſtorie of Biſhop Hooper, is to be ſeen. Then Whittle in the midſt of the ceremonies, when he ſaw them ſo buſie in degrading him, after their father the Popes Pontificall faſhion, ſaid unto them; Paul and Titus had not ſo much ado with their Prieſts and Biſhops. And farther, ſpeaking to the Biſhop, he ſaid unto him; My Lord, your religion ſtandeth moſt with the Church of Rome, and not with the Catholique Church of Chriſt.

Tho. Whittle degraded.

Whittles words to B. Boner.

The Biſhop after this, according to his accuſtomed and formall proceedings, aſſayed him yet againe with words rather then with ſubſtantiall arguments, to conform him to his religion. Who then denying ſo to do, ſaid, As for your religion I cannot be perſwaded that it is according to Gods word.

The Biſhop then aſked what fault he found in the adminiſtration of the Sacrament of the Altar.

Whittle anſwered and ſaid, it is not uſed according to Chriſts inſtitution, in that it is privately and not openly done. And alſo for that it is miniſtred but in one kinde to the lay people, which is againſt Chriſts ordinance. Farther, Chriſt commanded it not to be elevated nor adored: For the adoration and elevation cannot be approved by Scripture.

Cauſes why the adminiſtration of the Popiſh ſacrament is to be reproved.

Well, quoth Boner, my Lords here and other learned men have ſhewed great learning for thy converſion, wherefore if thou wilt yet return to the faith and religion of the Catholique Church, I will receive thee thereunto, and not commit thee to the ſecular power, &c. To make ſhort, Whittle, ſtrengthened with the grace of the Lord, ſtood ſtrong and unmoveable in that he had affirmed. Wherefore the ſentence being read, the next day following he was committed to the ſecular power, and ſo in few dayes after brought to the fire with the other ſix aforenamed, ſealing up the teſtimony of his doctrine with his blood, which he willingly and cheerfully gave for witneſſe of the truth.

Letters of Thomas Whittle.

A Letter of Thomas Whittle to Iohn Careleſſe priſoner in the Kings Bench.

A letter of Th. Whittle written to Io. Careleſſe.

The peace of God in Chriſt be with you continually, dearly beloved brother in Chriſt, with the aſſiſtance of Gods grace and holy ſpirit, to the working and performing of thoſe things which may comfort and edifie his Church (as ye daily do) to the glory of his name, and the increaſe of your joy and ſolace of ſoule in this life, and alſo your reward in heaven with Chriſt our Captain, whoſe faithfull ſouldier ye are, in the life to come, Amen.

I have greatly rejoyced (my dear heart) with thanks to God for you, ſince I have heard of your faith and love which you bear towards God and his ſaints, with a moſt godly ardent zeal to the vertue of Chriſts doctrine and religion, which I have heard by the report of many, but ſpecially by the declaring of that valiant Captain in Chriſts Church, that ſtout Champion in Gods cauſe, that ſpectacle to the world, I meane our good brother Philpot, who now lieth under the Altar, and ſweetly enjoyeth the promiſed reward. And ſpecially I and my condemned fellows give thanks to God for your loving and comfortable letter in the deepneſſe of our trouble (after the fleſh) ſent unto us to the conſolation of us all, but moſt ſpecially to me moſt ſinfull miſer on mine own behalfe, but happie, I hope, through Gods loving kindneſſe in Chriſt ſhewed unto me; who ſuffered me to faint and fail through humane infirmity, by the working of the Arch-enemie in his ſworne ſouldiers the Biſhops and Prieſts. In whom ſo lively appeareth the very viſage and ſhape of Satan, that a man (if it were not prejudice to Gods word) might well affirm them to be Devils incarnate, as I by experience do ſpeak. Wherefore, who ſo ſhall for conſcience matters come in their hands, had need of the wilineſſe of the ſerpent to ſave his head, though it be with the wounding of his body, and to take diligent heed how he conſenteth to their wicked writings, or ſetteth his hand to their conveyances.

His judgement and experience of Popiſh prelates.

So did they aſſault me and craftily tempt me to their wicked wayes, or at leaſt to a denegation of my faith and true opinions, though it were but by colour and diſſimulation. And (alas) ſomething they did prevail. Not that I did any thing at all like their opinions and falſe Papiſticall religion, or elſe doubted of the truth wherein I ſtand, but onely the infirmitie of the fleſh beguiled me, deſiring liberty by an unlawfull means; God lay it not to my charge at that day, and ſo I heartily deſire you to pray. Howbeit, uncertain I am whether more profit came thereby: profit to me, in that God ſuffered Satan to buffet me by his foreſaid miniſter of miſchief, ſhewing me mine infirmitie, that I ſhould not boaſt nor rejoyce in my ſelf, but onely in the Lord; who when he had led me to hell in my conſcience through the reſpect of his fearful judgements againſt me for my fearfulneſſe, miſtruſt, and craftie cloaking in ſuch ſpirituall and weighty matters (in the which agony and diſtreſſe I found this old verſe true, Non patitur ludum fama, fides, oculus) yet he brought me from thence again to the magnifying of his Name, ſuſpecting of fleſh and blood, and conſolation of mine own ſoul, or elſe that I might feel diſprofit in offending the Congregation of God, which peradventure will rather adjudge my fall to come of doubtfulneſſe in my doctrine and religion, then of humane imbecillitie.

The burden of a troubled conſcience.

Well, of the importune burthen of a troubled conſcience for denying or diſſembling the known veritie, I by experience could ſay very much more, which perhaps I will declare by writing, to the warning of others, if God grant time: For now am I and my fellows ready to go hence even for Chriſts cauſe; Gods name be praiſed, who hath hereto called us. Pray, I pray you, that we may end our courſe with joy, and at your appointed time you ſhall come after. But as the Lord hath kept you, ſo will he preſerve your life ſtill, to the intent you ſhould labour (as you do) to appeaſe and convince theſe ungodly contentions and controverſies, which now do too much reigne, brawling about terms to no edification. God is diſhonoured, the Church diſquieted, and occaſion to ſpeak evill of the Goſpel miniſtred to our adverſaries. But ſuch is the ſubtiltie of Satan, that whom he cannot winne with groſſe idolatrie in open religion, them he ſeeketh to corrupt and deceive in opinions, in a private profeſſion. But here I will abruptly leave, leſt with my rude and ſimple veine I ſhould be tedious unto you, deſiring you (my loving brother) if it ſhall not ſeeme grievous unto you, to write unto me and my fellows, yet once again, if you have leiſure, and we time to the ſame.

He writeth for the examinations of maſter Philpot.

Provide me M. Philpots nine examinations for a friend of mine, and I ſhall pay you therefore, by the leave of almighty God our heavenly Father, who correcteth all his dear children in this world, that they ſhould not be damned with the world, and trieth the faith of his ſaints through many tribulations, that being found conſtant to the end, he may crown his own gifts in them, and in heaven highly reward them; whither I truſt to go before, looking for you to follow (my faithfull friend) that we may ſing perpetuall praiſe to our loving Lord God for victory over Satan and ſin, won for us by Jeſus Chriſt God and Man, our onely and ſufficient Saviour and Advocate, Amen. Farewell, and pray in faith.

Yours, Thomas Whittle Miniſter, and now condemned to die for the Goſpels ſake. 1556. Ianu. 21.

All my fellows ſalute you. Salute all our faithfull brethren with you.

To my deare friend and brother Iohn Went, and other his priſon fellows in Lollards Tower.

He that preſerved Joſeph priſoner in Egypt, fed Daniel in the Lions Den, and delivered Paul, Peter, and the Apoſtles out of priſon, vouchſafe of his goodneſſe to keep, feed, and deliver you my good brother Went, with the other our fellow ſouldiers your priſon fellows, as may be moſt to his glory, to your conſolation, and the edification of his Church.

2.Theſ.

I cannot but praiſe God moſt earneſtly, when I heare of your conſtancie in the faith, and joy in the croſſe of Chriſt, which you now beare and ſuffer fer

ſer together, with many other good members of Chriſt, which is a token that by Chriſt you are counted worthy the kingdome of God, as Paul ſaith. And though the world counteth the yoke and croſſe of Chriſt as a moſt pernicious and hurtfull thing, yet we which have taſted how friendly the Lord is, cannot but rejoyce in this perſecution as touching our ſelves; inaſmuch as the cauſe for the which we ſuffer is the Lords cauſe and not ours, at whoſe hand if we endure to the end, we ſhall receive, through his liberall promiſe in Chriſt, not onely a great reward in heaven, but alſo the kingdome of heaven it ſelf, and alſo in the mean ſeaſon be ſure to be defended and cared for, ſo that we ſhall lack no neceſſarie things, neither a haire of our heads ſhall periſh without his knowledge. Oh what is he that would miſtruſt, or not gladly ſerve ſo loving a Father? O how unhappie are they that forſake him and put their truſt in man? But how bleſſed are they that for his love and for his holy words ſake, in theſe troubleſome dayes do commit their ſouls and bodies into his hands with well doing, counting it greater happineſſe and riches to ſuffer rebuke with Chriſt and his Church, then to enjoy the pleaſures of this life for a little ſhort ſeaſon? This croſſe that we now beare hath been common to all the faithfull from Abel hitherto, and ſhall be to the end, becauſe the devill, having great wrath againſt God and his Chriſt, cannot abide that he ſhould for his manifold mercies be lauded and magnified, and Chriſt to be taken and beleeved upon for our onely ſufficient Redeemer, Saviour and Advocate: and therefore becauſe we will not deny Chriſt, nor diſſemble with our faith, but openly proteſt and profeſſe the ſame before the world, he ſeeketh by all means to ſtir up his wicked members, to perſecute and kill the bodies of the true Chriſtians; as ſaint John ſaith, The Devill ſhall caſt ſome of you into priſon. And David ſaith, I beleeved, and therefore have I ſpoken, but I was ſore troubled. This notwithſtanding, go forward deare brethren, as ye have begun, to fight the Lords battell, conſidering Chriſt the Captain of your war, who will both fight for you, give you victory, & alſo highly reward your pains. Conſider to your comfort the notable and chiefe ſhepherds and ſouldiers of Chriſt, which are gone before us in theſe dayes, I meane thoſe learned and godly Biſhops, Doctors and other Miniſters of Gods word; whoſe faith and examples we that be inferiors ought to follow, as ſaint Paul ſaith; Remember them that have declared unto you the word of God, the end of whoſe converſation ſee that ye look upon, and follow their faith. The grace and bleſſing of God, with the miniſtery of his holy Angels, be with you for ever, Amen. All my priſon fellows greet you.

Luke 1.

THe ſame faith for the which Abraham was counted righteous, and Mary bleſſed, the Lord God increaſe and make ſtable in your hearts, my dear and faithfull brethren and ſiſters of London, for ever and ever, Amen.

Dearly beloved, be not troubled in this heat which is now come amongſt you to try you, as though ſome ſtrange thing had hapned unto you, but rejoyce in as much as ye are partakers of Chriſts paſſions, that when his glory appeareth, ye may be merrie and glad, &c. Out of theſe words of ſaint Peter, I gather moſt ſpecially theſe foure notes. Firſt, that perſecution happeneth to Chriſts Church for their triall, that is, for the probation and proofe of their faith. Which faith, like as it is known with God in the depth of our hearts, ſo will he have it made manifeſt to the whole world through perſecution; that ſo it may evidently appeare that he hath ſuch a Church and people upon earth, which ſo truſteth in him and feareth his holy name, that no kinde of perſecution, pains, nor death, ſhall be able to ſeparate them from the love of him. And thus was Abraham tried, and Job tempted, that their faith, which before lay hid almoſt in their hearts, might be made known to the whole world to be ſo ſtedfaſt and ſtrong, that neither the devill, naturall love, nor any other enemie could be able to bereave them thereof. Whereby alſo God was to be magnified, who hath tried his people by many tribulations, and alſo ſtandeth by them in the midſt of their troubles, to deliver them by life or death as he ſeeth beſt: like as he aſſiſted Lot, and delivered him out of his enemies hands: Joſeph out of the hands of his brethren and out of priſon: Paul from his enemies in Damaſco, and the Apoſtles out of the ſtocks and priſon.

Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have known what end the Lord made with him, for the Lord is very pitifull and mercifull. Alſo the Lord trieth us, to let us ſee our own hearts and thoughts, that no hypocriſie or ambition deceive us, and that the ſtrong in Chriſt may pray that he fall not, but endure to the end; and that thoſe that fall through fearfull infirmitie, might ſpeedily repent and riſe againe with Peter, and alſo that the weake ones might bewaile their weakneſſe, and crie with David, Pſal. 6. Of this opening of the heart by perſecution ſpake holy Simeon to Mary Chriſts mother when he ſaid, The Sword, that is, the croſſe of perſecution, ſhall pierce thy ſoul, that the thoughts of many hearts may be opened. For like as a King, that ſhould go to battell, is compelled to look in his coffers what treaſure he hath, and alſo what number and puiſſance of men and weapons he hath, ſo that if he himſelf be unready and unarmed to bicker with his enemie, he ſurceaſeth and taketh truce for a time: even ſo we by perſecutions have our hearts opened, that we may look therein to ſee what faith in Chriſt we have, and what ſtrength to withſtand the enemies, and to beare the croſſe, that if we be rich in theſe treaſures, we might rejoyce, and valiantly go to battell; or if we want theſe things, we might with all ſpeed call and cry upon him which giveth all good gifts to thoſe that aſke them. Item, the croſſe trieth the good people from the bad, the faithfull from the worldlings and hypocrites, and alſo cleanſeth and ſcoureth the faithfull hearts from all corruption and filthineſſe both of the fleſh and the ſpirit. And even as iron, except it be often ſcoured, will ſoone wax ruſtie: ſo except our ſinfull hearts and fleſh be often ſcoured with the whetſtone of the Croſſe, they will ſoone corrupt and overgrow with the ruſt of all filthineſſe and ſinne. And therefore it is meet and good for us (as the wiſe man ſaith, Syrach 2.) that as gold and ſilver is tried in the fire, ſo ſhould the hearts of acceptable men be tryed in the furnace of adverſitie. Abide the triall (deare friends) that ye may obtaine the crowne of life. Fight manfully in this the Lords cauſe, that ye may obtaine a glorious victorie here, and receive a great reward in Heaven hereafter.

As ye are called Chriſtians, and would be angrie to be called Jewes or Turkes, ſo declare your chriſtianity by following the ſteps of Chriſt, whoſe name ye beare; ſuffer with him and for his Goſpels ſake, rather then to deny him or to defile your faith and conſcience with falſe worſhipping of Romiſh religion.

Take up your Croſſe (my deare hearts) now when it is offered you, and goe up with Chriſt to Jeruſalem amongſt the Biſhops, Prieſts, and Rulers, if GOD call you thereto, and they will anone ſend you to Calveris: from whence (dying in the cauſe of the Goſpel, wherein our good Preachers and brethren have given their lives) your ſoules (I warrant you) through Chriſt Jeſus ſhall aſcend to God that gave them, and that body ſhall come after at the laſt day, and ſo ſhall ye dwell with the Lord for ever in unſpeakable joy and bliſſe. Oh bleſſed are they that ſuffer perſecution for righteouſneſſe ſake, as Chriſts people in this Jewiſh England now doth; for theirs is the Kingdome of Heaven. O my beloved, ſet your mindes on this Kingdome where Chriſt our head and King is; conſidering that as the brute beaſt looketh down-wards with the face towards the earth; ſo man is made contrariwiſe with his face looking upwards towards the heavens, becauſe his converſation ſhould be in heaven and heavenly things, and not upon the earth and earthly things, as Saint Paul ſaith, Coloſ. 3. Set your mindes on things which are above, where Chriſt is. And againe he ſaith, Phil. 3. Our converſation is in heaven, from whence we look for our Saviour, who will change our vile bodies, and make them like to his glorious body. Oh the glorious eſtate that we be called unto. The Lord preſerve us harmeleſſe to his eternall kingdome through Chriſt Jeſus our Lord, Amen.

The ſecond note. Perſecution no ſtrange thing in the Church.

The ſecond thing that I note in the foreſaid words of Peter, is, that he calleth perſecution no ſtrange thing. And truth it is: for which of the prophets were not perſecuted, with Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and ſome of them in the end cruelly killed for the truths ſake? Caine killed Abel, Iſaac was perſecuted of Iſmael, Jacob was hated of Eſau, Joſeph was priſoned and ſet in the ſtocks, the Prophet Eſay was cut in two with a Saw, Jeremie was ſtoned, Micheas was buffeted and fed with bread and water, Helias was ſore perſecuted, Eleazar, and the woman with her ſeven ſonnes were cruelly killed. What Chriſt and the Apoſtles ſuffered it is well knowne. So that by many tribulations (as Paul ſaith, Acts 14.) we muſt enter into the Kingdome of heaven. All the holy Prophets, Chriſt, and his Apoſtles ſuffered ſuch afflictions not for evill doing, but for preaching GODS word, for rebuking of the world of ſinne, and for their faith in Jeſus Chriſt.

3. Regum. 4. Regum. 2 Mac. 6. 7.

This is the ordinance of God (my friends) this is the high-way to heaven, by corporall death to eternall life; as Chriſt ſaith, Ioh. 5. He that heareth my words and beleeveth in him that ſent me, hath eternal life, and ſhal not come into judgement, but is eſcaped from death to life. Let us never feare death which is killed by Chriſt, but beleeve in him and live for ever, as Paul ſaith, Rom. 8. There is no damnation to them that are in Chriſt Jeſus, which walk not after the fleſh, but after the ſpirit. And againe Paul ſaith, 1 Cor. 15. Death where is thy ſting? Hell where is thy victorie? Thanks be to God which hath given us victory through Jeſus Chriſt.

Example of Gods Martyrs. John 10.

Beſides this, ye have ſeene and daily do ſee the bloud of your good Preachers and brethren, which hath been ſhed in the Goſpels cauſe in this ſinfull Sodome, this bloudie Jeruſalem, this unhappy Citie of London. Let not their bloud be forgotten, nor the bloud of your good Biſhop Ridley, who like a ſhepheard, to your comfort and example, hath given his life for his ſheep. Good S. Paul ſaith, Heb. 13. Remember them that have ſpoken to you the word of God, and look upon the end of their converſation, and follow their faith.

2. Pet. 2. 1 Tim. 4. 2 Tim. 3. Jude 1.

The Devill ever ſtirreth up falſe Teachers, as he hath done now over all England, as Peter, Paul, and Jude propheſied it ſhould be, to poyſon and kill our ſoules with the falſe doctrine. And where he faileth of his purpoſe that way, then moveth he his members to perſecute the ſilly carkaſſes of the Saints, becauſe they will not deny nor diſſemble their pure faith in our living Chriſt, and confeſſe a dead bready Chriſt, and honour the ſame as CHRIST God and Man, contrarie to Gods commandement, Exod. 10.

1 John. 5. 2 Cor. 10. Math. 4.

Where Satan could not bring Chriſt to fall down and worſhip him, he ſet the Phariſees to kill him.

This is the working of Satan, who knowing his owne juſt damnation, would all mankinde to be partakers with him of the ſame; ſuch a mortall hatred beareth he againſt God and his people. And therefore when this wicked tempter could not kill Chriſt, with ſubtill tentation to fall downe and worſhip him, then he ſtirred up his ſervants the biſhops, and Phariſees to kill his body, whereby notwithſtanding the Devill loſt his title and intereſt which he had to mans ſoule, and man by his precious paſſion and death was ranſomed from the Devill, death, and hell, to immortalitie and life everlaſting: and ſo when Satan thought to have wonne all in killing of Chriſt, he loſt all: and ſo ſhall he do in us if we abide conſtant and ſtrong in the faith of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt unto the end. God grant it for his mercies ſake in Chriſt. Bleſſed are all they that put their truſt in him, Amen.

James 4. Math. 16.

Wherefore (my hearty beloved brethren and ſiſters) be of good comfort through Jeſus Chriſt, for he that is in us is ſtronger then he that is in the world. Therefore draw ye neere to God, and he will draw neere to you. Reſiſt the Devill, and he will (as James ſaith) flee from you. Beware of the leaven of the Phariſees. Touch not pitch, leſt you be defiled therewith. Eate no ſwines fleſh, for it is againſt the law; I mean defile not your ſelves either inwardly or outwardly with this falſe and wicked religion of Antichriſt: for it is nothing elſe but pitch and ſwines fleſh. Beware of the Beaſts marke, leſt ye drinke of the cup of Gods wrath. If God have given you knowledge and faith, diſſemble not therewith. Deny not the knowne veritie before men, leſt Chriſt deny you before his Father. Come away from Babylon, as John biddeth you, Apoc. 18. and touch no uncleane thing, but ſeparate your ſelves from the company of the ungodly, as Paul commandeth you. Whatſoever you have done amiſſe heretofore, now repent ye and amend: for with the Lord there is mercy and plentious redemption, Pſalme 126.

Apoc. 13. 14. 2 Cor. 6.

The third note.

The third thing and note which I gather out of the foreſaid words of Peter, is this, that he ſaith, Rejoyce becauſe ye are partakers of Chriſts paſſion. Our ſufferings (my welbeloved) are Chriſts ſufferings, and that injurie that is done to us for his ſake, he reckoneth it to be done to himſelfe, as he ſaid to Saint Paul,

Act. 9.
Coloſſ. 1.
Matth. 6.
Phil. 3.
Gal. 6.

Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? Therefore we ought to rejoyce in our ſufferings, as Paul writeth, which we ſuffer with Chriſt and one with another, as Peter ſaith, and ſo to fulfill that which is behinde of the paſſions of Chriſt in our fleſh; which Chriſt hath, by his paſſion, fully redeemed and ſaved us in his owne perſon: howbeit his Elect muſt ſuffer with him and for him unto the worlds end, that he may be glorified in them, and they thereby corrected and cleanſed from ſinne in this world, and be made more meete Temples for the holy Ghoſt, and alſo obtaine a great reward in heaven for their ſuffering for righteouſneſſe ſake, according to his promiſe. And therefore I ſay (my brethren) rejoyce in the Lord alwaies, and againe I ſay rejoyce. Let us rejoyce in the Croſſe of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, whereby the world is crucified to us, and we to it.

The fourth note

Luke 6.

And why ſhould we ſo greatly rejoyce in the Croſſe of Chriſt, which we now ſuffer? Becauſe (ſaith Peter) when his glory appeareth, we may be merry and glad. And this is the fourth note that I gather out of his words above written. Wherein is ſet out the reward of ſuffering, not to be had in this world; but at his coming to judgement when we ſhall be raiſed againe: and then ſhall they that have ſowne in teares, reape in joy, as Chriſt ſaith, Bleſſed are they that weep here, for they ſhall laugh. Bleſſed are ye when men hate you, and thruſt you out of their companie, railing on you, and abhorring your name as an evill thing for the Son of mans ſake: rejoyce ye in that day and be glad, for your reward is great in heaven.

1 Cor. 2.
Heb. 12.
1 Pet. 1.
Phil. 3.
Iohn 14.
Matth. 10.
2 Cor. 8.

Wherefore (my dearely beloved) through the hope of this heavenly joy and reward, which he that cannot lie hath promiſed (which joy is ſo great that no eare hath heard, no eye hath ſeene, nor the heart can thinke, where we ſhall dwell for ever in the heavenly Citie, the celeſtiall Ieruſalem, in the preſence of God the Father, and Ieſus Chriſt our Mediator, as Paul ſaith, and in the company of innumerable Angels, and with the ſpirits and ſoules of all faithfull and juſt men) rejoyce and be glad: and ſeeing ye be called to ſo great glory, ſee that you make your election and vocation ſure by good works, and ſpecially by ſuffering adverſitie for the Goſpels ſake: for it is given us of God (ſaith Paul) not onely to beleeve in Chriſt, but alſo to ſuffer for his ſake. Continue in prayer, and pray for me that I may end my courſe with joy. Have brotherly love amongſt your ſelves, which is a token that ye be Chriſts Diſciples. Edifie and comfort one another in the word of the Lord, and the God of peace and love be with you alwaies. Amen. For your liberalitie and kindneſſe ſhewed upon the priſoners and afflicted people of God in this time of perſecution, the Lord will reward you when he cometh to reward every man according to their deeds, and will not leave a cup of cold water beſtowed upon his faithfull people unrewarded. God make you rich in all grace, that ye alwaies having ſufficient, may be rich unto all manner of good workes.

The grace of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, the love of God, and the fellowſhip of the holy Ghoſt, be with you alwaies. Amen.

Your brother now in bonds for the Goſpel, Tho. Whittle.

To my loving and faithfull brother, I. Careles, priſoner in the Kings Bench.

Another letter of T. Whittle.

THe ſame faith, for the which Abraham was accounted juſt, and Marie bleſſed, whereby alſo all juſt men live, the Lord God our loving Father increaſe and ſtabliſh in you and me, to the obtaining of eternall life in our alone and ſweet Saviour Ieſus Chriſt. Amen.

I cannot worthily and ſufficiently praiſe God (my heartily beloved brother) for the conſolation and joy that I have received by reaſon of your loving letters, repenting me much that I being ſo long ſo neere you, did not enterpriſe to ſtirre up familiaritie and communication betweene us by writing, to mutuall conſolation in Chriſt. For what is there upon earth wherein to rejoyce (where all things are tranſitorie and vaine, yea man himſelfe, reſpecting this life) but (as David ſaith, Pſal. 16.) the Saints that dwell upon the earth, and ſuch as excell in vertue? But here now I conſider, that if the fellowſhip, love, and joy of faithfull men and children of God being as we now be in double bondage, the body within clay wals, and the ſoule within theſe fraile earthly bodies, be ſo great and comfortable; how unſpeakable will theſe joyes be, when we ſhall be delivered from all corruption into the glorious libertie of the ſonnes of God? Where we ſhall be preſent together continually in our glorified bodies, beholding the face of our father preſently (whom now we ſee but in the glaſſe of faith) with his dear Sonne Chriſt our Redeemer and brother, and the bleſſed company of Angels and all faithfull ſaved ſoules.

The ſocietie of Saints.

Gods Saints ſuffered ſometimes to fall, but not finally to periſh.

Oh the incomparable good things and heavenly treaſures laid up for us in heaven by Chriſt Ieſus. For the obtaining whereof, we ought to ſet light by all temporall griefe and tranſitorie afflictions, ſo much the more, in that our good God is faithfull, and will not ſuffer us to be tempted above our ſtrength, and that namely in the end of our life, when the tree where it falleth, lyeth ſtill, as the Preacher ſaith, Eccleſ. 11. when every one, cauſa ſua dormit, & cauſa ſua reſurget: for elſe before the end he ſuffereth his ſometime to fall, but not finally to periſh: as Peter ſinked upon the ſea, but yet was not drowned; and ſinned grievouſly upon the land through infirmitie denying his Maſter, but yet found mercy: for the righteous falleth often times. And Chriſts holy Apoſtles are taught to ſay, Remitte nobis debita noſtra, Yet though the righteous fall, ſaith David, he ſhall not be caſt away, for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand. Oh the bottomleſſe mercie of God towards us miſerable ſinners. He vouchſafe to plant in my heart true repentance and faith, to the obtaining of remiſſion of all my ſinnes in the mercies of God, and merits of Chriſt his Sonne, and thereto I pray you ſay, Amen.

Oh my dearely beloved, it grieveth me to ſee the ſpoyle and havock that Saul maketh with the Congregation of Chriſt: but what remedy? This is Gods will and ordinance, that his people ſhall here both be puniſhed in the fleſh, and tryed in their faith: as it is written, Many are the troubles of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth them out of all: for by a ſtraite path and narrow doore muſt we enter. Whither? Into the joyfull Kingdome of heaven: therefore bleſſed are you, and others that ſuffer perſecution for Chriſts ſake, for the profeſſion of the ſame. Pray for me and my fellows (good brother) that we may fight a good fight, that we may keep the faith, and end our courſe with joyfull gladneſſe, for now the time of our deliverance is at hand. The Lord guide, defend, and keep us and you, and all his people in our journey, that we may ſafely through a ſhort death, paſſe to that long laſting life.

Farewell, my deare and loving brother and fellow-ſouldier in Chriſt; farewell, I ſay, in him: who receive our ſoules in peace when they ſhall depart from theſe tabernacles, and he grant us a ioyfull reſurrection, and a merry méeting at the laſt day, and continuall dwelling together in his eternall heavenly kingdome, through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord, Amen.

Yours with my poore prayer; other pleaſure can I doe you none,

Welfare of ſoule.
Welfare of body.

My deare and welbeloved brethren in Chriſt, M. Filles and Cutbert, I wiſh you all welfare of ſoule and body. Welfare to the ſoule, is repentance of ſinne, faithfull affiance in Chriſt Ieſus, and a godly life. Welfare to the body, is the health of the ſame, with all neceſſarie things for this bodily life. The ſoule of man is immortal, and therefore ought to be well kept, leſt immortalitie to ioy ſhould turne to immortalitie of ſorrow. As for the body be it never ſo well kept and much made of, yet ſhortly by nature will it periſh and decay: But thoſe that are ingrafted and incorporated into Chriſt by true faith, feeling the motion of Gods holy ſpirit as a pledge of their election and inheritance, exciting and ſtirring them not onely to ſeek heavenly things, but alſo to hate vice, and imbrace vertue, will not onely doe theſe things, but alſo if need require, will gladly take up their croſſe and follow their Captaine, their King, and their Saviour Ieſus Chriſt (as his poore afflicted Church of England now doth) againſt that falſe and Antichriſtian doctrine and religion now uſed, and ſpecially that blaſphemous Maſſe, wherein Chriſts ſupper and holy ordinance is altogether perverted and abuſed contrary to his inſtitution and to Pauls procéedings: ſo that that which they have in their Maſſe, is neither ſacrament of Chriſt, nor yet ſacrifice for ſinne, as the Prieſts falſly pretend. It is a ſacrament, that is, as Saint Auguſtine ſaith, a viſible ſigne of inviſible grace, when it is miniſtred to the Communicants according to Chriſts example, and as it was of late yeeres in this Realme. And as for ſacrifice, there is none to be made now for ſinne: for Chriſt with one ſacrifice hath perfected for ever thoſe that are ſanctified.

No ſacrifice of the maſſe is to be made for ſin.
Heb. 9.10.

Beware of falſe Religion, and mens vaine traditions, and ſerve God with reverence and godly feare according to the doctrine of his Goſpel, whereto cleave ye that ye may be bleſſed, though of wicked men ye be hated and accurſed. Rather drink of the cup of Chriſt with his church, then of the cup of that Roſe coloured whore of Babylon, which is full of abominations. Rather ſtrive ye to goe to heaven by the path which is ſtraite to fleſh and bloud, with the little flock, then to goe in the wide way, following the inticements of the world and the fleſh, which leadeth to damnation.

Luke 13.
Apoc. 18.

Like as Chriſt ſuffered in the fleſh, ſaith Saint Peter, ſo arme ye your ſelves with the ſame mind: for Chriſt ſuffered for us, leaving us example to follow his foot-ſteps. Bleſſed are they that ſuffer for his ſake, great is their reward in heaven. He that overcometh (ſaith Saint Iohn, Apoc. 2. 3.) ſhall eate of the tree of life; he ſhall have a crowne of life, and not be hurt of the ſecond death; he ſhall be cloathed with white aray, and not be put out of the book of life; yea, I will confeſſe his name, ſaith Chriſt, before my Father and before his Angels, and he ſhall be a pillar in the houſe of God, and ſit with me on my ſeate. And thus I bid you farewell, mine owne brethren and deare fellowes in Chriſt. Whoſe grace and peace be alway with you. Amen.

1 Pet. 4.3.

This world I doe forſake,
To Chriſt I me take,
And for his Goſpel ſake,
Patiently death I take.
My body to the duſt,
Now to returne it muſt:
My ſoule I know full well,
With my God it ſhall dwell.

Thomas Whittle.

Another letter of T. Whittle to a godly woman.

Oh my deare and loving ſiſter in Chriſt, be not diſmayed in this ſtorme of perſecution: for Paul calleth the Goſpel the word of the croſſe, becauſe it is never truly taught, but the croſſe and cruell perſecution immediately and neceſſarily doth follow the ſame, and therefore it is a manifeſt token of Gods truth and hath beene here, and is ſtill abroad, and that is the cauſe of the rage and cruelty of Satan againſt Chriſt and his members, which muſt be corrected for their ſinnes in this world: their faith muſt be tryed, that after tryall and patient ſuffering the faithfull may receive the crowne of glory. Feare not therefore, my welbeloved, but proceede in the knowledge and feare of God, and he will keepe you from all evill. Call upon his holy name, and he will ſtrengthen you and aſſiſt you in all your wayes: and if it pleaſe him to lay his croſſe upon you for his Goſpels ſake, refuſe it not, neither ſhake it off by unlawfull meanes, leſt you ſhould (as God forbid) finde a more grievous croſſe, and torment of conſcience, if you ſhould diſſemble and denie the knowne veritie, then is any perſecution or death of body. Oh how happy are they that ſuffer perſecution for righteouſneſſe ſake: their reward is great in heaven. The momentanie afflictions of this life are not worthy of the glory that ſhall be ſhewed upon us. Oh remember the godly women of the old Teſtament and new, which lived in Gods ſervice and feare, and therefore are now in bliſſe and commended for ever: and namely Iudith, Heſter, Abigael, the the mother of the ſeven ſonnes, Mary, Elizabeth, Suſanna, Lidia, and Phebe, and others. Set their examples before your eies, and feare nothing, for Satan is conquered by our Saviour Chriſt; ſinne is put to flight, and the gate of immortalitie and eternall life is ſet wide open; God grant we may enter therein through the doore Ieſus Chriſt, Amen.

To be ſtrong againſt ſatan, and not to feare perſecution.
Good counſell, not to forſake the Lord for perſecution.

The ſtory of M. Bartlet Greene, Gentleman and Lawyer, Martyr.

The ſtory of M. Bartlet Greene Gentleman and Martyr. January 27.
Bartlet Greene ſtudent at Oxford.
M. Greene converted by the Lectures of Pet. Martyr.

After the Martyrdome of Thomas Whittle, next followeth in order to ſpeake of Bartlet Gréen, who the next day after the foreſaid Whittle, was likewiſe condemned. This Greene was of a good houſe, and had ſuch parents, as both favoured learning, and were alſo willing to bring up this their childe in the ſame. Who after ſome entrance in other inferior ſchooles, was by them ſent unto the Univerſitie of Oxford; where through exerciſe and diligent ſtudy, he ſo profited, that within ſhort time he attained, as well to the knowledge of ſundry prophane Sciences, as alſo now in his laſt yéers, unto the godly underſtanding of Divinitie. Whereunto through ignorance (in which he was trained up from his youth) he was at the firſt an utter enemie, untill ſuch time as God of his mercy had opened his eies, by his often repairing unto the common Lectures of Peter Martyr, Reader of the Divinitie Lecture in the ſame Univerſitie: ſo that thereby (as by Gods inſtrument) he ſaw the true light of Chriſts Goſpel.

Iohn 4.

M. Green ſtudent in the Temple at London.

Whereof when he had once taſted, it became unto him as the fountaine of lively water, that our Saviour Chriſt ſpake of to the woman of Samaria, ſo as he never thirſted any more, but had a Well ſpringing unto everlaſting life. Inſomuch as when he was called by his friends from the Univerſitie, and was placed in the Temple at London, there to attaine to the knowledge of the common Laws of the Realme, he yet continued ſtill in his former ſtudy & earneſt profeſſion of the Goſpel; wherein alſo he did not a little profit. Howbeit (ſuch is the frailty of our corrupt nature, without the ſpeciall aſſiſtance of Gods holy ſpirit) through the continuall accompanying, & fellowſhip of ſuch worldly (I will not ſay too much youthfull) young Gentlemen, as are commonly in that and the like houſes, he became by little and little a compartner of their fond follies, and youthfull vanities, aſwell in his apparell as alſo in banquettings, and other ſuperfluous exceſſes: which he afterward (being again called by Gods mercifull correction) did ſore lament and bewaile, as appeareth by his owne teſtimonie notified, and left in a booke of a certaine friend of his, a little before his death, written with his own hand, in manner as followeth.

This did M. Bartlet Greene Write in M. Bartram Calthrops Booke.

A good note or leſſon for young Lawyers to marke & follow.

What lewd company doth.

TWo things have very much troubled me whileſt I was in the Temple, Pride and Gluttonie; which under the colour of glory and good fellowſhip, drew me almoſt from God. Againſt both there is one remedie, by prayer earneſt, and without ceaſing. And forſomuch as vaine glory is ſo ſubtle an adverſarie, that almoſt it woundeth deadly, ere ever a man can perceive himſelfe to be ſmitten, therefore we ought ſo much the rather by continnuall prayer, to labour for humbleneſſe of minde. Truly gluttonie beginneth under a charitable pretence of mutuall love and ſocietie, and hath in it moſt uncharitableneſſe. When we ſeeke to refreſh our bodies, that they may be the more apt to ſerve God, and performe our duties towards our neighbours, then ſtealeth it in as a privie theefe, and murdereth both body and ſoule, that now it is not apt to pray, or ſerve God, nor apt to ſtudy, or labour for our neighbours. Let us therefore watch and be ſober: For our adverſarie the Devill walketh about like a roaring Lion, ſeeking whom he may devoure. And remember what Solomon ſaith, Melior eſt patiens viro forti, & qui dominatur animo expugnatore urbium. i. A patient man is better then a ſtrong warriour, and he that conquereth his owne ſtomack, is better then he that conquereth townes and cities.

Bartlet Greene.

Animorum in fide unio, per charitatem aucta, firma eſt amicitia. Vale (mi Bartrame) & mei memineris, ut ſemper ſimilimi efficiamur. Vale, Apud novam Portam, 20. Januarii 1556. i. Agreement of mindes joyning in unitie of faith, and growing up in charitie, is true and ſtedfaſt amitie. Farewell (my Bartrame) and remember me, that ever we may be like together. Farewell at Newgate. Ian. 20. Anno 1556.

Set ſober love againſt haſty wrath.

Bartlet Greene.

Thus we ſee the fatherly kindneſſe of our moſt gracious and mercifull God, who never ſuffereth his elect children ſo to fal, that they lie ſtill in ſecuritie of ſin, but oftentimes quickneth them up by ſome ſuch means, as perhaps they thinke leaſt of, as he did here this his ſtrayed ſheeps. And now therefore to return to our hiſtory: for the better maintenance of himſelf in theſe his ſtudies, and other his affairs, he had a large exhibition of his Grandfather, M. Doctor Bartlet, who during the time of Greenes impriſonment made unto him large offers of great livings, if he would recant, and forſaking the truth, & Goſpel of Chriſt) come home againe to the Church and Synagogue of Rome. But thoſe his perſwaſions (the Lord be therefore praiſed) took ſmall effect in his faithfull heart, as the ſequel did declare. He was a man beloved of all men, except of the Papiſts, (who love none that love the truth) and ſo he well deſerved: for he was of a meek, humble, diſcreet, & moſt gentle behaviour to all. Injurious he was to none, beneficiall to many, eſpecially to thoſe that were of the houſhold of Faith; as appeareth amongſt other, by his friendly dealing with M. Chriſtopher Goodman, being at that preſent a poore exile beyond the Seas. With whom this Bartlet Greene (as well for his toward learning, as alſo for his ſober and godly behaviour) had often ſocietie in Oxford, in the daies of good King Edward: which now, notwithſtanding his friends miſerie and baniſhment, he did not lightly forget, and that turned as it chanced (not without the providence of Almightie God) to the great griefe of both; the one of heart, for the loſſe of his friend, and the other of body in ſuffering the cruell and murdering rage of Papiſts.

Large gifts offered M. Green by D. Bartlet to return to the church of Rome.

Friendſhip betweene Chriſtopher Goodman and M. Green.

Occaſion of apprehending of M. Greene came by letters intercepted.

The cauſe hereof was a letter which Greene did write unto the ſaid Goodman, containing as well the report of certaine demands or queſtions, which were caſt abroad in London (as appeareth hereafter in a letter of his owne penning, which he meant to have ſent unto Maſter Philpot, wherin he declareth his full uſage before the Biſhop of London and others) as alſo an anſwer to a queſtion made by the ſaid Chriſtopher Goodman, in a letter written unto him, in which he required to have the certaintie of the report which was ſpread amongſt them on the other ſide of the Seas, that the Queen was dead. Whereunto M. Green anſwered ſimply, and as the truth then was, that ſhe was not dead.

Theſe letters with many other, written to divers of the godly exiles, by their friends here in England, being delivered to a meſſenger to carrie over, came by the apprehenſion of the ſaid bearer, unto the hands of the King and Queenes Councell. Who at their convenient leaſure (which in thoſe daies by ſome of them was quickly found out for ſuch matters) peruſed the whole number of the ſaid letters, and amongſt them eſpied this letter of Maſter Greens, written unto his friend Chriſtopher Goodman: in the contents whereof (amongſt other newes and private matters) they found theſe words; the Queene is not yet dead. Which words were onely written as an anſwer, to certifie Maſter Goodman of the truth of his former demand. Howbeit (to ſome of the Councell) they ſeemed very hainous words, yea, treaſon they would have made them, if the Law would have ſuffered. Which when they could not doe (and being yet very loath to let any ſuch depart freely, whom they ſuſpected to be a favourer of the Goſpel) they then examined him upon his faith in religion, but upon what points, it is not certainly knowne.

M. Greene examined by the Councell of his faith.

Iohn Boner a ſtirrer of perſecution.

Nevertheleſſe (as it ſeemeth) his anſwers were ſuch, as little pleaſed them (eſpecially the annointed ſort) and therefore after they had detained him in priſon, as well in the Tower of London, as elſewhere, they ſent him at laſt unto Boner Biſhop of London, to be ordered according to his Eccleſiaſticall Law; as appeareth by their letters ſent unto the Biſhop, with the ſaid priſoner ner alſo: wherein it may appeare, that Sir Iohn Bourne (then Secretarie to the Queene) was a chiefe ſtirrer in ſuch caſes, yea and an entiſer of others of the Councell; who otherwiſe (if for feare they durſt) would haue béene content to haue let ſuch matters alone. The Lord forgiue them their weakneſſe (if it be his good pleaſure) and giue them true repentance, Amen.

A letter ſent unto Boner Biſhop of London, by the Queenes Councell, dated the 11. day of November 1555. but not delivered untill the 17. of the ſame moneth.

A letter from the Councell to Boner.

AFter our hearty commendations to your good Lordſhip, we ſend to the ſame herewith the body of one Bartlet Greene, who hath of good time remained in the Tower for his obſtinate ſtanding in matters againſt the Catholike religion, whom the King and Queenes Majeſties pleaſures are (becauſe he is of your Lordſhips Dioceſſe) ye ſhall cauſe to be ordered according to the lawes in ſuch caſes provided. Poſtſcript.

¶ I Sir Iohn Bourne will waite upon your Lordſhip, and ſignifie further the King and Queenes Majeſties pleaſure herein.

Now that ye may the better underſtand the certaintie of his handling, after this his coming unto Boners cuſtody, I haue thought it good to put forth his owne letter, containing at large the diſcourſe of the ſame. Which letter he wrote, and did meane to haue ſent unto Maſter Philpot, but was prevented, belike either by Philpots death, or elſe (and rather) by the wily watching of his Keeper: for it came (by what meanes I know not certainly) unto the Biſhops hands, and being delivered unto his Regiſter, was found in one of his bookes of record. The copy whereof here foloweth.

A letter of Bartlet Greene, written unto Iohn Philpot, containing beſides other particular matter betwixt him and Maſter Philpot, a briefe rehearſall of his handling, and certaine his conferences with Boner and others, at his firſt coming to the Biſhops.

THat which was wanting in talke (through my default) at your being here, I haue ſupplied by writing in your abſence, now at the length getting ſome opportunitie and leaſure. The 17. day of November, being brought hither by two of the clock at afternoone, I was preſented before my Lord of London and other two Biſhops, M. Deane, Maſter Roper, Maſter Welch, Doctor Harpſfield Archdeacon of London, and other two or thrée, all ſitting at one table. There were alſo preſent Doctor Dale, Maſter George Mordant, M. Dée. Then, after the Biſhop of London had read unto himſelfe the letter that came from the Councell, he ſpake with moe words, but (as I remember) to this effect; that the cauſe of their aſſembly was, to heare mine examination, whereunto he had authoritie by the Councell, and had provided M. Welch and another, whoſe name I know not (but well I remember, though he obtained it not, yet deſired he my Lord, that I might heare the Councels letters) to be there if any matters of the common law ſhould ariſe, to diſcuſſe them, he intreated my lord to determine all controverſies of Scriptures; and as for the civill law, he and Doctor Dale ſhould take on them.

M. Greene preſented before B. Boner.

M. Dee was yet under band of recogniſance for the good apearing and forth coming til Chriſtmas next after.

Wherefore he demanded of me the cauſe of mine impriſonment: I ſaid that the occaſion of mine apprehenſion was a letter which I wrote to one Chriſtopher Goodman, wherein (certifying him of ſuch newes as happened here) among the reſt, I wrote that there were certaine printed papers of queſtions ſcattered abroad. Whereupon, being ſuſpected to be privie unto the deviſing or publiſhing of the ſame, I was committed to the Fleet: but ſithence heard I nothing thereof, after the Commiſſioners had received my ſubmiſſion. The ſumme whereof was, that as I was ſure there neither could be true witneſſes, nor probable conjecture againſt me in that behalfe; ſo refuſed I no puniſhment, if they of their conſciences would judge me privie to the deviſing, printing, or publiſhing of thoſe queſtions. But my Lord affirming that there was another cauſe of mine impriſonment ſithence, demanded if I had not after, ſince I was committed to the Fleet, ſpoken or written ſomewhat againſt the naturall preſence of Chriſt in the ſacrament of the altar.

M. Green committed firſt to the Fleet, and upon what occaſion.

Then deſired I his lordſhip to be good unto me, truſting that he would put me to anſwer to no new matters, except I were firſt diſcharged of the old. And when I ſtood long in that, Maſter Welch anſwered, that it was procured that I ſhould ſo doe, right well. For albeit I were impriſoned for treaſon, if during the time of endurance I had maintained hereſie, that were no ſufficient allegation againſt the Ordinarie; neither whether I were before him acquitted or condemned, ſhould it take away the former fault. Then my Lord affirming that I was not brought before him but for hereſie, and the other Gentleman ſaying that doubtleſſe I was diſcharged of my former matter; my deſire was, that I might be charged according to the order of the law, to heare my accuſers.

Then Doctor Chadſey was ſent for, who reported that in the preſence of Maſter Meſley and the Lieutenant of the Tower, I ſpake againſt the reall preſence and the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, and that I affirmed that their Church was the Church of Antichriſt.

D. Chadſey witneſſeth againſt Maſter Greene.

Is not this true, quoth my Lord? I ſaid, Yea. Will you continue therein, quoth he? Yea ſaid I. Wilt thou then maintaine it by learning, ſaid he? Therein, quoth I, I ſhould ſhew my ſelfe to haue little wit, knowing mine own youth and ignorance, if I would take on me to maintaine any controverſie againſt ſo many grave and learned men. But my conſcience was ſatisfied in the truth, which was ſufficient to my ſalvation.

Talke betweene M. Green and the Commiſſioners.

Roper. Conſcience? (quoth M. Roper) ſo ſhall every Iew and Turke be ſaved.

We had hereafter much talke to no purpoſe, and eſpecially on my part, who felt in my ſelfe, through cold and open ayre, much dulneſſe of wit and memory. At the length I was asked what conſcience was: and I ſaid, the certifying of the truth.

Maſter Welch. With that Maſter Welch roſe up, deſiring leave to talke with me alone. So he taking me aſide into another chamber, ſaid that he was ſory for my trouble, and would gladly ſee me at libertie: he marvelled, that I being a young man, would ſtand againſt all the learned men of the Realme, yea, and contrary to the whole determination of the Catholike Church from Chriſts time, in a matter wherein I could haue no great learning; I muſt not thinke mine owne wit better then all mens, but ſhould beleeve them that were learned. I promiſe you (quoth he) I have read all Peter Martyrs booke, and Cranmers, and all the reſt of them, and have conferred them with the contrary, as Roffenſis, and the Biſhop of Wincheſter, &c. and could not perceive but that there was one continuall truth, which from the beginning had beene maintained; and thoſe that at any time ſevered from this unitie, were anſwered, and anſwered againe. This was the ſumme of his tale, which lacked neither wit nor eloquence.

Anſwer of M. Greene to M. Welch.

Modeſtie of M. Green.

Maſter Green. Then ſpake I. Foraſmuch as it pleaſeth your Maſterſhip to uſe me ſo familiarly (for he ſo behaved himſelfe towards me, as though I had beene his equall) I ſhall open my minde freely unto you, deſiring you to take it in good worth. I conſider my youth, lack of wit and learning, which would God it were but a little under the opinion that ſome men have of me. But God is not bound to time, wit, or knowledge, but rather chooſeth infirma mundi, ut confunderet fortia, neither can men appoint bounds to Gods mercy: For, I will have compaſſion (ſaith he) on whom I will ſhew mercy. There is no reſpect of perſons with God, whether it be old or young, rich or poor, wiſe or fooliſh, Fiſher or Basket-maker. God giveth knowledge of his truth, through his free grace, to whom he liſt, James 1. Neither doe I thinke my ſelfe onely to have the truth, but ſtedfaſtly beleeve that Chriſt hath his ſpouſe the Catholike and univerſall Church, diſperſed in many Realmes where it pleaſeth him, Spiritus ubi vult ſpirat: no more is he addicted to any one place then to the perſon and quality of one man. Of this church I nothing doubt my ſelfe to be a member, truſting to be ſaved by the faith that is taught in the ſame. But how this Church is known is in a manner the end of all controverſie. And the true markes of Chriſts Church, is the true preaching of his word and miniſtring of his ſacraments. Theſe markes were ſealed by the Apoſtles, and confirmed by the ancient Fathers, til at the length they were, through the wickedneſſe of men & the Devill, ſore worn, and almoſt utterly taken away. But God be praiſed that he hath renued the print, that his truth may be knowne in many places. For my ſelf, I call God to witneſſe, I have no hope in mine own wit and learning, which is very ſmall; but I was perſwaded therto by him, as by an "inſtrument, that is excellent in all good learning and living. And God is my record, that chiefly I ſought it of him by continuall prayer with teares.

Rom. 9.

The ſpirit of God addicted neither to perſons nor place.

The end of all controverſies is to know the true Church.

Markes of the true Church.

" By this inſtrument he meaneth Peter Martyr.

M. Green ſeeking his knowledge of God with teares.

Furthermore, what I have done herein, it is not needfull for me to ſpeak: but one thing (I ſay) I wiſh of God with all my heart, that all men which are of contrary judgement, would ſeeke the truth in like manner. Now I am brought hither before a great many of Biſhops, and learned men, to be made a foole and a laughing ſtock, but I weigh it not a ruſh: for God knoweth that my whole ſtudie is to pleaſe him: Beſides that, I care not for mans pleaſure, or diſpleaſure.

M. Welch replyeth to M. Green.

M. Welch. No M. Green, quoth he, thinke not ſo uncharitably of any man, but judge rather that men labour for your ſoules health, as for their owne. But alaſſe, how will you condemne all our forefathers? Or how can you thinke your ſelfe to be of the Catholike Church, without any continuance, and contrary to the judgement of al learned men?

Green. Then ſaid I, Sir I have none authority to judge any man: neverthelesſe, I doubt not but that I am of the true Catholike Church, howſoever our learned men here judge of me.

Welch. Why then, ſaid he, do you ſuppoſe your owne wit and learning better then all theirs? if you do not give credit only to them, other learned men ſhall reſort unto you, that ſhall perſwade you by the Scriptures and Doctors.

Green. Sir, quoth I, God knoweth that I refuſe not to learne of any childe, but I would imbrace the truth from the mouth of a naturall foole, in any thing wherein I am ignorant, and that in all things, ſaving my faith: But concerning the truth, wherein I am throughly perſwaded, I cannot ſubmit my ſelfe to learn, unleſſe it be, as your Maſterſhip ſaid, that I peruſed the books on both ſides. For ſo might I make my ſelfe and indifferent judge; otherwiſe I may be ſeduced.

And here we fell out againe in a long talke of the Church, wherein his learning and wit was much above mine: but in the end I told him I was perſwaded, and that he did but loſe his labour.

Welch. Why then (quoth he) what ſhall I report to my Lord?

Green. Even as pleaſeth you, quoth I, or elſe you may ſay that I would be glad to learn, if I had bookes on both ſides. So he going in, the Biſhops (even then riſen, and ready to depart) asked how he liked me? He anſwered, In faith my Lord, he will be glad to learne. Which words when they were taken, leſt they ſhould miſtake his meaning and mine, I ſaid, yea my Lord, ſo that I may have bookes on both ſides, as Calvin, and my Lord of Canterburies bookes, and ſuch other. Well, quoth my Lord, I will ſatisfie thy minde therein alſo; and they all were in great hope, that ſhortly I ſhould become a good Catholike as they call it.

" Where Philpot was, he meaneth, to whom he wrote this letter.

Then was I brought into my Lords inner Chamber (" where you were) and there was put in a Chamber with Maſter Dee, who intreated me very friendly. That night I ſupped at my Lords table, and lay with M. Dee. in the chamber you did ſee. On the morrow I was ſerved at dinner from my Lords table, and at night did eate in the Hall with his Gentlemen; where I have been placed ever ſithence, and fared wonderfull well. Yea to ſay the truth, I had my liberty within the bounds of his Lordſhips houſe: for my lodging and fare, ſcarce have I beene at any time abroad in better caſe ſo long together, and have found ſo much gentleneſſe of my Lord, and his Chaplaines, and other ſervants, that I ſhould eaſily have forgotten that I was in priſon, were it not that this great cheere was often powdred with unſavory ſauces of examinations, exhortations, poſings, and diſputations.

Friendly entertainment of M. Green in B. Boners houſe for a time.

M. Green had in private examination, before the Biſhop.

For ſhortly after ſupper the firſt Munday at night, I was had into my Lords bed-chamber, and there he would know of me how I came firſt into theſe hereſies: I ſaid I was perſwaded thereto by the Scriptures, and authorities of the Doctors, alledged by Peter Martyr in his Lectures upon the eleventh Chapter of the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, whiles he intreated there on that place De cœna Domini, by the ſpace of a moneth together. But then my Lord inforced the plainneſſe of Chriſts words, and his Almightie power, demanding of me, what reaſon ſhould move me from the literall ſenſe of the words: but I having no luſt to thoſe matters, would have alledged that there were bookes ſufficient of that matter, as Peter Martyr, Cranmer, and Decolampadius: neverthelesſe when this ſhift would not ſerve, but I was conſtrained to ſay ſomewhat, I ſaid I was moved from the literall ſenſe by the manner of ſpeaking, by the circumſtance, and by conference of other places of the Scriptures. It is evident that Chriſt took bread, and that he ſhewed them (they ſeeing it) bread, which he affirmed to be his body.

M. Green urged with the literall ſenſe of the words (this is my body.)

Cauſes moving M. Green from the literall ſenſe of the words aforeſaid.

Argument.

Chriſt affirmed that bread was his body.

But that affirmation taken literally, can by no meanes be true.

Ergo, the words, if they be taken according to the letter, cannot be true.

Why the words of Chriſt of his body muſt be taken ſpiritually. Argument.

For this predication, Panis eſt corpus Chriſti, or corpus Chriſti eſt panis, is neither identica nor accidentalis, nor eſſentialis prædicatio. Wherefore of neceſſitie I muſt ſay it was ſpoken in the like ſenſe, as Chriſt was a doore, a vine, and a way. Neither can it ſerve to ſay; that it was not of bread that he affirmed to be his body, and that for two cauſes.

For whatſoever he ſhewed, that was bread; for nought elſe was ſeen.

But that which he ſhewed he affirmed to be his bodie:

Ergo, he affirmed of bread that it was his bodie.

The ſecond reaſon is; for that it was not changed before, ſeeing benedixit, is gratias egit, or elſe Chriſt affirmed no true propoſition, and you are without authoritie.

In the end of this letter, there were noted theſe ſentences following, collected for confirmation of his former aſſertions, videlicet, Reaſons moving M. Greene to take the words ſpiritually, not literally.

Eadem locutio poculi, i. The ſame phraſe is uſed and ſpoken upon the cup.

Dicitur poſtea panis. It is called bread in the ſame place afterward.

Eadem ratione rejecero corpus, qua tu panem, i. By the ſame reaſon as it may be denied to be bread, it may be denied to be the body.

Aſcendit in cœlum, i. His bodie aſcended into heaven.

Corpore nobis factus eſt ſimilis in omnibus poſt nativitatem. At noſtrum corpus non poteſt eſſe in duobus locis: Ergo, &c. In body he was like to us in all things after his nativitie (ſin excepted.) Seeing then our bodie cannot be in two places at once: Ergo, neither his.

Diſcipuli non ſtupebant, &c. His diſciples took it as no miracle nor wonder.

The laſt examination and condemnation of Maſter Greene.

The laſt examination of M. Green.

Thus (as it ſeemeth) for this time they left off. But not long after the Biſhop perceiving Greenes learning and conſtancie to be ſuch, as neither he, nor any of his Doctors and Chaplaines could by the Scriptures refell, began then to object and put in practice his chief and ſtrongeſt argument againſt him; which was the rigour of the Law, and crueltie of execution: an argument I enſure you, which without the ſpeciall grace of our GOD, to fleſh is importable. And therefore uſing Law as a cloak of his tyrannie, the 28. day of November, the ſaid Biſhop examined him upon certain points of Chriſtian Religion. Whereunto when he had anſwered, the Biſhop appointed the Regiſter (as their moſt common manner is) to draw thereout an order of confeſſion. Which being afterwards read unto Greene, was alſo ſubſcribed by him, as a confirmation of his former aſſertions: The tenour whereof here enſueth.

The confeſſion and ſaying of Bartlet Greene.

A draught of M. Greens confeſſion, gathered by the Biſhops Regiſter.

Bartlet Greene borne in the Citie of London, in the Pariſh of Baſſingſhall of the Dioceſſe of London, and of the age of 25. yeers, being examined in the Biſhops palace, the 27. day of November, Anno 1555. upon certain Articles, anſwered as followeth. Videlicet, that neither in the time of King Edward, after the Maſſe by him was put down, neither in the time of Queene Marie after the Maſſe was reſtored again, he hath heard any Maſſe at all; but he ſaith that in the reigne of the ſaid Queenes Majeſtie he the ſaid Bartlet, two times, to wit, at two Eaſter tides or dayes, in the chamber of John Pulline, one of the Preachers in King Edwards time, within the Pariſh of Saint Michaels Cornhill, of the Dioceſſe of London, did receive the Communion with the ſaid Pulline and Chriſtopher Goodman, ſometime Reader of the Divinitie Lecture in Oxford, now gone beyond the ſea; and the ſecond time with the ſaid Pulline and with one Kimneger, maſter of Art of Magdalen Colledge in Oxford: and this Examinate alſo ſaith, that at both the ſaid Communions he, and the other before named, did take and receive bread and wine, which bread and wine he called ſacramentall bread, and ſacramentall wine, which he ſaith were uſed there by them, Pulline onely reading the words of the inſtitution, expreſſed in the book of Communion.

Ex Regiſt.

Tranſubſtantiation denied.

In which receiving and uſing, this Examinate ſaith, that the other aforenamed did receive the ſacrament of the Lords Supper, and that they received materiall bread and materiall wine, no ſubſtance thereof changed, and ſo no reall preſence of the bodie and blood of Chriſt there being, but onely grace added thereto. And further, this Examinate ſaith, that he had heretofore, during the reigne of the Queens Majeſtie aforeſaid, refuſed, and ſo now doth refuſe to come and heare Maſſe, and to receive the Sacrament of the Altar, as they are now uſed and miniſtred in this Church of England, becauſe he ſaith that concerning the Maſſe, he cannot be perſwaded in his conſcience, that the ſacrifice pretended to be in the ſame, is agreeable to Gods word, or maintainable by the ſame; and that without deadly offence he cannot worſhip the bodie and blood of Chriſt, that is pretended to be there. And as concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, this Examinate ſaith, that he heretofore during the ſaid reigne hath refuſed, and now doth refuſe to receive the ſame, as is now uſed in this Church of England, becauſe it is not uſed according to the inſtitution of Chriſt, but both in a ſtrange tongue, and alſo not miniſtred in both kindes; and beſides that, contrary to Gods word it is there taught, that the thing there miniſtred is to be adored, as the reall and true bodie of Chriſt. And furthermore this Examinate ſaith, that during the ſaid reigne he hath not been confeſſed to the Prieſt, nor received abſolution at his hands, becauſe he is not bound by Gods words to make auricular confeſſion.

M. Green refuſing to hear Maſſe.

Sacrifice of the maſſe not maintainable by Gods word.

M. Green againſt the ſacrament of the altar.

Auricular confeſſion refuſed.

Bartlet Greene.

Many other conferences and publike examinations they brought him unto. But in the end (ſeeing his ſtedfaſtneſſe of faith to be ſuch, as againſt the which neither their threatnings, nor yet their flattering promiſes could prevail) the 15. day of Januarie the Biſhop cauſed him with the reſt above named, to be brought into the Conſiſtorie in Pauls; where being ſet in his Judgement ſeat, accompanied with Fecknam, then Deane of the ſame Church, and other his Chaplaines, after he had condemned the other ſix, he then calling for Bartlet Greene, began with theſe, or the like words:

M. Green with the other ſix martyrs brought to the conſiſtory.

Honourable audience, I thinke it beſt to open unto you the converſation of this man, called Bartlet Green. And becauſe you ſhall not charge me, that I go about to ſeek any mans blood, here you ſhall heare the Councels letters, which they ſent with him unto me. The effect whereof is; that whereas he had been of long time in the Tower of London for hereſie, they have now ſent him unto me to be ordered, according to the laws therefore provided. And now to thee Bartlet Greene I propoſe theſe nine Articles. Then he

B. Boners words to the audience.

Nine articles put to maſter Green.

he read the articles above mentioned, which were generally objected to all theſe ſeven priſoners, to wit, Thomas Whittle, John Tudſon, John Went, Thomas Brown, Iſabel Foſter, Joan Laſhford, Bartlet Green.

M. Green not ſuffered to anſwer to the articles.

But when maſter Green would have anſwered them particularly, he was put to ſilence, with promiſe that he ſhould have time to anſwer ſufficiently, and therefore the Biſhop proceeding ſaid, that when Green came firſt to his houſe, he deſired to have the books of the ancient Doctors of the Church to reade, which he ſaid he granted him.

Doctors read with indifferent judgement, make more againſt the Papiſts, then with them.

Whereunto Green anſwered and ſaid, that if the Doctors were with indifferent judgement weighed, they made more a great deal with him, then they did with them.

Feck. Upon which words Fecknam, Deane of Pauls, ſtood up, and marvelling why he ſaid ſo, asked him if he would be content to ſtand to the judgement of the Doctors.

Green. Green then ſaid, that he was content to ſtand to the Doctors judgement.

Chryſoſt. ad pop. Antioch.

Feck. I will then propound unto you (quoth Fecknam) the Doctors, and interpret them your ſelf. So he alledged a place of Chryſoſtome, Ad popul. Antioch. Which was this, Elias aſcendens melotem ſuum poſt ſe reliquit: Chriſtus vero aſcendens carnem ſuam aſſumpſit, & eandem poſt ſe reliquit, i. Elias going up, left his cloke behinde him: but Chriſt aſcending up took his fleſh, and alſo left it behinde him. And he demanded Green, how he underſtood the place.

Chryſoſt. in 1. Cor. 10.

Green. Then Green prayed him that he would conferre the Doctors ſayings together, and therefore alledged the ſame Doctor again, writing upon the 1. Cor. 10. An non eſt panis quem nos benedicimus, communicatio corporis Domini? Nonne eſt calix, &c. i. Is not the bread which we bleſſe, the communication of the Lords bodie? Whereby he proved that this Doctor called this Sacrament but a ſigne of the Lords body. Many other words of probation and deniall were betwixt them.

Feck. At laſt Fecknam demanded of him, how long he had been of this opinion? For M. Green (ſaid he) you confeſſed once to me, that when you were at Oxford at ſchool, you were called the rankeſt Papiſt in that houſe, and being compelled to go to the Lecture of Peter Martyr, you were converted from your old doctrine.

Green. And Green confeſſed the ſame.

M. Green firſt a rank Papiſt. Untrue report of P. Martyr.

Feck. Then again he ſaid, that Green told him that the ſaid Peter Martyr was a Papiſt in his firſt coming to Oxford. Whereupon he made an exclamation, and prayed the people to conſider how vain his doctrine that he profeſſed was, which was grounded upon one man, and that upon ſo unconſtant a man as Peter Martyr, which perceiving the wicked intent of the Councell, was content to pleaſe them, and forſake the true and Catholique faith.

Peter Martyr firſt turned from Popery to the truth by prayer and reading the Doctors.

Green. Green ſaid that he grounded not his faith upon Martyr, nor any other, nor did beleeve ſo becauſe Martyr beleeved the ſame; but becauſe that he had heard the Scriptures, and the Doctors of the Church truly and wholeſomely expounded by him; neither had he any regard of the man, but of the word which he ſpake. And further he ſaid, that he heard the ſaid maſter Peter ſay often, that he had not as yet, while he was a Papiſt, read Chryſoſtome upon the tenth to the Corinths, nor many other places of the Doctors: but when he had read them, and well conſidered them, he was content to yeeld to the Doctors, having firſt humbled himſelfe in prayer, deſiring God to illuminate him, and bring him to the true underſtanding of the Scripture. Which thing (ſaid Green) if you my Lord would do, I do not doubt, but God would open your eyes, and ſhew you his truth, no more then I do doubt his words be true that ſaith; Aſke, and it ſhall be given to you; knock, and it ſhall be opened unto you, &c.

Feck. Then Fckknam asked him, what he thought of this Article; Sanctam Eccleſiam Catholicam.

One holy Catholike church.

Green. And Green anſwered, that he did beleeve one holy and univerſall Church throughout all the world.

Feck. Then Fecknam ſaid, that he would faine have a ſure marke and token, whereby he might know this Church; and therefore he prayed Green to define unto him this Church.

True marks of the Church.

Green. Green anſwered, that this Church did agree in veritie of the true doctrine of Chriſt, and was known by the true adminiſtration of his Sacraments.

Diſagreement noted amongſt profeſſors of the Goſpel by Fecknam.

Feck. Whereupon Fecknam ſaid, that he would prove the Church whereof he was, to be never agreeing in doctrine, but alwayes to have been in controverſie in their religion. For (ſaid he) Luther and Zuinglius could never agree in their writings or ſayings, nor Oecolampadius with Caroloſtadius, nor Caroloſtadius with either Zuinglius or Luther, &c. for Luther writing upon the ſacrament of the altar, ſaid; that in hoc pane, vel ſub hoc pane corpus Domini accipimus. Zuinglius controlling him, ſaid; Sub ſigno panis corpus Domini accipimus. And the other controlled him in like caſe.

The goſpellers in words ſeem to diſſent, but in effect do agree with the word.

Green. Then M. Green proved their opinions of the Sacrament to be one in effect, being rightly weighed: and though their words did not ſound all one, yet they meant one thing; and their opinions were all one, as he proved by divers other examples.

Fecknam. Then Fecknam deſired him that he would not ſo wilfully caſt himſelf away, but to be rather conformable to reaſon, and that my Lord Biſhop there preſent would be good unto him, and would grant him reſpite (if he would demand it) for a fortnight or three weeks, and that he ſhould chuſe any learned man whom he would, and ſhould go with him home to his houſe, and that he whom he would chuſe would willingly take the paines to read and conferre the Doctors with him, and open the Doctors mindes and meanings unto him.

Boner forbiddeth M. Green to be called Maſter.

Boner. Then Boner ſaid, that he was proud and an obſtinate boy; and therefore he bade Fecknam to hold his peace, and to call him no more M. Green: for (ſaid he) you ought not to call an heretique maſter.

Note the blinde ignorance of Pendleton, as though the kingdome of Chriſt was not gotten at the death of Chriſt.

Pendleton. After this Doctor Pendleton alledged to him this text out of the 22. of Luke; Ex hoc non manducabo illud donec impleatur in regno Dei. Here (ſaid he) you muſt confeſſe your opinion to be falſe, elſe you muſt ſay that Chriſt was a lyar: for Chriſt ſaid; I will eat no more of this, while it be fulfilled in my Fathers kingdome. If Chriſt did eat no more the bread when he ſpake theſe words, then muſt you ſay that he was a lyar: for he did eat bread after with his Diſciples before he aſcended. But if you ſay he did eat his bodie then, and after but bread, it will not agree with the Scriptures, nor with good reaſon.

This B. belike was the biſhop of Wincheſter.

Green. Then Green anſwered and ſaid, that this was ſpoken by an anticipation, as one of their own Biſhops (which is now dead) did ſay.

Pendleton. Then Doctor Pendleton ſaid, that that was no ſufficient diſcharge, nor no ſufficient anſwer for him in this caſe; for (ſaid he) it is well known that the Biſhop was of a contrarie opinion to you, and that he died a good Chriſtian man.

Green. To which words Green ſaid, I do not call him to witneſſe in this caſe, as though he were a ſufficient man, to prove my ſaying to be true in this matter: but I do alledge him againſt you, as Paul did the Scripture, which he found graven in the altar of the Athenians, againſt themſelves, ignoto Deo.

These with many other words were between them which I do overpaſſe, becauſe it were too long to ſtand upon recitall of every thing. Laſt of all the Biſhop aſked him, if he would recant. He ſaid nay; he would not. But my Lord (ſaid he) in old time there were no men put to death for their conſcience, untill ſuch time as Biſhops found the means to make it death to beleeve contrarie to them; but excommunication (my Lord) was the greateſt penalty which men had for their conſcience; yea, inſomuch that S. Auguſtine wrote, and commanded that no man ſhould be put to death for his opinion.

In the old time excommunication was the greateſt penalty in matters of faith and conſcience.

Boner. Then Boner ſaid, that when St. Auguſtine ſaw what inconveniences followed of that commandement, he wrote again to the temporall Rulers, commanding them to puniſh their bodies alſo.

Green. But ſaid Green, he bad not put them to death.

Bon. He bad puniſh them, quoth Boner.

Green. Yea, ſaid Green, but not put them to death.

Boner. That they ſhould be puniſhed, quoth Boner again.

This talk ended, he aſked Green if he would recant, and return to their Romiſh mother. Which when he denied, the Biſhop pronounced the ſentence definitive againſt him, and ſo committed him to the Sheriffes of London, who cauſed him to be carried to Newgate.

Sentence given againſt maſter Green.

And as he was going thither, there met with him two Gentlemen, being both his ſpeciall friends, minding belike to comfort this their perſecuted brother: but at their meeting, their loving and friendly hearts (not able any longer to hide themſelves) were manifeſted by the abundance of their pitifull tears. To whom, when Green ſaw them, he ſaid in theſe or like words; Ah my friends, is this your comfort you are come to give me, in this my occaſion of heavineſſe? Muſt I, who needed to have comfort miniſtred to me, become now a comforter of you? And thus declaring his moſt quiet and peaceable mind and conſcience, he cheerfully ſpake to them and others, untill he came to the priſon doore, into the which he joyfully entred, and there remained alwayes either in prayer (whereinto he much gave himſelf) or elſe in ſome other godly meditations and exerciſes, unto the 28. day of Januarie, when he with his other above mentioned brethren went moſt cheerfully unto the place of their torments, often repeating, as well by the way, as alſo at the ſtake, theſe Latine Verſes following.

The words of M. Green to his friends, by the way going to Newgate.

Chriſte Deus, ſine te ſpes eſt mihi nulla ſalutis:
Te duce vera ſequor, te duce falſa nego.

In Engliſh thus.

O Chriſt my God, ſure hope of health,
beſides thee have I none:
The truth I love, and falſhood hate,
by thee my guide alone.

Verſes of M. Green written in his friends book.

During the time of his impriſonment in Newgate, divers of his friends had acceſſe unto him, to whom he gave ſundrie godly exhortations; wherewith they were not onely well contented, but for better remembrance as well of the ſame his inſtructions, as alſo of his own good and godly perſon, they deſired him to write ſomewhat in their books, which requeſt he willingly granted, as in manner here enſueth.

Theſe Verſes were written in a book of
M. Huſſey of the Temple.

Behold thy ſelf by me,
ſuch one was I, as thou:
And thou in time ſhalt be,
even duſt as I am now.

Bartlet Green.

Theſe Verſes were alſo written in a book of maſter William Fleetwood, of the ſame houſe.

My reſting road is found,
vain hope and hap adew:
Love whom you liſt with change,
death ſhall me rid from you.

Bartlet Green.

Amongſt other divers and ſingular good vertues of this good man, ſpecially in him was to be noted ſuch a modeſt nature, ſo humbly thinking of himſelf, as in few men is to be found, ever dejecting himſelf under that was in him, and ever ſeeming to be leſſe then he was, ſo that nothing leſſe he could abide, then to hear of his praiſe or commendation; as well declareth not onely his letter written to maſter Philpot, wherein he doth earneſtly expoſtulate with him, for ſlandering him with praiſe of his wit and learning, and other manifold vertues of great excellencie; but alſo by his own ſpeech and anſwers in his examination, wherein he caſteth from him all knowledge of learning and cunning, when notwithſtanding he had more in him, then to any mans eyes did appeare.

The ſingular modeſtie and humble nature of M. Green.

So great and admirable was this gift of modeſtie grafted in the nature of him, ſo farre abhorring from all pride and arrogancie, that as he could not abide any thing that was ſpoken to his advancement or praiſe; ſo neither did there appeare in him any ſhew or bragge in thoſe things wherein he might juſtly glory, which were his puniſhments and ſufferings for the cauſe and quarrell of Chriſt. For when he was beaten and ſcourged with rods by Biſhop Boner (which ſcarce any man would beleeve, nor I neither, but that I heard it of him, which heard it out of his mouth) and he greatly rejoyced in the ſame, yet his ſhamefaſt modeſtie was ſuch, that never he would expreſſe any mention thereof, leſt he ſhould ſeeme to glory too much in himſelfe, ſave that onely he opened the ſame to one maſter Cotton of the Temple a friend of his, a little before his death.

Moreover, to his rare and maidenly modeſtie in him was alſo adjoyned the like nature of mercie and pitifull compaſſion; which affection though it ſeemeth to be little regarded of ſome, yet in my minde is there no other thing wrought in nature, wherein man reſembleth more truly the Image of the high majeſty of Almighty God, then this. And as in this reſpect of mercifull tenderneſſe, man onely excelleth all other beaſts; ſo almoſt no leſſe may this man ſeeme to paſſe many other men, whoſe cuſtomable propertie and exerciſe was to viſit the poore priſoners with him in priſon, both with bodily reliefe, and alſo with ſpirituall comfort: and finding many of them (I meane ſuch as were there for theft and other naughtie facts) verie penitent and ſorry for their evil demeanours, in hope of their amendment, did not onely by mouth, but alſo by his letters require, yea, as it were of dutie in love, did charge his friends to travell for their deliverances; ſuch was the pitie and charitable mercy of this godly and moſt true member of Chriſts Church, as appeareth by this letter here following.

To my very loving friends and Maſters, Maſter Goring, Maſter Ferneham, Maſter Fleetwood, Maſter Ruſſewel, Maſter Bel, Maſter Huſſey, Maſter Calthrop, Maſter Bowyer, and other my Maſters of the Temple, Bartlet Green wiſheth health of body and ſoul.

A letter of M. Bartlet Green to certain of his loving friends in the Temple. What true friendſhip is. True friendſhip is not meaſured by diſtance of place or of perſons.

VErie friends are they which are knit together with the knot of charitie; Charitie doth not decay, but increaſe in them that die faithfully: whereof it followeth, that though we be abſent in bodie, yet are we preſent in the ſpirit, coupled together with the unity of faith in the bond of peace, which is love. How is he worthy the name of a friend, that meaſureth his friendſhip with the diſtance of a place, or parting of perſons? If thy friend be out of ſight, is thy friendſhip ended? If he be gone into the countrey, wilt thou ceaſe to love him? If he be paſſed the ſeas, will you ſo forſake him? If he be carried into heaven, is charitie hindred thereby? On the one ſide we have the uſe of the Fathers from the Primitive Church, that gave thanks for their friends that died in the faith, to prove that charity died not with death. On the other ſide (ſaith Horace) Cœlum non animum mutant, qui trans mare currunt.

Love onely coupleth together. All other things fail, love onely indureth for ever.

What ſpeak I of Horace? Saith not S. Paul the ſame thing? For we are members of his bodie, of his fleſh, and of his blood, yea, we are members one of another. Is the hand or arme, foot or leg a member, when it is diſſevered from the bodie? How can we be members, except we be joyned together? What is the line that coupleth us, but love? When all things ſhall fail, love faileth never. Hope hath his end, when we get that he hoped for. Faith is finiſhed in heaven, love endureth for ever: Love (I ſay) that proceedeth of charity; for carnall love, when that which he loveth is loſt, doth periſh with the fleſh. Neither was that ever but fleſhly love, which by diſtance of place, or ſevering of bodies, is parted aſunder. If love be the end or ſum of the law, if heaven and earth ſhall periſh, yet one jot of Gods word ſhall not decay, why ſhould we think that love laſteth not for ever?

Love unfained never endeth.

I need not to write much to you my friends, neither can I have leiſure now that the Keepers are riſen: but this I ſay; If we keep Chriſts commandement in loving each other, as he loved us, then ſhould our love be everlaſting. This friendſhip Paul felt, when it moved him to ſay, that neither length nor breadth (meaning no diſtance of place) neither height nor depth ſhould ſever him from the love of Chriſt. Weigh well this place, and mete it with Pauls meaſures; ſo ſhall we finde that if our love be unfained, it can never be ended. Now may you ſay, Why writeſt thou this? certes to the end that if our friendſhip be ſtable, you may accompliſh this the laſt requeſt of your friend, and perform after my death the friendſhip we began in our life, that amitie may increaſe untill God make it perfect at our next meeting together.

The ſute of M. Green for the ſaving of certain poore priſoners in Newgate.

M. Fleetwood, I beſeech you remember Wittrance and Cook, two ſingular men amongſt common priſoners: M. Fernham and M. Bell, with M. Huſſey (as I hope) will diſpatch Palmer and Richardſon with his companions. I pray you M. Palmer think on J. Grove, an honeſt poore man, Traiford and Rice Apprice his accomplices: My Couſin Thomas Witton (a Scrivener in Lombardſtreet) hath promiſt to further their delivery: at the leaſt he can inſtruct you which way to work. I doubt not but that M. Bowyer will labour for the good wife Cooper (for ſhe is worthy to be holpen) and Berard the Frenchman. There be alſo divers other well diſpoſed men, whoſe deliverance if ye will not labour for, yet I humbly beſeech you to ſeek their relief, as you ſhall ſee cauſe: namely, of Henry Apprice, Lancelet, Hobbes, Lother, Homes, Carre, and Bockingham, a young man of goodly gifts in wit and learning, and (ſaving that he is ſomewhat wilde) likely to do well hereafter. There be alſo two women, Coningham and Alice Alexander that may prove honeſt. For theſe and all other poore priſoners, here I make this my humble ſute and prayer to you all my Maſters, and eſpeciall good friends, beſeeching you of all bonds of amitie, for the precious blood of Jeſus Chriſt, in the bowels of mercie, to tender the cauſes of miſerable captives; help to clothe Chriſt, viſit the afflicted, comfort the ſorrowfull, and relieve the needie. The verie God of peace guide your hearts to have mercie on the poore, and love faithfully together, Amen. This preſent Munday, when I look to die, and live for ever.

Yours as ever, Bartlet Green.

Another letter of Bartlet Green to Miſtreſſe Eliſabeth Clark.

VVOuld God (if it were his pleaſure) that with this letter I might ſend you my heart and minde, and whatſoever there is in me elſe, that pertaineth to God: So ſhould I think it the beſt meſſage, and happieſt letter that ever I could write. But though I obtain not my deſire, yet ſhall I not ceaſe with continuall prayer to labour for you, deſiring Almighty God to increaſe that which he hath long ſince begun in you, of ſober life, and earneſt zeal towards his religion. In faith (as ſaith ſaint Paul) ſhe that is a true widow and friendleſſe, putteth her truſt in God, continuing day and night in ſupplication and prayer; but ſhe that liveth in pleaſure is dead, even yet alive. And verily a true widow is ſhe that hath married Chriſt, forſaking the vanities of the world, and luſt of the fleſh. For as the married woman careth how to love, pleaſe, and ſerve her huſband; ſo ought the widow to give all her heart and ſoul, thoughts and words, ſtudies and labours, faithfully to love God, vertuouſly to bring up her children and houſhold, and diligently to provide for the poore and oppreſſed.

1 Tim. 5. 1 Cor. 7. 1 Tim. 5.

Therefore S. Paul firſt inſtructeth a widow how to behave her ſelf, that is, Not to live in pleaſure, then to watch unto prayer, as the onely means to obtain all our deſires, ſtedfaſtly laying up all our truſt in God, as David right well ſaith; Firſt eſchew evil, then do good. Of Anna the praiſe was written, that ſhe never went out of the Temple, but ſerved God with faſting and prayer night and day; ſo well had ſhe eſpouſed Chriſt. Judith ware a ſmock of hair, continuing in faſting, and had good report of all men.

Pſal. 34. Luke 2. Iudg. 8.

The next care that belongeth to a widow, is, that ſhe bring up her children and houſhold godly, in the nurture and information of the Lord. Whereof S. Paul ſaith; If any have children or nephews, let them learn firſt to rule their own houſe godly, and to recompence their elders. The incontinency and covetouſneſſe of Phinees and Ophny, not corrected by Ely their father, provoked Gods vengeance upon him and all his kindred. The over tender love of Abſalom expelled David from his kingdome. The unrebuked ſins of Ammon incouraged Abſalom to ſlay his brother; moſt manifeſt examples againſt the parents, for the offences of their children.

Epheſ. 6. 1 Tim. 5. 1 Reg. 2. 2 Reg. 15. 1 Reg. 8.

Contrariwiſe, how greatly might Hannah rejoyce over Samuel her ſonne, whom ſhe had brought up in the houſe of the Lord? What thanks might might Tobias wife give for her ſon Toby? How happy was Solomon to be taught by the Prophet Nathan? But above all widows, thrice bleſſed was the happie mother of the ſeven ſons, that ſo had inſtructed them by the fear of God, that by no torments they would ſhrinke from the love of his truth?

1 Tim. 5.

Of the laſt part ſaint Paul ſheweth that a widow ſhould be choſen, If ſhe have nouriſhed her children, if ſhe have been liberall to ſtrangers, if ſhe have waſhed the ſaints feet, and if ſhe have miniſtred to them in adverſitie. Herein it is evident how earneſtly ſaint Paul would have widows bent towards the poore; for that (as though they onely had been therefore meet) he appointed onely widows to miniſter to the ſaints, and to gather for the poore. Which uſe alſo continued almoſt throughout the Primitive Church, that widows had the charge and gathering for the poore men and ſtrangers.

The office and exerciſe of chriſtian widows in the primitive Church.

Of your neighbours I need not to put you in remembrance, ſeeing you daily feed them with good Hoſpitalitie, by which meanes alſo many forreiners are of you relieved: but of the poore Almſ-houſes, and miſerable priſoners here in London, many lacking their libertie without cauſe, ſome under the colour of religion, ſome onely kept for fees, and ſome on private mens diſpleaſure. Alas that Chriſt ſo hungereth, and no man will feed him; is ſo ſore oppreſt with thirſt, and no man will give him drink; deſtitute of all lodging, and not relieved; naked, and not clothed; ſick, and not viſited; impriſoned, and not ſeene.

In times paſt men could beſtow large ſums of money on copes, veſtiments, and ornaments of the Church. Why rather follow we not "St. Ambroſes example, which ſold the ſame for the reliefe of the poore, or Chryſoſtomes commandement, which willed firſt to deck and garniſh the living Temple of God? But alas, ſuch is the wickedneſſe of theſe our laſt daies, that nothing moveth us; neither the pure doctrine, the godlineſſe of life, nor good examples of the ancient Fathers. If in any thing they erred, if they have written any thing that ſerveth for ſects and diſſention, that will their charitable children imbrace, publiſh and maintaine with ſword, fagot, and fire. But all in vain; they ſtrive againſt the ſtreame. For though in deſpite of the truth, by force of the oares of craftie perſwaſion, they may bring themſelves into the haven of hell: yet can they not make all men beleeve that the banks move whileſt the ſhip ſaileth, nor ever ſhall be able to turn the direct courſe of the ſtreame of Gods truth. Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt ſtrengthen you in all pure doctrine and upright living, and give you grace vertuouſly to bring up your clildren and family, and carefully to provide for the poore and oppreſſed. Amen. At Newgate the 20. of Januarrie. Anno 1556.

" St. Ambroſe took from the church, & gave to the poore, we take from the poore their tithes & impropriations, and give them to churches and miniſters, where is nothing but ſinging and idleneſſe.

Your aſſured, Bartlet Green.

Another certain writing of maſter Bartlet Green.

Another certain Writing of M. Bartlet Green.

Better is the day of death (ſaith Solomon) then the day of birth. Man that is born of a woman liveth but a ſhort time, and is repleniſhed with many miſeries; but happie are the dead that die in the Lord. Man of woman is born in travell, to live in miſerie; man through Chriſt doth die in joy, and live in felicitie. He is born to die, and dieth to live. Straight as he cometh into the world, with cries he uttereth his miſerable eſtate; ſtraight as he departeth, with ſongs he praiſeth God for ever. Scarce yet in his cradle, three deadly enemies aſſault him; after death no adverſarie may annoy him. Whileſt he is here, he diſpleaſeth GOD; when he is dead, he fulfilleth his will. In this life here he dieth through ſinne; in the life to come he liveth in righteouſneſſe. Through many tribulations in earth he is ſtill purged; with joy unſpeakable in heaven is he made pure for ever. Here he dieth every houre; there he liveth continually. Here is ſinne; there is righteouſneſſe. Here is time; there is eternity. Here is hatred; there is love. Here is pain; there is pleaſure. Here is miſerie; there is felicitie. Here is corruption; there is immortalitie. Here we ſee vanity; there ſhall we behold the majeſtie of God, with triumphant and unſpeakable joy in glory everlaſting. Seeke therefore the things that are above, where Chriſt ſitteth at the right hand of God the Father; unto whom, with the Sonne and the holy Ghoſt, be all honour and glory, world without end, Amen.

Yours in Chriſt, Bartlet Green.

Divers other letters and matters there were beſide which this ſervant of God did write, as namely certain notes and extracts in Latine out of the Doctors and other Authors for his memorie, whereby is declared how ſtudious he was in the ſearching and knowledge of the Law of GOD, although his profeſſion was the temporall Law. Where I would to God he were not among the Lawyers ſuch a Phenix, that he had very few or no fellows to flie with him, or to follow his ſteps. But GOD is to be praiſed, that although we read of few or none among that ſort that died as he did, yet good witneſſe do ſpring up daily of the ſame profeſſion, to ſuch towardneſſe and godly zeal, that ſome hope alreadie appeareth ſhortly to come to paſſe, that this godly Phenix ſhall not flie alone. Theſe foreſaid notes and gatherings of his out of the doctors were taken from him by Boner, being found about him, which was to him no little grief. He among the reſt was firſt apprehended, but laſt of them condemned, which was the fifteenth day of Januarie, and afterward burned with the other Martyrs, the 27. of the ſame moneth.

A commendation of Lawyers.

3. Thomas Brown, Martyr.

Ex Regiſt.
Tho. Brown Martyr.
January 27.
Tho. Brown preſented by the Conſtable of S. Brides.

Thomas Brown, born in the pariſh of Hiſton, within the Dioceſſe of Ely, came afterward to London, where he dwelled in the pariſh of ſaint Brides in Fleetſtreet, a married man, of the age of thirty ſeven yeers; who becauſe he came not to his Pariſh Church, was preſented by the Conſtable of the Pariſh to Boner. As touching whoſe articles, whereupon he was examined by the ſaid Boner, with his anſwers alſo annexed to the ſame, mention goeth before, as in the generall proceſſe of him and of the reſt may appeare. This Thomas Brown being had to Fulham, with the other there to be examined, was required upon Thurſday, being the 26. day of September, to come into the Chappell to heare Maſſe, which he refuſing to do, went into the Warren, there kneeled among the trees. For this he was greatly charged of the Biſhop, as for an hainous matter, becauſe he ſaid it was done in deſpite and contempt of their Maſſe; which ſeemed to the Biſhop and his Chaplains no ſmall offence. At length being produced to his laſt examination before the ſaid Biſhop the fifteenth day of January, there to hear ſentence definitive againſt him; firſt he was required with many fair words and gloſing promiſes to revoke his doctrine, to whom the foreſaid Biſhop ſpeaking theſe words, ſaid; Brown, ye have been before me many times and oft, and I have travelled with thee, to winne thee from thine errours; yet thou, and ſuch like, have and do report that I go about to ſeek thy blood, &c.

B. Boner charged to be a blood-ſucker.

To whom the ſaid Thomas Brown anſwered again; Yea, my Lord (ſaid he) indeed ye be a blood-ſucker, and I would I had as much blood as is water in the ſea, for you to ſuck.

The anſwer of Tho. Brown to B. Boner.

Boner then proceeding to the articles, when he had read them unto him again, as he had done divers times before, aſked him whether he was content and willing to relinquiſh thoſe his hereſies and erroneous opinions (as he called them) and return again unto the unitie of the Catholique faith. Whereunto he made anſwer again, ſaying, if they were hereſies, he would forſake them. They be hereſies (quoth the Biſhop.) How will ye prove it, ſaid Browne? for I will not go from mine anſwers, except you can prove them to be hereſies, which ye ſhall never do. For that which you call hereſie, is no hereſie. With that Boner not able, or elſe not diſpoſed to ſupply the part of a ſufficient teacher, in proving that which the other had denied by good authoritie and doctrine of the Scripture, went about with words and promiſe of pardon, to allure him to renounce thoſe his hereſies, as he called them, and to return unto the unity of his mother the Catholique Church, &c.

To whom the ſaid Thomas inferred again, as followeth; Prove it (ſaid he) to be hereſie, that I do hold and maintain, and I will turn to you. But you condemne me, becauſe I will not confeſſe and beleeve the bread in the Sacrament of the Altar (as you call it) to be the bodie of Chriſt, and therefore ye ſpill mine and ſuch like innocents blood, being the Queens true ſubjects, for which you ſhall anſwer, and that ſhortly.

Sentence read againſt Tho. Brown.

After this being ſpoken, Boner as he had done to the other before, read in writing the ſentence definitive againſt him. The copy and forme of which ſentence wherewith the papiſts were wont to condemne all the innocent Saints of Chriſt, is above expreſſed. And ſo this done he was committed to the Sheriffes to be had away, and burned the 27. day of the ſaid moneth of Ianuarie, conſtantly abiding with the other the Popes torments for the true confeſſion of his Chriſtian faith.

4. Iohn Tudſon, Martyr.

Iohn Tudſon, Martyr. Ianuary 27.

THe ſame day and time, when the foreſaid Thomas Brown with his fellows was condemned (as is above rehearſed) being the fifteenth day of Ianuarie, was alſo produced Iohn Tudſon, with the reſt of the ſaid companie, unto the like condemnation. This Iohn Tudſon was born in Ipſwich, in the County of Suffolke, after that apprentiſe in London, dwelling with one George Goodyeer of the pariſh of ſaint Marie Botulph, within the Dioceſſe of London, who being complained of to ſir Richard Cholmley and Doctor Storie, was by them ſent unto Boner Biſhop of London, and was divers times before him in examination.

Of theſe articles read before.

The conſtant perſiſting of Io. Tudſon.

The articles and interrogatories miniſtred unto him, as unto the reſt, before are ſpecified, with his anſwers alſo to the ſame annexed, &c. After this he was brought unto the open Conſiſtorie; where the ſaid bleſſed and true ſervant of the Lord Iohn Tudſon, appearing before the ſaid Biſhop and his complices, was moved with ſundry perſwaſions (as their manner is) to go from his opinion (which they named hereſie) and to perſiſt in the unity of the Church which they were of; but he, conſtantly perſiſting in the which he had received by the Preachers in King Edwards time, refuſed ſo to do, ſaying, there was no hereſie in his anſwers. For I, ſaid he, defie all hereſie. The Biſhop yet ſtill uſed his old accuſtomed perſwaſions to remove him, promiſing moreover all his offences and errours (as he called them) to be forgiven him, if he would return, &c. Then ſaid Tudſon, Tell me wherein I have offended, and I will return. Then ſaid the Biſhop, In your anſwers. No, ſaid Tudſon again, I have not therein offended; and ye (my Lord) pretend charity, but nothing thereof appeareth in your works. Thus after a few words the Biſhop did likewiſe promulgate againſt him ſentence of condemnation; which being read, the godly and conſtant Martyr was committed to the ſecular power, and ſo with much patience finiſhed this life with the other above named, the 27. day of Ianuary.

Sentence read againſt Iohn Tudſon.

5. Iohn Went, Martyr.

Iohn Went, Martyr. Ianuary 27.

IOhn Went born in Langham in Eſſex, within the Dioceſſe of London, of the age of 27. and a Shereman by occupation, firſt was examined (as partly is touched before) by Doctor Story upon the ſacrament of his Popiſh altar; and becauſe the poore man did not accord with him throughly in the reall preſence of the body and blood of Chriſt, the ſaid Story did ſend him up to Boner Biſhop of London. Who likewiſe, after divers examinations upon the articles aforeſaid in the Conſiſtory, attempted the like manner of perſwaſions with him, as he did to the other, to recant and return. To whom in few words the ſaid Went anſwered again, he would not, but that by the leave of God, he would ſtand firme and conſtant in that he had ſaid. And when the Biſhop yet notwithſtanding did ſtil urge & call upon him with words and faire gloſes, to give over himſelfe to their opinion, he could have no other anſwer of him but this; No, I ſay as I have ſaid, &c. Whereupon being condemned by the Biſhops ſentence, he was committed unto the Sheriffes (whom that ſhameleſſe ſhaveling at that time abuſed for his ſervile Butchers) and ſo brought to his martyrdome, which he with no leſſe conſtancie ſuffered to the end, with the reſt of that bleſſed ſociety of Martyrs above named.

Io. Went withſtandeth the Biſhops perſwaſions. Iohn Went condemned.

6. Iſabel Foſter, Martyr.

Iſabel Foſter Martyr. Ianuary 27.

VVIth theſe five perſons above recited and condemned, were alſo two women in the ſaid company condemned the ſame time, and likewiſe burned for the ſame cauſe; the one a wife, called Iſabel Foſter, the other a maid, named Ioan Warn, or otherwiſe, Laſhford.

Iſabel Foſter conſtant in confeſſing Chriſts Goſpel.

This foreſaid Iſabel was born in Graſeſtock in the Dioceſſe of Carlile, and afterwards married to one Iohn Foſter, Cutler, of the Pariſh of ſaint Brides in Fleetſtreet, being of the age of five and fifty yeers. She likewiſe for not coming unto the Church, being ſent unto Boner, and ſo impriſoned, was ſundrie times examined by the ſaid Biſhop, but never overcome, nor removed from the conſtant confeſſion of Chriſts Goſpel.

The words of Iſabel Foſter at her laſt examination.

At length, coming unto her finall examination before the Biſhop in the Conſiſtory the fifteenth day of the ſaid moneth of Ianuary, ſhe was moved again, whether ſhe would yet go from her former anſwers. Whereunto ſhe gave a reſolute anſwer in few words; I will not (ſaith ſhe) go from them by Gods grace; and thereunto did adhere, neither being caſt down by the menacing threats of the Biſhop, nor yet yeelding through his alluring inticements, promiſing both life and libertie, if ſhe would aſſociate her ſelfe in the unity of the Catholique Church. Whereunto ſhe ſaid again in this wiſe, that ſhe truſted ſhe was never out of the Catholique Church, &c. and ſo perſiſting in the ſame, continued conſtant till the ſentence tence definitive was pronounced, and then ſhe was committed by commandement of the Biſhop to the ſecular power, and ſo brought a few dayes after to the ſtake, the ſeven and twentieth day of the foreſaid moneth; where ſhe like a faithfull witneſſe of the Lords truth (with the other five aforeſaid) ended her troubles here, to finde a better reſt in the Kingdome of Chriſt our Saviour.

7. Ioane Laſhford, alias, Ioan Warne, Martyr.

Ioan Laſhford, alias Ioane Warne, martyr. January 27.

IN a certaine place of theſe Acts and Monuments heretofore, mention was made of one Elizabeth Warne, who with her huſband John Warne (as is aforeſaid) in the beginning of Queene Maries reigne, was apprehended in Bowe Churchyard for being there at a Communion; and both ſuffered for the ſame, firſt the man in the moneth of May, then the wife in July after; and now the daughter in the moneth of January followed her parents in the ſame martyrdome. Furthermore, in the ſame place following mention was made alſo of Doctor Story, who there (we ſaid) was ſomewhat neere unto the ſaid parties, either in kindred or alliance; albeit as I underſtand ſince of ſome, there was no kindred betweene them, but onely that ſhe was his ſervant. Yet notwithſtanding the ſaid Doctor Storie (as it is above ſpecified) before he was Commiſſioner, made interceſſion for the parties to Doctor Martin then Commiſſioner: but afterward being placed in Commiſſion himſelfe, he ſo farre forgat himſelfe and his old ſervant, that he became no ſmall procurer of their deaths. I will not here expoſtulate with the hard heart of that man, nor with his inconſtancie: who yet notwithſtanding, after he had brought them to death, was arreſted himſelfe for threeſcore pounds, charged with debt in their behalfe; which if it be true, it may thereby appeare that he was in ſome peece of kindred joyned or allied unto them. But leaving that perſon unto the good pleaſure of the Lord, let us returne unto that we have in hand.

D. Story firſt interceſſor for John Warne and his daughter, and afterward the chiefeſt perſecutor againſt them.

Ioane Laſhford daughter of Elizabeth Warne.

This Joane Laſhford, borne in the Pariſh of little Hallowes in Thames ſtreet, was the daughter of one Robert Laſhford Cutler, and of the foreſaid Elizabeth, who afterward was married to John Warne Upholſter, who (as is ſaid) was perſecuted for the Goſpel of God to the burning fire; and after him his wife; and after her, this Joan Laſhford her daughter; who, about the age of twenty yeeres, miniſtring to her father and mother in priſon, ſuſpected and knowne to be of the ſame doctrine and religion, was ſent to Boner Biſhop of London by Doctor Storie (as is above in her anſwers to the articles declared) and ſo committed to the Counter in the Poultrey, where ſhe remained the ſpace of five weekes, and from thence had to Newgate, where ſhe continued the ſpace of certaine moneths.

The daughter burned after the father & mother.

The confeſſion of Joane Laſhford before the Biſhop.

After that, remaining priſoner in the cuſtodie of the ſaid Boner, her confeſſion was, being examined, that the whole twelve moneth before and more, ſhe came unto no Popiſh Maſſe ſervice in the Church, neither would doe, either to receive the ſacrament of the Altar, or to be confeſſed, becauſe her conſcience would not ſuffer her ſo to doe; confeſſing and proteſting, that in the ſacrament of the Altar, there is not the reall preſence of Chriſts body and bloud; nor that auricular confeſſion or abſolution after the Popiſh ſort, was neceſſarie, nor the Maſſe to be good, or according unto the Scripture, but ſaid that both the ſaid ſacrament, confeſſion, abſolution, and the Maſſe, with all other their ſuperfluous ſacraments, ceremonies, and divine ſervice, as then uſed in this Realme of England, were moſt vile, and contrarie to Chriſts words and inſtitution; ſo that neither they were at the beginning, nor ſhall be at the latter end. This godly damoſel, feeble and tender of age, yet ſtrong by grace, in this her confeſſion and faith ſtood ſo firme, that neither the flattering promiſes, nor the violent threats of the Biſhops could turne her, but being moved and exhorted by the Biſhop to returne to the Catholike unitie of the Church, ſaid boldly to him againe; If ye will leave off your abomination, ſo I will returne, and otherwiſe I will not.

The worthy conſtancy of a maide.

The words of Ioane Laſhford at her laſt examination.

Whereupon the Biſhop yet again promiſed her pardon of all her errours (as he called them) if ſhe would be conformed. To this ſhe anſwered again, ſaying unto the Biſhop; Doe as it pleaſeth you, and I pray God that you may doe that which may pleaſe God.

The ſentence and condemnation of Ioane Laſhford. January 27.

And thus ſhe conſtantly perſevering in the Lords holy truth, was by the ſentence definitive condemned and committed unto the Sheriffes, by whom the foreſaid ſeven and twentieth day of Januarie ſhe with the reſt being brought unto the ſtake, there waſhed her clothes in the bloud of the Lambe, dying moſt conſtantly for his word and truth, to whom moſt lovingly ſhe eſpouſed her ſelfe.

And thus much concerning the life, ſtorie, and condemnation of theſe ſeven martyrs afore ſpecified.

Five other Martyrs in Canterburie, foure women and one man, at two ſtakes and one fire, altogether burned.

January 31.

4. Women and one man, Martyrs.

After theſe ſeven before rehearſed, martyred together in Smithfield, ſhortly after in the ſame moneth, the 31. day of Januarie, followed another like fellowſhip of godly Martyrs at Canterburie, foure women and one man, whoſe names be theſe:

Iohn Lomas, a young man,
Anne Albright,
Ioane Catmer,
Agnes Snoth, widow,
Ioane Sole, wife.

1. Iohn Lomas, Martyr.

John Lomas Martyr.

John Lomas of the Pariſh of Tenterden, detected and preſented of that religion which the Papiſts call hereſie, and cited upon the ſame to appeare at Canterbury, examined there of the firſt article, whether he beleeved the Catholike church or no, anſwered thus; that he beleeved ſo much as is contained in Gods Booke, and no more.

The anſwer of John Lomas at his examination.

The ſacrament of the altar denied.

Realty of Chriſt neither under forme nor treſſel

Then being aſſigned to appeare againe under the paine of the Law the next Wedneſday ſevennight after, which was the 17. day of Januarie, the ſaid Lomas examined whether he would be confeſſed of a Prieſt or no, anſwered and ſaid, that he found it not written that he ſhould be confeſſed to any Prieſt in Gods Booke, neither would be confeſſed, unleſſe he were accuſed by ſome man of ſinne. Againe, examined whether he beleeved the body of Chriſt to be in the Sacrament of the Altar really under the formes of bread and wine after the conſecration or no, he anſwered that he beleeved no realty of Chriſts body to be in the ſacrament; neither found he written, that he is there under forme or treſſel, but he beleeved ſo much as is written. Being then demanded whether he beleeved that there is a Catholike Church or no, and whether he would be content to be a member of the ſame, he anſwered thereunto, that he beleeved ſo much as was written in Gods Booke, and other anſwere then this he refuſed to give, &c. Whereupon the ſentence was given and read againſt him the 18. day of January; and ſo committed to the ſecular power, he conſtantly ſuffered for the conſcience of a true faith, with the other foure women here following.

Sentence againſt John Lomas.

2. Agnes Snoth, Martyr.

January 31.

Confeſſion auricular refuſed.

The ſacrament how to be received.

Penance is denied to be a ſacrament.

Agnes Snoth widow, of the pariſh of Smarden, likewiſe accuſed and cited for the true profeſſion of Chriſts religion, was divers times examined before the Phariſaicall fathers. Who, there compelled to anſwer to ſuch articles and interrogatories as ſhould be miniſtred unto her, firſt denied to be confeſſed to a Prieſt; notwithſtanding, ſhe denied not to confeſſe her offences as one to another, but not auricularly to any Prieſt. And as touching the ſacrament of the Altar, ſhe proteſted that if ſhe or any other did receive the ſacrament ſo as Chriſt and his Apoſtles after him did deliver it, then ſhe and they did receive it to their comfort: but as it is now uſed in the Church, ſhe ſaid that no man could otherwiſe receive it then to his damnation, as ſhe thought. Afterward being examined againe concerning penance, whether it were a ſacrament or no, ſhe plainly denied the ſame, and that the Popiſh manner of their abſolution was not conſonant to the Word, nor neceſſarie to be taken; with ſuch other like, agreeing with the anſwers and confeſſion of John Lomas before mentioned. Whereupon the ſentence being likewiſe read, ſhe was committed to the Sheriffes of Canterburie, and ſo ſuffering martyrdome with the reſt, declared her ſelfe a perfect and conſtant witneſſe of Chriſt and of his truth the 31. day of Januarie.

Agnes Snoth condemned and committed to the ſecular power.

3. Anne Albright, alias Champnes, Martyr.

Anne Albright, Martyr.

Auricular confeſſion.

The words of Anne Albright to the Prieſts.

Againſt Anne Albright, likewiſe appearing before the Judge and his Colleagues, it was alſo objected concerning the ſame matter of confeſſion. Whereunto ſhe anſwered in theſe words, ſaying; that ſhe would not be confeſſed of a Prieſt, and added moreover, ſpeaking unto the Prieſts: You Prieſts (ſaid ſhe) are the children of perdition, and can doe no good by your confeſſion. And likewiſe ſpeaking unto the Judge and his aſſiſtance, ſhe told them that they were ſubverters of Chriſts truth.

Anne Albright denieth the ſacrament of the altar.

Condemnation of Anne Albright. January 18.

And as touching the ſacrament of the Altar, ſhe ſaid it was a naughtie and abominable Idoll, and ſo utterly denied the ſame Sacrament. Thus perſiſting and perſevering in her former ſayings and anſwers, ſhe was condemned the ſaid eighteenth day of the ſaid moneth, with the other above mentioned; with whom alſo ſhe ſuffered quietly and with great comfort for the right of Chriſts religon.

4. Ioane Sole.

Ioane Sole, Martyr. January 31.

Condemnation of Ioane Sole. January 18.

In the like manner Joane Sole, of the Pariſh of Horton, was condemned of the ſame Phariſees and Prieſts, for not allowing confeſſion auricular, and for denying the reall preſence and ſubſtance of Chriſt to be in the ſacrament of the Altar. Who, after their Phariſaicall ſentence being promulgate, was brought by the Sheriffes to the ſtake with the other foure, and ſuſtained the like martyrdome with them, through the aſſiſtance of Gods holy grace and ſpirit mightily working in her, to the glorie of his name, and confirmation of his truth.

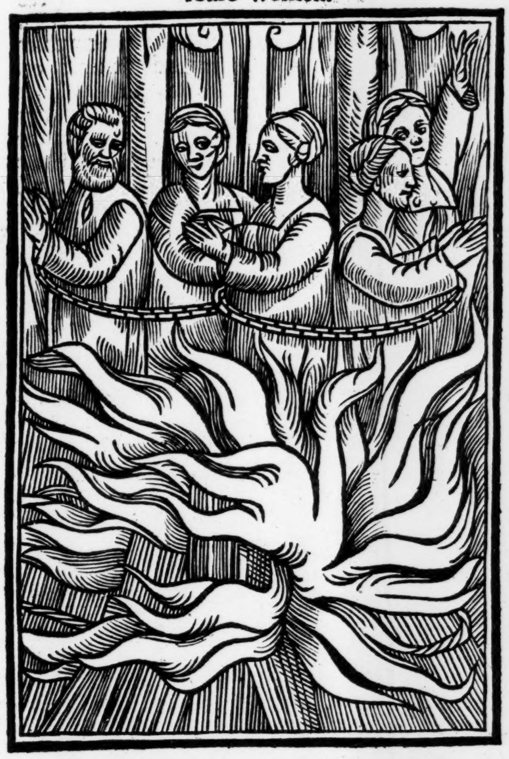
Ioane Catmer.

Ioane Catmer, Martyr.

January 31.

The fifth and laſt of this heavenly company of Martyrs, was Ioane Catmer of the Pariſh of Hith, wife (as it ſhould ſeeme) of George Catmer burned before. Who being asked what ſhe ſaid to confeſſion made to a Prieſt, denied to be confeſſed to any ſuch Prieſt. And moreover, the Iudge ſpeaking of the ſacrament of the Altar, ſhe ſaid and affirmed that ſhe beleeved not in that ſacrament, as it was then uſed, for that it was made, ſaid ſhe, a very Idoll. In this her confeſſion ſhe remaining and perſiſting, was by the like ſentence cruelly of them condemned, & ſo ſuffered with the foreſaid Thomas Lomas, and the other three fellow Martyrs, ratifying and confeſſing with their bloud the true knowledge and doctrine of the glorious Goſpel of Chriſt Ieſus our Saviour.

The burning of the foreſaid man, and foure women.



The martyrdome of Iohn Lomas, Agnes Snoth, Anne Albright, Ioan Sole, Ioane Catmer, at Canterburie. Anno 1556. January 31.

These five perſons were burnt at two ſtakes, and one fire, together at Canterburie, as is beforeſaid: Who, when the fire was flaming about their eares, did ſing Pſalmes. Whereat the good Knight ſir Iohn Norton being there preſent, wept bitterly at the ſight thereof.

Perſecutors.

The Iudges and other aſſiſtants which ſate upon her, and the other foure above mentioned, were Richard Fancet, Iohn Warren, Iohn Milles, Robert Collins, and Iohn Baker the Notarie.

The life, ſtate, and ſtorie of the reverend Paſtour and Prelate, Thomas Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterburie, Martyr, burned at Oxford, for the confeſſion of Chriſts true doctrine under Queen Mary, Anno 1556. March 21.

March 21. Thomas Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterburie, Martyr.

As concerning the life and eſtate of that moſt reverend father in God, and worthy Prelate of godly memorie, Thomas Cranmer late Archbiſhop of Canterburie, and of the originall cauſe and occaſion of his preferment unto his Archiepiſcopall dignitie, who of many hath beene thought to have procured the ſame by friendſhip onely, and of ſome other eſteemed unworthy ſo high a vocation: It is firſt therefore to be noted and conſidered, that the ſame Thomas Cranmer coming of an ancient Parentage, from the Conqueſt to be deducted, and continuing ſince in the name and family of a Gentleman, was borne in a Village called Arſelacton in Nottinghamſhire, of whoſe ſaid name and family there remaineth at theſe dayes one Manour and Manſion houſe in Lincolneſhire, called Cranmer Hall, &c. Sometimes of heritage of the ſaid ſtocke and family. Who being from his infancie kept at Schoole, and brought up not without much good civilitie, came in proceſſe of time unto the Univerſitie of Cambridge, and there proſpering in right good knowledge amongſt the better ſort of Students, was choſen fellow of Ieſus Colledge in Cambridge. And ſo being Maſter of Art, and fellow of the ſame Colledge, it chanced him to marrie a Gentlemans daughter: by meanes whereof he loſt and gave over his fellowſhip there, and became the Reader in Buckingham Colledge; and for that he would with more diligence apply that his office of reading, he placed his ſaid wife in an Inne, called the Dolphin in Cambridge, the wife of the houſe being of affinitie unto her. By reaſon whereof, and for that his often reſort unto his wife in that Inne, he was much marked of ſome Popiſh merchants; whereupon roſe the ſlanderous noiſe and report againſt him, after he was preferred to the Archbiſhoprick of Canterburie, raiſed up by the malicious diſdaine of certaine malignant adverſaries to Chriſt and his truth, bruting abroad every where, that he was but an Hoſtler, and therefore without all good learning. Of whoſe malicious reports, one of their practiſes in that behalfe ſhall hereafter be declared, as place and time ſhall ſerve.

Tho. Cranmer a Gentleman borne.

Tho. Cranmer firſt coming to Cambridge.

Tho. Cranmer fellow of Ieſus Colledge.

Cranmer married.

Cranmer Reader in Buckingham Colledge.

But in the meane time to returne to the matter preſent: Whileſt this ſaid Maſter Cranmer continued as a Reader in Buckingham Colledge, his wife died in childebed. After whoſe death, the Maſters and Fellowes of Ieſus Colledge deſirous againe of their old companion, namely, for his towardlineſſe in learning, choſe him againe fellow of the ſame Colledge. Where he remaining at his ſtudie, became in few yeeres after the Reader of Divinitie Lecture in the ſame Colledge, and in ſuch ſpeciall eſtimation and reputation with the whole Univerſitie, that being Doctor of Divinitie, he was commonly appointed one of the heads (which are two or three of the chiefeſt learned men) to examine ſuch as yeerely proceede in commencement, either Batchelers or Doctors of Divinitie, by whoſe approbation the whole Univerſitie licenſeth them to proceede unto their degree; and againe by whoſe diſallowance the Univerſitie alſo rejecteth them for a time to proceede, untill they be better furniſhed with more knowledge.

Tho Cranmer, after the deceaſe of his wife, choſen fellow into Ieſus Colledge.

Tho. Cranmer made Reader in Ieſus Colledge, & Doctor of Divinitie.

D. Cranmer publike examiner in Cambridge of them that were to proceede.

Now Doctor Cranmer, ever much favouring the knowledge of the Scripture, would never admit any to proceede in Divinitie, unleſſe they were ſubſtantially ſeen in the ſtorie of the Bible; by meanes whereof certaine Friers, and other religious perſons, who were principally brought up in the ſtudie of ſchoole Authors, without regard had to the authoritie of Scriptures, were commonly rejected by him; ſo that he was greatly, for that his ſevere examination, of the religious ſort much hated, and had in great indignation: and yet it came to paſſe in the end, that divers of them them being thus compelled to ſtudie the Scriptures, became afterwards very well learned and well affected; inſomuch, that when they proceeded Doctors of Divinitie, they could not overmuch extoll and commend M. Doctor Cranmers goodneſſe towards them, who had for a time put them backe, to aſpire unto better knowledge and perfection. Among whom D. Barret a white Friar, who afterwards dwelt at Norwich, was after that ſort handled, giving him no leſſe commendation for his happy rejecting of him for a better amendment. Thus much I repeate, that our apiſh and popiſh ſort of ignorant Prieſts may well underſtand that this his exerciſe, kinde of life, and vocation was not altogether Hoſtler like.

D. Cranmer appointed to be fellow of the Cardinals Colledge in Oxford, refuſed.

Well, to goe forwards; Like as he was neither in fame unknowne, nor in knowledge obſcure, ſo was he greatly ſolicited by Doctor Capon, to have beene one of the fellowes in the foundation of Cardinall Wolſeyes Colledge in Oxford (which he utterly refuſed, not without danger of indignation.) Notwithſtanding fore-ſeeing that which after chanced, to the utter confuſion of many well affected learned men there, without conſideration (becauſe mans glory was there more ſought for then Gods) he ſtood to the danger of the ſaid indignation, which chanced more proſperouſly unto him within few yeers after then he looked for. For whiles he thus continued in Cambridge, the great and weightie cauſe of King Henrie the eighth, his divorce with the Ladie Katherine Dowager of Spaine, came into queſtion; which being many waies by the ſpace of two or three yeers amongſt the Canoniſts, Civilians, and other learned men diverſly diſputed and debated, it came to paſſe that this ſaid Doctor Cranmer, by reaſon that the plague was in Cambridge, reſorted to Waltham Abbey, to one M. Creſſeyes houſe there, whoſe wife was of kinne to the ſaid M. Cranmer. And for that he had two ſons of the ſaid Creſſey with him at Cambridge as his pupils, he reſted at Waltham Croſſe, at the houſe of the ſaid Maſter Creſſey, with the ſaid two children, during that Summer time whiles the plague reigned.

Queſtion of the Kings divorce with Katherine Dowager.

Of this Campeius and diſcourſe of his legacie reade before.

In this Summer time Cardinall Campeius and Cardinall Wolſey, being in Commiſſion from the Pope, to heare and determine that great cauſe in controverſie betweene the King and the Queene, his pretended wife, dallied and delayed all the Summer time untill the moneth of Auguſt came, in hearing the ſaid cauſe in controverſie debated. When Auguſt was come, the ſaid Cardinals little minding to proceed to ſentence giving, tooke occaſion to finiſh their Commiſſion, and not further to determine therein, pretending that it was not permitted by the lawes to keepe courts of Eccleſiaſticall matters in harveſt time: which ſudden ſtay and giving over of the ſaid Commiſſion by both the Cardinals, being unknowen to the King, it ſo much moved him, that he taking it as a mocke at the Cardinals hands, commanded the Dukes of Northfolke and Suffolke to diſpatch forthwith Cardinall Campeius home againe to Rome; and ſo in haſte removed himſelfe from London to Waltham for a night or twaine whiles his houſhold removed to Greenwich: by meanes whereof it chanced that the Harbengers lodged Doctor Stephens Secretarie, and D. Foxe Almoſiner (who were the chiefe furtherers, preferrers, and defendors on the Kings behalfe of the ſaid cauſe) in the houſe of the ſaid M. Creſſey, where the ſaid Doctor Cranmer was alſo lodged and reſident. When ſupper time came, they all three Doctors met together; Doctor Stephens and Doctor Foxe much marvelling of D. Cranmers being there. Who declared to them the cauſe of his there being, namely, for that the plague was in Cambridge. And as they were of old acquaintance, ſo the Secretarie and the Almoſiner right well entertained Doctor Cranmer, minding to underſtand part of his opinion touching their great buſineſſe they had in hand. And ſo as good occaſion ſerved, whiles they were at ſupper, they conferred with Doctor Cranmer concerning the Kings cauſe, requeſting him of his judgement and opinion what he thought therein.

Stephen Gardiner & Doctor Foxe, chiefe ſtirrers of the Kings divorce.

D. Stephens, D. Foxe, D. Cranmer conferring together in the Kings cauſe.

Whereto D. Cranmer anſwered, that he could ſay little to the matter, for that he had not ſtudied nor looked for it. Notwithſtanding he ſaid to them, that in his opinion they made more adoe in proſecuting the law Eccleſiaſticall, then needed. It were better, as I ſuppoſe, quoth Doctor Cranmer, that the queſtion, whether a man may marrie his brothers wife or no, were decided and diſcuſſed by the Divines, and by the authoritie of the Word of GOD, whereby the conſcience of the Prince might be better ſatiſfied and quieted, then thus from yeere to yeere by fruſtratorie delaies to prolong the time, leaving the very truth of the matter unboulted out by the Word of GOD. There is but one truth in it, which the Scripture will ſoone declare, make open and manifeſt, being by learned men well handled, and that may be as well done in England in the Univerſities here, as at Rome, or elſewhere in any forraine nation, the authoritie whereof will compell any Iudge ſoone to come to a definitive ſentence: and therefore, as I take it, you might this way have made an end of this matter long ſince. When D. Cranmer had thus ended his tale, the other two well liked of his device, and wiſhed that they had ſo proceeded aforetime, and thereupon conceived ſome matter of that device to inſtruct the King withall, who then was minded to ſend to Rome againe for a new Commiſſion.

D. Cranmers anſwer in the queſtion of the Kings divorce.

D. Cranmers device well liked of.

The King troubled about the divorce.

Now the next day when the King removed to Greenwich, like as he tooke himſelfe not well handled by the Cardinals in thus deferring his cauſe, ſo his mind being unquieted, and deſirous of an end of his long and tedious ſute, he called unto him theſe his two principall doers in his ſaid cauſe, namely, the ſaid D. Stephens and D. Foxe, ſaying unto them; What now my Maſters (quoth the King) ſhall we doe in this infinite cauſe of mine? I ſee by it there muſt be a new Commiſſion procured from Rome, and when we ſhall have an end, God knoweth, and not I.

When the King had ſaid ſomewhat his minde herein, the Almoſiner Doctor Foxe ſaid unto the King againe; We truſt that there ſhall be better wayes deviſed for your Maieſtie, then to make travell ſo farre as to Rome any more in your Highneſſe cauſe, which by chance was put into our heads this other night being at Waltham. The King being very deſirous to underſtand his meaning, ſaid; Who hath taken in hand to inſtruct you by any better or ſhorter way to proceede in our ſaid cauſe? Then ſaid Doctor Foxe; It chanced us to be lodged at Waltham in Maſter Creſſeyes houſe this other night, your Highneſſe being there, where we met with an old acquaintance of ours named Doctor Cranmer, with whom having conferrence concerning your Highneſſe cauſe, he thought that the next way were, firſt to inſtruct and quiet your Maieſties conſcience by trying your Highneſſe queſtion out by the authoritie of the Word of GOD, and thereupon to proceede to a finall ſentence. With this report the Secretarie was not content with the Almoſiner, for that he did not utter this device as of their owne invention. And when the Secretarie would have ſeemed by colourable words to make it appeare to the King, that they of themſelves had deviſed that meanes; the King

D. Cranmers device reported to the King.

Note the glorious head of D. Stephens.

then ſaid, Where is that Doctor Cranmer? is he ſtill at Waltham? they anſwered that they left him there. Mary (ſaid the King) I will ſurely ſpeake with him, and therefore let him be ſent for out of hand. I perceive (quoth the King) that that man hath the Sow by the right eare. And if I had knowne this device but two yeers agoe, it had been in my way a great peece of money, and had alſo rid me out of much diſquietneſſe.

D. Cranmer ſent for to the King.

Whereupon Doctor Cranmer was ſent for, and being removed from Waltham to Cambridge, and ſo towards his friends in Nottinghamſhire, a Poſte went for him. But when he came to London, he began to quarrell with theſe two his acquaintances, that he by their meanes was thus troubled and brought thither to be cumbred in a matter, wherein he had nothing at all travelled in ſtudie; and therefore moſt inſtantly intreated them, that they would make his excuſe in ſuch ſort, that he might be diſpatched away from comming in the Kings preſence. They promiſed and took the matter upon them ſo to doe, if by any meanes they might compaſſe it. But all was in vaine; for the more they began to excuſe Doctor Cranmers abſence, the more the King chid with them, for that they brought him not out of hand to his preſence, ſo that no excuſe ſerving he was faine undelaiedly to come to the Court unto the King, whom the gentle Prince benignely accepting, demanded his name, and ſaid unto him; Were you not at Waltham ſuch a time, in the company of my ſecretarie and my Almoſiner? Doctor Cranmer affirming the ſame, the King ſaid againe; Had you not conference with them concerning our matter of divorce now in queſtion after this ſort, repeating the manner and order thereof? That is right true, if it pleaſe your Highneſſe, quoth Doctor Cranmer. Well (ſaid the King) I well perceive that you have the right ſcope of this matter. You muſt underſtand (quoth the King) that I have been long troubled in conſcience, and now I perceive that by this meanes I might have beene long agoe relieved one way or other from the ſame, if we had this way proceeded. And therefore Maſter Doctor, I pray you, and nevertheleſſe becauſe you are a ſubject, I charge and command you (all your other buſineſſe and affaires ſet apart) to take ſome pains to ſee this my cauſe to be furthered according to your device, as much as it may lie in you, ſo that I may ſhortly underſtand whereunto I may truſt. For this I proteſt before God and the world, that I ſeeke not to be divorced from the Queene, if by any meanes I might juſtly be perſwaded that this our matimonie were inviolable, and not againſt the lawes of God; for otherwiſe there was never cauſe to move me to ſeeke any ſuch extremitie. Neither was there ever Prince had a more gentle, a more obedient and loving companion and wife then the Queene is, nor did I ever fanſie woman in all reſpects better, if this doubt had not riſen; aſſuring you that for the ſingular vertues wherewith ſhe is indued, beſides the conſideration of her noble ſtock, I could be right well contented ſtill to remaine with her, if ſo it would ſtand with the wil and pleaſure of Almightie God. And thus greatly commending her many and ſingular qualities, the King ſaid; I therefore pray you with an indifferent eye, and with as much dexteritie as lieth in you, that you for your part doe handle the matter for the diſcharging of both our conſciences.

D. Cranmer ſeeketh excuſes, loth to come unto the Kings preſence.

D. Cranmer brought to the King.

Talke betweene the King and D. Cranmer.

The King troubled in conſcience.

Mark this you Papiſt, which ſo raſhly judge the Kings divorce, and the Popes overthrow to have ſprung of light cauſes.

D. Cranmer excuſing and diſabling himſelf to the King.

Doctor Cranmer much diſabling himſelfe to meddle in ſo weightie a matter, beſought the Kings Highneſſe to commit the triall and examining of this matter by the Word of God, unto the beſt learned men of both his Univerſities, Cambridge and Oxford. You ſay well, ſaid the King, and I am content therewith. But yet nevertheleſſe, I will have you ſpecially to write your minde therein. And ſo calling the Earle of Wiltſhire to him, ſaid; I pray you my Lord, let Doctor Cranmer have entertainment in your houſe at Durham place for a time, to the intent he may be there quiet to accompliſh my requeſt, and let him lack neither bookes, ne, any thing requiſite for his ſtudie. And thus after the Kings departure, Doctor Cranmer went with my Lord of Wiltſhire unto his houſe, wherein he incontinent wrote his minde concerning the Kings queſtion; adding to the ſame, beſides the authorities of the Scriptures, of generall Councels and of ancient Writers, alſo his opinion which was this; that the Biſhip of Rome had no ſuch authoritie, as whereby he might diſpenſe with the Word of GOD and the Scripture. When Doctor Cranmer had made this booke, and committed it to the King, the King ſaid to him; Will you abide by this that you have here written before the Biſhop of Rome? That will I doe, by Gods grace, quoth Doctor Cranmer, if your Majeſtie doe ſend me thither. Mary (quoth the King) I will ſent you even to him in a ſure Ambaſſage.

D. Cranmer aſſigned by the king to ſearch the Scriptures in the cauſe of his divorce.

The King firſt given to underſtand that the Pope hath no authoritie to diſpence with the Word of God.

And thus by means of D. Cranmers handling of this matter with the King, not onely certaine learned men were ſent abroad to the moſt part of the Univerſities in Chriſtendome, to diſpute the queſtion, but alſo the ſame being by commiſſion diſputed by the Divines in both the Univerſities of Cambridge and Oxford, it was there concluded, that no ſuch matrimonie was by the Word of God lawfull.

The Kings matter removed from the Popes canon law, to the tryall of the Scriptures.

The Kings marriage found by Gods Word unlawfull.

Whereupon a ſolemne Ambaſſage was then prepared and ſent to the Biſhop of Rome, then being at Bononie, wherin went the Earle of Wiltſhire, D. Cranmer, D. Stokeſly, Doctor Carne, D. Bennet, and divers other learned men and Gentlemen.

D. Cranmer with other ſent to Rome Ambaſſadour to the Pope.

And when the time came that they ſhould come before the Biſhop of Rome to declare the cauſe of their Ambaſſage, the Biſhop ſitting on high in his cloth of eſtate, and in his rich apparrell, with his ſandales on his feet, offering as it were his foote to be kiſſed of the Ambaſſadours; the Earle of Wiltſhire diſdaining thereat, ſtood ſtill, and made no countenance thereunto, ſo that all the reſt kept themſelves from that Idolatrie.

The Engliſh Ambaſſadours not haſty to kiſſe the Popes foot.

Howbeit one thing is not here to be omitted, as a prognoſticate of our ſeparation from the See of Rome, which then chanced by a Spaniell of the Earle of Wiltſhire. For he having there a great Spaniell which came out of England with him, ſtood directly betweene the Earle and the Biſhop of Rome.

When the ſaid Biſhop had advanced forth his foote to be kiſſed, now whether the Spaniell perceived the Biſhops foote of another nature then it ought to be, and ſo taking it to be ſome kinde of repaſt, or whether it was the will of God to ſhew ſome token by a Dogge unto the Biſhop of his inordinate pride, that his feete were more meete to be bitten of Dogges, then kiſſed of Chriſtian men: the Spaniell (I ſay) when the Biſhop extended his foot to be kiſt, no man regarding the ſame, ſtraight-way (as though he had been of purpoſe appointed thereunto) went directly to the Popes feete, and not onely kiſſed the ſame unmannerly with his mouth, but as ſome plainly reported and affirmed, took faſt with his mouth the great toe of the Pope, ſo that in haſt he pulled in his glorious feet from the Spaniell. Whereat our men ſmiling in their ſleeves, what they thought God knoweth. But in fine, the pontificall Biſhop after that, ſought no more at that preſent for kiſſing his feete, but without any further ceremony gave eare to the Ambaſſadours what they had to ſay.

The unmannerly nature of a dog preſuming to kiſſe the Popes foote.

Arguing to the Popes face, that contrary to the word of God he had no power to diſpenſe.

Who entring there before the Biſhop, offered on the Kings behalfe to be defended, that no man Iure divino, could or ought to marry his brothers wife, and that the Biſhop of Rome by no meanes ought to diſpenſe to the contrarie; Divers promiſes were made, and ſundry daies appointed, wherein the queſtion ſhould have beene diſputed, and when our part was ready to anſwer, no man there appeared to diſpute in that behalfe. So in the end, the Biſhop making to our Ambaſſadours good countenance, and gratifying Doctor Cranmer with the office of the Penitentiariſhip, diſmiſſed them undiſputed withall.

D. Cranmer made the popes Penitentiary.

D. Cranmer Ambaſſador to the Emperor.

Whereupon the Earle of Wiltſhire, and the other Commiſſioners, ſaving Doctor Cranmer, returned home againe into England. And forthwith Doctor Cranmer went to the Emperour, being in his journey towards Vienna, in expedition againſt the Turke, there to anſwer ſuch learned men of the Emperours Councell, as would or could ſay any thing to the contrarie part. Where amongſt the reſt, at the ſame time was Cornelius Agrippa, an high officer in the Emperours Court, who having private conference with Doctor Cranmer in the queſtion, was ſo fully reſolved and ſatisfied in the matter, that afterwards there was never diſputation openly offered to Doctor Cranmer in that behalfe. For through the perſwaſion of Agrippa, all other learned men there were much diſcouraged: Inſomuch, that after Doctor Cranmer was returned into England, Agrippa fell into ſuch diſpleaſure with the Emperour, as ſome men thought, that becauſe of the hindering and diſcouraging ſo much the contrary part, he was committed to priſon, where he for ſorrow ended his life, as it was reported. In the meane ſpace while the Emperour returned home from Vienna thorow Germanie, Doctor Cranmer in that voyage had conference with divers learned men of Germanie concerning the ſaid queſtion, who very ambiguouſly heretofore conceiving the cauſe, were fully reſolved and ſatisfied by him.

Conference between Biſhop Cranmer and Cornelius Agrippa.

D. Cranmer made Archbiſh. of Canterburie.

This matter thus proſpering on Doctor Cranmers behalfe, as well touching the Kings queſtion, as concerning the invaliditie of the Biſhop of Romes authoritie, Biſhop Warham, then Archbiſhop of Canterburie, departed this tranſitorie life, whereby that dignitie then being in the Kings gift and diſpoſition, was immediately given to Doctor Cranmer, as worthy for his travell of ſuch a promotion. Thus much touching the preferment of Doctor Cranmer unto his dignitie, and by what meanes he atchieved unto the ſame: not by flatterie, not by bribes, nor by any other unlawfull meanes; which thing I have more at large diſcourſed, to ſtop the railing mouthes of ſuch, who being themſelves obſcure and unlearned, ſhame not to detract ſo learned a man moſt ignominiouſly with the ſurname of an Hoſtler, whom for his godly zeale unto ſincere religion, they ought with much humilitie to have had in regard and reputation.

Titus 1.

Now, as concerning his behaviour and trade of life towards God and the world, being now entered into his ſaid dignitie, and forſomuch as the Apoſtle S. Paul writing to two Biſhops, Timothy and Titus, ſetteth out unto us a perfect deſcription of a true Biſhop, with all the properties and conditions belonging to the ſame, unto the which exemplar it ſhall be heard in theſe ſtrange dayes to finde the image of any Biſhop correſpondent; yet for example ſake let us take this Archbiſhop of Canterburie, and try him by the rule thereof, to ſee either how neere he cometh to the deſcription of S. Paul, or elſe how far off he ſwerveth from the common courſe of other in his time, of his calling. The rule of S. Paul is to be found, 1 Tim. 3. alſo in his Epiſtle to Titus, chapt. 1. in theſe words:

The rule of a true Biſhop.

> A Biſhop muſt be faultleſſe, as becometh the Miniſter of God. Not ſtubborne, nor angry, no drunkard, no fighter, nor given to filthy lucre; but harborous, one that loveth goodneſſe, ſober-minded, righteous, holy, temperate, and ſuch as cleaveth unto the true word and doctrine, that he may be able to exhort, &c.

A miniſter muſt be faultleſſe.

Unto this rule and touch-ſtone, to lay now the life and converſation of this Archbiſhop, we will firſt begin with that which is thus written; A Biſhop muſt be faultleſſe, as becometh the Miniſter of God. Like as no man is without ſinne, and every man carrieth with him his eſpeciall vice and fault: ſo yet neverthleſſe, the Apoſtle meaneth, that the Biſhop and Miniſter muſt be faultleſſe, in compariſon of the common converſation of men of the world, which ſeeme more licentiouſly to live at their owne liberties and pleaſures, then the Biſhop or Miniſter ought to do, having ſmall regard unto good example giving: which a Biſhop and Miniſter moſt carefully ought to conſider, leſt by his diſſolute life the word of God be ſlandered and evill ſpoken of. Which thing to avoide, and the better to accompliſh this precept of the Apoſtle, this worthy man evermore gave himſelfe to continuall ſtudie, not breaking that order that he in the Univerſitie commonly uſed, that is, by five of the clock in the morning at his booke, and ſo conſuming the time in ſtudy and prayer untill nine of the clock; he then applied himſelfe (if the Princes affaires did not call him away) untill dinner time to heare ſuters, and to diſpatch ſuch matters as appertained unto his ſpeciall cure and charge, committing his temporall affaires, both of his houſhold and other forraine buſineſſe, unto his officers. So that ſuch things were never impediments either to his ſtudie, or to his paſtorall charge, which principally conſiſted in reformation of corrupt religion, and in ſetting forth of true and ſincere doctrine. For the moſt part alwaies being in commiſſion, he aſſociated himſelfe with learned men for ſifting and bolting out of one matter or other, for the commoditie and profit of the Church of England. By meanes whereof, and what for his private ſtudy, he was never idle; beſides that, he accounted it no idle point to beſtow one houre or twaine of the day in reading over ſuch workes and bookes as daily came from beyond the ſeas.

The order of D. Cranmers ſtudy.

After dinner, if any ſuters were attendant, he would very diligently heare them, and diſpatch them in ſuch ſort as every man commended his lenitie and gentleneſſe, although the caſe required that ſome whiles divers of them were committed by him to priſon. And having no ſuters after dinner, for an houre or thereabout he would play at the Cheſſe, or behold ſuch as could play. That done, then againe to his ordinarie ſtudie, at the which commonly, he for the moſt part ſtood, and ſeldome ſate; and there continuing untill five of the clock, beſtowed that houre in hearing the Common prayer, and walking or uſing ſome honeſt paſtime until ſupper time. At ſupper, if he had no appetite (as many times he would not ſup) yet would he ſit down at the table, having his ordinary proviſion of his meſſe furniſhed with expedient companie, he wearing on his hands his gloves, becauſe he would (as it were) thereby weane himſelf from eating of meat, but yet keeping the company with ſuch fruitfull talk as did repaſt and much delight the hearers, ſo that by this means hoſpitality was well furniſhed, and the alms cheſt well maintained for relief of the poore. After ſupper he would conſume one houre at the leaſt in walking, or ſome other honeſt paſtime, and then again untill nine of the clock, at one kind of ſtudy or other. So that no houre of the day was ſpent in vain, but the ſame was ſo beſtowed, as tended to the glory of God, the ſervice of the prince, or the commoditie of the Church. Which his well beſtowing of his time procured to him moſt happily a good report of all men, to be in reſpect of other mens converſation faultleſſe, as it became the Miniſter of God.

The temperate diet of doctor Cranmer.

That a Biſhop ought not to be ſtubborn.

Secondly, it is required, That a Biſhop ought not to be ſtubborn. With which kinde of vice, without great wrong this Archbiſhop in no wiſe ought to be charged; whoſe nature was ſuch, as none more gentle, or ſooner won to an honeſt ſute or purpoſe, ſpecially in ſuch things, wherein by his word, writing, counſell, or deed, he might gratifie either any gentle or noble man, or do good to any mean perſon, or elſe relieve the needy and poore. Onely in cauſes pertaining to God or his Prince, no man more ſtout, more conſtant, or more hard to be won; as in that part his earneſt defence in the Parliament houſe, above three dayes together, in diſputing againſt the ſix articles of Gardiners device, can teſtifie. And though the King would needs have them upon ſome politique conſideration to go forward, yet he ſo handled himſelf as well in the Parliament houſe, as afterwards by writing, ſo obediently and with ſuch humble behaviour in words towards his Prince, proteſting the cauſe not to be his, but almighty Gods, who was the Author of all truth, that the King did not onely well like his defence (willing him to depart out of the Parliament houſe, into the Councel chamber, whileſt the Act ſhould paſſe and be granted for ſafeguard of his conſcience; which he with humble proteſtation refuſed, hoping that his Majeſtie in proceſſe of time would revoke them again) but alſo after the Parliament was finiſhed, the King perceiving the zealous affection that the Archbiſhop bare towards the defence of his cauſe, which many wayes by Scriptures and manifold authorities and reaſons he had ſubſtantially confirmed and defended, ſent the Lord Cromwell, then Vicegerent, with the two Dukes of Northfolk and Suffolk, and all the Lords of the Parliament, to dine with him at Lambeth; where it was declared by the Vicegerent, and the two Dukes, that it was the Kings pleaſure, that they all ſhould in his Highneſſe behalf, cheriſh, comfort, and animate him, as one that for his travel in that Parliament had ſhewed himſelf both greatly learned, and alſo diſcreet and wiſe, and therefore they willed him not to be diſcouraged for any thing that was paſſed contrarie to his allegations. He moſt humbly thanked the Kings Majeſtie of his great goodnes towards him, and them for all their pains, ſaying, I hope in God, that hereafter my allegations and authorities ſhall take place to the glorie of God and the commoditie of the Realm; in the meane time I will ſatiſfie my ſelf with the honourable conſent of your honors, and the whole parliament.

The gentle nature of doctor Cranmer.

Cranmer ſtout and conſtant in Gods cauſe.

D. Cranmer a ſtout enemie againſt the ſix articles.

Of this coming of the Lord Cromwell, and the two Dukes to the Archbiſh. read before.

Here is to be noted, that this mans ſtout and godly defence of the truth herein ſo bound the Princes conſcience, that he would not permit the truth in that man to be clean overthrown with authoritie and power; and therefore this way God working in the Princes minde, a plain token was declared hereby, that all things were not ſo ſincerely handled in the confirmation of the ſaid ſix articles as it ought to have been, for elſe the prince might have had a juſt cauſe to have born his great indignation towards the Archbiſhop. Let us pray that both the like ſtoutneſſe may be perceived in all Eccleſiaſticall and learned men where the truth ought to be defended, and alſo the like relenting and flexibilitie may take place in Princes and Noble men, when they ſhall have occaſion offered them to maintain the ſame, ſo that they utterly overwhelm not the truth by ſelf-will, power and authoritie. Now in the end this Archbiſhops conſtancie was ſuch towards Gods cauſe, that he confirmed all his doings by bitter death in the fire, without reſpect of any worldly treaſure or pleaſure. And as touching his ſtoutneſſe in his princes cauſe, the contrary reſiſtance of the Duke of Northumberland againſt him proved right well his good minde that way; which chanced by reaſon that he would not conſent unto the diſſolving of Chanteries, untill the King came of age, to the intent that they might then better ſerve to furniſh his royall Eſtate, then to have ſo great treaſure conſumed in his nonage. Which his ſtoutneſſe, joyned with ſuch ſimplicitie, ſurely was thought to divers of the Councell, a thing incredible, ſpecially in ſuch ſort to contend with him, who was ſo accounted in this Realm, as few or none would or durſt gainſtand him.

Example for Eccleſiaſticall Paſtors.

Archbiſh. Cranmer in diſpleaſure about the employing of chantrey lands.

So dear was to him the cauſe of God, and of his Prince, that for the one he would not keep his conſcience clogged, nor for the other lurk or hide his head. Otherwiſe (as it is ſaid) his very enemies might eaſily entreat him in any cauſe reaſonable; and ſuch things as he granted, he did without any ſuſpition of upbraiding or meed therefore: So that he was altogether void of the vice of ſtubbornnes, and rather culpable of overmuch facilitie and gentleneſſe.

Not angry.

Then followeth, Not angry. Surely if overmuch patience may be a vice, this man may ſeem peradventure to offend rather on this part then on the contrary. Albeit for all his doings I cannot ſay: for the moſt part, ſuch was his mortification that way, that few we ſhall finde in whom the ſaying of our Saviour Chriſt ſo much prevailed as with him, who would not onely have a man to forgive his enemies, but alſo to pray for them; that leſſen never went out of his memory. For it was known that he had many cruell enemies, not for his own deſerts, but onely for his religion ſake: and yet whatſoever he was that ſought his hinderance, either in goods, eſtimation, or life, and upon conference would ſeem never ſo ſlenderly any thing to relent or excuſe himſelf, he would both forget the offence committed, and alſo evermore afterwards friendly entertain him, and ſhew ſuch pleaſure to him, as by any means poſſible he might perform or declare: inſomuch that it came into a common proverb: Do unto my L. of Canterburie diſpleaſure, or a ſhrewd turn, and then you may be ſure to have him your friend whiles he liveth. Of which his gentle diſpoſition in abſtaining from revengement, amongſt many examples thereof, I will repeat here one.

The ſingular patience of this Archbiſhop.

It chanced an ignorant prieſt and Parſon in the North parts (the town is not now in remembrance, but he was a kinſman of one Cherſey a Grocer, dwelling within London, being one of thoſe prieſts that uſe more to ſtudy at the alehouſe, then in his chamber or in his ſtudy) to ſit on a time with his honeſt neighbours at the alehouſe within his own Pariſh, where was communication miniſtred in commendation of my Lord Cranmer archbiſhop of Cancerbury. This ſaid Parſon, envying his name onely for religion ſake, ſaid to his neighbours; what make you of him, quoth he, he was but an hoſtler, and hath no more learning then the Goſelings that go yonder on the green, with ſuch like ſlanderous and uncomely words. These honeſt neighbours of his, not well bearing thoſe his unſeemly words, articled againſt him, and ſent their complaint to the Lord Cromwell, then Vicegerent in cauſes Eccleſiaſticall; who ſent for the Prieſt, and committed him to the Fleet, minding to have had him recant thoſe his ſlanderous words at Pauls Croſſe. Howbeit the Lord Cromwell, having great affairs of the Prince then in hand, forgat his priſoner in the Fleet. So that this Cherſey the Grocer, underſtanding that his kinſman was in durance in the Fleet, onely for ſpeaking words againſt my Lord of Canter. conſulted with the Prieſt, and between them deviſed to make ſute rather unto the Archbiſhop for his deliverance, then to the Lord Cromwell, before whom he was accuſed: underſtanding right well that there was great diverſitie of natures betweene thoſe two eſtates, the one gentle and full of clemencie, and the other ſevere and ſomewhat intractable, namely, againſt a Papiſt: So that Cherſey took upon him firſt to try my Lord of Canterburies benignity, namely, for that his coſins accuſation touched onely the offence againſt him, and none other. Whereupon the ſaid Cherſey came to one of the Archbiſhops gentlemen (whoſe father bought yeerly all his ſpices and fruit of the ſaid Cherſey, and ſo thereby of familiar acquaintance with the Gentleman) who opening to him the trouble wherein his kinſman was, requeſted that he would be a means to my Lord his maſter, to heare his ſute in the behalf of his kinſman.

The matter was moved. The Archbiſhop like as he was of nature gentle, and of much clemencie, ſo would he never ſhew himſelf ſtrange unto ſuters, but incontinently ſent for the ſaid Cherſey. When he came before him, Cherſey declared, that there was a kinſman of his in the Fleet, a Prieſt of the North countrey, and as I may tell your Grace the truth (quoth Cherſey) a man of ſmall civilitie, and of leſſe learning. And yet he hath a Parſonage there, which now (by reaſon that my Lord Cromwell hath laid him in priſon) being in his Cure, is unſerved, and he hath continued in durance above two moneths, and is called to no anſwer, and knows not when he ſhall come to any end, ſo that this his impriſonment conſumeth his ſubſtance, and will utterly undo him, unleſſe your grace be his good Lord. I know not the man (ſaid the Archbiſhop) nor what he hath done why he ſhould be thus in trouble.

The prieſt ſent for to the Archbiſhop.

Said Cherſey again, he onely hath offended againſt your grace, and againſt no man elſe, as may well be perceived by the Articles objected againſt him, the copy whereof the ſaid Cherſey then exhibited to the ſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Who well peruſing the ſaid articles, ſaid, This is the common talk of all the ignorant papiſticall prieſts in England againſt me. Surely, ſaid he, I was never made privy to this accuſation, and of his indurance I never heard before this time. Notwithſtanding, if there be nothing elſe to charge him withall againſt the Prince or any of the Councell, I will at your requeſt take order with him, and ſend him home again to his cure to do his duty; and ſo thereupon ſent his ring to the Warden of the Fleet, willing him to ſend the priſoner unto him, with his keeper at afternoon.

When the keeper had brought the priſoner at the hour appointed, and Cherſey had well inſtructed his couſin in any wiſe to ſubmit himſelf to the Archbiſhop, confeſſing his fault, whereby that way he ſhould moſt eaſily have an end and win his favour; thus the Parſon being brought into the garden at Lambeth, and there the Archbiſhop ſitting under the vine demanded of the Parſon, what was the cauſe of his indurance, and who committed him to the Fleet? The Parſon anſwered and ſaid, that the Lord Cromwel ſent him thither, for that certain malicious pariſhioners of his pariſh had wrongfully accuſed him of words which he never ſpake nor meant; Cherſey hearing his fooliſh coſin ſo far out of the way from his former inſtruction, ſaid, Thou daſtardly dolt and varlet, is this thy promiſe that thou madeſt to me? Are there not a great number of thy honeſt neighbours hands againſt thee, to prove thee a liar? Surely my Lord (quoth Cherſey) it is pitie to do him good. I am ſorie that I have troubled your grace thus far with him.

The Archb. words to the Parſon.

Well, ſaid the Archbiſhop unto the Parſon, if you have not offended me, I can do you no good: for I am intreated to help one out of trouble that hath offended againſt me. If my Lord Cromwell hath committed you to priſon wrongfully, that lieth in himſelf to amend, and not in me. If your offence onely hath touched me, I will be bold to do ſomewhat for your friends ſake here. If you have not offended againſt me, then have I nothing to do with you, but that you may go and remain from whence you came. Lord what ado his kinſman Cherſey made with him, calling him all kinde of opprobrious names. In the end my Lord of Canterbury ſeeming to riſe and go his wayes, the fond prieſt fell on his knees, and ſaid, I beſeech your grace to forgive me this offence, aſſuring your grace that I ſpake thoſe words being drunk and not well adviſed. Ah, ſaid my Lord, this is ſomewhat, and yet it is no good excuſe: for drunkenneſſe evermore uttereth that which lieth hid in the heart of man when he is ſober, alledging a text or twain out of the Scriptures concerning the vice of drunkenneſſe, which cometh not now to remembrance.

The prieſt confeſſeth his fault to the Archb.

Now therefore (ſaid the Archbiſhop that you acknowledge ſomewhat your fault, I am content to commune with you, hoping that you are at this preſent of an indifferent ſobriety. Tell me then, quoth he, did you ever ſee me, or were you ever acquainted with me before this day? The Prieſt anſwered and ſaid, that never in his life he ſaw his grace. Why then (ſaid the Archbiſhop) what occaſion had you to call me an hoſtler, and that I had not ſo much learning as the Goſelings which then went on the green before your face? If I have no learning you may now trie it, and be out of doubt thereof: therefore I pray you appoſe me, either in Grammar or in other liberall ſciences, for I have at one time or other taſted partly of them. Or elſe if you are a Divine, ſay ſomewhat that way.

The Prieſts anſwer.

The prieſt being amazed at my Lords familiar talk, made anſwer and ſaid; I beſeech your Grace to pardon me. I am altogether unlearned, and underſtand not the Latin tongue, but very ſimply. My onely ſtudy hath been to ſay my ſervice and maſſe, fair and deliberate, which I can do as well as any prieſt in the countrey where I dwel, I thank God. Well, ſaid the other, if you will not appoſe me, I will be ſo bold to appoſe you, and yet as eaſily as I can deviſe, and that onely in the ſtorie of the Bible now in Engliſh, in which I ſuppoſe that you are daily exerciſed. Tell me therefore who was King Davids father, ſaid my Lord. The prieſt ſtood ſtill pauſing a while, and ſaid, In good faith my Lord, I have forgotten his name. Then ſaid the other again to him; If you cannot tell that, I pray you tel me then, who was Solomons father? The fond fooliſh prieſt without all conſideration what was demanded of him before, made anſwer, Good my L. bear with me, I am not further ſeen in the Bible, then is daily read in our ſervice in the Church.

The Maſſe prieſt ignorant in the Scripture.

The Archbiſhop then anſwering, ſaid, this my queſtion may be found well anſwered in your ſervice. But I now well perceive, howſoever ye have judged heretofore of my learning, ſure I am that you have none at all. But this is the common practice of all you that be ignorant and ſuperſtitious Prieſts, to ſlander, backbite, and hate all ſuch as are learned and well affected towards Gods word and ſincere religion. Common reaſon might have taught you what an unlikely thing it was, and contrary to all manner of reaſon, that a Prince having two Univerſities within his Realm of well learned men, and deſirous to be reſolved of as doubtfull a queſtion, as in theſe many yeers the like was not moved within Chriſtendome, ſhould be driven to that neceſſitie for the defence of his cauſe, to ſend out of his Realm an Hoſtler, being a man of no better knowledge then is a Goſling, in an Embaſſage to anſwer all learned men, both in the Court of Rome, and the Emperours Court, in ſo difficult a queſtion as toucheth the Kings matrimonie, and the divorce thereof. I ſay, if you were men of any reaſonable conſideration, you might think it both unſeemly and uncomely for a Prince ſo to do. But look where malice reigneth in man, there reaſon can take no place: and therefore I ſee by it, that you all are at a point with me, that no reaſon or authoritie can perſwade you to favour my name, who never meant evill to you, but your both commoditie and profit. Howbeit, God amend you all, forgive you, and ſend you better mindes.

Evill will never ſaith well.

The Archbiſhop forgiveth and diſmiſſeth the Prieſt.

With theſe words the Prieſt ſeemed to weep, and deſired his grace to pardon his fault and frailtie, ſo that by this means he might return to his Cure again, and he would ſure recant thoſe his fooliſh words before his Pariſhioners ſo ſoon as he came home, and would become a new man. Well, ſaid the Archbiſhop, ſo had you need: and giving him a godly admonition to refuſe the haunting of the Alehouſe, and to beſtow his time better in the continuall reading of the Scriptures, he diſmiſſed him from the Fleet.

The L. Cromwell offended with the Archb. in forgiving the Popiſh Prieſt.

The Lord Cromwell, perceiving within a fortnight after that his priſoner was ſent home without any open puniſhment, came to Lambeth unto the Archbiſhop, and in a great heat ſaid to him, My Lord, I underſtand that you have diſpatched the Northren Prieſt, that I of late ſent to the Fleet, home again, who unhoneſtly railed of you, and called you an Hoſtler.

The Archbiſhop defendeth his enemy that before railed upon him.

Indeed I have ſo done (ſaid he again) for that in his abſence the people of his Cure wanted their divine ſervice. It is very devout divine ſervice that he ſaith, quoth the Lord Cromwell; It were more meet for him to be an Hoſtler then a Curate, who ſticked not to call you an Hoſtler. But I thought ſo much what you would do, and therefore I would not tell you of his knaverie when I ſent him to priſon. Howbeit henceforth, they ſhall cut your throat before that I ſay any thing more to them on your behalf. Why? What would you have done with him, quoth the Archbiſhop? there was nothing laid to his charge, other then words ſpoken againſt me, and now the man is repentant and well reconciled, and hath been at great charges in priſon: it is time therefore that he were rid out of his trouble. Well, ſaid my Lord Cromwell, I meant that he ſhould have preached at Pauls Croſſe a recantation before he had gone home. That had been well done, quoth the other, for then you would have had all the world as well to wonder at me as at him. Well, well, ſaid the Lord Cromwell, we ſhall ſo long bear with theſe Popiſh knaves, that at length they will bring us indeed to be wondred at of the whole world.

The Archbiſhop Cranmer was never heard to call any of his houſhold once varlet or knave.

This example among other, ſerveth to declare that there remained ſmall deſire of revenging in the ſaid Archbiſhop. But what ſhould I ſay more? His quietneſſe and mortification this way was ſuch, that it is reported of all that knew him, that he never raged ſo far with any of his houſhold ſervants, as once to call the meaneſt of them varlet, or knave in anger, much leſſe to reprove a ſtranger with any reproachfull words. Much unlike in this part to the propertie (as it ſeemeth) of ſome other inferiour Biſhops of this Realme, which have not ſpared to flie in the faces, to pluck off the beards, to burn the hands, to beat and ſcourge with rods the bodies both of Gentlemen, married men and other, having almoſt nothing elſe in their mouth, but fools and knaves, &c. and yet after all this, think themſelves good perfect Biſhops, after the rule which followeth and ſaith,

No ſtriker, nor fighter.

No ſtriker, nor fighter. From which kinde of vice, the nature of this Archbiſhop was ſo far off, as was his doctrine which he profeſſed, and death which he ſuffered, far off from all condition and example of blinde Poperie. After the prohibition of theſe foreſaid vices, ſucceedeth the mother of all good vertues neceſſarily required of all true Chriſtians, but chiefly of a ſpirituall Prelate, which is,

Not given to filthie lucre, but harborous.

Not given to filthy lucre, but harborous.

The liberall doings of this Archbiſhop.

The Archbiſhop clearing all his debts before his attainder.

Not given to filthy lucre, but harborous, &c. The contrarie whereof, was ſo odious unto St. Paul, that he eſteemed the ſame no leſſe then a kinde of idolatrie, in that it maketh men forget their duty to God ſo far, and in ſtead of him to worſhip their treaſure. How little this Prelate we ſpeak of was infected with this vice, and how he was no niggard, all kinde of people that knew him, as well learned beyond the ſeas and on this ſide, to whom yeerly he gave in exhibition no ſmall ſums of money, as other, both Gentlemen, mean men, and poore men, who had in their neceſſitie that which he could conveniently ſpare, lend, or make, can well teſtifie. And albeit ſuch was his liberalitie to all ſorts of men, that no man did lack whom he could do for, either in giving or lending; yet nevertheleſſe ſuch was again his circumſpection, that when he was apprehended and committed by Queen Mary to the Tower, he owed no man living a peny that could or would demand any dutie of him, but ſatiſfied every man to the uttermoſt; whereas no ſmall ſums of money were owing him of divers perſons, which by breaking their bils and obligations he freely forgave, and ſuppreſſed before his attainder. Inſomuch that when he perceived the fatall end of King Edward ſhould work to him no good ſucceſſe touching his body & goods, he incontinently called for his Officers, his Steward and others, commanding them in any wiſe to pay where any peny was owing, which was out of hand diſpatched. And then he ſaid, now I thank God I am mine own man, and in conſcience with Gods help able elſe to anſwer all the world and worldly adverſities, which ſome men ſuppoſe he might alſo have avoided, if he would have been counſelled by ſome of his friends. It followeth moreover;

Harborous.

The large expenſes of D. Cranmer.

And as touching this word Harborous, whereby is meant the good maintenance of hoſpitalitie, ſo little was this property lacking in him, that ſome men miſliking the ſame, thought it rather a houſe of overmuch laviſhing and unprofitable expence. But as nothing can be ſo well done, which by ſome other ſhall not be maligned and detracted; ſo neither did this man lack his Cavillers, ſome finding fault with his overmuch prodigalitie, ſome on the contrary part repining and complaining of his ſpare houſe, and ſtraight order, much under the ſtate of his revenews and calling. Of which two, the firſt ſort muſt conſider the cauſes which moved him to that liberall and large kinde of expences, pences. Wherein here cometh to be conſidered, the time wherein he ſerved; which was when reformation of religion firſt began to be advanced. In which time the whole weight and care of the ſame moſt chiefly depended upon his hand. During which ſeaſon, almoſt for the ſpace of ſixteen yeers together, his houſe was never lightly unfurniſhed of a number both of learned men and Commiſſioners, from time to time appointed for deciding of Eccleſiaſticall affairs.

And thus as he ſeemed to ſome over-large and laviſhing more then needed in hoſpitalitie; ſo on the other ſide there wanted not ſome, of whom he was much noted and accuſed again, yea and alſo complained of to King Henry the eighth for too ſlender and niggardly houſe-keeping, as not worthie to be accounted the hoſpitalitie of a meane Gentleman, as here following ſhall appeare.

The Biſhops lands ſought.

After that the ample and great poſſeſſions, revenews, jewels, rich ornaments, and other treaſures of the Abbeys were diſſolved and brought into the Kings hands, in the diſſolving whereof many cormorants were fed and ſatiſfied, and yet not ſo fully ſatiſfied, but that within a few yeers they began to wax hungry again: and for ſo much as no more could be ſcraped now out of Abbeys, they began to ſeek how by ſome other prey to ſatiſfie their appetites, which was to tickle the Kings ears with the rich revenew of the Biſhops lands. And to bring this deviſe to paſſe, they procured Sir Thomas Seimour Knight of the privy Chamber, to be a promoter of the matter; who not in all points much favouring the Archbiſhop, having time and a convenient occaſion, declared to the King that my Lord of Canterburie did nothing elſe but ſell his woods, and let his Leaſes by great and many fines, making havock of all the Royalties of the Archbiſhoprick, and that onely to the intent to gather up treaſure for his wife and children, keeping no manner of hoſpitalitie, in reſpect of ſo great a revenew; advertiſing the King further, that it was the opinion of many wiſe men, that it were more meet for the Biſhops to have a ſufficient yeerly ſtipend in money out of the Exchequer, then to be cumbred with thoſe temporall affairs of their Royalties, being impediments unto their ſtudie, and paſtorall charge, and his Highneſſe to have their lands and Royalties converted to his proper uſe, which beſides their honeſt ſtipends would be unto his Majeſtie no ſmall commoditie and profit.

Untruth told to the King of the Archbiſhop of Canterburies houſe keeping.

When the King had heard his fair tale, he ſaid little thereunto, other then this. Well (quoth he) we will talk more of this matter at another time. Now, within a fortnight after or thereabout (whether by chance, or of ſet purpoſe, it is not known) it came to paſſe, that one day his Highneſſe going to dinner had waſhed, ſir Thomas Seimor then holding the Ewer, and ſaid to the ſaid ſir Thomas, Go you out of hand to Lambeth unto my Lord of Canterburie, and bid him to be with me at two of the clock at afternoon, and fail not. Sir Thomas ſtraightwayes went to Lambeth, and as he came to the gate the Porter being in the lodge, came out, and conveighed him to the Hall, which was throughly furniſhed and ſet, both with the houſhold ſervants and ſtrangers, with foure principall head meſſes of officers, as daily it was accuſtomed to be. When ſir Thomas Seimor ſaw that ſtately large Hall ſo well ſet and furniſhed, being therewith abaſhed, and ſomewhat guiltie of an untruth told to the King before, he retired back, and would needs have gone to the Archbiſhop of Canterburie by the Chappell, and not through the Hall. Richard Nevel Gentleman, then Steward of the houſhold, perceiving his retire, came by and by unto him, and after gentle entertainment, demanded of him whether he would ſpeak with my Lord or no? Sir Thomas ſaid, that he muſt needs do ſo from the Kings Highneſſe, ſaying unto him, and this way I am going to my Lords grace. Sir, ſaid the Steward, you cannot go that way, for the doore is faſt ſhut, in the dinner time; and ſo by gentle meanes brought him up to my Lords chamber thorow the Hall, who then was at dinner: with whom he dined after he had done his meſſage, whoſe ordinarie fare might alwayes well beſeeme a right honourable perſonage. When dinner was ſcarce done, Sir Thomas took his leave of my Lord, and went again to the Court.

The Kings anſwer to the complainer of the Archbiſhop.

The Archb. of Canterburies houſe keeping.

So ſoone as the Kings Highneſſe ſaw him, he ſaid to him; Have you been with my Lord of Canterburie? Sir Thomas anſwered, That I have if it pleaſe your Majeſtie, and he will be with your Highneſſe ſtraightwayes. Dined you not with him, ſaid the King? Yes Sir (ſaid he) that have I done. And with that word, whether he eſpied by the Kings countenance, or by his words any thing tending to diſpleaſure, he ſtraightway without delay kneeled down upon his knee, and ſaid, I beſeech your Majeſtie to pardon me: I do now well remember and underſtand, that of late I told your Highneſſe a great untruth concerning my Lord of Canterburies houſe keeping; but from henceforth I intend never to beleeve that perſon which did put that vain tale into my head: For I aſſure your Highneſſe that I never ſaw ſo honourable a Hall ſet in this Realme, (beſides your Majeſties Hall) in all my life, with better order, and ſo well furniſhed in each degree. If I had not ſeen it my ſelfe, I could never have beleeved it, and himſelfe alſo ſo honourably ſerved.

The complainer asketh pardon of the King for his untrue report.

Ah Sir, quoth the Kings Highneſſe, Have you now eſpied the truth? I thought you would tell me another tale when you had been there. He was a very varlet (quoth the King) that told you that tale: for he ſpendeth (ah good man ſaid the King) all that he hath in houſe keeping. But now I perceive which way the winde bloweth. There are a ſort of you to whom I have liberally given of the poſſeſſions and revenews of the ſuppreſſed Monaſteries, which like as you have lightly gotten, ſo have you more unthriftily ſpent, ſome at dice, other ſome in gay apparrell, and other wayes worſe I fear me: and now that all is gone you would fain have me make another chevance with the biſhops lands, to accompliſh your greedy appetites. But let no other Biſhops beſtow their revenews worſe then my Lord of Canterbury doth, then ſhall you have no cauſe to complain of their keeping of houſe.

The king ſpeaketh in defence of the Archb. of Canterbury.

And thus the tale being ſhut up, and ended by the Kings Highneſſe, neither ſir Thomas Seimor, nor any other on his behalf ever after durſt renew, or revive that ſute any more in King Henries dayes; ſo that it may be evident to all indifferent men, the liberalitie of the Archbiſhop in houſe keeping what it was, which being defended, and commended by the Prince himſelf, rather may give a good example to his poſterity to follow, then was then to be depraved of any private ſubject, ſuch as knew him not.

In which Archbiſhop this moreover is to be noted, with a memorandum touching the reliefe of the poore, impotent, ſick, and ſuch as then came from the warres at Bullen, and other parts beyond the ſeas, lame, wounded, and deſtitute: for whom he provided, beſides his manſion houſe at Beckiſborn in Kent, the Parſonage Barn well furniſhed with certain lodgings for the ſick and maimed ſouldiers. To whom were alſo appointed the almoſiner, a Phyſician, and a Surgeon to attend upon them, and to dreſſe and cure ſuch as were not able to reſort to their countreys, having daily from the Biſhops kitchin hot broth and meat: for otherwiſe the common almes of the houſhold was beſtowed upon the poore neighbours of the Shire. And when any of the impotent did recover and were able to travell, they had convenient money delivered to bear their charges, according to the number of miles from that place diſtant. And this good example of mercie and liberall benignitie, I thought here good not in ſilence to be ſuppreſſed, whereby other may be moved according to their vocation, to walk in the ſteps of no leſſe liberalitie, then in him in this behalf appeared.

One that loveth goodneſſe, ſober minded, righteous, holy, and temperate.

Now followeth together theſe vertues, One that loveth goodneſſe, ſober minded, righteous, holy, and temperate. As concerning theſe qualities, the trade of his life before, joyned with his benigne and gentle diſpoſition, do teſtifie that he could not be void of theſe good vertues reigning in him, which was ſo abundantly adorned with the other, which above we have declared.

To cleave faſt unto the true word of doctrine, that he may be able to exhort with wholeſome learning, and to improve them that ſay againſt it.

To cleave faſt to the word of doctrine able to exhort in wholſome learning, and to reprove the gain-ſayer. Titus 1.

Then concludeth ſaint Paul with the moſt excellent vertue of all other to be wiſhed in a Prelate of the Church. For if this conſtancie be not in him to this end, that is, To cleave faſt unto the true word of doctrine, that he may be able to exhort with wholſome learning, and to improve them that ſay againſt it: If he be void (I ſay) of theſe gifts and graces, he is worthy of no commendation, but ſhall ſeem an idoll, and a deceiver of the world. Neither ſhall he deſerve the name of a Biſhop, if either for dread or meed, affection or favour, he do at any time or in any point ſwerve from the truth. As in this behalf the worthy conſtancie of this ſaid Archbiſhop never, for the moſt part, ſhrunk for any manner of ſtorm; but was ſo many wayes tried, that neither favour of his Prince, nor fear of the indignation of the ſame, nor any other worldly reſpect could alienate or change his purpoſe, grounded upon that infallible doctrine of the Goſpel. Notwithſtanding, his conſtant defence of Gods truth was ever joyned with ſuch meekneſſe toward the King, that he never took occaſion of offence againſt him.

Archb. Cranmer ever conſtant in defence of Chriſts truth and Goſpel.

At the time of ſetting forth the ſix Articles, mention was made before in the ſtorie of King Henry the eighth, how adventurouſly this Archbiſhop Thomas Cranmer did oppoſe himſelfe, ſtanding as it were, poſt alone, againſt the whole Parliament diſputing and replying three dayes together againſt the ſaid Articles. Inſomuch, that the King, when neither he could miſlike his reaſons, and yet would needs have theſe articles to paſſe, required him to abſent himſelf for the time out of the chamber, while the Act ſhould paſſe, and ſo he did, and how the King afterward ſent all the Lords of the Parliament unto the Archbiſhop to Lambeth to cheer his minde again, that he might not be diſcouraged, all which appeareth above expreſſed: And this was done during yet the ſtate and time of the Lord Cromwels authoritie. And now that it may appear likewiſe, that after the decay of the Lord Cromwell, yet his conſtancie in Chriſts cauſe did not decay, you ſhall hear what followeth after.

For after the apprehenſion of the Lord Cromwell, when the adverſaries of the Goſpel thought all things ſure now on their ſide, it was ſo appointed amongſt them, that ten or twelve biſhops, and other learned men, joyned together in commiſſion, came to the ſaid Archbiſhop of Canterburie for the eſtabliſhing of certain Articles of our Religion, which the Papiſts then thought to win to their purpoſe againſt the ſaid Archbiſhop. For having now the Lord Cromwell faſt and ſure, they thought all had been ſafe, and ſure for ever: as indeed to all mens reaſonable conſideration, that time appeared ſo dangerous, that there was no manner of hope that religion reformed ſhould any one week longer ſtand, ſuch account was then made of the Kings untowardneſſe thereunto. Inſomuch, that of all thoſe Commiſſioners there was not one left to ſtay on the Archbiſhops part, but he alone againſt them all ſtood in the defence of the truth; and thoſe that he moſt truſted to, namely, Biſhop Heath, and Biſhop Skip left him in the plain field, who then ſo turned againſt him, that they took upon them to perſwade him to their purpoſe: and having him down from the reſt of the Commiſſioners into his Garden at Lambeth, there by all manner of effectuall perſwaſions intreated him to leave off his overmuch conſtancie, and to incline unto the Kings intent, who was fully ſet to have it otherwiſe then he then had penned, or meant to have ſet abroad. When thoſe two his familiars, with one or two others his friends, had uſed all their eloquence and policie, he little regarding their inconſtancie and remiſneſſe in Gods cauſe or quarrell, ſaid unto them right notably.

The Archb. alone ſtandeth in defence of the truth.

B. Heath, and B. Skip forſake the Archb. in the plain field.

The Archb. incenſed by B. Heath and Skip to give over the defence of the Goſpel.

You make much ado to have me come to your purpoſe, alledging that it is the Kings pleaſure to have the Articles, in that ſort you have deviſed them, to proceed; and now that you do perceive his Highneſſe by ſiniſter information to be bent that way, you think it a convenient thing to apply unto his Highneſſe minde. You be my friends both, eſpecially the one of you I did put to his Majeſtie as of truſt. Beware (I ſay) what you do. There is but one truth in our Articles to be concluded upon, which if you do hide from his Highneſſe by conſenting unto a contrary doctrine, and then after in proceſſe of time, when the truth cannot be hidden from him, his Highneſſe ſhall perceive how that you have dealt colourably with him, I know his Graces nature ſo well (quoth the Archbiſhop) that he will never after truſt and credit you, or put any good confidence in you. And as you are both my friends, ſo therefore I will you to beware thereof in time, and diſcharge your conſciences in maintenance of the truth. But all this would not ſerve, for they ſtill ſwerved; and in diſcharging of his conſcience and declaring the truth unto the King, GOD ſo wrought with the King, that his Highneſſe joyned with him againſt the reſt, ſo that the book of articles paſſing on his ſide, he wan the Gole from them all, contrarie to all their expectations, when many wagers would have been laid in London, that he ſhould have been laid up with Cromwell at that time in the Tower for his ſtiffe ſtanding to his tackle. After that day there could neither Councellour, Biſhop, nor Papiſt win him out of the Kings favour.

The anſwer of the Archb. to D. Heath and Skip.

Notwithſtanding, not long after that, certain of the Councell, whoſe names need not to be repeated, by the inticement and provocation of his ancient enemie the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and other of the ſame ſect, attempted the King againſt him, declaring plainly, that the Realme was ſo infected with hereſies and heretiques, that it was dangerons for his Highneſſe farther to permit it unreformed, leſt peradventure by long ſuffering, ſuch contention ſhould ariſe, and enſue in the Realme among his ſubjects, that thereby might ſpring horrible commotions, and uprores, like as in ſome parts of Germany it did not long ago. The enormitie whereof they could not impute to any ſo much, as to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who by his own preaching, and his Chaplains, had filled the whole Realm full of divers pernicious hereſies. The King would needs know his accuſes. They anſwered that foraſmuch as he was a Counſellour no man durſt take upon him to accuſe him; but if it would pleaſe his Highneſſe to commit him to the Tower for a time, there would be accuſations and proofs enow againſt him: for otherwiſe juſt teſtimonie, and witneſſe againſt him would not appeare, and therefore your Highneſſe (ſaid they) muſt needs give us the Counſell, libertie, and leave to commit him to durance.

The King ſent Sir Anthony Deny at midnight for the Archbiſhop.

The King perceiving their importunate ſute againſt the Archbiſhop (but yet meaning not to have him wronged, and utterly given over into their hands) granted unto them that they ſhould the next day commit him to the Tower for his triall. When night came, the King ſent Sir Anthonie Denie about midnight to Lambeth to the Archbiſhop, willing him forthwith to reſort unto him at the Court. The meſſage done, the Archbiſhop ſpeedily addreſſed himſelfe to the Court, and coming into the Galerie where the King walked, and tarried for him, his Highneſſe ſaid; Ah, my Lord of Canterbury, I can tell you news. For divers weightie conſiderations it is determined by me, and the Councell, that you to morrow at nine of the clock ſhall be committed to the Tower, for that you and your Chaplains (as information is given us) have taught and preached, and thereby ſowen within the Realme ſuch a number of execrable hereſies, that it is feared, the whole Realme being infected with them, no ſmall contention, and commotions will riſe thereby amongſt my ſubjects, as of late dayes the like was in divers parts of Germanie: and therefore the Councell have requeſted me, for the triall of the matter, to ſuffer them to commit you to the Tower, or elſe no man dare come forth, as witneſſe in theſe matters, you being a Counſellour.

The Kings words & advice for the ſupportation of the archbiſhop.

The Archbiſh. anſwer to the King.

When the King had ſaid his minde, the Archb. kneeled down and ſaid, I am content if it pleaſe your grace, with all my heart, to go thither at your Highneſſe commandement, and I moſt humbly thank your Majeſtie that I may come to my trial; for there be that have many wayes ſlandered me, and now this way I hope to try my ſelf not worthy of ſuch report.

The King perceiving the mans uprightneſſe, joyned with ſuch ſimplicitie, ſaid; O Lord, what manner of man be you? What ſimplicitie is in you? I had thought that you would rather have ſued to us to have taken the pains to have heard you and your accuſers together for your triall, without any ſuch indurance. Do you not know, what ſtate you be in with the whole world, & how many great enemies you have? Do you not conſider what an eaſie thing it is, to procure three or four falſe knaves to witneſſe againſt you? Think you to have better luck that way, then your Maſter Chriſt had? I ſee by it you will run head-long to your undoing, if I would ſuffer you. Your enemies ſhall not ſo prevail againſt you, for I have otherwiſe deviſed with my ſelfe to keep you out of their hands. Yet notwithſtanding to morrow when the Councell ſhall ſit, and ſend for you, reſort unto them, and if in charging you with this matter, they do commit you to the Tower, require of them, becauſe you are one of them, a Counſellour, that you may have your accuſers brought before them without any further indurance, and uſe for your ſelf as good perſwaſions that way as you may deviſe; and if no intreatie or reaſonable requeſt will ſerve, then deliver unto them this my ring (which then the king delivered unto the archbiſhop) and ſay unto them, if there be no remedie my Lords, but that I muſt needs go to the Tower, then I revoke my cauſe from you, and appeale to the Kings own perſon by this his token unto you all; for (ſaid the King then unto the Archbiſhop) ſo ſoon as they ſhall ſee this my ring, they know it ſo well, that they ſhall underſtand that I have reſumed the whole cauſe into mine own hands and determination, and that I have diſcharged them thereof.

The Kings favourable care & conſideration toward the archbiſhop of Cant.

The K. ſendeth his ſignet in the behalf of the archb. of Cant.

The Archbiſhop perceiving the Kings benignitie ſo much to himwards, had much ado to forbear tears. Well, ſaid the King, Go your wayes my Lord, and do as I have bidden you. My Lord humbling himſelf with thanks, took his leave of the Kings Highneſſe for that night.

The Archb. being one of the Councel, made to ſtand at the Councell chamber doore waiting.

On the morrow about nine of the clock before noone, the Councell ſent a Gentleman Uſher for the Archbiſhop, who when he came to the Councell chamber doore, could not be let in; but of purpoſe (as it ſeemed) was compelled there to wait among the Pages, Lackies, and Serving-men all alone. Doctor Buts the Kings Phyſician reſorting that way, and eſpying how my Lord of Canterbury was handled, went to the Kings Highneſſe, and ſaid, My Lord of Canterbury, if it pleaſe your Grace, is well promoted: for now he is become a Lackey or a ſerving man, for yonder he hath ſtood this half houre at the Councell chamber doore amongſt them. It is not ſo (quoth the King) I trow; the Councell hath not ſo little diſcretion as to uſe the Metropolitans of the Realm in that ſort, ſpecially being one of their own number. But let them alone (ſaid the King) and we ſhall hear more ſoon.

D. Buts the Kings phyſician, a friend of the Archbiſhops.

The archb. called before the Councell.

Anon the Archbiſhop was called into the Councell chamber, to whom was alledged, as before is rehearſed. The Archbiſhop anſwered in like ſort, as the King had adviſed him; and in the end when he perceived that no maner of perſwaſion or intreaty could ſerve, he delivered them the Kings Ring, revoking his cauſe into the Kings hands. The whole Councel being thereat ſomwhat amazed, the Earle of Bedford with a loud voice, confirming his words with a ſolemne oath, ſaid, When you firſt began the matter my Lords, I told you what would come of it. Do you think that the King wil ſuffer this mans finger to ake? Much more (I warrant you) will he defend his life againſt brabling varlets? You do but cumber your ſelves to hear tales and fables againſt him. And ſo incontinently upon the receit of the Kings token, they all roſe, and carried to the King his ring, ſurrendring that matter as the order and uſe was, into his own hands.

The Councell being ſet againſt the Archbiſhop, he ſheweth the Kings ring, and appealeth from them.

The Kings words to the Councell in defence of the Archbiſhop.

When they were all come to the Kings preſence, his Highneſſe with a ſevere countenance ſaid unto them; Ah my Lords, I thought I had had wiſer men of my Councell then now I finde you. What diſcretion was this in you, thus to make the Primate of the Realme, and one of you in office, to wait at the Councell chamber doore amongſt ſerving men? You might have conſidered that he was a Counſellor as well as you, and you had no ſuch Commiſſion of me ſo to handle him. I was content that you ſhould try him as a Counſellor, and not as a mean ſubject. But now I well perceive that things be done againſt him maliciouſly, and if ſome of you might have had your minds, you would have tried him to the uttermoſt. But I do you all to wit, and proteſt, that if a Prince may be beholding unto his ſubject (and ſo, ſolemnly laying his hand upon his breſt, ſaid) by the faith I owe to God, I take this man here, my Lord of Canterbury, to be of all other a moſt faithfull ſubject unto us, and one to whom we are much beholding, giving him great commendations otherwiſe. And with that one or two of the chiefeſt of the Councell, making their excuſe, declared, that in requeſting his indurance, it was rather meant for his tryall, and his purgation againſt the common fame, and ſlander of the World, than for any malice conceived againſt him. Well, well, my Lords (quoth the King) take him and well uſe him, as he is worthy to be, and make no more ados. And with that every man caught him by the hand, and made faire weather of altogethers, which might eaſily be done with that man.

The Lords of the Councell glad to be friends again with the Archb.

And it was much to be marvelled, that they would go ſo farre with him, thus to ſeeke his undoing, underſtanding this well before, that the King moſt entirely loved him, and alwayes would ſtand in his defence whoſoever ſpake againſt him; as many other times the Kings patience was by ſiniſter informations againſt him tried. Inſomuch that the Lord Cromwell was evermore wont to ſay unto him, My Lord of Canterbury, you are moſt happy of all men: for you may do and ſpeake what you liſt, and ſay what all men can againſt you, the King will never beleeve one word to your detriment or hinderance. I am ſure I take more pains than all the Councell doth, and ſpend more largely in the Kings affaires, as well beyond the Seas as on this ſide: yea I aſſure you, even very ſpies in other forreine Realmes, at Rome and elſewhere, coſt me above one 1000. markes a yeere: and doe what I can to bring matters to knowledge, for the commoditie of the King and the Realme, I am every day chidden, and many falſe tales now and then beleeved againſt me; and therefore you are moſt happy, for in no point can you be diſcredited with the King. To this the Archbiſhop againe anſwering, if the Kings Majeſtie were not good to me that way, I were not able to ſtand and indure one whole weeke, but your wiſdome and policie is ſuch, that you are able to ſhift well enough for your ſelf.

The King a great ſupporter of Cranmer.

The L. Cromwels words to the Archb.

Now when the Kings Highneſſe had thus benignely and mercifully diſpatched the ſaid Archbiſhop from this ſore accuſation by the Councell laid againſt him, all wiſe men would have thought that it had been meere folly afterwards to have attempted any matter againſt him: but yet look where malice reigneth, there neither reaſon nor honeſty can take place. Such therefore as had conceived deep rancor and diſpleaſure againſt him, ceaſed not to perſecute him by all poſſible means. Then brought they againſt him a new kinde of accuſation, and cauſed Sir John Goſtwike knight, a man of a contrary religion, to accuſe the Archbiſhop openly in the Parliament houſe, laying to his charge his Sermons preached at Sandwich, and his Lectures read at Canterbury, wherein ſhould be contained manifeſt hereſies againſt the Sacrament of the altar, &c. Which accuſation came to the Kings eare. Why (quoth the King) where dwelleth Goſtwike? As I take it, either in Bedfordſhire or Buckinghamſhire, and hath he ſo open an eare that he can heare my L. of Canter. preaching out of Kent? This is very likely, ſaid the King. If he had bin a Kentiſhman, there had been ſomething worthy of conſideration: but as for Goſtwike, I know him well enough, and what good religion he is of. Go to him & tell him, ſaid the King to one of his privie chamber, if he go not to my L. of Cant. and ſo reconcile himſelf to him, that he may become his good Lord, I wil pull the Goſlings feathers ſo, that hereafter he ſhall have little luſt to ſlander the Metropolitane, or any other learned man. When ſir J. Goſtwike heard theſe words, it was no need to bid him haſt himſelf to Lambeth unto the Metropolitane, making to him as many friends as poſſible he might. When he came to the Archb. he was faine to diſcloſe unto him, by what means he was procured to do that he did, requeſting his clemencie to be his good Lord, or elſe he took himſelf utterly undone, being ſo in the Kings indignation, as he underſtood he was by that afore declared, which ſute was ſoone won at his hand: and ſo the Archb. caſting into the ſatchell behinde him all thoſe ſir J. Goſtwikes ingratitudes, went to the King, and wan to ſir John his Princes favour again. And thus the king made a ſhort end of this accuſation.

Another accuſation brought into the Parliament houſe by ſir J. Goſtwike againſt the Archb.

Goſtwike checkt of the King for accuſing the Archbiſhop.

Goſtwike glad to fall in again with the Archb. of Canterbury.

Well, here you may perceive that malicious invention went not the wiſeſt way to worke, to procure a ſtranger dwelling a farre off, to accuſe the Archb. of his doctrine preached in his Dioceſſe: and therefore hath blind malice learned ſome more wiſdome now to accuſe the Archbiſhop in ſuch ſort as he ſhall never be able to avoyd it. And therefore it was procured by his ancient enemies, that not only the Prebendaries of his Cathedrall Church in Canterbury, but alſo the moſt famous Juſtices of Peace in the ſhire ſhould accuſe him, article againſt him; which in very deed was moſt ſubſtantially brought to paſſe, and the articles both well written and ſubſcribed, were delivered to the Kings Highneſſe, as a thing of ſuch effect, that there muſt needs follow to the ſaid Archbiſhop, both indignation of the Prince, and condigne puniſhment for his grievous offence committed by him and his Chaplaines, in preaching ſuch erronious doctrine as they did within his Dioceſſe of Canterbury; whereof they being ſuch witneſſes of credit, no man had cauſe to doubt of their circumſpect doings. This accuſation particularly ſent out was delivered to the King by ſome of the Councels means, When the King had peruſed the book, he wrapt it up, and put it into his ſleeve; and finding occaſion to ſolace himſelf upon the Thames, came with his Barge furniſhed with his Muſicians a long by Lambeth Bridge towards Chelſey. The noiſe of the Muſicians provoked the Archbiſhop to reſort to the Bridge to do his dutie, and to ſalute his Prince. Whom when the King had perceived to ſtand at the bridge, eftſoones he commanded the Watermen to draw towards the ſheare, and ſo came ſtraight to the Bridge.

New accuſation by Prebendaries and Juſtices of Kent againſt the arch.

Articles put to the K. againſt D. Cranmer.

Ah my Chaplaine, ſaid the King to the Archbiſhop, come into the Barge to me. The Archbiſhop declared to his Highneſſe, that he would take his own Barge and waite upon his Majeſtie. No ſaid the King, you muſt come into my Barge, for I have to talke with you. When the King and the Archbiſhop all alone in the Barge were ſet together, ſaid the King to the Archbiſhop, I have news out of Kent for you my Lord. The Archbiſh. anſwered, good I hope, if it pleaſe your Highneſſe. Mary, ſaid the King, they be ſo good, that I now know the greatſt heretike in Kent, and with that pulled out of his ſleeve the book of Articles againſt both the ſaid Archb. and his Preachers, and gave the book to him, willing him to peruſe the ſame. When the Archb. had read the Articles, and ſaw himſelf ſo uncourteouſly handled of his own church whereof he was head, I meane of the Prebendaries of his Cathedrall Church, and of ſuch his neighbors as he had many wayes gratified, I meane the Juſtices of the Peace, it much grieved him. Notwithſtanding he kneeled down to the King, and beſought his Majeſtie to grant out a Commiſſion to whomſoever it pleaſed his Highneſſe, for them to try out the truth of this accuſation. In very deed (ſaid the King) I do ſo mean, and you your ſelf ſhall be chiefe Commiſſioner, to adjoyn to you ſuch two or three more as you ſhall think good your ſelf. Then it wil be thought (quoth the Archb. to the King) that it is not indifferent, if it pleaſe your grace, that I ſhould be mine own iudge, and my Chaplaines alſo. Well, ſaid the King, I wil have none other but your ſelf, and ſuch as you will appoint. For I am ſure that you will not halt with me in any thing, although you be driven to accuſe your ſelf, and I know partly how this geare proceedeth, and if you handle the matter wiſely, you ſhall finde a prety conſpiracy deviſed againſt you. Whom will you have with you, ſaid the King? Whom it ſhall pleaſe your grace to name, quoth the Archbiſhop. I will appoint D. Belhouſe for one, name you the other, ſaid the King, meet for that purpoſe. My Chancellor, Doct. Coxe, and Huſſey my Regiſter, ſaid the Archbiſhop are men expert to examine ſuch troubleſome matters. Well, ſaid the King, let there be a Commiſſion made forth, and out of hand get you into Kent, and advertiſe me of your doings.

Commiſſioners appointed to Cranmer. D. Belhouſe, D. Coxe Chancellor, M. Huſſey Regiſter.

They came into Kent, and there they ſate about three weeks to boult out who was the firſt occaſion of this accuſation, for thereof the King would chiefly be advertiſed. Now the Inquiſition being begun by the Commiſſioners, every man ſhrunke in his hornes, and no man would confeſſe any thing to the purpoſe. For Doctor Coxe and Heſſey, being friendly unto the Papiſts, handled the matter ſo, that they would permit nothing materiall to come to light. This thing being well perceived by one of the Archbiſhops ſervants, his Secretarie, he wrote incontinently unto Doctor Buts, and Maſter Deny, declaring that if the Kings Maieſtie did not ſend ſome other to aſſiſt my Lord, than thoſe that then were there with him, it were not poſſible that any thing ſhould come to light: and therefore wiſhed that Doctor Lee or ſome other ſtout man that had been exerciſed in the Kings Eccleſiaſticall affaires in his Viſitations, might be ſent to the Archbiſhop. Upon theſe Letters Doctor Lee was ſent for to Yorke by the King, and having the Kings farther minde declared unto him, when he came to the Court, he reſorted incontinently into Kent, ſo that on All-hallow eeven he delivered to the Archbiſhop the Kings Ring, with a declaration of his Highneſſe farther pleaſure: and by and by upon his meſſage done, he appointed the Archbiſhop aforeſaid to name him a doſen or ſixteen of his officers and gentlemen, ſuch as had both diſcretion, wit, and audacitie, to whom he gave in Commiſſion from the King, to ſearch both the purſes, cheſts, and chambers of all thoſe that were deemed or ſuſpected to be of this conſederacie, both within the Cathedrall Church and without, and ſuch letters or writings as they could finde about them, to bring them to the Archbiſhop and him.

D. Coxe Chan. and M. Huſſey falſe to the Archbiſhop.

This Secretary was M. Ralph Morice witneſſe and drawer of this ſtory.

D. Lee of Yorke appointed Commiſſioner with the Archb. for trying out the conſpiracy.

Theſe men thus appointed, went in one houre and inſtant to the perſons houſes and places, that they were appointed unto; and within foure houres afterwards the whole conſpiracie was diſcloſed by finding of Letters, ſome from the Biſhop of Wincheſter, ſome from Doctor London at Oxford, and from Iuſtices of the Shire, with other; ſo that the firſt beginning, the proceeding, and what ſhould have been the end of their conſpiracie, was now made manifeſt. Certaine chambers and cheſts of Gentlemen of the Shire were alſo ſearched, where alſo were found letters ſerving to this purpoſe. Amongſt all other came to my Lords hands two letters, one of the Suffragan of Dover, and another of Doctor Barbar a Civilian, whom continually the Archb. reteined with him in houſhold for expedition of matters in ſute before him, as a counſellor in the Law when need required. Theſe two men being well promoted by the Archbiſhop, he uſed ever in ſuch familiaritie, that when the Suffragan, being a Prebend of Canterbury, came to him, he alwaies ſet him at his owne meſſe, and the other never from his table, as men in whom hee had much delight and comfort, when time of care and penſiveneſſe chanced. But that which they did, was altogether counterfeit, and the devill was turned into the Angel of light, for they were both of this confederacie.

The conſpiracy of the papiſts againſt the Archbiſh. found out. The Biſhop of Wincheſter, D. London, the Suffragan of Dover, D. Barbar, with certaine Iuſtices of Kent, chiefe conſpirers againſt the Archbiſhop.

Domeſticall enemies and conſpirers againſt their Maſter.

When my Lord had gotten theſe their letters into his hands, he on a day, when it chanced the Suffragan to come to him to his houſe at Bekiſburne, called to him into his ſtudy the ſaid Suffragan of Dover and Doctor Barbar, ſaying, Come your waies with me, for I muſt have your advice in a matter. When they were with him in his ſtudie altogether, he ſaid to them, you twain be men in whom I have had much confidence and truſt; you muſt now give me ſome good counſell, for I am ſhamefully abuſed with one or twaine to whom I have ſhewed all my ſecrets from time to time, and did truſt them as my ſelfe. The matter is ſo now fallen out, that they not onely have diſcloſed my ſecrets, but alſo have taken upon them to accuſe me of hereſie and are become witneſſes againſt me. I require you therefore of your good advice how I ſhall behave my ſelfe towards them. You are both my friends, and ſuch as I alwaies have uſed when I needed counſell. What ſay you to the matter, quoth the Archbiſhop?

Privy talke betweene the Archbiſhop and his Suffragan, and D. Barbar.

Mary, quoth Doctor Barbar, ſuch villaines and knaves (ſaving your honor) were worthie to be hanged out of hand without any other law. Hanging were too good, quoth the Suffragan, and if there lacked one to do execution, I would be hangman my ſelf.

The Suffragan and Civilian give iudgement againſt themſelves.

At theſe words, the Archbiſhop caſt up his hands to heaven, and ſaid, Oh Lord moſt mercifull God, whom may a man truſt now adaies? It is moſt true which is ſaid, Maledictus qui confidit in homine, & ponit carnem brachium ſuum. There was never man handled as I am: but O Lord thou haſt evermore defended me, and lent me one great friend and Maſter (meaning the King) without whoſe protection I were not able to ſtand upright one day unoverthrowne, I praiſe thy holy name therefore: and with that he pulled out of his boſome their two letters, and ſaid, Know yee theſe letters my Maſters? With that they fell down upon their knees, and deſired forgiveneſſe, declaring how they a yeere before were attempted to doe the ſame, and ſo very lamentably weeping and bewailing their doings, beſought his grace to pardon and forgive them. Well, ſaid the gentle Archbiſho, GOD make you both good men, I never deſerved this at your hands: but aske GOD forgiveneſſe, againſt whom you have highly offended. If ſuch men as you are not to be truſted, what ſhould I do alive? I perceive now, that there is no fidelitie or truſt amongſt men. I am brought to this point now, that I feare my left hand will accuſe my right hand. I need not much marvell hereat, for our Saviour Chriſt truely propheſied of ſuch a world to come in the latter dayes. I beſeech him of his great mercy to finiſh that time ſhortly, and ſo departing he diſmiſſed them both with gentle and comfortable words, in ſuch ſort that never after appeared in his countenance or words any remembrance thereof.

The falſe Suffragan, and Barbar the Civilian, aske the Archb. forgiveneſſe.

The Archb. forgiveth his enemies.

Now, when all thoſe letters and accuſations were found, they were put into a cheſt, the kings Maieſtie minding to have peruſed ſome of them, and to have partly puniſhed the Principals of it. The cheſt and writings were brought to Lambeth. At what time began the Parliament.

Lord what a do there was to procure the King a Subſidie, to the intent that thereupon might enſue a pardon, which indeed followed, and ſo nothing was done, other than their falſhood known. This was the laſt puſh of the pike that was inferred againſt the ſaid Archb. in King Henry the 8. his dayes: for never after durſt any man move matter againſt him in his time.

Rich. Turner a faithfull preacher in Kent. Papiſts ſet againſt the archbiſhop, by occaſion of Turners preaching.

And thus have ye both the working and diſcloſing of this Popiſh conſpiracy againſt this worthy Archbiſhop and Martyr of Chriſt, Thomas Cranmer. In the which conſpiracy, for ſo much as complaint was alſo made unto the King of his Chaplaines and good Preachers in Kent, it ſhall not be out of the ſtory ſomething likewiſe to touch thereof, eſpecially of Richard Turner then Preacher the ſame time in this Archbiſhops Dioceſſe, and Curate to Maſter Morice the Archbiſhops Secretary, in the Towne of Chartham, by whoſe diligent preaching a great part of this heart-burning of the Papiſts tooke his firſt kindling againſt the Archbiſhop. Touching the deſcription of which ſtorie, becauſe by me nothing ſhall be ſaid either more or leſſe, than is the truth, ye ſhall heare the very certaintie thereof truly compiled in a letter ſent the ſame time to Doctor Buts and Sir Anthony Deny, to be ſhewed unto the King, and ſo it was, written by the foreſaid Maſter Morice Secretary then to the Archbiſhop, farmour of the ſame benefice of Chartham, and Patrone to M. Turner there Miniſter and Preacher aforeſaid.

A letter or Apologie of Maſter Morice, ſent to Sir William Buts, and Sir Anthony Deny, defending the cauſe of M. Rich. Turner Preacher, againſt the Papiſts.

The letter firſt beginning in theſe words; I am certaine (Right worſhipfull) that it is not unknowne to your diſcreet wiſedome, &c. And after a few lines, coming to the matter, thus the ſaid letter proceedeth.

The troubles of Rich. Turner Miniſter at Chartham.

As your worſhips well know, it was my chance to be brought up under my L. of Canter. my maſter in writing of the Eccleſiaſtical affaires of this Realme, as well touching reformation of corrupt religion, as concerning the advancement of that pure and ſincere religion received by the doctrine of the Goſpel; which I take to be ſo ſubſtantially handled and builded upon the doctrine of the Prophets and Apoſtles, that hell gates ſhall never prevaile againſt it. The conſideration whereof compelled me, being a Farmer of the Parſonage of Chartham in Kent, to retain with me one named M. Rich. Turner, a man not only learned in the Scriptures of God, but alſo in converſation of life towards the world, irreprehenſible, whom for diſcharging of my conſcience I placed at Chartham aforeſaid to be Curate there. This man, becauſe he was a ſtranger in the Country there, and ſo thereby voyd of grudge or diſpleaſure of any old rancor in the countrey, I thought it had been a meane to have gotten him the better credit in his doctrine; but where malice once taketh fire againſt truth, no policie I ſee is able to quench it. Well, this man as he knew what appertained to his office, ſo he ſpared not weekly both Sundaies and Holidaies to open the Goſpel and Epiſtle unto his audience after ſuch a ſort, (when occaſion ſerved) that as well by his vehement inveying againſt the Biſhop of Romes uſurped power and authoritie, as in the earneſt ſetting forth and advancing of the Kings Majeſties ſupremacie, innumerable of the people of the countrey reſorting unto his Sermons, changed their opinions, and favored effectually the religion received. The confluence of the people ſo daily increaſed, that the church being a faire, ample, and large Church, was not now and then able to receive the number. The fame of this new inſtruction of the people was ſo blazed abroad, that the Popiſh prieſts were wonderfully amazed and diſpleaſed, to ſee their Pope ſo to be defaced, and their Prince ſo highly advanced.

M. Ralph Morice patrone of Rich. Turner Preacher.

The great concourſe of people to M. Turners Preaching.

Now thought they it is high time for us to work, or elſe all will here be utterly loſt by this mans preaching: ſome of them went with capons, ſome with hens, ſome with chickens, ſome with one thing, ſome with another, unto the Juſtices, ſuch as then favoured their cauſe and faction, and ſuch as are no ſmall fools, as ſir John Baker, ſir Chriſtopher Hales, ſir Thomas Moile, Knights; with other Juſtices. The prebendaries of Chriſts Church in Canterbury were made privie hereof, giving their ſuccour and aid thereunto. So that in concluſion poore Turner and other Preachers were grievouſly complained of unto the Kings Majeſtie. Whereupon my Lord of Canterburie and certain other Commiſſioners were appointed at Lambeth to ſit upon the examination of theſe ſeditious Preachers. Howbeit, before Turner went up to his examination, I obtained of ſir Thomas Moile, that he in Eaſter weeke was content to heare Turner preach a rehearſall ſermon in his pariſh Church at Weſtwell, of all the doctrine of his Sermons preached at his Cure in Chartham: which he moſt gently granting, heard Turner both before noone and after noone on the Wedneſday in Eaſter weeke laſt paſt, and (as it ſeemed took all things in good part, remitting Turner home to his ſaid Cure with gentle and favourable words. I ſuppoſed by this means to have ſtaied maſter Turner at home from further examination, hoping that ſir Thomas Moile would have anſwered for him at Lambeth before the Commiſſioners. Notwithſtanding, after maſter Moiles coming to London, ſuch information was laid in againſt Turner, that he was ſent for to make anſwer himſelfe before the ſaid Commiſſioners; and there appearing before them, he made ſuch an honeſt, perfect, and learned anſwer unto the Articles objected, that he was with a good exhortation diſcharged home againe, without any manner of recantation or other injunction.

Sir Jo. Baker, ſir Chriſtopher Hales, ſir Tho. Moile, Juſtices, with the prebendaries of Canterbury, perſecuters of Gods people.

M. Turner appearing before the Commiſſioners at Lambeth, was diſcharged and ſent home.

Now when the Pope-Catholique Clergie of Kent underſtood of his coming home without controlment, ſo that he preached as freely as he did before, againſt their blinde and dumbe ceremonies, ſtraightway by the help of the biſhop of Wincheſter Stephen Gardiner, they found a new means to put him to an utter confuſion, deviſing that he came home from examination in ſuch glorious pomp by the high waies ſide in the woods adjoyning, that 500. perſons met him then with banquetting diſhes to welcome him home, ſtirring the people rather to an uprore and a commotion, then to keep them in any quiet obedience: when in very deed contrary to this ſurmiſe (as God would) on this ſide Rocheſter a mile or two, for avoiding all ſuch light and glorious talk with any his familiars or acquaintance, he of purpoſe left the high way, and came thorow the woods all alone above 18. miles together on foot, ſo wearied and megered for want of ſuſtenance, that when he came into my houſe at Chartham, he was not well able to ſtand or ſpeak for faintneſſe and thirſt.

New matter made againſt Rich. Turner.

The practice of Papiſts to hold up their kingdome with lies.

This malicious tale being reported to the kings Highneſſe, his Majeſtie was ſo ſore aggrieved therewith, that he ſent for the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, willing him to cauſe Turner to be whipt out of the countrey. By means whereof, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſent again for Turner, I hearing thereof made incontinently report by my letters, with ſuch vehemencie proving it meere malice, that the Archbiſh. underſtanding the truth, pacified againe the Kings Majeſties wrath. Home cometh Turner once againe to his Cure without blot. Which ſo wrung the Papiſts, in that they could not prevaile, that they thought it all in vaine any further to attempt againſt him concerning any accuſation for matters in Kent, the Archb. of Canterbury being his Ordinary. Well, yet would they not thus leave him undiſcredited. Then was there one new matter deviſed, how that he had preached erroneous doctrine in other Countries before he came into Kent, laying to his charge that he had both tranſlated the Maſſe into Engliſh, and ſaid, or miniſtred the ſame, and that he had preached againſt Purgatorie, Pilgrimages, and praying for the dead, &c. By meanes whereof, he was now convented before the whole Councell by the Biſhop of Winch. who ſent Syriake Petite Gentleman for him, which brought him up to London bound (as I heard ſay) and being examined before the ſaid Biſhop of Wincheſter and others, he was committed to ward for a ſeaſon.

The King deceived by ſiniſter information.

New matter made againſt Rich. Turner.

In the which meane time, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, being in Kent about the triall of a conſpiracy purpoſed againſt himſelf by the Juſtices of the Shire, and the Prebendaries of Chriſts Church: Turner is now ſent downe to the Archbiſhop, to the intent he ſhould recant that doctrine which long ago he in other places out of Kent had preached, to the utter ſubverſion and defacing of all that he had moſt godly and earneſtly here in Kent taught both to the glorie of God, and the furtherance and ſetting forth of the Kings Highnes proceedings. If his Majeſtie will thus permit learned honeſt men thus daily to be overcrowned and trodden under foot with a ſort of tyrannous, or rather traiterous Papiſts (who cannot abide to heare his Majeſties ſupremacie advanced, nor the ſincere word of God preached) it were better for men to dwell amongſt the Infidels and miſcreants than in England.

Conſpiracy againſt the Archbiſhop Cranmer by the Juſtices of Kent.

What reaſon is this, that Turner ſhould recant here in Kent the doctrine which in other Countries he hath taught, to the wounding and overthrowing moſt deſperately of five hundred mens conſciences and above. (I dare ſay) who lately by his ſincere preaching have embraced a right good opinion both of the Kings ſupremacy, and alſo of the reformed Religion received? All good ſubjects may well lament the Kings Majeſties eſtate in this behalfe, that no man may dare to be ſo bold to advance his Highneſſe title, but that every ignorant and malicious Papiſt ſhall ſpurne againſt him, ſeeking his utter undoing, and that by the ayd of Papiſticall Juſtices ſet in authoritie. I beſeech your Worſhips to pardon me of my rude and homely termes. They herein deſerve worſe, if worſe may be deviſed. For what honeſt man can beare with this, that ſo Noble a Princes eares ſhall be thus impudently abuſed with manifeſt lies and fables, as this one is of Turners coming home in ſuch a triumph as they craftily and falſly had deviſed? It is eaſily to be ſpied what they meane and go about, that, the Prince being alive, dare take in hand ſo uncourteouſly to abuſe both the gentle nature of the Prince, and his godly Preacher, the advancer and extoller of his juſt authoritie.

What thinke your Worſhips they would attempt if his Majeſtie were at Gods mercie (as God forefend that ever any of us ſhould ſee that day, without better reformation) that can thus dally with his Highneſſe, blinding his eyes with myſts, whileſt he liveth & reigneth amongſt us in moſt proſperity? As for my L. of Cant. he dare nothing do for the poore mans delivery, he hath done ſo much for him already. And his grace hath told me plainly, that it is put into the Kings head, that he is the maintainer and ſupporter of all the heretiks within the Realme; nor will he permit me or my neighbors to reſort unto the Councell for his purgation while he was at Chartham, ſaving onely I have obtained this at his hand, that I may become a ſuter in writing to my friends and good maſters in the Court for his delivery.

And therefore it is (Right worſhipfull) that I have now taken pen in hand, thus to diſcourſe and open our miſerie unto you concerning the extreame handling of this honeſt poore man Maſter Turner, that, if it may poſſibly be brought to paſſe by your godly wiſedome, the poore man may be releaſed and diſcharged of his recantation; you cannot doe to God and your Prince a more acceptable ſervice in my poore opinion. For otherwiſe if he ſhould be driven to recant (as I am ſure he will ſooner dye) both Gods cauſe and the Kings ſhall ſuffer no ſmall detriment amongſt his poore loving ſubjects here. For if there be no better ſtay for the maintenance of theſe godly Preachers, the Kings authoritie concerning his Supremacie ſhall lye poſt alone hidden in the Act of Parliament, and not in the hearts of his Subjects.

If they can bring to paſſe that Turner may recant, to the defacing of his good doctrine preached here, then have they that for which they have thus long travelled. And yet in effect ſhall not Turner recant, but King Henrie the 8. in Turners perſon ſhall moſt odiouſly recant, to the wounding of all mens conſciences here. If the Kings Maieſtie do not eſteeme his authoritie given to his Highneſſe by Gods word and his Parliament; it were well done, that the Preachers had good warning to talke no more to the people thereof, rather than thus to be toſſed and turmoiled for doing their duties, by the members of Antichriſt.

And now to the intent that they might effectually for ever ſlander Turners doctrine here, they have indicted him for offending againſt the ſix articles, this laſt Seſſions, by the witneſſe of two Papiſts of the Pariſh of Chartham his utter enemies, Sanders and Browne by name, for a Sermon preached at Chartham on Paſſion Sunday, which chanced on S. Gregories even, they both being abſent that day at Wye faire, as it is well proved, namely, for that he preached againſt the maſſe: ſaying, that our Saviour Chriſt was the onely ſole Prieſt which ſung Maſſe on the altar of the Croſſe, there ſacrificing for the ſins of the world once for ever, and that all other Maſſes were but remembrances and thankſgiving for that one ſacrifice, or ſuch words in effect.

Sanders and Brown, two perſecuting Papiſts.

Wherefore, to conclude (Right worſhipfull) knowing your godly zeales, as well towards the preferment of ſincere Religion, as your no leſſe affection towards the King his Majeſties perſon and his godly proceedings, I moſt humbly beſeech you, in the bowels of our Saviour Chriſt, ſo to ponder the weightie conſideration of the premiſſes, as by your travels unto the Kings Majeſtie or to the honourable Councell, we here in Kent that have now of late our hearts bent towards the obſervation of the Law of God and the Prince through Turners godly perſwaſions, may receive from your Worſhips ſome comfortable words of his deliverance, or elſe certainly many an honeſt and ſimple man, lately imbracing the truth, may perhaps fall away deſperately from the ſame, not without danger of their ſouls. In accompliſhing whereof your Worſhips ſhall not onely doe unto Almightie God and the Prince moſt true and acceptable ſervice, but alſo bind the ſaid M. Turner, with all other to whom this cauſe doth appertaine, both daily to pray for your proſperities, and alſo to be at your commandements during their lives. From Canterburie the ſecond day of November.

Your worſhips evermore at commandment, R. M.

And thus much containeth the letter ſent (as is ſaid) by Maſter Morice to Doctor Buts and Sir Anthonie Deny. Now, what ſucceſſe and ſpeed this letter had, it followeth to be declared. For Doctor Buts the Kings Phyſician aforeſaid, after the receit of theſe letters, conſidering the weightie contents of the ſame, as he was ever a forward friend in the Goſpels cauſe, ſo he thought not to foreſlack this matter to the uttermoſt of his diligence, and ſo ſpying his time, when the King was in trimming and in waſhing (as his manner was at certaine times to call for his Barbar) Doctor Buts (whoſe manner was at ſuch times ever to be preſent, and with ſome pleaſant conceits to refreſh and ſolace the Kings minde) brought with him in his hand this letter. The King asking what news, Doctor Buts pleaſantly and merrily beginneth to inſinuate unto the King the effect of the matter, and ſo at the Kings commandement read out the letter; which when the King had heard, and pauſed a little with himſelf upon the ſame, commanded again the letter to be read unto him. The hearing and conſideration whereof ſo altered the Kings minde, that where as before he commanded the ſaid Turner to be whipped out of the countrey, he now commanded him to be retained as a faithfull ſubject. And here of that matter an end. Let us now returne to the Archbiſhop again.

The Kings favour reconciled again to M. Turner.

Who although he was compaſſed about (as is ſaid) with mightie enemies, and by many craftie traines impugned, yet through Gods more mightie providence, working in the Kings heart ſo to favour him, he rubbed out all King Henries time without blemiſh or foile, by means of the Kings ſupportation; who not onely defended the ſaid Archbiſhop againſt all his conſpired adverſaries, but alſo extended ſuch ſpeciall favour unto him in ſuch ſort, that he being not ignorant of his wife, whom he had married before at Noremberge, (being Niece to the wife of Oſiander) keeping her alſo all their ſix Articles time contrary to the law, notwithſtanding he both permitted the ſame, and kept his counſell.

This Archb. married his ſecond wife at Noremberge.

Then after the death of K. Henry, immediately ſucceeded his ſon K. Edward, under whoſe government and protection the ſtate of this Archb. being his Godfather, was nothing impaired, but rather more advanced.

During all this meane time of K. Henry aforeſaid, untill the entring of K. Edward, it ſeemeth that Cranmer was ſcarcely yet throughly perſwaded in the right knowledge of the Sacrament, or at leaſt, was not yet fully ripened in the ſame: wherein ſhortly after he being more groundedly confirmed by conference with Biſhop Ridley, in proceſſe of time did ſo profit in more ripe knowledge, that at laſt he tooke upon him the defence of that whole doctrine, that is, to refute and throw down firſt the corporall preſence; ſecondly, the fantaſticall Tranſubſtantiation; thirdly, the Idolatrous adoration, fourthly, the falſe error of the Papiſts, that wicked men do eate the naturall body of Chriſt; and laſtly, the blaſphemous ſacrifice of the Maſſe. Whereupon in concluſion he wrote five books for the publique inſtruction of the Church of England, which inſtruction yet to this day ſtandeth and is received in this Church of England.

The true and godly doctrin of the ſacrament in five books ſet forth by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Againſt theſe five books of the Archbiſhop, Stephen Gardiner, the arch enemie to Chriſt and his Goſpel, being then in the Tower, ſlubbereth up a certain anſwer ſuch as it was, which he in open Court exhibited up at Lambeth, being there examined by the Archbiſhop aforeſaid and other the Kings Commiſſioners in King Edwards daies, which book was intituled, An explication and aſſertion of the true Catholike faith, touching the bleſſed ſacrament of the altar, with a confutation of a book written againſt the ſame.

An explication of Steph. Gardiner againſt Cranmer arch. of Canterbury.

Againſt this Explication, or rather a cavilling ſophiſtication of Stephen Gardiner Doctor of Law, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury learnedly and copiouſly replying againe, maketh anſwer, which alſo he publiſhed abroad to the eyes and judgements of all men in print. All which writings and books, as well of the one part as of the other, our preſent ſtory would require here to be inſerted, but becauſe to proſecute the whole matter at length will not be comprehended in a ſmall roome, and may make too long tariance in our ſtory, it ſhall therefore be beſt to put off the ſame unto the place of the Appendix following, wherein the Lord willing) we intend to cloſe up both theſe, and divers other Treatiſes of theſe learned Martyrs, as to this our ſtory ſhall appertain.

The anſwer of D. Cranmer Archb. of Cant. againſt Steph. Gardiner.

The unquiet ſpirit of Stephen Gardiner being not yet contented, after all this thruſteth out another book in Latine of the like Popiſh argument, but after another title, named Marcus Antonius Conſtantinus. Whereunto firſt the Archbiſhop againe intending a full confutation, had already abſolved three parts of his anſwer lying in priſon. Of the which parts two periſhed in Oxford; the other yet remaineth in my hands ready to be ſeen and ſet forth, as the Lord ſhall ſee good. Alſo Biſhop Ridley lying likewiſe the ſame time in priſon having there the ſaid book of Marcus Antonius, for lack of pen and paper, with a Lead of a window in the Margent of the Booke wrote annotations, as ſtraightneſſe of time would ſerve him, in refutation of the ſame book. And finally, becauſe theſe worthy Martyrs had neither libertie nor leaſure to goe through with that travell, that which lacked in them, for accompliſhment of that behalfe, was ſupplyed ſhortly after by Peter Martyr, who abundantly and ſubſtantially hath overthrowne that Booke in his learned Defenſion of the truth, againſt the falſe ſophiſtication of Marcus Antonius aforeſaid.

Marcus Antonius written by S. Gardiner.

Archb. of Cant. about to anſwer to Marcus Antonius.

Notes of D. Ridley againſt Marcus Antonius.

Peter Martyrs book of defence againſt Marcus Antonius.

Beſides theſe books above cited of this Archbiſhop, divers other things there were alſo of his doing, as the Book of the Reformation, the Catechiſme, with the Booke of Homilies, whereof part was by him contrived, part by his procurement approved and publiſhed. Whereunto alſo may be adjoyned another writing or confutation of his againſt 88. Articles by the Convocation deviſed & propounded, but yet not ratified nor received, in the reigne and time of K. Henrie the 8.

And thus much hitherto concerning the doings and travels of this Archbiſhop of Canterbury during the lives both of K. Henry, and of K. Edward his ſon. Which two Kings ſo long as they continued, this Archbiſhop lacked no ſtay of maintenance againſt all his maligners.

Afterward, this K. Edward, a Prince of moſt worthy towardneſſe falling ſick, when he perceived that his death was at hand, and the force of his painfull diſeaſe would not ſuffer him to live longer, and knowing that his ſiſter Marie was wholly wedded to Popiſh Religion, bequeathed the ſucceſſion of this Realme to the Ladie Jane (a Ladie of great birth, but of greater learning, being Niece to King Henry the eighth by his ſiſter) by conſent of the Councell and Lawyers of this Realme. To this Teſtament of the Kings, when all the Nobles of the Realme, States and Judges had ſubſcribed; they ſent for the Archbiſhop, and required him that he alſo would ſubſcribe. But he excuſing himſelf on this manner, ſaid, that it was otherwiſe in the Teſtament of King Henry his father, and that he had ſworn to the ſucceſſion of Marie, as then the next heire, by which oath he was ſo bound, that without manifeſt perjury he could not go from it. The Councel anſwered, that they were not ignorant of that, and that they had conſcience as well as he, and moreover that they were ſworne to that teſtament, and therefore he ſhould not think there was any danger therein, or that he ſhould be in more perill of perjury than the reſt.

Cranmer refuſeth to ſweare to Lady Jane.

To this the Archbiſhop anſwered, that he was Judge of no mans conſcience but his own: and therefore as he would not be prejudiciall to others, ſo he would not commit his conſcience unto other mens facts, or caſt himſelf into danger, ſeeing that every man ſhould give account of his own conſcience, and not of other mens. And as concerning ſubſcription, before he had ſpoken with the King himſelfe, he utterly refuſed to do it.

The King therefore being demanded of the Archbiſhop concerning this matter, ſaid, that the Nobles and Lawyers of the Realme counſelled him unto it, and perſwaded him that the bond of the firſt teſtament could nothing let, but that this Lady Jane might ſucceed him as heire, and the people without danger acknowledge her as their Queene. Who then demanding leave of the King, that he might firſt talke with certaine Lawyers that were in the Court; when they all agreed that by Law of the Realme it might be ſo, returning to the King, with much adoe he ſubſcribed.

Cranmer through the perſwaſion of the Councell, the King and Lawyers, ſubſcribed to K. Edwards teſtament.

Well, not long after this, King Edward dyed, being almoſt ſixteene yeers old, to the great ſorrow, but greater calamitie of the whole Realme. After whoſe deceaſe immediately it was commanded that the Lady Jane (which was unwilling thereunto) ſhould be proclaimed Queene. Which thing much miſliked the common people; not that they did ſo much favour Marie, before whom they ſaw the Lady Jane preferred, as for the hatred conceived againſt ſome, whom they could not favour.

Beſides this, other cauſes there happened alſo of diſcord between the Nobles and the Commons the ſame time: for what injuries of commons and encloſures wrongfully holden, with other inordinate pollings & uncharitable dealing between the landlords and tenants, I cannot tell. But in fine, thus the matter fell out, that Mary hearing of the death of her brother, and ſhifting for her ſelf, was ſo aſſiſted by the Commons, that eftſoones ſhe prevailed. Who, being eſtabliſhed in the poſſeſſion of the Realme, not long after came to London, and after ſhe had cauſed firſt the two fathers, the Duke of Northumberland and the Duke of Suffolke to be executed (as is above remembred) likewiſe ſhe cauſed the Lady Jane being both in age tender, and innocent from this crime, after ſhe could by no means be turned from the conſtancie of her faith, together with her husband to be beheaded.

The reſt of the Nobles paying fines were forgiven, the Archb. of Cant. onely excepted. Who though he deſired pardon (by means of his friends) could obtain none; inſomuch that the Queen would not once vouchſafe to ſee him. For as yet the old grudge againſt the Archb. for the divorcement of her mother, remained hid in the bottom of her heart. Beſides this divorce, ſhe remembred the ſtate of religion changed; all which was imputed to the Archbiſhop as the cauſe thereof.

Manet alta mente repoſtum Iudicium Paridis, ſpretæq; injuria matris. Virg. Æneid. 1.

While theſe things were in doing, a rumor was in all mens mouthes, that the Archbiſhop, to curry favour with the Queene, had promiſed to ſay a Dirge Maſſe after the old cuſtome, for the funerall of King Edward her brother. Neither wanted there ſome which reported that he had already ſaid Maſſe at Canterbury; which Maſſe indeed was ſaid by Doctor Thornton. This rumor Cranmer thinking ſpeedily to ſtay, gave forth a writing of his purgation: the tenor whereof being before expreſſed, I need not here again to recite.

This Doctor Thornton was after the B. of Dover, a cruell and wicked perſecutor.

This bill being thus written, and lying openly in a window in his chamber, cometh in by chance Maſter Storie, Biſhop then of Rocheſter, who after he had read and peruſed the ſame, required of the Archbiſhop to have a copy of the bill. The Archbiſhop when he had granted and permitted the ſame to Maſter Storie, by the occaſion thereof Maſter Storie lending it to ſome friend of his, there were divers copies taken out thereof, and the thing publiſhed abroad among the common people; inſomuch that every Scriveners ſhop almoſt, was occupied in writing and copying out the ſame: and ſo at length ſome of theſe copies coming to the Biſhops hands, and ſo brought to the Councell, and they ſending it to the Commiſſioners, the matter was known, and ſo he commanded to appeare.

Whereupon D. Cranmer at his day prefixed, appeared before the ſaid Commiſſioners, bringing a true Inventorie, as he was commanded, of all his goods. That done, a Biſhop of the Queenes privy Councell, being one of the ſaid Commiſſioners, after the inventorie was received, bringing in mention of the bill; My Lord (ſaid he) there is a bill put forth in your name, wherein you ſeem to be agrieved with ſetting up the Maſſe againe; we doubt not but you are ſorie that it is gone abroad.

This Biſhop was D. Heath Biſhop after of Yorke.

To whom the Archbiſhop anſwered againe, ſaying, as I do not deny my ſelfe to be the very Author of that bill or letter, ſo muſt I confeſſe here unto you, concerning the ſame bill, that I am ſory that the ſaid bill went from me in ſuch ſort as it did. For when I had written it, M. Storie got the copie of me, and is now come abroad, and as I underſtand, the Citie is full of it. For which I am ſorie, that it ſo paſſed my hands: for I had intended otherwiſe to have made it in a more large and ample manner, and minded to have ſet it on Pauls Church doore, and on the doores of all the Churches in London, with mine own ſeale joyned thereto.

At which words, when they ſaw the conſtantneſſe of the man, they diſmiſſed him, affirming they had no more at that preſent to ſay unto him, but that ſhortly he ſhould heare further. The ſaid Biſhop declared afterward to one of Doctor Cranmers friends, that notwithſtanding his attainder of treaſon, the Queenes determination at that time was, that Cranmer ſhould onely have beene deprived of his Archbiſhoprick, and have had a ſufficient living aſſigned him, upon his exhibiting of a true inventorie, with commandement to keep his houſe without medling in matters of Religion. But how true that was, I have not to ſay. This is certaine, that not long after this, he was ſent unto the Tower, and ſoone after condemned of treaſon. Notwithſtanding the Queene, when ſhe could not honeſtly deny him his pardon, ſeeing all the reſt were diſcharged, and ſpecially, ſeeing he laſt (of all other) ſubſcribed to King Edwards requeſt, and that againſt his own will, releaſed to him his action of Treaſon, and accuſed him onely of hereſie; which liked the Archbiſhop right well, and came to paſſe as he wiſhed, becauſe the cauſe was not his owne, but Chriſts; not the Queenes, but the Churches. Thus ſtood the cauſe of Cranmer, till at length it was determined by the Queene and the Councell, that he ſhould be removed from the Tower where he was priſoner, to Cranmer condemned of treaſon.

Cranmer releaſed of treaſon, and accuſed of hereſie.

Oxford.

Cranmer had to Oxford.

Oxford, there to diſpute with the Doctors and Divines. And privily word was ſent before to them of Oxford to prepare themſelves, and make them readie to diſpute. And although the Queene and the biſhops had concluded before what ſhould become of him, yet it pleaſed them that the matter ſhould be debated with arguments, that under ſome honeſt ſhew of diſputation the murther of the man might be covered. Neither could their haſty ſpeed of revengement abide any long delay; and therefore in all haſte he was carried to Oxford.

What this diſputation was, and how it was handled, what were the queſtions and reaſons on both ſides, and alſo touching his condemnation by the Univerſitie and the Prolocutor, becauſe ſufficiently it hath been declared, we minde now therefore to proceed to his finall judgement and order of condemnation, which was the 12. day of September, Anno 1555. and ſeven dayes before the condemnation of Biſhop Ridley and Maſter Latimer, as is above foretouched. The ſtorie whereof here followeth, faithfully corrected by the report and narration (coming by chance to our hands) of one who being both preſent thereat, and alſo a devout favourer of the See and faction of Rome, can lack no credit (I trowe) with ſuch, which ſeek what they can to diſcredit whatſoever maketh not with their phantaſied Religion of Rome.

D. Brooks, D. Martin, D. Story, commiſſioners againſt the Archbiſhop. D. Martin not ſo bitter in this perſecution, as other Commiſſioners were.

After the diſputations done and finiſhed in Oxford between the Doctors of both Univerſities, and the three worthy Biſhops, Doctor Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, ye heard then how ſentence condemnatorie immediately upon the ſame was miniſtred againſt them by Doctor Weſton and other of the Univerſitie; whereby they were judged to be heretiques, and ſo committed to the Maior and Sheriffes of Oxford. But foraſmuch as the ſentence given againſt them was void in law (for at that time the authoritie of the Pope was not yet received into the land) therefore was a new Commiſſion ſent from Rome, and a new Proceſſe framed for the conviction of theſe reverend and godly learned men aforeſaid. In which Commiſſion, firſt was Doctor James Brooks Biſhop of Gloceſter the Popes Subdelegate, with Doctor Martin, and Doctor Storie, Commiſſioners in the King and Queens behalf, for the execution of the ſame. Of the which three Commiſſioners above named, as touching Doctor Martin, this by the way is to be underſtood, that although he was uſed for an inſtrument of the Popes ſide, to ſerve a turn (whoſe book alſo is extant againſt the lawfull marriage of Prieſts) yet notwithſtanding neither was he ſo bitter an enemy in this perſecution, as other Commiſſioners were; and alſo in this time of Queene Elizabeth, where divers other Doctors of the Arches refuſed to be ſworn againſt the Pope, he denied not the oath; and yet notwithſtanding not altogether here to be excuſed. But to the purpoſe of this ſtorie. Whereof firſt it ſhall be requiſite to declare the circumſtance, and the whole ſtate of the matter, as in a generall deſcription, before we come to their Orations, according as in a parcell of a certain letter touching the ſame, it came to our hands.

The order of ſetting and placing the Commiſſioners.

Imprimis, here is to be underſtood, that at the coming down of the foreſaid Commiſſioners, which was upon Thurſday, the 12. of September, Anno 1555. in the Church of S. Marie, and in the Eaſt end of the ſaid Church at the high Altar, was erected a ſolemne Scaffold for Biſhop Brooks aforeſaid, repreſenting the Popes perſon, ten foot high. The ſeat was made that he might ſit under the ſacrament of the Altar. And on the right hand of the Popes Delegate beneath him ſat Doctor Martin, and on the left hand ſat Doctor Storie the King and Queenes Commiſſioners, which were both Doctors of the Civill Law, and underneath them other Doctors, Scribes, and Phariſees alſo, with the Popes Collector, and a rabblement of ſuch other like.

The appearing of the Archbiſh. of Canterbury before the Commiſſioners.

And thus theſe Biſhops being placed in their Pontificalibus, the Biſhop of Canterbury was ſent for to come before them. He having intelligence of them that were there, thus ordered himſelf. He came forth of the priſon to the Church of ſaint Marie, ſet forth with bils and gleves for fear he ſhould ſtart away, being clothed in a faire black gown, with his hood on both ſhoulders, ſuch as Doctors of Divinitie in the Univerſitie uſe to weare. Who, after he was come into the Church, and did ſee them ſit in their Pontificalibus, he did not put off his cap to any of them, but ſtood ſtill till that he was called. And anon one of the Proctors for the Pope, or elſe his Doctor, called Thomas Archbiſhop of Canterbury, appeare here and make anſwer to that ſhall be laid to thy charge; that is to ſay, for blaſphemy, incontinencie, and hereſie; and make anſwer here to the Biſhop of Gloceſter, repreſenting the Popes perſon.

The Archbiſh. giveth reverence to the Queens commiſſioners. D. Cranmer ſheweth no reverence to the Popes Delegate.

Upon this he being brought more neere unto the Scaffold, where the foreſaid Biſhop ſat, he firſt well viewed the place of judgement, and ſpying where the King and Queens Majeſties Proctors were, putting off his cap, he firſt humbly bowing his knee to the ground, made reverence to the one, and after to the other.

That done, beholding the Biſhop in the face, he put on his bonet again, making no manner of token of obedience towards him at all. Whereat the Biſhop being offended, ſaid unto him, that it might beſeem him right well, weighing the authoritie he did repreſent, to do his duty unto him. Whereunto Doctor Cranmer anſwered and ſaid, that he had once taken a ſolemne oath, never to conſent to the admitting of the biſhop of Romes authoritie into this Realme of England again; and that he had done it adviſedly, and meant by Gods grace to keep it; and therefore would commit nothing either by ſigne or token, which might argue his conſent to the receiving of the ſame, and ſo he deſired the ſaid Biſhop to judge of him, and that he did it not for any contempt to his perſon, which he could have been content to have honoured as well as any of the other, if his Commiſſion had come from as good an authoritie as theirs. This anſwered he both modeſtly, wiſely, and patiently, with his cap on his head, not once bowing or making any reverence to him that repreſented the Popes perſon, which was wonderouſly of the people marked that was there preſent and ſaw it, and marked it as nigh as could be poſſible.

The Oration of Doctor Brooks Biſhop of Gloceſter, unto Doctor Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in the Church of ſaint Mary at Oxford, Anno 1556. March 12.

The Oration of D. Brooks.

VVHen after many means uſed, they perceived that the Archbiſhop would not move his bonet, the Biſhop proceeded in theſe words following.

My Lord, at this preſent we are come to you as Commiſſioners, and for you, not intruding our ſelves by our own authoritie, but ſent by Commiſſion, partly from the Popes holineſſe, partly from the King and Queenes moſt excellent Majeſties, not to your utter diſcomfort, but to your comfort if you will your ſelf. We come not to judge you, but to put you in remembrance of that you have been, and ſhall be. Neither come we to diſpute with you, but to examine you in certain matters; which being done, to make relation thereof to him that hath power to judge you. The firſt being well taken, ſhall make the ſecond to be well taken. For if you of your part be moved to come to a conformitie, then ſhall not onely we of our ſide take joy of our examination, but alſo they that have ſent us.

And firſt, as charitie doth move us, I would think good ſomewhat to exhort you, and that by the ſecond chapter of ſaint John in the Apoc. Memor eſto unde excideris, & age pœnitentiam, & prima opera fac. Sin minus, i. Remember from whence thou art fallen, and do the firſt works, or if not, and ſo as ye know what followeth. Remember your ſelf from whence you have fallen. You have fallen from the univerſall and Catholique church of Chriſt, from the verie true and received faith of all Chriſtendome, and that by open hereſie. You have fallen from your promiſe to God, from your fidelitie and allegiance, and that by open preaching, marriage, and adulterie. You have fallen from your Soveraign Prince and Queen by open treaſon. Remember therefore from whence you are fallen. Your fall is great, the danger cannot be ſeen. Wherefore when I ſay, remember from whence you are fallen, I put you in minde not onely of your fall, but alſo of the ſtate you were in before your fall. You were ſometime, as I and other poore men, in a mean eſtate, God I take to witneſſe, I ſpeak it to no reproach or abaſement of you, but to put you in memorie, how God hath called you from a lowe to an high degree, from one degree to another, from better to better, and never gave you over, till he had appointed you Legatum natum, Metropolitanum Angliæ, Paſtorem gregis ſui. Such great truſt did he put you in, in his Church, What could he do more? for even as he ordained Moſes to be a ruler over his Church of Iſrael, and gave him full authoritie upon the ſame: ſo did he make you over his Church of England. And when did he this for you? forſooth when you gave no occaſion or cauſe of miſtruſt either to him, or to his Magiſtrates. For although it be conjectured, that in all your time ye were not upright in the honour and faith of Chriſt, but rather ſet up of purpoſe as a fit inſtrument, whereby the Church might be ſpoiled and brought into ruin; yet may it appeare by many your doings otherwiſe, and I for my part, as it behoveth each one of us, ſhall think the beſt. For who was thought as then more devout? who was more religious in the face of the world? Who was thought to have more conſcience of a vow making, and obſerving the order of the Church, more earneſt in the defence of the reall preſence of Chriſts bodie and blood in the ſacrament of the altar then ye were? and then all things proſpered with you; your Prince favoured you; yea God himſelf favoured you; your candleſtick was ſet up in the higheſt place of the Church, and the light of your candle was over all the Church; I would God it had ſo continued ſtill.

Apoc. 2.

Hereſie, adultery, and treaſon laid to Doctor Cranmer.

The high eſtate of Doct. Cranmer, ſometime Archbiſhop. of Canterbury.

But after ye began to fall by ſchiſme, and would not acknowledge the Popes holineſſe as ſupreme head, but would ſtoutly uphold the unlawfull requeſts of King Henrie the eighth, and would bear with that ſhould not be born withall, then began you to fanſie unlawfull libertie, and when you had exiled a good conſcience, then enſued great ſhipwrack in the Sea, which was out of the true and Catholique Church caſt into the Sea of deſperation; for as he ſaith; Extra Eccleſiam non eſt ſalus, i. Without the Church there is no ſalvation. When ye had forſaken God, God forſook you, and gave you over to your own will, and ſuffered you to fall from ſchiſme to Apoſtaſie, from Apoſtaſſe to hereſie, and from hereſie to perjurie, from perjurie to treaſon, and ſo in concluſion, into the full indignation of our Soveraigne Prince, which you may think a juſt puniſhment of God, for your other abominable opinions.

After that, ye fell lower and lower, and now to the loweſt degree of all, to the end of honour and life. For if the light of your candle be as it hath been hitherto duſkey, your candleſtick is like to be removed, and have a great fall, ſo lowe, and ſo far out of knowledge, that it ſhall be quite out of Gods favour, and paſt all hope of recoverie: Quia in inferno nulla eſt redemptio, i. For in hell there is no redemption. The danger whereof being ſo great, verie pitie cauſeth me to ſay; Memor eſto unde excideris, i. Remember from whence thou haſt fallen. I adde alſo, and whither you fall.

But here peradventure you will ſay to me, what ſir, my fall is not ſo great as you make it. I have not yet fallen from the Catholike Church. For that is not the Catholique Church that the Pope is head of. There is another Church. But as touching that, I anſwer; You are ſure of that as the Donatiſts were, for they ſaid that they had the true Church, and that the name of true Chriſtians remained onely in Africk, where onely their ſeditious ſect was preached: and as you thinke, ſo thought Novatus, that all they that did acknowledge their ſupreme head at the See of Rome, were out of the Church of Chriſt. But here Saint Cyprian defending Cornelius againſt Novatus, Libro ſecundo, Epiſtola ſexta, ſaith on this wiſe; Eccleſia una eſt, quæ cum ſit una, intus & foris eſſe non poteſt. So that if Novatus were in the true Church, then was not Cornelius, who indeed by lawfull ſucceſſion ſucceeded Pope Fabian. Here Saint Cyprian intendeth by the whole proceſſe to prove, and concludeth thereupon, that the true Church was onely Rome. Gather you then what will follow of your fall. But you will ſay peradventure, that you fell not by hereſie, and ſo ſaid the Arrians, alledging for themſelves that they had Scripture, and going about to perſwade their Schiſme by Scripture; for indeed they had more places by two and fourtie, which by their torture ſeemed to depend upon Scripture, then the Catholiques had.

Cyprian li. 2. Epiſt. 6.

So did the Martians provoke their hereſie to Scripture. But thoſe are no Scriptures; for they are not truly alledged, nor truly interpreted, but untruly wreſted and wrong, according to their owne fantaſies. And therefore were they all juſtly condemned, for their wrong taking of the Scriptures, and the Church replieth againſt them, ſaying; Qui eſtis vos? quandò? quid agitis in meo, non mei? The Church ſaith, What make you here in my heritage? from whence came you? the Scripture is mine inheritance; I am right heire thereof. I hold it by true ſucceſſion of the Apoſtles: for as the Apoſtles required me to hold, ſo do I hold it. The Apoſtles have received me, and put me in my right, and have rejected you as baſtards, having no title thereunto.

Provoking to the Scripture.

Alſo ye will denie that ye have fallen by Apoſtaſie, by breaking your vow; and ſo Vigilantius ſaid, inſomuch that he would admit none to his Miniſterie, but thoſe that had their wives bagged with children. What now? Shall we ſay that Vigilantius did not fall therefore? Did not Donatus and Novatus fall, becauſe they ſaid ſo, and brought Scripture for their defence? Then let us beleeve as we liſt, pretending well, and ſay ſo; nay, there is no man ſo blinde that will ſay ſo. For except the Church which condemneth them for their ſay ſo, do approve us for to do ſo, then will ſhe condemne you alſo. So that your deniall will not ſtand. And therefore I tell you, remember from whence ye are fallen, and how long ye ſhall fall, if you hold on as you do begin. But I truſt you will not continue, but revoke your ſelfe in time, and the remedie followeth.

“ Age pœnitentiam, & prima opera fac, for by ſuch meanes as ye have fallen, ye muſt riſe again. Firſt, your heart hath fallen, then your tongue and your pen, and beſides your owne damage hath cauſed many more to fall. Therefore, firſt your heart muſt turne, and then ſhall the tongue and the pen be quickly turned; Sin minus, veniam tibi cito, & movebo Candelabrum tuum de loco ſuo.

“That is, repent, and do thy firſt works.

I need not to teach you a method to turn; you know the readie way your ſelfe. But I would God I could but exhort you to the right and truth, then the way ſhould ſoone be found out. For if ye remember how many ye have brought by abominable hereſie into the way of perdition, I doubt not but verie conſcience would move you, as much for them as for your ſelf, to come again. And ſo would you ſpare neither tongue nor pen, if heart were once reformed; for as touching that point, the holy Ghoſt toucheth their hearts verie neere by the mouth of his holy Prophet Ezekiel, when he requireth the blood of his flock at the Prieſts hands, for lack of good and wholſome food. How much more ſhould this touch your guiltie heart, having overmuch diligence to teach them the way of perdition, and feeding them with baggage and corrupt food, which is hereſie. Qui convertere fecerit peccatorem ab errore vitæ ſuæ, ſalvam faciet animam ſuam à morte, & operiet multitudinem peccatorum ſuorum, i. He that ſhall convert a ſinner from his wicked life, ſhall ſave his ſoule from death, and ſhall cover the multitude of ſins. So that if it be true that he, who converteth a ſinner, ſaveth a ſoul; then the contrarie muſt needs be true, that he that perverteth a ſoul, and teacheth him the way of perdition, muſt needs be damned.

Ezech. 33.

Origines ſuper Paulum ad Romanos; The damnation of thoſe that preach hereſie doth increaſe to the day of judgement. The more that periſh by hereticall doctrine, the more grievous ſhall their torment be, that miniſter ſuch doctrine. Berengarius who ſeemed to fear that danger, provided for it in his life time, but not without a troubled and diſquiet conſcience. He did not onely repent, but recant, and not ſo much for himſelf, as for them whom he had with moſt peſtilent hereſies infected. For as he lay in his death-bed upon Epiphany day, he demanded of them that were preſent, Is this (quoth he) the day of Epiphany, and appearing of the Lord? They anſwered him, Yea. Then (quoth he) this day ſhall the Lord appeare to me, either to my comfort, either to my diſcomfort. This remorſe argueth, that he feared the danger of them whom he had taught, and led out of the faith of Chriſt. Origines upon him ſaith in this wiſe; Although his own blood was not upon his head, for that he did repent, and was ſorie for his former errors, yet being converted, he feared the blood of them whom he had infected, and who received his doctrine.

Orig. in Epiſt. Paul. ad Rom.

Berengarius.

Let this move you even at the laſt point. Inſomuch as your caſe is not unlike to Berengarius, let your repentance be like alſo. And what ſhould ſtay you (tell me) from this godly return? fear, that ye have gone ſo far, ye may not return? nay, then I may ſay as David ſaid; Illic trepidaverunt ubi non erat timor, Ye fear where ye have no cauſe to fear. For if ye repent and be heartily ſorie for your former hereſie and apoſtaſie, ye need not to fear. For as God of his part is mercifull and gracious to the repentant ſinner, ſo is the King, ſo is the Queen mercifull, which ye may well perceive by your own caſe, ſince ye might have ſuffered a great whiles ago for treaſon committed againſt her Highneſſe, but that ye have been ſpared and reſerved upon hope of amendment, which ſhe conceived verie good of you, but now (as it ſeemeth) is but a very deſperate hope. And what do you thereby? Secundum duritiem cordis theſaurizas tibi iram in die iræ, i. According to the hardneſſe of your heart ye treaſure up to your ſelf anger in the day of wrath.

Well, what is it then, if fear do not hinder you? Shame, to unſay that that you have ſaid? Nay, it is no ſhame, unleſſe ye think it ſhame to agree with the true and the Catholique Church of Chriſt. And if that be ſhame, then blame S. Paul who perſecuted the Diſciples of Chriſt with the ſword; then blame ſaint Peter, who denied his Maſter Chriſt with an oath, that he never knew him. Saint Cyprian before his return being a Witch; Saint Auſten being nine yeers out of the Church: They thought it no ſhame after their return of that they had returned. Shall it then be ſhame for you to convert and conſent with the Church of Chriſt? no, no.

What is it then that doth let you? Glorie of the world? nay, as for the vanitie of the world, I for my part judge not in you, being a man of learning, and knowing your eſtate.

And as for the loſſe of your eſtimation, it is ten to one that where you were Archbiſhop of Canterburie, and Metropolitane of England, it is ten to one (I ſay) that ye ſhall be as well ſtill, yea and rather better.

And as for the winning of good men, there is no doubt but all that be here preſent, and the whole congregation of Chriſts Church alſo will more rejoyce of your return, then they were ſorie for your fall. And as for the other, ye need not to doubt, for they ſhall all come after; and to ſay the truth, if you ſhould loſe them for ever it were no force, ye ſhould have no loſſe thereby at all. I do not here touch them which ſhould confirm your eſtimation. For as St. Paul after his converſion was received into the Church of Chriſt, with wonderfull joy to the whole congregation, even ſo ſhall you be. The fame of your return ſhall be ſpread abroad throughout all Chriſtendome, where your face was never known.

But you will ſay perhaps, your conſcience will not ſuffer you. My Lord, there is a good conſcience, and there is a bad conſcience. The good conſcience have not they, as ſaint Paul declareth to Timothy concerning Hymeneus and Alexander. The evil and bad conſcience is (ſaith ſaint Cyprian) well to be known by his mark. What mark? This conſcience is marked with the print of hereſie. This conſcience is a naughtie, filthie, and a branded conſcience, which I truſt is not in you. I have conceived a better hope of you then ſo, or elſe would I never go about to perſwade or exhort you. But what conſcience ſhould ſtay you to return to the Catholique faith and univerſall Church of Chriſt? what conſcience doth ſeparate you to that deviliſh and ſeverall Church? to a libertie which never had ground in the holy Scriptures? If you judge your libertie to be good, then judge you all Chriſtendome to do evill beſides you.

A good conſcience.

Mark of an evill conſcience.

O what a preſumptuous perſwaſion is this, upon this utterly to forſake the Church of Chriſt? Under what colour or pretence do you this? for the abuſes? as though in your Church were no abuſes: Yes that there were. And if you forſake the Univerſall Church for the abuſes, why do you not then forſake your particular Church, and ſo be flitting from one to another? That is not the next way, to ſlip from the Church for the Abuſes in the church require a reformation, and not a defection.

abuſes; for if you had ſéene abuſes, you ſhould rather have endeavoured for a reformation then for a defection. He is a good Chirurgion, who for a little paine in the toe will cut off the whole legge. He helpeth well the tooth-ach, which cutteth away the head by the ſhoulders. It is méere folly to amend abuſes by abuſes. Ye are like Diogenes; for Diogenes on a time envying the cleanlineſſe of Plato, ſaid on this wiſe, Ecce calco faſtum Platonis. Plato anſwered, Sed alio faſtu. So that Diogenes ſéemed more faultie of the two.

But when we have ſaid all that we can, peradventure you will ſay, I will not return. And to that I ſay, I will not anſwer. Neverthelesse, hear what Chriſt ſaith to ſuch obſtinate and ſtiffe-necked people in the Parable of the Supper. When he had ſent out his men to call them in that were appointed, and they would not come, he bade his ſervants go into the wayes and ſtréets, to compell men to come in: Cogite intrare. If then the Church will not léeſe any member that may be compelled to come in, ye muſt thinke it good to take the compulſion, leſt you loſe your part of the Supper which the Lord hath prepared for you; and this compulſion ſtandeth well with charitie.

Cogite intrare, clerkly expounded.

But it may be perhaps, that ſome hath animated you to ſtick to your tackle, and not to give over, bearing you in hand that your opinion is good, and that ye ſhall die in a good quarrell, and God ſhall accept your oblation. But hear what Chriſt ſaith of a meaner gift; If thou come to the Altar to offer thy oblation, and knoweſt that thy brother hath ſomewhat to ſay againſt thée, leave there thy gift, and go and be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer up thy gift, or elſe thy brother will make thy offering unſavourie before God. This he ſaid unto all the world, to the end they ſhould know how their offerings ſhould be received, if they were not according.

Math 7.

Remember you therefore before you offer up your offering, whether your gift be qualified or no. Remember the Church of Rome, and alſo of England, where not one onely brother, but a number have matter againſt you, ſo juſt that they will make your burnt offering to ſtink before God, except you be reconciled. If you muſt néeds appoint upon a ſacrifice, make yet a mean firſt to them that have to lay againſt you. I ſay no more then the Church hath allowed me to ſay. For the ſacrifice that is offered without the Church is not profitable. The premiſſes therefore conſidered, for Gods ſake, I ſay, Memor eſto unde excideris, & age pœnitentiam, & prima opera fac. Sin minus, &c. Caſt not your ſelf away, ſpare your bodie, ſpare your ſoul, ſpare them alſo whom you have ſeduced, ſpare the ſhedding of Chriſts blood for you in vain. Harden not your heart, acknowledge the truth, yéeld to the preſcript Word of God, to the Catholique Church of Rome, to the received veritie of all Chriſtendome. Wed not your ſelf to your own ſelf-will. Stand not too much in your own conceit, think not your ſelf wiſer then all Chriſtendome is beſides you. Leave off this unjuſt cavill. How? leave what? leave reaſon, leave wonder, and beléeve as the Catholique Church doth beléeve and teach you. Perſwade with your ſelf, that Ex[t]ra Eccleſiam non eſt ſalus, i. Without the Church there is no ſalvation. And thus much have I ſaid of charitie. If this poore ſimple exhortation of mine may ſink into you head, and take effect with you, then have I ſaid as I would have ſaid, otherwiſe not as I would, but as I could for this preſent.

Melle lita pernicies.

And thus Biſhop Brooks finiſhing his Oration, ſat down. After whom, Doctor Martin, taking the matter in hand, beginneth thus.

The Oration of Doctor Martin.

Oration of D. Martin.

ALbeit there be two Governments, the one ſpirituall, and the other temporall, the one having the keyes, the other the ſword, yet in all ages we read that for the honour and glorie of God both theſe powers have béen adjoyned together. For if we read the old Teſtament, we ſhall finde that ſo did Joſias and Ezekias. So did the King of the Ninivites compell a generall faſt through all the whole Citie. So did Darius in breaking the great Idoll, Bell, and delivered godly Daniel out of the den of Lions. So did Nabuchodonoſor make and inſtitute laws againſt the blaſphemers of God. But to let paſſe theſe examples, with a great number moe, and to come to Chriſts time, it is not unknown what great travell they took to ſet forth Gods honour: and although the rule and government of the Church did onely appertain to the ſpiritualtie, yet for the ſuppreſſion of hereſies and ſchiſmes, Kings were admitted as aiders thereunto. Firſt, Conſtantius the great called a Councell at Nice for the ſuppreſſion of the Arrians ſect, where the ſame time was raiſed a great contention among them. And after long diſputation had, when the Fathers could not agrée upon the putting down of the Arrians, they referred their judgement to Conſtantine. God forbid, quoth Conſtantine; You ought to rule me, and not I you. And as Conſtantine did, ſo did Theodoſius againſt the Neſtorians, ſo did Marcianus againſt Manicheus. Jovinian made a law, that no man ſhould marrie with a Nunne, that had wedded her ſelf to the Church.

Temporall government ruling in ſpirituall matters.

Temporall magiſtrates aiders not rulers in ſpirituall cauſes.

So had King Henrie the eighth the title of Defender of the faith, becauſe he wrote againſt Luther and his complices. So theſe 900. yéers the Kings of Spaine had that title of Catholique, for the expulſion of the Arrians; and to ſay the truth, the King and Quéenes Majeſties do nothing degenerate from their anceſtors, taking upon them to reſtore again the title to be Defender of the faith, to the right heire thereof, the Popes holineſſe.

Therefore theſe two Princes, perceiving this noble Realm, how it hath béen brought from the unitie of the true and Catholique Church, the which you and your confederates do, and have renounced; perceiving alſo that you do perſiſt in your deteſtable errors, and will by no means be revoked from the ſame, have made their humble requeſt and petition to the Popes holineſſe, Paulus the fourth, as ſupreme head of the church of Chriſt, declaring to him, that where you were Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Metropolitane of England, and at your conſecration took two ſolemne oaths, for your due obedience to be given to the Sée of Rome, to become a true Preacher or Paſtor of his flock, yet contrarie to your oath and allegiance, for unitie have ſowed diſcord; for chaſtitie, marriage and adulterie; for obedience, contention; and for faith, ye have béen the author of all miſchiefs. The Popes holineſſe conſidering their requeſt and petition, hath granted them, that according to the cenſure of this Realme proceſſe ſhould be made againſt you.

And whereas in this late time, you both excluded charitie and juſtice, yet hath his holineſſe decréed, that you ſhall have both charitie and juſtice ſhewed unto you. He willeth you ſhould have the laws in moſt ample manner to anſwer in your behalfe, and that you ſhall here come before my Lord of Glocester, as high Commiſſioner from his holineſſe, to the examination of ſuch Articles as ſhall be propoſed againſt you, and that we ſhould require the examination of you, in the King and Quéenes Majeſties behalfe. Q. MARIE. Anno 1556.

King and Queen as touching themſelves, becauſe by the Law they cannot appear perſonally, Quia ſunt illuſtriſ. perſonæ, have appointed as their Atturneys, Doctor Storie and me. Wherefore here I offer to your good Lordſhip our Proxie, ſealed with the broad Seale of England, and offer my ſelf to be Proctor in the King Majeſties behalf. I exhibite here alſo certain articles, containing the manifeſt adultery and perjurie: Alſo books of hereſie made partly by him, partly ſet forth by his authoritie. And here I produce him as party principall, to anſwer to your good Lordſhip.

Thus when Doctor Martin had ended his Oration, the Archbiſhop beginneth, as here followeth.

Cranmer. Shall I then make my anſwer?

Martin. As you thinke good, no man ſhall let you.

And here the Archbiſhop kneeling down on both knees towards the Weſt, said firſt the Lords prayer. Then riſing up he reciteth the Articles of the Creed. Which done, he entreth with his proteſtation in form as followeth.

The faith and profeſſion of Doctor Cranmer, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, before the Commiſſioners.

The profeſſion or proteſtation of D. Cranmer before the commiſſioners.

THis I do profeſſe as touching my faith, and make my proteſtation, which I deſire you to note. I will never conſent that the Biſhop of Rome ſhall have any juriſdiction within this Realme.

Story. Take a note thereof.

Martin. Mark maſter Cranmer how you anſwer for your ſelf. You refuſe and denie him, by whoſe laws ye yet do remain in life, being otherwiſe attainted of high treaſon, and but a dead man by the Laws of this Realm.

Cran. I proteſt before God I was no Traitor, but indeed I confeſſed more at my arraignment then was true.

Martin. That is not to be reaſoned at this preſent. Ye know ye were condemned for a Traitor, and Res judicata pro veritate accipitur. But proceed to your matter.

Cranmer. I will never conſent to the Biſhop of Rome, for then ſhould I give my ſelf to the devill; for I have made an oath to the King, and I muſt obey the King by Gods Laws. By the Scripture the King is chief, and no forrain perſon in his own Realm above him. There is no ſubject but to a King. I am a ſubject, I owe my fidelitie to the Crown. The Pope is contrary to the Crown. I cannot obey both; for no man can ſerve two maſters at once, as you in the beginning of your Oration declared by the ſword and the keyes, attributing the keyes to the Pope, and the ſword to the King. But I ſay the King hath both. Therefore he that is ſubject to Rome, and the Laws of Rome, he is perjured; for the Popes and the Judges laws are contrary, they are uncertain and confounded.

Cauſes alledged why D. Cranmer cannot receive the Pope. The laws of this Realm, and the Popes, contrary.

A Prieſt indebted by the laws of the Realms, ſhall be ſued before a temporall Judge; by the Popes laws contrary.

The Pope doth the King injurie, in that he hath his power from the Pope. The King is head in his own Realm: But the Pope claimeth all Biſhops, Prieſts, Curates, &c. So the Pope in every Realm hath a Realm.

Againe, by the Laws of Rome the Benefice muſt be given by the Biſhop; by the Laws of the Realme, the Patron giveth the Benefice. Herein the Laws be as contrarie as fire and water.

No man can by the Laws of Rome proceed in a præmunire, and ſo is the Law of the Realm expelled, and the King ſtandeth accurſed in maintaining his own Laws. Therefore in conſideration that the King and Queen take their power of him, as though God ſhould give it to them, there is no true ſubject, unleſſe he be abrogate, ſeeing the Crown is holden of him being out of the Realme.

The Popes proceedings contrary to God.

The Biſhop of Rome is contrary to God, and injurious to his Laws; for God commanded all men to be diligent in the knowledge of his Law; and therefore hath appointed one holy day in the weeke at the leaſt, for the people to come to the Church and hear the word of God expounded unto them, and that they might the better underſtand it, to hear it in their mother tongue which they know. The Pope doth contrary; for he willeth the ſervice to be had in the Latine tongue, which they do not underſtand. God would have it to be perceived; the Pope will not. When the Prieſt giveth thanks, God would that the people ſhould do ſo too, and God will them to confeſſe altogether; the Pope will not.

The reall preſence is not to be proved by any Doctor above a thouſand yeers after Chriſt.

Now as concerning the Sacrament, I have taught no falſe doctrine of the ſacrament of the Altar: For if it can be proved by any Doctor above a thouſand yeers after Chriſt, that Chriſts bodie is there really, I will give over. My book was made ſeven yeers ago, and no man hath brought any Authors againſt it. I beleeve that whoſo eateth and drinketh that ſacrament, Chriſt is within them, whole Chriſt, his Nativitie, Paſſion, Reſurrection and Aſcenſion; but not that corporally that ſitteth in heaven.

Now Chriſt commanded all to drink of the cup; The Pope taketh it away from the Lay men, and yet one ſaith, that if Chriſt had died for the devill, that he ſhould drink thereof. Chriſt biddeth us to obey the King, etiam diſcolo. The Biſhop of Rome biddeth us to obey him; therefore unleſſe he be Antichriſt, I cannot tell what to make of him. Wherefore if I ſhould obey him, I cannot obey Chriſt.

The Pope likened to the Devil, & wherein.

He is like the devill in his doings; for the Devill ſaid to Chriſt; If thou wilt fall down and worſhip me, I will give thee all the kingdoms of the world. Thus he took upon him to give that which was not his own. Even ſo the Biſhop of Rome giveth Princes their Crowns, being none of his own; for where Princes either by election, either by ſucceſſion, either by inheritance obtain their Crown, he ſaith that they ſhould have it from him.

The Pope proved Antichriſt.

Chriſt ſaith, that Antichriſt ſhall be. And who ſhall he be? Forſooth he that advanceth himſelf above all other creatures. Now if there be none alreadie that hath advanced himſelf after ſuch ſort beſides the Pope, then in the mean time let him be Antichriſt.

Story. Pleaſeth it you to make an end?

Cran. For he will be the Vicar of Chriſt, he will diſpenſe with the Old and New Teſtament alſo, yea and with Apoſtaſie.

Now I have declared why I cannot with my conſcience obey the Pope. I ſpeak not this for hatred I beare to him that now ſupplieth the roome, for I know him not. I pray God give him grace not to follow his anceſtors. Neither ſay I this for my defence, but to declare my conſcience for the zeal that I bear to Gods word troden under foot by the Biſhop of Rome. I caſt fear apart, for Chriſt ſaid to his Apoſtles, that in the latter dayes they ſhould ſuffer much ſorrow, and be put to death for his names ſake: fear them not (ſaith he) but fear him which when he hath killed the bodie, hath power to caſt the ſoul into fire everlaſting. Alſo Chriſt ſaith, that he that will live ſhall die, and he that loſeth his life for my Names ſake, he ſhall finde it again. More-ever he ſaid, confeſſe me before men, and be not afraid; for if you do ſo, I will ſtand with you; if you ſhrink from me, I will ſhrink from you. This is a comfortable and a terrible ſaying, this maketh me to ſet all fear apart. I ſay therefore the Biſhop of Rome treadeth under foot Gods Laws and the Kings.

The Pope would give Biſhopricks; ſo would the King. But at the laſt the King got the upper hand, and ſo are all Biſhops perjured, firſt to the Pope, and then to the King.

The popes laws againſt the laws of this realm.

The Crown hath nothing to do with the Clergie. For if a Clerk come before a judge, the judge ſhall make proceſſe againſt him, but not to execute any laws. For if the judge ſhould put him to execution, then is the King accurſed in maintaining his own laws. And therefore ſay I, that he is neither true to God, neither to the King, that firſt received the Pope. But I ſhall heartily pray for ſuch Counſellors, as may inform her the truth; for the King and Queen, if they be well informed, will do well.

Martin. As you underſtand, then if they maintain the ſupremacie of Rome, they cannot maintain England too.

To be called univerſall head is a mark of Antichriſt. Gregor.

Cran. I require you to declare to the King and Queene what I have ſaid, and how their oaths do ſtand with the Realm and the Pope. S. Gregory ſaith, he that taketh upon him to be head of the univerſall Church, is worſe then the Antichriſt. If any man can ſhew me, that it is not againſt Gods word to hold his ſtirrop when he taketh his horſe, and kiſſe his feet (as Kings do) then will I kiſſe his feet alſo.

The biſhop of Gloceſter charged with perjury.

And you for your part, my Lord, are perjured; for now ye ſit Judge for the Pope, and yet you did receive your Biſhoprick of the King. You have taken an oath to be adverſarie to the Realm; for the Popes laws are contrarie to the laws of the Realm.

Gloceſter. You were the cauſe that I did forſake the Pope, and did ſweare that he ought not to be ſupreme head, and gave it to King Henry the eighth, that he ought to be it, and this you made me to do.

Warrham archbiſhop gave up firſt the ſupremacy to the King.

Both the Univerſities ſubſcribed to the Kings ſupremacie, before Cranmer was archbiſhop.

Cranmer. To this I anſwer, ſaid he; You report me ill, and ſay not the truth, and I will prove it here before you all. The truth is, that my Predeceſſor, Biſhop Warrham, gave the ſupremacie to King Henrie the eighth, and ſaid that he ought to have it before the Biſhop of Rome, and that Gods Word would beare him. And upon the ſame was there ſent to both the Univerſities Oxford and Cambridge, to know what the Word of God would do touching the Supremacie, and it was reaſoned upon, and argued at length. So at the laſt both the Univerſities agreed, and ſet to their ſeals, and ſent it to King Henry the eighth to the Court, that he ought to be ſupreme head, and not the Pope. Whereupon you were then Doctor of Divinitie at that time, and your conſent was thereunto, as by your hand doth appeare. Therefore you miſreport me, that I was the cauſe of your falling away from the Pope, but it was your ſelfe. All this was in Biſhop Warrhams time, and whileſt he was alive, ſo that it was three quarters of a yeer after ere ever I had the Biſhoprick of Canterburie in my hands, and before I might do any thing. So that here ye have reported of me that which ye cannot prove, which is evill done. All this while his cap was on his head.

Glocest. We come to examine you, and you, me think, examine us.

Doctor Stories Oration.

D. Stories Oration againſt the Archbiſhop.

STory. Pleaſeth it your good Lordſhip, becauſe it hath pleaſed the King and Queenes Majeſties to appoint my companion and me to heare the examination of this man before your good Lordſhip, to give me leave ſomewhat to talke in that behalfe. Although I know that in talk with Heretiques there cometh hurt to all men; for it wearieth the ſtedfaſt, troubleth the doubtfull, and taketh in ſnare the weake and ſimple: yet becauſe he ſaith, he is not bound to anſwer your Lordſhip ſitting for the Popes holineſſe, becauſe of a Premunire, and the Word of God as he termeth it; I think good ſomewhat to ſay, that all men may ſee how he runneth out of his race of reaſon into the rage of common talk, ſuch as here I truſt hath done much good. And as the King and Queenes Majeſties will be glad to heare of your moſt charitable dealing with him; ſo will they be wearie to heare the blundering of this ſtubborn Heretique. And where he alledgeth Divinitie, mingling fas nefaſque together, he ſhould not have been heard. For ſhall it be ſufficient for him to alledge, the Judge is not competent? Do we not ſee that in the Common Law it is not lawfull for a man in Weſtminſter Hall to refuſe his Judge? And ſhall we diſpute contra eum qui negat principia? Although there be here a great companie of learned men, that know it unmeet ſo to do, yet have I here a plaine Canon, wherein he declareth himſelfe convicted ipſo facto. The Canon is this;

Words of the Popes Canon.

Sit ergo ruinæ ſuo dolore proſtratus quiſquis Apoſtolicis volverit contraire decretis, nec locum deinceps inter Sacerdotes habeat, ſed exors à ſancto fiat miniſterio, neç de eo ejus judicio quiſquam poſthac curam habeat, quin jam damnatus à ſancta & Apoſtolica Eccleſia ſua inobedientia ac præſumptione à quoquam eſſe non dubitetur. Quin majoris excommunicationis dejectione eſt abjiciendus, cui ſanctæ Eccleſiæ commiſſa fuerit diſciplina, qui non ſolum juſſionibus prælatæ ſanctæ Eccleſiæ parere debuit, ſed etiam aliis ne præterirent inſinuare. Sitque alienus à divinis & pontificalibus officiis, qui noluerit præceptis Apoſtolicis obtemperare.

Note the worſhipfull reaſons of D. Storie, wherewith he proveth the Popes ſupremacy.

He hath alledged many matters againſt the Supremacie, but maliciouſly. He ſay that the King in his Realme is ſupreme head of the Church. Well ſir, you will grant me that there was a perfect Catholique Church before any King was chriſtened. Then if it were a perfect Church, it muſt needs have a head, which muſt needs be before any King was member thereof; for you know Conſtantius the Emperour was the firſt chriſtened King that ever was. And although you are bound (as ſaint Paul ſaith) to obey your Rulers, and Kings have rule of the people, yet doth it not follow that they have cure of ſouls: for à fortiori, the head may do that the Miniſter cannot do; but the Prieſt may conſecrate, and the King cannot, therefore the King is not head.

D. Story reaſoneth, as though to feed with the word, and to govern with the ſword were all one.

It was licenſed by Chriſt to everie man to bring into the ſheepfold, and to augment the flock, but not to rule, for that was onely given to Peter.

And where the Apoſtles do call upon men to obey their Princes, cui tributum, tributum; cui vectigal, vectigal; they perceiving that men were bent to a kinde of libertie and diſobedience, were enforced to exhort them to obedience and payment of their tribute, which exhortation extendeth onely to temporall matters.

A maxime in the law.

And again, where you ſay that the Biſhop of Rome maketh laws contrary to the laws of the Realme, that is not true; for this is a maxime in the Law; Quod in particulari excipitur, non facit univerſale falſum.

Now as touching that monſtrous talke of your conſcience, that is no conſcience that ye profeſſe; it is but privata ſcientia, electio and ſecta. And as yet for all your glorious babble, you have not proved by Gods lawes that ye ought not to anſwer the Popes Holineſſe.

A rule of law.

The Canons which be received of all Chriſtendome compell you to anſwer, therefore you are bound ſo to doe. And although this Realme of late time, through ſuch Schiſmatickes as you were, hath exiled and baniſhed the Canons, yet that cannot make for you. For you know your ſelfe, that Par in parem, nec pars in totum aliquid ſtatuere poteſt. Wherefore this Ile, being indeed but a member of the whole, could not determine againſt the whole. That notwithſtanding the ſame lawes, being put away by Parliament, are now received againe by a Parliament, and have as full authoritie now as they had then, and they will now that ye anſwer to the Popes Holineſſe: therefore by the laws of this Realme ye are bound to anſwer him. Wherefore, my good Lord, all that this Thomas Cranmer (I cannot otherwiſe terme him, conſidering his diſobedience) hath brought for his defence, ſhall nothing prevaile with you, nor take any effect. Require him therefore to anſwer directly to your good Lordſhip; command him to ſet aſide his trifles, and to be obedient to the laws and ordinances of this Realme. Take witneſſe here of his ſtuborne contempt againſt the King and Queenes Majeſties, and compell him to anſwer directly to ſuch articles as we ſhall here lay againſt him, and in refuſall, your good Lordſhip is to excommunicate him.

Doct. Story chargeth the Archbiſhop with ſtubbornneſſe.

Partialitie in the reporter.

As ſoone as Doctor Story had thus ended his tale, beginneth Doctor Martin againe to enter ſpeech with the Archbiſhop; which talk I thought here likewiſe not to let paſſe, although the report of the ſame be ſuch, as the author thereof ſeemeth in his writing very partiall; for as he expreſſeth the ſpeech of Doctor Martin at full, and to the uttermoſt of his diligence, leaving out nothing in that part, that either was or could be ſaid more; ſo againe on the other part, how rawe and weake he leaveth the matter, it is eaſie to perceive, who neither comprehendeth all that Doctor Cranmer againe anſwered for his defence, nor yet in thoſe ſhort ſpeeches which he expreſſeth, ſeemeth to diſcharge the part of a ſincere and faithfull reporter. Notwithſtanding ſuch as it is, I thought good to let the Reader underſtand, who in peruſing the ſame, may uſe therein his owne judgement and conſideration.

Talke betweene Doctor Martin and the Archbiſhop.

Talke betweene D. Martin and the Archbiſhop.

MAſter Cranmer, ye have told here a long glorious tale, pretending ſome matter of conſcience in appearance, but in veritie you have no conſcience at all. You ſay that you have ſworne once to King Henrie the eighth againſt the Popes juriſdiction, and therefore you may never forſweare the ſame; and ſo ye make a great matter of conſcience in the breach of the ſaid oath. Here will I aſke you a queſtion or two. What if ye made an oath to an Harlot, to live with her in continuall adulterie, ought you to keepe it?

Cran. I thinke no.

Unadviſed oathes are not to be kept.

Mart. What if you did ſweare never to lend a poore man one penny, ought you to keep it?

Cran. I thinke not.

Martin. Herod did ſweare whatſoever his Harlot aſked of him he would give her, and he gave her John Baptiſts head; Did he well in keeping his oath?

Cran. I thinke not.

Jephthes oath.

Mart. Jephthe one of the Judges of Iſrael did ſweare unto God, that if he would give him victorie over his enemies, he would offer unto God the firſt ſoule that came forth of his houſe; it happned that his owne daughter came firſt, and he ſlue her to ſave his oath. Did he well?

Cran. I thinke not.

Martin. So ſaith Saint Ambroſe de officiis, Miſerabilis neceſſitas, quæ ſolvitur parricidio, id eſt, It is a miſerable neceſſitie, which is paid with parricide. Then Maſter Cranmer you can no leſſe confeſſe by the premiſſes but that you ought not to have conſcience of every oath, but if it be juſt, lawfull, and adviſedly taken.

Cran. So was that oath.

Mart. That is not ſo, for firſt it was unjuſt, for it tended to the taking away of another mans right. It was not lawfull, for the lawes of God and the Church were againſt it. Beſides, it was not voluntarie; for every man and woman were compelled to take it.

Cran. It pleaſeth you to ſay ſo.

The Archbiſh. being ſworne to the King, ought not to ſweare to the Pope.

Mart. Let all the world be judge. But ſir, you that pretend to have ſuch a conſcience to breake an oath. I pray you did you never ſweare, and break the ſame?

Cran. I remember not.

Mart. I will helpe your memorie. Did you never ſweare obedience to the See of Rome?

Cranmer. Indeed I did once ſweare unto the ſame.

Mart. Yea, that you did twice, as appeareth by records and writings here ready to be ſhewed.

The Archbiſh. ſworne firſt to the Pope by proteſtation.

Cran. But I remember I ſaved all by proteſtation that I made by the counſell of the beſt learned men I could get at that time.

Mart. Hearken good people what this man ſaith. He made a proteſtation one day, to keepe never a whit of that which he would ſweare the next day; was this the part of a Chriſtian man? If a Chriſtian man would bargaine with a Turke, and before he maketh his bargaine ſolemnly, before witneſſe readeth in his paper that he holdeth ſecretly in his hand, or peradventure proteſteth before one or two, that he mindeth not to performe whatſoever he ſhall promiſe to the Turke; I ſay, if a Chriſtian man ſhould ſerve a Turke in this manner, that the Chriſtian man were worſe then the Turke. What would you then ſay to this man that made a ſolemne oath and promiſe unto God and his Church, and made a proteſtation before quite contrarie?

Cran. That which I did, I did by the beſt learned mens advice I could get at that time.

D. Martin would prove the Archbiſhop perjured in forſwearing his oath made to the Pope.

Mart. I proteſt before all the learned men here, that there is no learning will ſave your perjurie herein; for there be two rules of the Civill Law cleane contrarie againſt you, and ſo brought forth his rules, which being done, he proceeded further. But will you have the truth of the matter. King Henry the eighth even then meant the lamentable change which after you ſee came to paſſe; and to further his pittifull proceedings from the divorcement of his moſt lawfull wife, to the deteſtable departing from the bleſſed unitie of Chriſts Church, this man made the foreſaid proteſtation; and on the other ſide, he letted not to make two ſolemne oathes quite contrary, and why? for otherwiſe by the laws and Canons of this Realme, he could not aſpire to the Archbiſhopricke of Canterbury.

D. Cranmer unwilling to be made Archbiſh.

Cran. I proteſt before you all, there was never man came more unwillingly to a Biſhopricke, then I did to that. Inſomuch that when King Henry did ſend for me in poſte, that I ſhould come over, I prolonged my journey by ſeven weekes at the leaſt, thinking that he would be forgetfull of me in the meane time.

Mart. You declare well by the way that the King tooke you to be a man of good conſcience, who could not finde within all his Realme any man that would ſet forth his ſtrange attempts, but was inforced to ſend for you in poſte to come out of Germany. What may we conjecture hereby, but that there was a compact betweene you being then Queene Annes Chaplaine, and the King; Give me the Archbiſhoprick of Canterbury, and I will give you licence to live in adultery.

Falſe ſlander of D. Martin.

Cran. You ſay not true.

Martin. Let your proteſtation joyned with the reſt of your talke, give judgement. Hinc prima mali labes. Of that your execrable perjurie, and his coloured and too ſhamefully ſuffered adultery, came hereſie and all miſchiefe to this Realme.

And thus have I ſpoken as touching the conſcience you make for breaking your hereticall oath made to the King. But to breake your former oath made at two ſundry times both to God and his Church, you have no conſcience at all. And now to anſwer another part of your Oration, wherein you bring in Gods Word, that you have it on your ſide and no man elſe, and that the Pope hath deviſed a new Scripture contrary to the Scriptures of GOD; ye play herein as the Phariſees did, which cried alwayes, "Verbum Domini, Verbum Domini, The Word of the Lord, the Word of the Lord, when they meant nothing ſo. This bettereth not your cauſe, becauſe you have Gods Word for you; for Baſilides and Photinus the heretikes ſaid, that they had Gods Word to maintaine their hereſie. So Neſtorius, ſo Macedonius, ſo Pelagius, and briefly, all the heretikes that ever were, pretended that they had Gods Word for them; yea, and ſo the Devill being the father of hereſies, alledged Gods Word for him, ſaying, Scriptum eſt, It is written: So ſaid he to Chriſt, Mitte te deorſum, Caſt thy ſelfe downward, which you applyed moſt falſly againſt the Pope. But if you marke the Devils language well, it agreed with your proceedings moſt truly. For, Mitte te deorſum, Caſt thy ſelf downward, ſaid he, and ſo taught you to caſt all things downward. Down with the Sacrament, downe with the Maſſe, downe with the Altars, downe with the armes of Chriſt, and up with a Lion and a Dogge, down with the Abbeys, down with Chauntries, downe with Hoſpitals and Colledges, downe with "Faſting and Prayer, yea downe with all that good and godly is. All your proceedings and preachings tended to no other, but to fulfill the Devils requeſt, Mitte te deorſum. And therefore tell not us that you have Gods Word. For GOD hath given us by his Word a marke to know that your teaching proceeded not of God, but of the Devill, and that your doctrine came not of Chriſt, but of Antichriſt. For Chriſt foreſaid, there ſhould come againſt his Church, Lupi rapaces, id eſt, Ravening Wolves, and Pſeudoapoſtoli, id eſt, Falſe Apoſtles. But how ſhould we know them? Chriſt teacheth us, ſaying, Ex fructibus eorum cognoſcetis eos, id eſt, By their fruits ye ſhall know them. Why, what be their fruits? Saint Paul declareth; Poſt carnem in concupiſcentia, & immunditia ambulant: poteſtatem contemnunt, &c. i. After the fleſh they walke in concupiſcence and uncleanneſſe; they contemne Poteſtates. Againe, In diebus noviſſimis erunt periculoſa tempora, erunt ſeipſos amantes, cupidi, elati, immorigeri parentibus, proditores, &c. i. In the latter dayes there ſhall be perilous times. Then ſhall there be men loving themſelves, covetous, proud, diſobedient to parents, treaſon-workers. Whether theſe be not the fruits of your Goſpel, I referre me to this worſhipfull audience; whether the ſaid Goſpel began not with perjury, proceeded with adulterie, was maintained with hereſie, and ended in conſpiracie.

" Nay, the Phariſees cried not Verbum Domini, but Templum Domini, as the Papiſts do now againſt the Proteſtants.

So did King Ezechias & Joſias down with monuments of idolatrie, & are commended.

" Another falſe ſlander of D. Martin.

Whether theſe be the fruits of the Goſpellers or of the papiſts more, let the converſation of them both give judgement.

Now ſir, two points more I marked in your raging diſcourſe that you made here: the one againſt the holy Sacrament; the other againſt the Popes juriſdiction, and the authoritie of the See Apoſtolike.

Touching the firſt, ye ſay you have Gods Word with you, yea and all the Doctors. I would here aske but one queſtion of you; whether Gods Word be contrary to it ſelfe, and whether the Doctors teach doctrine contrary to themſelves, or no? For you Maſter Cranmer have taught in this high Sacrament of the altar three contrary doctrines, and yet you pretended in every one, Verbum Domini.

Doctrine of the Sacrament.

Cran. Nay, I taught but two contrary doctrines in the ſame.

Mart. What doctrine taught you when you condemned Lambert the ſacramentarie in the Kings preſence in Whitehall.

Cranmer. I maintained then the Papiſts doctrine.

Mart. That is to ſay, the Catholike and univerſall doctrine of Chriſts Church. And how when King Henrie died? did you not tranſlate Juſtus Jonas book?

So was S. Auguſtine firſt a Pagane, then a Manichee, and then a Catholike.

Cran. I did ſo.

Mart. Then there you defended another doctrine touching the ſacrament, by the ſame token, that you ſent to Lynne your Printer, that whereas in the firſt print there was an affirmative, that is to ſay, Chriſts body really in the ſacrament, you ſent then to your Printer to put in a not, whereby it came miraculouſly to paſſe, that Chriſts body way cleane conveighed out of the ſacrament.

Cran. I remember there were two Printers of my ſaid booke, but where the ſame not was put in, I cannot tell.

Martin. Then from a Lutheran ye became a Swinglian, which is the vileſt hereſie of all in the high myſterie of the ſacrament, and for the ſame hereſie you did helpe to burne Lambert the ſacramentarie, which you now call the catholike faith, and Gods Word.

Cranmer. I grant that then I beleeved otherwiſe then I doe now, and ſo I did, untill my Lord of London, Doctor Ridley, did conferre with me, and by ſundrie perſwaſions and authorities of Doctors drew me quite from my opinion.

D. Cranmer firſt wonne to the knowledge of the Sacrament by biſhop Ridley.

Martin. Now ſir, as touching the laſt part of your Oration, you denied that the Popes Holineſſe was ſupreme head of the Church of Chriſt.

Supremacy of the Pope.

Cran. I did ſo.

Mart. Who ſay you then is ſupreme head?

Cran. Chriſt.

Mart. But whom hath Chriſt left here in earth his Vicar and head of his Church?

Cran. No body.

Mart. Ah, why told you not King Henrie this when you made him ſupreme head? and now no body is. This is treaſon againſt his owne perſon as you then made him.

Cran. I meane not but every King in his owne Realme and Dominion is ſupreme head, and ſo was he ſupreme head of the Church of Chriſt in England.

King Henry was not ſupreme head but onely of his owne Realme. The Pope will be univerſall head over all.

Mart. Is this alwaies true? and was it ever ſo in Chriſts Church?

Cran. It was ſo.

Mart. Then what ſay you by Nero? he was the mightieſt Prince of the earth after Chriſt was aſcended: Was he head of Chriſts Church?

Cran. Nero was Peters head:

Mar. I ask whether Nero was head of the church or no? if he were not, it is falſe that you ſaid before, that all Princes be, and ever were heads of the Church within their Realmes.

Cran. Nay, it is true, for Nero was head of the Church, that is, in worldly reſpect of the temporall bodies of men, of whom the Church conſiſteth; for ſo he beheaded Peter and the Apoſtles. And the Turk too is head of the Church in Turkie.

Mart. Then he that beheaded the heads of the Church, and crucified the Apoſtles, was head of Chriſts Church; and he that was never member of the Church, is head of the Church, by your new found underſtanding of Gods Word.

The anſwer of the archbiſhop not ſincerely reported.

¶ It is not to be ſuppoſed contrary, but much other matter paſſed in this communication between them, eſpecially on the Archbiſhops behalf. Whoſe anſwers I do not think to be ſo ſlender, nor altogether in the ſame forme of words framed, if the truth, as it was, might be known: but ſo it pleaſed the Notarie thereof, being too much partially addicted to his mother See of Rome in favour of his faction, to diminiſh and drive down the other ſide, either in not ſhewing all, or in reporting the thing otherwiſe than it was; as the common guiſe is of moſt Writers, to what ſide their affection moſt weigheth, their Oration commonly inclineth. But let us proceed further in the ſtorie of this matter.

It followed then (ſaith this reporter) when the Archbiſhop thus had anſwered, and the ſtanders by began to murmure againſt him; the Judges not content with his anſwers, willed him to anſwer directly to the Interrogatories; which Interrogatories articulated againſt him in forme of law, were theſe under following.

Interrogatories objected to the Archbiſhop, with his anſwers annexed to the ſame.

Interrogatories laid againſt the Archbiſhop.

1. Interrog. Firſt was objected, that he the foreſaid Thomas Cranmer, being yet free, and before he entred into holy orders, married one Joane, ſurnamed black or brown, dwelling at the ſign of the Dolphin in Cambridge.

The firſt marriage of the Archbiſhop.

Anſwer. Whereunto he anſwered, that whether ſhe was called black or brown, he knew not, but that he married there one Joane, that he granted.

2. Interrog. That after the death of the foreſaid wife, he entered into holy Orders, and after that was made Archbiſhop by the Pope.

Anſw. He received (he ſaid) a certaine Bull of the Pope, which he delivered unto the King, and was Archbiſhop by him.

The ſecond marriage of the Archbiſhop.

3. Inter. Item, that he being in holy orders, married another woman as his ſecond wife, named Anne, and ſo was twice married.

Anſw. To this he granted.

4. Interrog. Item, in the time of King Henrie the eighth, he kept the ſaid wife ſecretly, and had children by her.

Anſw. Hereunto he alſo he granted; affirming that it was better for him to have his own, than to do like other Prieſts, holding and keeping other mens wives.

5. Inter. Item, in the time of King Edward, he brought out the ſaid wife openly, affirming and profeſſing publiquely the ſame to be his wife.

Anſw. He denied not but he ſo did, and lawfully might do the ſame, foraſmuch as the laws of the Realme did ſo permit him.

6. Interrog. Item, that he ſhamed not openly to glorie himſelf to have had his wife in ſecret many yeers.

Anſw. And though he ſo did (he ſaid) there was no cauſe why he ſhould be aſhamed thereof.

7. Inter. Item, that the ſaid Thomas Cranmer falling afterward into the deep bottome of errors, did flie and refuſe the authoritie of the Church, did hold and follow the hereſie concerning the Sacrament of the altar, and alſo did compile, and cauſed to be ſet abroad divers books.

The Archbiſh. charged with his doctrine and books.

Anſw. Whereunto when the names of the books were recited to him, he denied not ſuch books which he was the author of. As touching the treatiſe of Peter Martyr upon the ſacrament, he denied that he ever ſaw it before it was abroad, yet did approve and well like of the ſame. As for the Catechiſme, the book of Articles, with the other book againſt Wincheſter, he granted the ſame to be his doings.

8. Inter. Item, that he compelled many againſt their wils to ſubſcribe to the ſame Articles.

Anſw. He exhorted (he ſaid) ſuch as were willing to ſubſcribe; but againſt their wils he compelled none.

9. Inter. Item, forſomuch as he ſurceaſed not to perpetrate enorme and inordinate crimes, he was therefore caſt into the Tower, and from thence was brought to Oxford, at what time it was commonly thought that the Parliament there ſhould be holden.

Anſw. To this he ſaid, that he knew no ſuch enorme and inordinate crimes that ever he committed.

10. Inter. Item, that in the ſaid Citie of Oxford he did openly maintain his hereſie, and there was convicted upon the ſame.

Anſw. He defended (he ſaid) there the cauſe of the Sacrament, but that he was convicted in the ſame, that he denied.

11. Inter. Item, when he perſevered ſtill in the ſame, he was by the publike cenſure of the Univerſitie pronounced an heretike, and his books to be hereticall.

Anſw. That he was ſo denounced, he denied not; but that he was an heretike, or his books hereticall, that he denied.

12. Inter. Item, that he was and is notoriouſly infamed with the note of Schiſme, as who not onely himſelf receded from the Catholike Church and See of Rome, but alſo moved the King and ſubjects of this Realme to the ſame.

Anſw. As touching the receding, that he well granted; but that receding or departing (ſaid he) was onely from the See of Rome, and had in it no matter of any Schiſme.

13. Inter. Item, that he had been twice ſworne to the Pope; and withall Doctor Martin brought out the inſtrument of the publike Notarie, wherein was contained his proteſtation made when he ſhould be conſecrated, asking if he had any thing elſe proteſted.

The Archbiſh. ſworne to the Pope by proteſtation.

Anſw. Whereunto he anſwered, that he did nothing but by the laws of the Realme.

14. Inter. Item, that he the ſaid Archbiſhop of Canterburie did not onely offend in the premiſſes, but alſo in taking upon him the authoritie of the See of Rome, in that without leave or licence from the ſaid See, he conſecrated Biſhops and Prieſts.

Anſw. He granted, that he did execute ſuch things as were wont to be referred to the Pope, at what time it was permitted to him by the publike laws and determination of the Realme.

15. Inter. Item, that when the whole Realme had ſubſcribed to the authoritie of the Pope, he only ſtill perſiſted in his errour.

Anſw. That he did not admit the Popes authoritie, he confeſſed to be true. But that he erred in the ſame, that he denied.

16. Inter. Item, that all and ſingular the premiſſes be true.

Anſw. That likewiſe he granted, excepting thoſe things whereunto he had now anſwered.

After he had thus anſwered to the objections aforeſaid, and the publike Notarie had entred the ſame, the Judges and Commiſſioners, as having now accompliſhed that wherefore they came, were about to riſe up and depart. But the Biſhop of Gloceſter thinking it not the beſt ſo to diſmiſſe the people, being ſomewhat ſtirred with the words of the Archbiſhop, began in his Oration in the hearing of the people, thus to declaime.

The Oration of Biſhop Brooks, in cloſing up this examination againſt D. Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Another Oration of Biſhop Brookes, to Archbiſhop Cranmer.

MAſt. Cranmer (I cannot otherwiſe term you, conſidering your obſtinacy) I am right ſorry, I am right heartily ſorrie to heare ſuch words eſcape your mouth ſo unadviſedly. I had conceived a right good hope of your amendment. I ſuppoſed that this obſtinacie of yours came not of a vain-glorie, but rather of a corrupt conſcience, which was the occaſion that I hoped ſo well of your return. But now I perceive by your fooliſh babble, that it is farre otherwiſe. Ye are ſo puffed up with vain-glorie, there is ſuch a cauteria of hereſie crept into your conſcience, that I am clean voide of hope, and my hope is turned into perdition. Who can ſave that will be loſt? God would have you to be ſaved, and you refuſe it. Perditio tua ſuper te Iſrael; tantummodo in me ſalvatio tua, ait Dominus per Prophetam, i. Thy perdition is only upon thy ſelfe, O Iſrael; only in me is thy ſalvation, ſaith the Lord by his Prophet. You have uttered ſo erroneous talke, with ſuch open malice againſt the Popes Holineſſe, with ſuch open lying againſt the Church of Rome, with ſuch open blaſphemy againſt the ſacrament of the Altar, that no mouth could have expreſſed more maliciouſly, more lyingly, more blaſphemouſly.

M. Cranmer not to be reaſoned withall.

To reaſon with you, although I would of my ſelfe to ſatisfie this audience, yet may I not by our Commiſſion, neither can I finde how I may do it with the Scriptures: For the Apoſtle doth command that ſuch a one ſhould not only not be talked withall, but alſo ſhunned and avoyded, ſaying; Hæreticum hominem poſt unum aut alterum conventum, devita, ſciens quòd hujuſmodi perverſus eſt & delinquit, quum ſit proprio judicio condemnatus, i. An hereticall perſon after once or twice conferring, ſhun, knowing that he is perverſe and ſinneth, being of his own judgement condemned. Ye have been conferred withall not once or twice, but oftentimes, ye have oft been lovingly admoniſhed, ye have been oft ſecretly diſputed with. And the laſt yeere in the open Schoole, in open diſputations, ye have been openly convict, ye have been openly driven out of the Schoole with hiſſes: your book which ye bragge you made ſeven yeeres agoe, and no man anſwered it, Marcus Antonius hath ſufficiently detected and confuted, and yet ye perſiſt ſtill in your wonted hereſie.

Wherefore being ſo oft admoniſhed, conferred withall, and convicted, if ye denie you to be the man whom the Apoſtle noteth, heare then what Origen ſaith, who wrote above 1300. yeers ago, and interpreteth the ſaying of the Apoſtle in this wiſe, in Apologia Pamphili. Hæreticus eſt omnis ille habendus, qui Chriſto ſe credere profitetur, & aliter de Chriſti veritate ſentit quam ſe habet Eccleſiaſtica traditio. Even now ye profeſſed a kinde of Chriſtianitie and holineſſe unto us, for at your beginning you fell down upon your knees, and ſaid the Lords Prayer (God wote like an hypocrite) and then ſtanding upon your feet, you rehearſed the Articles of your faith, but to what end I pray you elſe, but to cloake that inward hereſie rooted in you, that you might blind the poore, ſimple, and unlearned peoples eyes? For what will they ſay or think, if they do not thus ſay? Good Lord, what meane theſe men to ſay that he is an heretike, they are deceived, this is a good Chriſtian, he beleeveth as we beleeve.

Origines in Apologia Pamphili.

What an heretike is, after the Popes making.

But is this ſufficient to eſcape the name of an heretike? To the ſimple and unlearned it is ſufficient, but for you that have profeſſed a greater knowledge and higher doctrine, it is not enough to recite your beliefe. For unleſſe (as Origen ſaith) ye beleeve all things that the Church hath decreed beſides, you are no Chriſtian man. In the which becauſe you doe halt, and will come to no conformitie; from henceforth ye are to be taken for an heretike, with whom we ought neither to diſpute, neither to reaſon, whom we ought rather to eſchew and avoyd.

Nevertheleſſe, although I doe not intend to reaſon with you, but to give you up as an abject and out-caſt from Gods favour, yet becauſe ye have uttered, to the annoying of the people, ſuch peſtilent hereſies as may do harme among ſome rude and unlearned, I think meet, and not abs re, ſomewhat to ſay herein; not becauſe I hope to have any good at your hands, which I would willingly wiſh, but that I may eſtabliſh the ſimple people which be here preſent, leſt they being ſeduced by your diabolicall doctrine, may periſh thereby.

B. Brookes recanteth his oath made to the King againſt the Pope.

And firſt (as it behooveth every man to purge himſelf firſt before he enter with any other) where you accuſe me of an oath made againſt the Biſhop of Rome, I confeſſe it, and deny it not, and therefore do ſay with the reſt of this Realme, good and Catholike men, the ſaying of the Prophet; Peccavimus cum patribus noſtris, injuſtè egimus, iniquitatem fecimus, i. We have ſinned with our fathers, we have done unjuſtly and wickedly. Delicta juventutis meæ, & ignorantias meas ne memineris Domine, i. The ſins of my youth, and my ignorances, O Lord do not remember. I was then a young man, and as young a ſcholler here in the Univerſitie.

I knew not then what an oath did meane, and yet to ſay the truth, I did it compulſed, compulſed I ſay by you Maſter Cranmer, and here were you the author and cauſe of my perjurie, you are to be blamed herein, and not I. Now where you ſay I made two oathes, the one contrary to the other, it is not ſo, for the oath I made to the Popes Holineſſe appertaineth only to ſpirituall things: The other oath that I made to the King, pertaineth only to temporall things; that is to ſay, that I do acknowledge all my temporall livings to proceed only from the King, and from none elſe. But all men may ſee, as you agree in this, ſo ye agree in the reſt of your opinions.

Supremacie.

Now ſir, as concerning the ſupremacie which is only due to the See of Rome, a word or two. Although there be a number of places which doe confirme that Chriſt appointed Peter head of the Church, yet this is a moſt evident place. When Chriſt demanded of his Apoſtles whom men called him, they anſwered; Some Elias, ſome a Prophet, &c. But Chriſt replyed unto Peter, and ſaid, Whom ſayeſt thou Peter that I am? Peter anſwered; Tu es Chriſtus, filius Dei: and Chriſt replied, Tu es Petrus, & ſuper hanc Petram ædificabo. Eccleſiam meam. The Doctors interpreting this place, ſuper hanc Petram, expounded it, id eſt, non ſolum ſuper fidem Petri, ſed ſuper te Petre. And why did Chriſt change his name from Simon to Peter, which in Latine is a ſtone, but only to declare that he was only the foundation and head of the Church.

The Church builded upon Peter.

Again, where Chriſt demanded of Peter, being amongſt the reſt of his Apoſtles, three times a rew, Petre, amas me, he gave him charge over his ſheepe, Paſce oves meas, paſce agnos meos. Which place Chryſoſtome interpreting, ſaith,

Paſce,

Q. MARIE. Anno 1556.

Paſce, expounded by Chryſoſtome.

Paſce, hoc eſt, loco mei eſto præpoſitus & caput fratrum tuorum. To conclude, when they came that required Didrachma of Chriſt, he commanded Peter to caſt his net into the ſea, and to take out of the fiſhes mouth that he tooke, ſtateram, hoc eſt, duplex Didrachma, & da inquit pro te & me Petre. Which words do ſignifie, that when he had paid for them two, he had paid for all the reſt. For as in the old Law there were appointed two heads over the people of Iſrael, Moſes and Aaron, Moſes as chiefe, & Aaron next head under him; ſo in the new Law there were two heads of the Church, which were Chriſt and Peter. Chriſt is head of all, and Peter next under him. S. Auſtin in 75. quæſt. Veteris & Novi Teſtamenti, Salvator (inquit) quum pro ſe & Petro dari jubebat Didrachma, pro omnibus ipſum dari cenſuit, ipſum enim conſtituit caput eorum. i. Our Saviour Chriſt (ſaith St. Auſtin) commanding the tribute to be given for him and for Peter, meant thereby the ſame to be given for all other, for he appointed him to be head of them. What can be more plaine then this? But I will not tarry upon this matter.

Aug. quæſt. 75.

Service in Latine.

Now as touching the Popes lawes, where you ſay they be contrary, becauſe the ſervice which ſhould be (as you ſay) in Engliſh, is in Latine; I anſwer, whoſoever will take the paines to peruſe the chapter, which is in 1 Corinth. 14. ſhall finde, that his meaning is concerning preaching, and obiter onely of praying.

Sacrament in one kinde.

Again, where you ſay, that the Popes Holineſſe doth take away one part of the ſacrament from the Lay-men, & Chriſt would have it under both, ye can ſay no more but this; Bibite ex eo omnes, i. Drink ye all of this. And what followeth; Et biberunt ex eo omnes, i. And all drank thereof. Now if a man would be ſo proterve with you, he might ſay that Chriſt gave it onely to his Apoſtles, in whoſe places ſucceeded Prieſts, and not Lay-men.

Authority of the Church in changing rites.

And admit that Chriſt commanded it to be received under both kinds, yet the Church hath authoritie to change that, as wel as other. We reade, that Chriſt calling his Apoſtles together, ſaid unto them; Ite, prædicate Evangelium omni nationi, baptizantes in nomine Patris, & Filii, & ſpiritus ſancti, i. Go & preach the Goſpel to every nation, baptizing them in the name of the Father, of the Son, & the holy Ghoſt. But the Apoſtles, being deſirous to publiſh Chriſts name every where, did baptize onely in Chriſts name. Againe, Chriſt before his laſt Supper waſhed his Apoſtles feet, ſaying; Si ego lavi pedes veſtros Dominus & Magiſter, & vos debetis alter alterius lavare pedes, i. If I have waſhed your feet being your Lord and Maſter, alſo you ought to waſh the feet one of another. Exemplum dedi vobis, i. I have given you example. This was a precept, yet hath the Church altered it, leſt the ſimple people ſhould not thinke a rebaptization in it. So becauſe ſaith the Apoſtle, Accepi à Domino quod & tradidi vobis. Dominus noſter qua nocte tradebatur, &c. i. I have received of the Lord the ſame which I have delivered to you, that our Lord the ſame night in which he was betraied, &c. Notwithſtanding that this was a precept that the ſacrament ſhould be miniſtred after ſupper, the Church hath altered it, and commanded it to be received faſting. And where Chriſt did breake the bread, we receive the whole hoſte. Chriſt miniſtred ſitting at the table, we ſtanding at the altar.

Rites and ceremonies ſubject to the diſpoſition of the church.

It was alſo commanded in Acts 25. that chriſtian men ſhould abſtaine à ſuffocato & ſanguine, i. From ſtrangled & bloud. But the Church perceiving it to be a precept but for a time, hath altered it. Chriſt commanded to keep holy, Diem Sabbati, The Sabbath day, & the Church hath altered it to Sunday. If then the Church may change things that be ſo expreſſed in the Scriptures; ſhe may alſo change the forme of receiving of Lay-men under both kindes, for divers occaſions.

Reaſons why Lay-men receive not under both kindes.

Firſt, that in carrying it to the ſick, the bloud may not be ſhed, loſt, or miſuſed.

And next, that no occaſion might be given to heretikes to think that there is not ſo much under one kinde, as under both.

But why would you have it under both kindes, I pray you elſe, but onely to pervert and contrary the commandement of the Church? For when you had it under both kindes, you beleeved in neither. And we having but one, beleeve both kinds. Now ſir, as concerning the ſacrament of the altar, where you ſay, you have a number of Doctors of your ſide, and we none of our ſide, that is to ſay, to confirme the reall preſence of Chriſt in the ſacrament of the altar, indeed one to ſtop your mouth, I think it not poſſible to finde. Neverthele ſſe, where your requeſt is to have one ſhewed unto you, and then you will recant, I will ſhew you two.

Reall preſence proved by biſh. Brookes.
Aug. Pſal. 33.
Cyprian de Cœna Domini.

S. Auſtin ſuper Pſal. 33. Ferebatur manibus ſuis, I finde not how this is true in David (ſaith he) litterally, that he was born in his own hands; but in Chriſt I finde it litterally, when he gave his body to his Apoſtles at his laſt ſupper.

Againe, S. Cyprian de Cœna Domini, ſaith, Panis quem Dominus noſter Diſcipulis ſuis porrigebat, non effigie, ſed natura mutatus, omnipotentia verbi factus eſt caro. What can be more plaine then this? yet to your expoſition it is not plaine enough. But give me your figurative, ſignificative, and ſuch other like termes, and I will defend that Chriſt hath not yet aſcended; no nor yet that he was incarnate, &c. Wherefore I can doe no other but put you in the number of them, whom Chryſoſtome ſpake of in this wiſe, ſaying; Audi, homo fidelis, qui contra hæreticum contendis, ſi Phariſæi convicti, & non placati & hæretici, &c. Heare, O thou Chriſtian man, wilt thou doe more then Chriſt could doe? Chriſt confuted the Phariſees, yet could he not put them to ſilence; Et fortior es tu Chriſto? And art thou ſtronger then Chriſt? Wilt thou go about to bring them to ſilence that will receive no anſwer? as who ſhould ſay, thou canſt not. Thus much I have ſaid, not for you Maſter Cranmer, for my hope that I conceived of you is now gone and paſt; but ſomewhat to ſatisfie the rude and unlearned people, that they perceiving your arrogant lying and lying arrogancie, may the better eſchew your deteſtable and abominable ſchiſme.

And thus ended the Prelate his worſhipful tale. After whom D. Story taketh the matter, and thus inferred in words, as followeth.

Doct. Stories talke to the Archbiſhop.

Maſter Cranmer, you have made a goodly proceſſe concerning your hereticall oath made to the King, but you forget your oath made to the See Apoſtolick. As concerning your oath made to the King, if you made it to him onely, it tooke an end by his death, and ſo it is releaſed: if you made it to his ſucceſſors, well ſir, the true ſucceſſors have the Empire, and they will you to diſſolve the ſame, and become a member of Chriſts Church againe, and it ſtandeth well with charitie.

To this the Archbiſhop anſwered againe, ſaith the reporter: but what his anſwer was, that he ſuppreſſeth, and returneth to the words of Doctor Storie, who imperiouſly turning his ſpeech againe to the Archbiſhop, ſaid as followeth:

Three things required in an oath.

Hold your peace ſir, and ſo ſhall it right well become you, conſidering that I gave you licence before to ſay your phanſie. Your oath was no oath: for it lacked the three points of an oath, that is to ſay, Iudicium, Iuſtitiam, & Veritatem.

D. Story calleth for witneſſes.

Theſe with the like words to the ſame effect being uttered by Doctor Storie, ſeeking to break up and make an end of that Seſſion, he eftſoones called for witneſſes to be produced, who ſhould be ſworne upon the booke, to utter and declare the next day whatſoever they knew, or could remember to be inferred againſt D. Cranmers hereſie. The names of the Witneſſes are theſe:

Witneſſes ſworne againſt the archbiſhop.

Doctor Marſhall, Commiſſary, and Deane of Chriſts Church.
Doctor Smith, under Commiſſarie.
Doctor Treſham.
Doct. Crooke.
M. London.
M. Curtop.
M. Warde.
M. Serles.

The archbiſhop refuſeth thoſe Iurates periured.

After the depoſitions of which witneſſes being taken, Doctor Story admoniſhed the Archbiſhop, permitting him to make his exceptions, if he thought any of the ſaid witneſſes were to be refuſed. Who then would admit none of them all, being men perjured, and not in Chriſtian religion. For if to ſweare, ſaid he, againſt the Pope were unlawfull, they ſhould rather have given their lives, then their oath. But if it were lawfull, then are they perjured, to defend him whom they forſware before. Nevertheleſſe, this anſwer of the Archbiſhop being lightly regarded, as little to the purpoſe appertaining, he was commanded againe to the place from whence he came. Who at his departing out, like as at his firſt coming in, ſhewed low obedience to Doctor Martin, and to Doctor Storie, the Queenes Commiſſioners. Then Doctor Story pointing him to the Biſhop of Gloceſter, ſaid, that he ought rather to give reverence unto him. So the reverend Archbiſhop departing without any obeyſance exhibited to the Biſhop, all the other roſe up, and departed every one to his owne. And thus brake up the Seſſion for that day, about two of the clocke at afternoone.

The archb. ſent againe to Bocardo.

The archbiſh. again giveth no reverence to the Popes Delegate.

The anſwer of the archbiſh. not indifferently reported.

And thus much hitherto concerning the ſummarie effect of this Action or Seſſion, with the Orations, diſcourſes, & articles commenced againſt the Archbiſhop of Canterburie, alſo with the reaſons and anſwers of the ſaid Archbiſhop to their objections & interogatories. Touching which his anſwers, forſomuch as they being recited by report of a Papiſt (as is aforeſaid) ſeeme to be not indifferently handled, it ſhall therefore not greatly be out of our matter, as ye have heard the Orations of Biſhop Brooks, with the reaſons and talke of the other Commiſſioners, amplified and ſet forth at large on the one ſide, ſo now in repeating the words and anſwers of the other part, to declare and ſet forth ſomewhat more amply and effectually, what ſpeech the ſaid Archbiſhop uſed for himſelfe in the ſame action, by the faithfull relation and teſtimonie of certaine other, who were likewiſe there preſent, and do thus report the effect of the Archbiſhops words, anſwering to the firſt Oration of biſhop Brooks, in manner as followeth.

A more full anſwer of the Archbiſhop of Canterburie to the firſt Oration of Biſhop Brookes.

A more full anſwer of the archbiſhop to B. Brookes Oration.

My Lord, you have very learnedly and eloquently in your Oration put me in remembrance of many things touching my ſelfe, wherein I doe not meane to ſpend the time in anſwering of them. I acknowledge Gods goodneſſe to me in all his gifts, and thanke him as heartily for this ſtate wherein I finde my ſelfe now, as ever I did for the time of my proſperitie; and it is not the loſſe of my promotions that grieveth me. The greateſt griefe I have at this time is, and one of the greateſt that ever I had in all my life, to ſee the King and Queenes Majeſties by their Proctors here to become my accuſers; and that in their owne Realme and Countrey, before a forraine power. If I have tranſgreſſed the Lawes of the Land, their Majeſties have ſufficient authoritie and power both from God, and by the ordinance of this Realme, to puniſh me, whereunto I both have, and at all times ſhall be content to ſubmit my ſelfe.

Q. Mary accuſeth the archbiſhop for taking her owne part againſt a forraine power.

The lawes of the Realme and of the Pope are contrary.

Alas? What hath the Pope to do in England? whoſe juriſdiction is ſo farre different from the juriſdiction of this Realme, that it is impoſſible to be true to the one, and true to the other. The lawes alſo are ſo divers, that whoſoever ſweareth to both, muſt needs incurre perjurie to the one. Which as oft as I remember, even for the love that I beare to her Grace, I cannot but be heartily ſory to thinke upon it, how that her Highneſſe the day of her Coronation, at which time ſhe tooke a ſolemne oath to obſerve all the lawes and liberties of this Realme of England, at the ſame time alſo tooke an oath to the Biſhop of Rome, and promiſed to maintaine that See. The State of England being ſo repugnant to the Supremacie of the Pope, it was impoſſible but ſhe muſt needs be forſworne in the one. Wherein if her grace had been faithfully advertiſed by her Councell, then ſurely ſhe would never have done it.

No man can be true both to the realme and to the Pope together.

The contrarietie betweene the lawes of this realme, and of the Pope deſcribed.

The laws of this Realme are, that the King of England is the ſupreme and ſole Governor of all his Countries and Dominions: and that he holdeth his Crown and Scepter of himſelfe, by the ancient laws, cuſtomes, and deſcents of the Kings of the Realme, and of none other. The Pope ſaith, that all Emperors and Kings hold their Crowns and Regalities of him, and that he may depoſe them when he liſt; which is high treaſon for any man to affirme and think, being borne within the Kings Dominions.

The Lawes of England are, that all Biſhops and Prieſts offending in caſes of felony or treaſon, are to be judged and tried by the lawes and cuſtomes of the Realme. The Popes lawes are, that the ſecular power cannot judge the ſpirituall power, and that they are not under their juriſdiction; which robbeth the King of the one part of his people.

Kings and Princes cannot uſe their owne lawes in their dominions, for the Pope.

The lawes alſo of England are, that whoſoever hindereth the execution or proceeding of the lawes of England for any other forraine lawes, Eccleſiaſticall or Temporall, incurreth the danger of a Præmunire. The Popes lawes are, that whoſoever hindereth the proceedings or executions of his lawes, for any other lawes, of any other King or Countrey, both the Prince himſelfe, his Councell, all his Officers, Scribes, Clerkes, and whoſoever give conſent or aide to the making or executing of any ſuch lawes, ſtand accurſed. A heavie caſe (if his curſe were any thing worth) that the King and Queene cannot uſe their owne lawes, but they and all theirs muſt ſtand accurſed. Theſe things and many more examples he alledged, which (he ſaid) ſtirred him that he could not give his conſent to the receiving of ſuch an enemy into the Realme, ſo ſubverting the dignity and ancient liberties of the ſame.

Cauſe why the archbiſh. would not admit the Pope.

And as for the matter of hereſie and ſchiſme, wherewith he was charged, he proteſted and called God to witneſſe, that he knew none that he maintained. But if that were an hereſie to denie the Popes authoritie, and the religion which the See of Rome hath publiſhed to the world theſe later yeers, then all the ancient Fathers of the Primitive Church, the Apoſtles and Chriſt himſelfe taught hereſie: and he deſired all them preſent to beare him witneſſe, that he tooke the traditions and religion of that uſurping Prelate to be moſt erroneous, falſe, and againſt the doctrine of the whole Scripture; which he had oftentimes well proved by writing, and the author of the ſame to be very Antichriſt, ſo often preached of by the Apoſtles and Prophets, in whom did moſt evidently

The Popes religion moſt erroneous.

All markes of Antichriſt muſt concurre in the Pope.

concurre

The Popes pride and tyranny.

concurre all ſignes and tokens whereby he was painted out to the world to be known.

For it was moſt evident that he had advanced himſelf above all Emperours and Kings of the world, whom he affirmeth to hold their Eſtates and Empires of him, as of their chiefe, and to be at his commandement to depoſe and erect at his good will and pleaſure, and that the ſtories make mention of his intolerable and inſolent pride, and tyranny, uſed over them in ſuch ſort, as no King would have uſed to his Chriſtian ſubjects, nor yet a good maſter to his ſervants, ſetting his feet on the Emperours neck, affirming that to be verified in him, which was ſpoken onely of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, in theſe words, Super Aſpidem & Baſiliſcum ambulabis, & conculcabis Leonem & Draconem. Other ſome had he made to hold his ſtirrop, others he had diſplaced and removed from their Empires and ſeats royall: and not content herewithall, more inſolent then Lucifer, he hath occupied not onely the higheſt place in this world, above Kings and Princes, but hath further preſumed to ſit in the ſeat of Almighty God, which onely he reſerved to himſelf, which is the conſcience of man; and to keep the poſſeſſion thereof, he hath promiſed forgiveneſſe of ſins totiens quotiens.

Marks of Antichriſt.

He hath brought in gods of his own framing, and invented a new religion, ful of gain and lucre, quite contrary to the doctrine of the holy Scripture, onely for the maintaining of his kingdome, diſplacing Chriſt from his glory, and holding his people in a miſerable ſervitude of blindeneſſe, to the loſſe of a great number of ſouls, which God at the latter day ſhall exact at his hand; boaſting many times in his Canons and Decrees, that he can diſpenſe Contra Petrum, contra Paulum, contra vetus & novum Teſtamentum; and that he Plenitudine poteſtatis, tantum poteſt quantum Deus: That is, Againſt Peter, againſt Paul, againſt the old and new Teſtament: and of the fulneſſe of power may do as much as God. O Lord, who ever heard ſuch blaſphemie? If there be any man that can advance himſelfe above him, let him be judged Antichriſt.

The Pope diſpenſeth againſt the new and old Teſtament.

This enemy of God and of our redemption, is ſo evidently painted out in the Scriptures by ſuch manifeſt ſignes and tokens, which all ſo clearly appear in him, that except a man will ſhut up his eyes and heart againſt the light, he cannot but know him: and therefore for my part I will never give my conſent to the receiving of him into this Church of England. And you my Lord, and the reſt that ſit here in Commiſſion, conſider well and examine your own conſciences; you have ſworn againſt him, you are learned, and can judge of the truth. I pray God you be not wilfully blinde. As for me, I have herein diſcharged mine own conſcience toward the world, and I will write alſo my minde to her Grace, touching this matter. The copie of which letter ſent to the Queene, ye ſhall finde after in the end of his ſtorie.

While he in this ſort made his anſwer, ye heard before how Doctor Storie and Martin divers times interrupted him with blaſphemous talke, and would faine have had the Biſhop of Gloceſter to put him to ſilence: who notwithſtanding did not, but ſuffered him to end his tale at full. After this he heard alſo how they proceeded to examine him of divers articles, whereof the chiefe was, That at the time of his creating Archbiſhop of Canterbury, he was ſworn to the Pope, and had his inſtitution and induction from him, and promiſed to maintaine then the authoritie of that See, and therefore was perjured: wherefore he ſhould rather ſtick to his firſt oath, and return to his old fold againe, then to continue obſtinately in an oath forced in the time of ſchiſme.

His anſwer to their articles.

How Cranmer was made archbiſhop againſt his will.

To that he anſwered, ſaving his proteſtation (which term he uſed before all his anſwers) that at ſuch time as Archbiſhop Warham died, he was Ambaſſador in Germanie for the King, who ſent for him thereupon home, and having intelligence by ſome of his friends (who were neer about the King) how he meant to beſtow the ſame Biſhopricke upon him, and therefore counſelled him in that caſe to make haſte home, he feeling in himſelfe a great inabilitie to ſuch a promotion, and very ſorie to leave his ſtudy, and eſpecially conſidering by what means he muſt have it, which was clean againſt his conſcience, which he could not utter without great perill and danger, deviſed an excuſe to the King of matter of great importance, for the which his longer abode there ſhould be moſt neceſſarie, thinking by that means in his abſence, that the King would have beſtowed it upon ſome other, and ſo remained there by that device, one half yeer after the King had written for him to come home. But after that no ſuch matter fell out, as he ſeemed to make ſuſpition of, the King ſent for him againe. Who after his return, underſtanding ſtill the Archbiſhoprick to be reſerved for him, made means by divers of his beſt friends to ſhift it off, deſiring rather ſome ſmaller living, that he might more quietly follow his book.

To be briefe, when the King himſelf ſpake with him, declaring that his full intention, for his ſervice ſake, and for the good opinion he conceived of him, was to beſtow that dignitie upon him, after long diſabling of himſelf, perceiving he could by no perſwaſions alter the Kings determination, he brake frankly his conſcience with him, moſt humbly craving firſt his graces pardon, for that he ſhould declare unto his Highneſſe. Which obtained, he declared, that if he accepted the office, then he muſt receive it at the Popes hand, which he neither would, nor could do, for that his Highneſſe was onely the ſupreme Governour of this Church of England, as well in cauſes Eccleſiaſticall as Temporall, and that the full right and donation of all maner of Biſhopricks and Benefices, as well as of any other Temporall dignities, and promotions, appertained to his Grace, and not to any other forrain authoritie, whatſoever it was, and therefore if he might in that vocation ſerve God, him, and his Countrey, ſeeing it was his pleaſure ſo to have it, he would accept it, and receive it of his Majeſtie, and of none other ſtranger, who had no authoritie within this realme, neither in any ſuch gift, nor in any other thing. Whereat the King, ſaid he, ſtaying a while and muſing, aſked me how I was able to prove it. At which time I alledged many Texts out of the Scriptures, and the Fathers alſo, approving the ſupreme and higheſt authoritie of Kings in their Realmes and Dominions, diſcloſing therewithall the intolerable uſurpation of the Pope of Rome.

D. Cranmer denied that he took the Archbiſhoprick at the Popes hands.

Cranmers anſwer to King Henry refuſing to be Archbiſh.

Firſt breaking of the matter of the Popes ſupremacy to K. Henry.

Afterwards it pleaſed his Highneſſe (quoth the Archbiſhop) many and ſundry times to talk with me of it, & perceiving that I could not be brought to acknowledge the Authoritie of the Biſhop of Rome, the King himſelf called Doctor Oliver, and other civill Lawyers, and deviſed with them how he might beſtow it upon me, inforcing me nothing againſt my conſcience. Who thereupon informed him, that I might do it by the way of proteſtation, and ſo one to be ſent to Rome, who might take the oath, and do every thing in my name. Which when I underſtood, I ſaid, he ſhould do it Super animam ſuam: and I indeed Bona fide made my proteſtation, that I did not acknowledge his authoritie any further, then as it

Cranmer ſworn to the Pope under proteſtation.

Cranmer in ſwearing to the Pope did nothing without advice of the beſt learned in this Realm.

agreed with the expreſſe word of GOD, and that it might be lawfull for me at all times to ſpeake againſt him, and to impugne his errours, when time and occaſion ſhould ſerve me. And this my proteſtation did I cauſe to be inrolled, and there I think it remaineth.

The Archb. anſwereth for his wife & children.

They objected to him alſo that he was married; which he confeſſed. Whereupon Doctor Martin ſaid, that his children were bondmen to the See of Canterbury. At which ſaying the Archbiſhop ſmiled, and aſked him if a Prieſt at his Benefice kept a Concubine, and had by her baſtards, whether they were bondmen to the Benefice or no, ſaying, I truſt you will make my childrens cauſes no worſe.

Becauſe there was offence taken at this word Supreme head, it was declared in the Queens ſtile to be ſupreme governor.

After this Doctor Martin demanded of him who was ſupreme head of the Church of England? Mary quoth my Lord of Canterburie, Chriſt is head of this member, as he is of the whole bodie of the univerſall Church. Why, quoth Doctor Martin, you made King Henrie the eighth ſupreme head of the Church. Yea, ſaid the Archbiſhop, of all the people of England, as well Eccleſiaſticall as Temporall. And not of the Church, ſaid Martin? No, ſaid he, for Chriſt is onely head of his Church, and of the faith and religion of the ſame. The King is head and governour of his people, which are the viſible Church. What (quoth Martin) you never durſt tell the King ſo. Yes, that I durſt, quoth he, and did, in the publication of his ſtile, wherein he was named ſupreme head of the Church; there was never other thing meant. A number of other fond and fooliſh objections were made, with repetition whereof I thought not to trouble the Reader.

The Archb. cited to appeare at Rome.

Thus after they had received his anſwers to all their objections, they cited him (as is aforeſaid) to appeare at Rome within fourſcore dayes, to make there his perſonall anſwers: which he ſaid, if the King and Queen would ſend him, he would be content to do, and ſo thence was carried to priſon again, where he continually remained, notwithſtanding that he was commanded to appear at Rome.

A point to be noted in the crafty practice of Romiſh hypocrites.

Wherein all men that have eyes to ſee may eaſily perceive the craftie practice of theſe Prelates, and the viſored face of their Juſtice, as though the Court of Rome would condemne no man before he anſwered for himſelf, as all Law and equitie required. But the very ſame inſtant time, the holineſſe of that unholy father, contrarie to all reaſon and juſtice, ſent his letter executorie unto the King and Queen to degrade and deprive him of his dignity: which thing he did not onely before the eightie dayes were ended, but before there were twentie dayes ſpent. Furthermore, whereas the ſaid Archbiſhop was firſt detained in ſtrait priſon, ſo that he could not appeare (as was notorious both in England and alſo in the Romiſh Court) and therefore had a lawfull and moſt juſt excuſe of his abſence by all Laws, both Popiſh and other: yet in the end of the ſaid fourſcore dayes, was that worthy Martyr decreed Contumax, that is, ſturdily, frowardly, and wilfully abſent, and in pain of the ſame his abſence condemned and put to death.

As touching the foreſaid executorie letters of the Pope ſent to the King and Queen, beginning thus; Paulus Epiſcopus ſervus ſervorum Dei, chariſſimo in Chriſto filio Philippo Regi & chariſſimæ in Chriſto filiæ Mariæ Reginæ, &c. becauſe the full tenour thereof is expreſſed in our firſt impreſſion of Acts, it ſhall not therefore be needfull to cumber this volume in repeating of the ſame again.

Doctor Thurlby and Doctor Boner coming with a new Commiſſion to ſit upon the Archbiſhop the 14. day of Februarie.

A new commiſſion ſent down from Rome againſt the Arch.

This letter or ſentence definitive of the Pope was dated about the firſt day of January, and was delivered here in England about the midſt of February. Upon the receit of which letters another Seſſion was appointed for the Archbiſhop to appear the 14. day of Februarie, before certain Commiſſioners directed down by the Queen, the chiefe whereof was the Biſhop of Ely, Doctor Thurlby. Concerning which doctor Thurlby by the way here is to be noted, that albeit he was not the ſaid Archbiſhops houſhold Chaplain, yet he was ſo familiarly acquainted with him, ſo dearly beloved, ſo inwardly accepted and advanced of him (not like a Chaplain, but rather like a naturall brother) that there was never any thing in the Archbiſhops houſe ſo dear, were it plate, Jewell, Horſe, Maps, Books, or any thing elſe, but if Thurlby did never ſo little commend it (a ſubtle kinde of begging) the Archbiſhop by and by, either gave it to him, or ſhortly ſent it after him to his houſe. So greatly was the Archbiſhop inamored with him, that whoſoever would obtain any thing of him, moſt commonly would make their way before by D. Thurlby. Which by matter of the ſaid D. Thurlby, I thought here to recite, not ſo much to upbraid the man with the vice of unthankfulneſſe, as chiefly and onely for this, to admoniſh him of old benefits received, whereby he may the better remember his old benefactor, and ſo to favour the cauſe and quarrell of him whom he was ſo ſingularly bounden unto.

D. Thurlby. D. Boner, commiſſioners.

The old benefites and familiarity between the Archb. and D. Thurlby.

A new ſitting of the Popes delegates in Chriſts church againſt the Archb. of Cant.

With the ſaid Doctor Thurlby Biſhop of Ely, was alſo aſſigned in the ſame Commiſſion Doctor Boner Biſhop of London, which two coming to Oxford upon St. Valentines day, as the Popes Delegates, with a new Commiſſion from Rome, by the vertue thereof commanded the Archbiſhop aforeſaid to come before them, in the Queere of Chriſts Church, before the high altar, where they ſitting (according to their manner) in their Pontificalibus, firſt began as the faſhion is, to reade their Commiſſion: wherein was contained, how that in the Court of Rome all things being indifferently examined, both the articles laid to his charge, with the anſwers made unto them, and witneſſes examined on both parts, and Councell heard as well on the King and Queens behalfe his accuſers, as on the behalf of Thomas Cranmer the partie guiltie, ſo that he wanted nothing appertaining to his neceſſary defence, &c. Which foreſaid Commiſſion, as it was in reading, Oh Lord, ſaid the Archbiſhop, what lies be theſe, that I being continually in priſon, and never could be ſuffered to have counſell or advocate at home, ſhould produce witneſſe and appoint my counſell at Rome? God muſt needs puniſh this open and ſhameles lying. They read on the cõmiſſion which came from the Pope, Plenitudine poteſtatis, ſupplying all manner of defects in law or proceſſe, committed in dealing with the Archbiſhop, and giving them full authoritie to proceed to deprivation and degradation of them, and ſo upon excommunication to deliver him up to the ſecular power, Omni appellatione remota.

The Popes Commiſſion grounded upon lyes.

The order of the Archbiſhops degradation.

When the commiſſion was read thus, they proceeding thereupon to his degradation, firſt clothed and diſguiſed him; putting on him a ſurpleſſe, and then an Albe; after that the veſtiment of a Subdeacon, and every other furniture, as a Prieſt readie to Maſſe.

When they had apparelled him ſo far; What ſaid he, I think I ſhall ſay Maſſe: yea, ſaid Coſins one of Boners Chaplains, my Lord, I truſt to ſee you ſay Maſſe for all this. Do you ſo, quoth he? that ſhall you never ſee, nor will I ever do it.

Then they inveſted him in all manner of robes of a Biſhop and Archbiſhop, as he is at his inſtalling, ſaving that as every thing then is moſt rich and coſtly, ſo every thing in this of Canvas and old clouts, with a Mitre and a Pall of the ſame ſute done upon him in mockerie, and then the Croſier ſtaffe was put in his hand.

This done after the Popes pontificall form and manner, Boner, who by the ſpace of many yeers had born, as it ſeemed, no great good will towards him, and now rejoyced to ſee this day wherein he might triumph over him, and take his pleaſure at full, began to ſtretch out his eloquence, making his Oration to the aſſembly, after this manner of ſort.

B. Boners eloquent oration againſt the Archb. Cranm.

This is the man that hath ever deſpiſed the Popes holines, and now is to be judged by him. This is the man who hath pulled down ſo many Churches, and now is come to be judged in a Church. This is the man that contemned the bleſſed Sacrament of the altar, and now is come to be condemned before that bleſſed ſacrament hanging over the altar. This is the man that like Lucifer ſat in the place of Chriſt upon an altar to judge other, and now is come before an altar to be judged himſelf.

Boner taken with an untruth.

Whereunto the Archbiſhop interrupting him ſaid, that in that he belied him, as he did in many other things: For that which he would now ſeeme to charge him withall, was his own fault, if it was any, and none of his. For the thing you meane, was in Pauls Church (ſaid he) where I came to ſit in Commiſſion; and there was a ſcaffold prepared for me and others, by you and your officers, and whether there were any altar under it or not, I could not perceive it, nor once ſuſpected it, wherefore you do wittingly evill to charge me with it.

Unmannerlineſſe of B. Boner to his brother in time of adverſity.

But Boner went on ſtill in his Rhetoricall repetition, lying and rayling againſt the Archbiſhop, beginning every ſentence with This is the man, this is the man, till at length there was never a man but was weary of the unmannerly uſage of him in that time and place: Inſomuch that the Biſhop of Ely aforeſaid divers times pulled him by the ſleeve to make an end, and ſaid to him afterward when they went to dinner, that he had broken promiſe with him: for he had intreated him earneſtly to uſe him with reverence.

After all this done and finiſhed, they began then to buſtle toward his degrading, and firſt to take from him his Croſier ſtaffe out of his hands, which he held faſt, and refuſed to deliver, and withall, imitating the example of Martin Luther, pulled an appeal out of his left ſleeve under the wriſt, which he there and then delivered unto them, ſaying, I appeal to the next Generall Councell; and herein I have comprehended my cauſe and form of it, which I deſire may be admitted; and prayed divers of the ſtanders by, by name to be witneſſes, and eſpecially M. Curtop, to whom he ſpake twice, &c.

Archb. Cranm. appealeth from the pope to a generall Councel.

The copie of which his appellation, becauſe it was not printed before, I thought here to exhibite, ad rei memoriam, as in form here followeth.

The tenour of the appeal of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury from the Pope, to the next generall Councell.

In the Name of the Father, and of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghoſt.

Firſt, my plain proteſtation made, that I intend to ſpeak nothing againſt one holy, Catholique and Apoſtolicall Church, or the authoritie thereof (the which authority I have in great reverence, and to whom my minde is in all things to obey) and if any thing peradventure, either by ſlipperneſſe of tongue, or by indignation of abuſes, or elſe by the provocation of mine adverſaries be ſpoken or done otherwiſe then well, or not with ſuch reverence as becometh me, I am moſt readie to amend it.

Challenge or appeal of the Archb. from the Pope to a generall Councell.

Although the Biſhop of Rome (whom they call Pope) beareth the roome of Chriſt in earth, and hath authoritie of God, yet by that power or authoritie he is not become unſinnable, neither hath he received that power to deſtroy, but to edifie the Congregation. Therefore if he ſhall command any thing that is not right to be done, he ought to take it patiently and in good part, in caſe he be not therein obeyed. And he muſt not be obeyed, if he command any thing againſt the precepts of God: no rather he may lawfully be reſiſted, even as Paul withſtood Peter. And if he being aided by help of Princes, deceived perchance by falſe ſuggeſtion, or with evill counſell, cannot be reſiſted, but the remedies of withſtanding him be taken away, there is nevertheleſſe one remedie of appealing (which no Prince can take away) uttered by the verie Law of nature: forſomuch as it is a certain defence, which is meet for everie body by the Law of God, of nature, and of man.

The Pope not unſinnable.
The Pope hath no power to deſtruction, but to edifie.

Remedy of appealing ſtandeth with the law of God and nature.

And whereas the Laws do permit a man to appeal, not onely from the griefs and injuries done, but alſo from ſuch as ſhall be done hereafter, or threatned to be done, in ſo much that the inferiour cannot make Laws of not appealing to a ſuperiour power; and ſince it is openly enough confeſſed, that a holy generall Councell, lawfully gathered together in the holy Ghoſt, and repreſenting the holy Catholique church, is above the Pope, eſpecially in matters concerning faith; that he cannot make Decrees that men ſhall not appeale from him to a generall Councell: therefore I Thomas Cranmer, Archbiſhop of Canterburie, or in time paſt ruler of the Metropoliticall Church of Canterbury, Doctor in Divinitie, do ſay and publiſh before you the publike Notarie, and witneſſes here preſent, with minde and intent to challenge and appeale from the perſons and griefs underneath written, and to proffer my ſelf in place and time convenient and meet, to prove the articles that follow. And I openly confeſſe, that I would lawfully have publiſhed them before this day, if I might have had either libertie to come abroad my ſelfe, or licence of a Notarie and witneſſes. But further then I am able to do, I know well is not required of the Laws.

The inferiour cannot forbid to appeal to the ſuperiour.
A generall Councell is ſuperiour to the Pope.

1 Firſt, I ſay and publiſh, that James by the mercy of God Prieſt, called Cardinall of the Pit, and of the title of our lady in the way of the church of Rome, Judge and Commiſſarie ſpecially deputed of our moſt holy Lord the Pope (as he affirmed) cauſed me to be cited to Rome, there to appear fourſcore dayes after the Citation ſerved on me, to make anſwer to certain articles touching the perill of my ſtate and life: And whereas I was kept in priſon with moſt ſtraight Ward, ſo that I could in no wiſe be ſuffered to go to Rome, nor to come out of priſon, and in ſo grievous cauſes concerning ſtate and life, no man is bound to ſend a Proctor, and though I would never ſo fain ſend my Proctor, yet by reaſon of povertie I am not able (for all that ever I had, wherewith I ſhould bear my Proctors coſts and charges, is quite taken from me) nevertheleſſe the moſt reverend Cardinall aforeſaid doth ſore threaten

The 1. cauſe why he doth appeal.

The Archb. cited to appear at Rome, when he was faſt in priſon that he could not come.

Note with what juſtice and ſincerity this Catholike Church doth proceed.

threaten me, that whether I ſhall appeare or not, he will neverthleſſe yet proceed in judgement againſt me. Wherein I feel my ſelf ſo grieved, that nothing can be imagined more miſchievous or further from reaſon.

The 2. cauſe.

2 Secondly, the reverend Father James Brooks, by the mercy of God Biſhop of Gloceſter, Judge and under-deputie (as he affirmed) of the moſt reverend Cardinall, cauſed me to be cited at Oxford (where I was then kept in priſon) to anſwer to certain articles, concerning the danger of my ſtate and life. And when I being unlearned and ignorant in the Laws, deſired counſell of the learned in the Law, that thing was moſt unrighteouſly denied me, contrarie to the equitie of all Laws both of GOD and Man. Wherein againe I feele me moſt wrongfully grieved.

The Archb. denied to have counſell of the Law.

The 3. cauſe.

3 And when I refuſed the ſaid Biſhop of Gloceſter to be my Judge, for moſt juſt cauſes, which I then declared, he neverthleſſe went on ſtill, and made proceſſe againſt me, contrarie to the rule of the laws of appealing, which ſay; A Iudge that is refuſed ought not to proceed in the cauſe, but to leave off. And when he had required of me anſwers to certain Articles, I refuſed to make him any anſwer: I ſaid I would yet gladly make anſwer to the moſt renowned Kings and Queens deputies or attourneys then preſent, with this condition notwithſtanding, that mine anſwer ſhould be extrajudiciall, and that was permitted me. And with this my proteſtation made and admitted, I made anſwer; but mine anſwer was ſudden and unprovided for: and therefore I deſired to have a copie of mine anſwers, that I might put to, take away, change, and amend them; and this was alſo permitted me. Neverthleſſe, contrary to his promiſe made unto me, no reſpect had to my proteſtation, nor licence given to amend mine anſwer, the ſaid reverend father Biſhop of Gloceſter (as I heare) commanded mine anſwers to be inacted contrarie to the equitie of the Law. In which thing again I feele me much grieved.

The Papiſts proceed contrary to Law.

The Papiſts contrary to their promiſe.

The 4. cauſe.

4 Furthermore, I could not for many cauſes admit the Biſhop of Romes uſurped authoritie in this Realm, nor conſent to it: Firſt my ſolemne oath letting me, which I made in the time of king Henry the eighth, of moſt famous memorie, according to the Laws of England: Secondly, becauſe I knew the authoritie of the Biſhop of Rome, which he uſurpeth, to be againſt the Crown, cuſtoms, and laws of this Realm of England, inſomuch, that neither the King can be crowned in this Realm, without the moſt grievous crime of perjurie, nor may biſhops enjoy their Biſhopricks, nor judgements to be uſed according to the laws and cuſtoms of this Realm, except by the Biſhop of Romes authoritie, be accurſed both the King and Queene, the Judges, Writers, and Executors of the Laws and Cuſtoms, with all that conſent to them. Finally, the whole Realm ſhall be accurſed.

Cauſes moving the Archb. why he could not admit the popes authority.

The popes authority cannot be admitted in this realme without perjury.

The 5. cauſe. Inconvenience to this realm in receiving the popes authority.

5 Moreover, that hainous and uſurped authority of the Biſhop of Rome, through reſervations of the Biſhopricks, Proviſions, Annuates, Diſpenſations, Pardons, Appellations, Buls, and other curſed merchandiſe of Rome, was wont exceedingly to ſpoile and conſume the riches and ſubſtance of this Realm, all which things ſhould follow again by recogniſing and receiving of that uſurped authority unto the unmeaſurable loſſe of this Realm.

The 6. cauſe.

6 Finally, it is moſt evident by that uſurped authority, not onely the Crown of England to be under yoke, the Laws and Cuſtomes of this Realme to be throwne downe and troden under foot, but alſo the moſt holy Decrees of Councels, together with the precepts both of the Goſpel and of God.

When in times paſt the Sun of righteouſneſſe being riſen in the world, Chriſtian Religion by the preaching of the Apoſtles began to be ſpread verie farre abroad and to flouriſh, inſomuch that their ſound went out into all the world; innumerable people, which walked in darkneſſe, ſaw a great light, Gods glorie everie where publiſhed did flouriſh, the onely carke and care of the Miniſters of the Church was purely and ſincerely to preach Chriſt, the people to imbrace and follow Chriſts doctrine. Then the Church of Rome, as it were Lady of the world, both was, and alſo was counted worthily the mother of other Churches, for as much as then ſhe firſt begat to Chriſt, nouriſhed with the food of pure doctrine, did help them with their riches, ſuccoured the oppreſſed, and was a ſanctuarie for the miſerable, ſhe rejoyced with them that rejoyced, and wept with them that wept. Then by the examples of the Biſhops of Rome, riches were deſpiſed, worldly glory and pomp was troden under foot, pleaſures and riot nothing regarded. Then this frail and uncertain life, being full of all miſeries, was laughed to ſcorn, whiles through the example of Romiſh Martyrs, men did every where preſſe forward to the life to come. But afterward when the ungraciouſneſſe of damnable ambition, never ſatisfied avarice, and the horrible enormitie of vices had corrupted and taken the See of Rome; there followed every where almoſt the deformities of all Churches, growing out of kinde into the maners of the Church their mother, leaving their former innocency and purity, and ſlipping into fouls and hainous uſages.

The primitive ſtate of the Church of Rome ſincere and pure.

The Church of Rome how and where it began to alter.

Deformities of the Church of Rome, infecting all other Churches.

The Biſhop of Rome no equall judge in his own cauſe.

For the foreſaid and many other griefs and abuſes (which I intend to prove, and do proffer my ſelf in time convenient to prove hereafter) ſince reformation of the above mentioned abuſes, is not to be looked for of the Biſhop of Rome, neither can I hope by reaſon of his wicked abuſes and uſurped authoritie, to have him an equall judge in his own cauſe: therefore I do challenge and appeal in theſe writings from the Pope, having no good counſell, and from the above named pretenſes, commiſſions, and judges, from their Citations, proceſſes, and from all other things that have or ſhall follow thereupon, and from every one of them, and from all their ſentences, cenſures, pains, and puniſhments of curſing, ſuſpenſion, and interdicting, and from all others whatſoever their denouncings and declarations (as they pretend) of ſchiſme, of hereſie, adulterie, deprivation, degrading by them or by any of them, in any manner wiſe attempted, done, and ſet forward to be attempted, to be done, and to be ſet forward hereafter (ſaving alwayes their honours and reverences) as unequall and unrighteous, moſt tyrannicall and violent, and from everie griefe to come, which ſhall happen to me, as well for my ſelf as for all and every one that cleaveth to me, or will hereafter be on my ſide, unto a free generall Councell, that ſhall hereafter lawfully be, and in a ſure place, to the which place I or a Proctor deputed by me, may freely and with ſafety come, and to him or them, to whom a man may by the Law, priviledge, cuſtome, or otherwiſe challenge and appeal.

Appellation from the pope to a generall Councell.

And I deſire the firſt, the ſecond, and the third time, inſtantly, more inſtantly, and moſt inſtantly, that I may have “ meſſengers, if there be any man that will and can give me them. And I make open promiſe of proſecuting this mine appellation, by the way of diſanulling, abuſe, inequalitie, and unrighteouſneſſe, or otherwiſe as I ſhall be better able: choice and libertie reſerved to me, to put to, diminiſh, change, correct, and interpret my ſayings, and to reform all things after a better faſhion, ſaving alwayes to me every other benefit of the law, and to them that either be, or will be on my part.

And touching my doctrine of the Sacrament, and other my doctrine, of what kinde ſoever it be, I proteſt that it was never my minde to write, ſpeak, or underſtand any thing contrarie to the moſt holy word of God, or elſe againſt the holy Catholique Church of Chriſt, but purely and ſimply to imitate and teach thoſe things onely, which I had learned of the ſacred Scripture, and of the holy Catholique Church of Chriſt from the beginning, and alſo according to the expoſition of the moſt holy and learned Fathers and Martyrs of the Church.

The Archb. no heretique, and why?

And if any thing hath peradventure chanced otherwiſe then I thought; I may erre, but heretique I cannot be, for as much as I am ready in all things to follow the judgement of the moſt ſacred Word of God, and of the holy Catholique Church, deſiring none other thing, then meekly and gently to be taught, if any where (which God forbid) I have ſwerved from the truth.

He proteſteth himſelf to be Catholique.

And I proteſt and openly confeſſe, that in all my doctrine and preaching, both of the Sacrament, and of other my doctrine whatſoever it be, not onely I meane and judge thoſe things, as the Catholique Church, and the moſt holy Fathers of old with one accord have meant and judged, but alſo I would gladly uſe the ſame words that they uſed, and not uſe any other words, but to ſet my hand to all and ſingular their ſpeeches, phraſes, wayes and forms of ſpeech, which they do uſe in their Treatiſes upon the Sacrament, and to keep ſtill their interpretation. But in this thing I onely am accuſed for an heretique, becauſe I allow not the doctrine lately brought in of the Sacrament, and becauſe I conſent not to words not accuſtomed in Scripture, and unknown to the ancient Fathers, but newly invented and brought in by men, and belonging to the deſtruction of ſouls, and overthrowing of the pure and old Religion. Yeven, &c.

New termes of the Sacrament brought in by the Pope unknown to the Scripture and old Doctors.

This appeal being put up to the Biſhop of Ely, he ſaid, My Lord, our Commiſſion is to proceed againſt you, Omnia appellatione remota, and therefore we cannot admit it.

Talk between D. Thurlby & the Archb. about the appeal.

Why (quoth he) then you do me the more wrong: for my caſe is not as every private mans caſe. The matter is between the Pope and me immediatè, and none otherwiſe: and I think no man ought to be a judge in his own cauſe.

Well, quoth Ely, if it may be admitted it ſhall, and ſo received it of him. And then began he to perſwade earneſtly with the Archbiſhop to conſider his ſtate, and to weigh it well, while there was time to do him good, promiſing to become a ſuter to the King and Queen for him; and ſo proteſted his great love and friendſhip that had been between them, heartily weeping, ſo that for a time he could not go on with his tale. After going forward, he earneſtly affirmed, that if it had not been the King and Queens commandement, whom he could not denie, elſe no worldly commoditie ſhould have made him to have done it, concluding that to be one of the ſorrowfulleſt things that ever happened unto him. The Archbiſhop gently ſeeming to comfort him, ſaid, he was verie well content withall: and ſo proceeded they to his degradation: the perfect form whereof, with all the rites and ceremonies thereto appertaining, taken out of the Popes Pontificall, becauſe it is alreadie deſcribed at full in our firſt book of Monuments, I ſhall refer the Reader to the ſame.

Thurlby weepeth for the Archbiſhop.

Here then to be ſhort, when they came to take off his Pall (which is a ſolemne veſture of an Archbiſhop) then ſaid he, Which of you hath a Pall, to take off my Pall? Which imported as much as they being his inferiors, could not degrade him. Whereunto one of them ſaid, in that they were but Biſhops, they were his inferiors, and not competent Judges: but being the Popes delegates, they might take his Pall, and ſo they did, and ſo proceeding took every thing in order from him, as it was put on. Then a Barbar clipped his hair round about, and the Biſhop ſcraped the tops of his fingers where he had been anointed, wherein Biſhop Boner behaved himſelf, as roughly and unmanerly, as the other Biſhop was to him ſoft and gentle. Whiles they were thus doing, All this (quoth the Archbiſhop) needed not: I had my ſelf done with this geare long ago. Laſt of all they ſtripped him out of his gowne into his jacket, and put upon him a poore yeoman Bedles gowne, full bare and neerly worne, and as evill favouredly made, as one might lightly ſee, and a towns mans cap on his head, and ſo delivered him to the ſecular power.

Lord Boner unlordeth the Archb.

It is happy this B. had ſo much maners yet to call him Gentleman.

After this pageant of degradation, and all was finiſhed, then ſpake Lord Boner, ſaying to him, Now are you no Lord any more: and ſo whenſoever he ſpake to the people of him (as he was continually barking againſt him) ever he uſed this terme, This gentleman here, &c.

And thus with great compaſſion and pitie of everie man in this evill favored gowne was he carried to priſon. Whom there followed a Gentleman of Glocceſterſhire with the Archbiſhops own gowne, who ſtanding by, and being thought to be toward one of the Biſhops, had it delivered unto him; who by the way talking with him, ſaid, the Biſhop of Ely proteſted his friendſhip with tears. Yet (ſaid he) he might have uſed a great deale more friendſhip towards me, and never have been the worſe thought on, for I have well deſerved it: and going into the priſon up with him, aſked him if he would drink. Who anſwered him, ſaying, if he had a peece of ſalt fiſh, that he had better will to eat: for he had been that day ſomewhat troubled with this matter, and had eaten little, but now that it is paſt, my heart (ſaid he) is well quieted. Whereupon the Gentleman ſaid, he would give him money with all his heart, for he was able to do it. But he being one toward the law, and fearing maſter Farmers caſe, durſt therefore give him nothing, but gave money to the Bayliffes that ſtood by, and ſaid, that if they were good men, they would beſtow it on him (for my Lord of Canterburie had not one penie in his purſe to help him) and ſo left him, my Lord bidding him earneſtly farewell, commending himſelf to his prayers and al his friends. That night this Gentleman was ſtaid by Boner and Elie, for giving him this money: and but for the help of friends, he had been ſent up to the Councell. Such was the cruelty and iniquitie of the time, that men could not do good without puniſhment.

Curteſie ſhewed to the Archb. by a gentleman.

This Farmer had loſt all his lands for receiving a prieſt in the Tower in K. Henries time.

The gentleman in danger for relieving the Archb.

Here followeth the recantation of the Archbiſhop, with his repentance of the ſame.

IN this meane time, while the Archbiſhop was thus remaining in durance (whom they had kept now in priſon almoſt the ſpace of three yeers) the Doctors and Divines of Oxford buſied themſelves all that ever they could about M. Cranmer, to have him recant, aſſaying by all craftie practices and allurements they might deviſe how to bring their purpoſe to paſſe. And to the intent they might win him eaſily, they had him to the Deans houſe of Chriſts Church in the ſaid Univerſitie.

verſitie, where he lacked no delicate fare, played at the Bowls, had his pleaſure for walking, and all other things that might bring him from Chriſt. Over and beſides all this, ſecretly and ſleightly they ſuborned certain men, which when they could not expugne him by arguments and diſputation, ſhould by intreatie and faire promiſes, or any other means allure him to recantation; perceiving otherwiſe what a great wound they ſhould receive, if the Archbiſhop had ſtood ſtedfaſt in his ſentence: and again on the other ſide, how great profit they ſhould get, if he as the principall ſtandard-bearer, ſhould be overthrown. By reaſon whereof the wily Papiſts flocked about him, with threatning, flattering, intreating, and promiſing, and all other means; ſpecially Henry Sydall, and Friar John a Spaniard, de Villa Garcina, to the end to drive him, to the uttermoſt of their poſſibilitie, from his former ſentence to recantation.

Perſwaſions of the Papiſts to the Archbiſhop to recant.

Firſt, they ſet forth how acceptable it would be both to the King and Queene, and eſpecially how gainfull to him, and for his ſouls health the ſame ſhould be. They added moreover, how the Councell and the Noble men bare him good will. They put him in hope, that he ſhould not onely have his life, but alſo be reſtored to his ancient dignitie, ſaying, it was but a ſmall matter, and ſo eaſie that they required him to do, onely that he would ſubſcribe to a few words with his owne hand; which if he did, there ſhould be nothing in the Realme that the Queene would not eaſily grant him, whether he would have riches or dignitie, or elſe if he had rather live a private life in quiet reſt, in whatſoever place he liſted, without all publike Miniſterie, onely that he would ſet his name in two words to a little leafe of paper; but if he refuſed, there was no hope of health and pardon: for the Queen was ſo purpoſed, that ſhe would have Cranmer a Catholique, or elſe no Cranmer at all. Therefore he ſhould chuſe whether he thought it better to end his life ſhortly in the flames and firebrands now ready to be kindled, then with much honour to prolong his life, untill the courſe of nature did call him: for there was no middle way.

Moreover, they exhorted him that he would look to his wealth, his eſtimation and quietneſſe, ſaying, that he was not ſo old, but that many yeers yet remained in this his ſo luſty age; and if he would not do it in reſpect of the Queen, yet he ſhould do it for reſpect of his life, and not ſuffer that other men ſhould be more carefull for his health, then he was himſelf: ſaying, that this was agreeable to his notable learning and vertues; which being adjoyned with his life would be profitable both to himſelf, and to many other; but being extinct by death, ſhould be fruitfull to no man; that he ſhould take good heed that he went not too far; yet there was time enough to reſtore all things ſafe, and nothing wanted, if he wanted not to himſelf. Therefore they would him to lay hold upon the occaſion of his health while it was offered, leſt if he would now refuſe it while it was offered, he might hereafter ſeek it when he could not have it.

Finally, if the deſire of life did nothing move him, yet he ſhould remember that to die is grievous in all ages, and eſpecially in theſe his yeers and flower of dignitie it were more grievous: but to die in the fire and ſuch torments, is moſt grievous of all. With theſe and like provocations theſe faire flatterers ceaſed not to ſollicite and urge him, uſing all means they could to draw him to their ſide; whoſe force his manly conſtancie did a great while reſiſt. But at laſt when they made no end of calling and crying upon him, the archbiſhop being overcome, whether through their importunitie, or by his owne imbecilitie, or of what minde I cannot tell, at length gave his hand.

The Archbiſhop content to recant.

It might be ſuppoſed, that it was done for the hope of life, and better dayes to come. But as we may ſince perceive by a letter of his ſent to a Lawyer, the moſt cauſe why he deſired his time to be delayed, was that he would make an end of Marcus Antonius, which he had alreadie begun: but howſoever it was, plain it was, to be againſt his conſcience. The forme of which recantation made by the Friers and Doctors, whereto he ſubſcribed, was this.

Cauſes moving the Archb. to give with time.

The copie and words of Cranmers recantation.

I Thomas Cranmer late Archbiſhop of Canterburie, do renounce, abhorre, and deteſt, all maner of hereſies and errors of Luther and Zwinglius, and all other teachings which be contrarie to ſound and true doctrines. And I beleeve moſt conſtantly in my heart, and with my mouth I confeſſe one holy and Catholique Church viſible, without the which there is no ſalvation; and thereof I acknowledge the Biſhop of Rome to be ſupreme head in earth, whom I knowledge to be the higheſt Biſhop and Pope, and Chriſts Vicar, unto whom all Chriſtian people ought to be ſubject.

The copie of Cranmers recantation ſparſed abroad by the Papiſts.

And as concerning the Sacraments, I beleeve and worſhip in the ſacrament of the altar the very body and blood of Chriſt, being contained moſt truly under the forms of bread and wine; the bread through the mighty power of God being turned into the body of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, and the wine into his blood.

And in the other ſix ſacraments alſo (like as in this) I beleeve and hold as the univerſall Church holdeth, and the Church of Rome judgeth and determineth.

Furthermore, I beleeve that there is a place of Purgatorie, where ſouls departed be puniſhed for a time, for whom the Church doth godly and wholſomely pray, like as it doth honour ſaints and make prayers to them.

Finally, in all things I profeſſe, that I do not otherwiſe beleeve, then the Catholique Church and the Church of Rome holdeth and teacheth. I am ſorie that ever I held or thought otherwiſe. And I beſeech Almighty God, that of his mercie he will vouchſafe to forgive me, whatſoever I have offended againſt God or his Church, and alſo I deſire and beſeech all Chriſtian people to pray for me.

And all ſuch as have been deceived either by mine example or doctrine, I require them by the blood of Jeſus Chriſt, that they will return to the unitie of the Church, that we may be all of one minde, without ſchiſme or diviſion.

And to conclude, as I ſubmit my ſelf to the Catholique Church of Chriſt, and to the ſupreme head thereof, ſo I ſubmit my ſelf unto the moſt excellent Majeſties of Philip and Marie, King and Queen of this Realm of England, &c. and to all other their laws and ordinances, being readie allwayes as a faithfull ſubject ever to obey them. And God is my witneſſe that I have not done this for favour or feare of any perſon, but willingly and of mine owne minde, as well to the diſcharge of mine own conſcience, as to the inſtruction of other.

This recantation of the Archbiſhop was not ſo ſoone conceived, but the Doctors and Prelates without delay cauſed the ſame to be imprinted, and ſet abroad in all mens hands. Whereunto for better credit, firſt was added the name of Thomas Cranmer, with a ſolemne ſubſcription, then followed lowed the witneſſes of this recantation, Henrie Sydall, and Frier John De Villa Garcina. All this while Cranmer was in certaine aſſurance of his life, although the ſame was faithfully promiſed to him by the Doctors; but after that they had their purpoſe, the reſt they committed to all adventure, as became men of that religion to doe.

Q. Marie. Anno 1556.

The Queenes heart ſet againſt Cranmer.

The Queene, having now gotten a time to revenge her old griefe, received his recantation very gladly: but of her purpoſe to put him to death ſhe would nothing relent.

Cranmer in a miſerable caſe.

Now was Cranmers caſe in a miſerable taking, who neither inwardly had any quietneſſe in his owne conſcience, nor yet outwardly any helpe in his adverſaries.

Beſides this, on the one ſide was praiſe, on the other ſide ſcorne, on both ſides danger, ſo that neither he could die honeſtly, nor yet unhoneſtly live. And whereas he ſought profit, he fell into double diſprofit, that neither with good men he could avoid ſecret ſhame, nor yet with evill men the note of diſſimulation.

The Queene conferreth with D. Cole about Cranmers burning.

In the meane time, while theſe things were adoing (as I ſaid) in the priſon amongſt the Doctors, the Queene taking ſecret counſell, how to diſpatch Cranmer out of the way (who as yet knew nothing of her ſecret hate, and looked for nothing leſſe then death) appointed D. Cole, and ſecretly gave him in commandement, that againſt the 21. of March, he ſhould prepare a funerall ſermon for Cranmers burning, and ſo inſtructing him orderly and diligently of her will and pleaſure in that behalfe, ſendeth him away.

L. Williams of Tame, L. Shandoys, ſir Tho. Bridges, ſir Jo. Browne, appointed to be at Cranmers execution.

Soone after, the Lord Williams of Tame, and the L. Shandoys, ſir Tho. Bridges, and ſir John Browne were ſent for, with other worſhipful men and Juſtices, commanded in the Queenes name to be at Oxford at the ſame day, with their ſervants and retinue, leſt Cranmers death ſhould raiſe there any tumult.

Cole the Doctor having this leſſon given him before, and charged by her commandement, returned to Oxford, ready to play his part; who as the day of execution drew neere, even the day before, came into the priſon to Cranmer; to trie whether he abode in the Catholike faith wherein before he had left him. To whom, when Cranmer had anſwered, that by Gods grace he would daily be more confirmed in the Catholike faith; Cole departing for that time, the next day following repaired to the Archbiſhop againe, giving no ſignification as yet of his death that was prepared: And therefore in the morning, which was the 21. day of March appointed for Cranmers execution, the ſaid Cole coming to him, asked if he had any money. To whom when he anſwered that he had none, he delivered him fifteene Crownes to give the poore to whom he would: and ſo exhorting him ſo much as he could to conſtancie in Faith, departed thence about his buſineſſe, as to his Sermon appertained.

Cranmer writeth, and ſubſcribeth the articles with his owne hand.

By this partly, and other like arguments, the Archbiſhop beganne more and more to ſurmiſe what they went about. Then becauſe the day was not farre paſt, and the Lords and Knights that were looked for were not yet come, there came to him the Spaniſh Frier, witneſſe of his recantation, bringing a paper with articles, which Cranmer ſhould openly profeſſe in his recantation before the people, earneſtly deſiring him that he would write the ſaid inſtrument with the articles with his owne hand, and ſigne it with his name: which when he had done, the ſaid Frier deſired that he would write another copie thereof, which ſhould remaine with him, and that he did alſo. But yet the Archbiſhop being not ignorant whereunto their ſecret devices tended, and thinking that the time was at hand in which he could no longer diſſemble the profeſſion of his faith with Chriſts people, he put ſecretly in his boſome his prayer with his exhortation, written in another paper, which he minded to recite to the people, before he ſhould make the laſt profeſſion of his faith, fearing leſt if they had heard the confeſſion of his Faith firſt, they would not afterward have ſuffered him to exhort the people.

Soone after about nine of the clocke, the Lord Williams, Sir Thomas Bridges, Sir John Browne, and the other Juſtices, with certaine other Noblemen, that were ſent of the Queenes Councell, came to Oxford with a great traine of waiting men. Alſo of the other multitude on everie ſide (as is wont in ſuch a matter) was made a great concourſe, and greater expectation. For firſt of all, they that were of the Popes ſide were in great hope that day to hear ſomething of Cranmer that ſhould ſtabliſh the vanitie of their opinion: the other part, which were endued with a better minde, could not yet doubt, that he which by continuall ſtudy and labour for ſo many yeeres, had ſet forth the doctrine of the Goſpel, either would or could now in the laſt Act of his life forſake his part. Briefly, as every mans will inclined, either to this part or to that, ſo according to the diverſitie of their deſires, every man wiſhed and hoped for. And yet becauſe in an uncertaine thing the certainty could be knowne of none what would be the end; all their mindes were hanging betweene hope and doubt. So that the greater the expectation was in ſo doubtfull a matter, the more was the multitude, that was gathered thither to heare and behold.

D. Cranmer brought to D. Coles ſermon.

In this ſo great frequencie and expectation, Cranmer at the length cometh from Bocardo priſon unto Saint Maries Church, becauſe it was a foule and rainie day, the chiefe Church in the Univerſitie, in this order. The Maior went before, next him the Aldermen in their place and degree; after them was Cranmer brought betweene two Friers, which mumbling to and fro certaine Pſalmes in the ſtreets, anſwered one another untill they came to the Church doore, and there they began the ſong of Simeon, Nunc dimitis, and entring into the Church, the Pſalme-ſaying Friers brought him to his ſtanding, and there left him.

Cranmer ſet up upon a ſtage.

There was a ſtage ſet over againſt the Pulpit, of a meane height from the ground, where Cranmer had his ſtanding, waiting untill Cole made him ready to his Sermon.

The lamentable caſe and ſight of that man gave a ſorrowfull ſpectacle to all Chriſtian eyes that beheld him. He that late was Archbiſhop, Metropolitane, and Primate of England, and the Kings privie Councellor, being now in a bare and ragged gowne, and ill favouredly cloathed, with an old ſquare cap, expoſed to the contempt of all men, did admoniſh men not onely of his owne calamitie, but alſo of their ſtate and fortune. For who would not pity his caſe, and bewaile his fortune, and might not feare his owne chance, to ſee ſuch a Prelate, ſo grave a Councellor, and of ſo long continued honor, after ſo many dignities, in his old yeeres to be deprived of his eſtate, adjudged to die, and in ſo painfull a death to end his life, and now preſently from ſuch freſh ornaments, to deſcend to ſuch vile and ragged apparell.

In this habit, when he had ſtood a good ſpace upon the ſtage, turning to a pillar neere adjoyning thereunto, he lifted up his hands to heaven, and prayed unto God once or twice, till at the length Doctor Cole coming into the Pulpit, and beginning his Sermon, entered firſt into mention of Tobias an Zacharie. Whom after he had praiſed in the beginning of his Sermon for their perſeverance in the true worſhipping of God, he then divided his whole Sermon into three parts (according to the ſolemne cuſtome of the ſchooles) intending to ſpeake firſt of the mercy of God: ſecondly, of his juſtice to be ſhewed: and laſt of all, how the Princes ſecrets are not to be opened. And proceeding a little from the beginning, he took occaſion by and by to turne his tale to Cranmer, and with many hot words reproved him, that once he being indued with the ſavour and feeling of wholſome and catholike doctrine, fell into the contrarie opinion of pernicious error; which he had not only defended by writings, and all his power, but alſo allured other men to do the like, with great liberalitie of gifts, as it were, appointing rewards for error; and after he had allured them, by all meanes did cheriſh them.

D. Coles Sermon divided into three parts.

It were too long to repeat all things, that in long order were pronounced. The ſumme of his tripartite declamation was, that he ſaid Gods mercie was ſo tempered with his juſtice, that he did not altogether require puniſhment according to the merits of offenders, nor yet ſometimes ſuffered the ſame altogether to goe unpuniſhed, yea though they had repented. As in David, who when he was bidden chooſe of three kindes of puniſhments which he would, and he had choſen peſtilence for three dayes; the Lord forgave him halfe the time, but did not releaſe all: And that the ſame thing came to paſſe in him alſo, to whom although pardon and reconciliation was due according to the Canons, ſeeing he repented him of his errors, yet there were cauſes why the Queene and the Councell at this time judged him to death: of which, leſt he ſhould marvell too much, he ſhould heare ſome.

The ſumme and effect of D. Coles ſermon at Oxford.

If Cole gave this judgement upon Cranmer when he had repented, what judgement is then to be given of Cole, which alwaies perdured in error, and never yet repented.

Firſt, that being a traitor, he had diſſolved the lawfull matrimonie betweene the King her father and mother; beſides the driving out of the Popes authoritie, while he was Metropolitane.

Secondly, that he had beene an heretike, from whom as from an author and onely fountaine all hereticall doctrin and ſchiſmaticall opinions, that ſo many yeers have prevailed in England, did firſt riſe and ſpring; of which he had not beene a ſecret favourer only, but alſo a moſt earneſt defender even to the end of his life, ſowing them abroad by writings and arguments, privately and openly, not without great ruine and decay of the Catholike Church.

If all heretikes in England ſhould be burned, where ſhould D. Cole have been ere now?

And further, it ſeemed meet, according to the law of equalitie, that as the death of the Duke of Northumberland of late, made even with Thomas More Chancellor that died for the Church, ſo there ſhould be one that ſhould make even with Fiſher of Rocheſter; and becauſe that Ridley, Hooper, Ferrar, were not able to make even with that man, it ſeemed that Cranmer ſhould be joyned to them to fill up their part of equalitie.

Lex non æqualitatis ſed iniquitatis.

Beſides theſe there were other juſt and weightie cauſes, which ſeemed to the Queene and Councell, which was not meet at that time to be opened to the common people.

After this, turning his tale to the hearers, he bade all men beware by this mans example, that among men nothing is ſo high, that can promiſe it ſelfe ſafetie on the earth, and that Gods vengeance is equally ſtretched againſt all men, and ſpareth none: therefore they ſhould beware and learne to feare their Prince. And ſeeing the Queenes Majeſtie would not ſpare ſo notable a man as this, much leſſe in the like cauſe ſhee would ſpare other men, that no man ſhould thinke to make thereby any defence of his error, either in riches or any kinde of authoritie. They had now an example to teach them all, by whoſe calamitie every man might conſider his own fortune; who from the top of dignitie, none beeing more honourable than hee in the whole realme, and next the King, was fallen into ſo great miſerie, as they might now ſee, being a man of ſo high degree, ſometime one of the chiefeſt Prelates in the Church, and on Archbiſhop, the chiefe of the Councell, the ſecond perſon in the Realme of long time, a man thought in greateſt aſſurance, having a King on his ſide; notwithſtanding all his authoritie and defence, to be debaſed from high eſtate to a low degree, of a Counſellor to become a caitiffe, and to be ſet in ſo wretched a ſtate, that the pooreſt wretch would not change condition with him; briefly ſo heaped with miſerie on all ſides, that neither was left in him any hope of better fortune, nor place for worſe.

No ſtate in this earth ſo high nor ſo ſure, but it may fall.

The latter part of his ſermon he converted to the Archbiſhop, whom he comforted and encouraged to take his death well, by many places of Scripture, as with theſe and ſuch like; bidding him not to miſtruſt, but he ſhould incontinently receive that the thiefe did, to whom Chriſt ſaid, Hodie mecum eris in Paradiſo, That is, This day thou ſhalt be with me in Paradiſe: And out of St. Paul he armed him againſt the terrour of the fire, by this, Dominus fidelis eſt, non ſinet vos tentari ultra quam ferre poteſtis, That is, The Lord is faithfull, which will not ſuffer you to be tempted above your ſtrength: by the example of the three children, to whom God made the flame to ſeeme like a pleaſant dew, adding alſo the rejoycing of St. Andrew in his croſſe, the patience of St. Laurence on the fire, aſſuring him, that God, if he called on him, and to ſuch as die in his faith, either would abate the furie of the flame, or give him ſtrength to abide it.

D. Cole encourageth the Archb. to take his death patiently.

1 Cor. 10.

He glorified God much in his converſion, becauſe it appeared to be onely his worke, declaring what travell and conference had beene with him to convert him, and all prevailed not, till that it pleaſed God of his mercie to reclaime him, and call him home. In diſcourſing of which place, he much commended Cranmer, and qualified his former doings, thus tempering his judgement and talke of him, that all the time (ſaid he) he flowed in riches and honour, he was unworthy of his life: and now that he might not live, he was unworthy of death. But leſt he ſhould carry with him no comfort, he would diligently labour (he ſaid) and alſo he did promiſe in the name of all the Prieſts that were preſent, that immediately after his death there ſhould be Dirges, Maſſes, and funerals executed for him in all the Churches of Oxford for the ſuccour of his ſoule.

D. Cole rejoyceth in the Archbiſhops converſion, but that rejoycing laſted not long.

Dirges and Maſſes promiſed for Cranmers ſoule.

Cranmer in all this meane time, with what great griefe of minde he ſtood hearing this Sermon, the outward ſhewes of his body and countenance did better expreſſe, then any man can declare; one while lifting up his hands and eyes unto heaven, and then againe for ſhame letting them downe to the earth. A man might have ſeene the very image and ſhape of perfect ſorrow lively in him expreſſed. More then twenty ſeverall times the teares guſhed out abundantly, dropping downe marvellouſly from his fatherly face. They which were preſent, doe teſtifie that they never ſaw in any childe more teares, then braſt out from him at that time, all the Sermon while; but eſpecially when they recited his prayer before the people. It is marvellous what commiſeration and pitie moved all mens hearts, that beheld ſo heavie a countenance, and ſuch aboundance of teares in an old man of ſo reverend dignitie.

The teares of the Archbiſhop.

Cranmer required to declare his faith.

Cole, after he had ended his Sermon, called back the people that were ready to depart, to prayers. Brethren (ſaid he) leſt any man ſhould doubt of this mans earneſt converſion and repentance, you ſhall heare him ſpeake before you, and therefore I pray you Maſter Cranmer, that you will now performe that you promiſed not long agoe; namely, that you would openly expreſſe the true and undoubted profeſſion of your faith, that you may take away all ſuſpicion from men, and that all men may underſtand that you are a Catholike indeed. I will doe it (ſaid the Archbiſhop) and that with a good will; who by and by riſing up, and putting off his cap, began to ſpeake thus unto the people.

Cranmer willing to declare his faith.

The words of the Archb. to the people.

I deſire you, well beloved brethren in the Lord, that you will pray to God for me, to forgive me my ſinnes, which above all men, both in number and greatneſſe, I have committed. But among all the reſt, there is one offence which moſt of all at this time doth vexe and trouble me, whereof in proceſſe of my talke you ſhall heare more in his proper place, and then putting his hand into his boſome, he drew forth his prayer, which he recited to the people in this ſenſe.

The prayer of Doctor Cranmer, Archbiſhop.

GOod Chriſtian people, my dearely beloved brethren and ſiſters in Chriſt, I beſeech you moſt heartily to pray for me to Almightie God, that he will forgive me all my ſinnes and offences, which be many, without number, and great above meaſure. But yet one thing grieveth my conſcience more then all the reſt, whereof God willing, I intend to ſpeake more hereafter. But how great and how many ſoever my ſinnes be, I beſeech you to pray God of his mercy to pardon and forgive them all. And here kneeling downe, he ſaid:

The prayer of the Archb. Cranmer.

O Father of heaven, O Sonne of God, Redeemer of the world; O holy Ghoſt, three perſons and one God, have mercy upon me moſt wretched caitiſe and miſerable ſinner. I have offended both againſt heaven and earth, more then my tongue can expreſſe. Whither then may I goe, or whither ſhall I flee? To heaven I may be aſhamed to lift up mine eyes, and in earth I finde no place of refuge or ſuccour. To thee therefore, O Lord, doe I runne; to thee doe I humble my ſelfe, ſaying, O Lord my God, my ſinnes be great, but yet have mercy upon me for thy great mercy. The great myſtery that God became man, was not wrought for little or few offences. Thou diddeſt not give thy Sonne (O heavenly Father) unto death for ſmall ſinnes onely, but for all the greateſt ſinnes of the world, ſo that the ſinner returne to thee with his whole heart, as I doe here at this preſent. Wherefore have mercy on me O God, whoſe propertie is alwaies to have mercy, have mercy upon me O Lord, for thy great mercy. I crave nothing for mine owne merits, but for thy names ſake, that it may be hallowed thereby, and for thy deare Sonne, Ieſus Chriſts ſake. And now therefore, Our Father of heaven, hallowed be thy name, &c. And then he riſing, ſaid:

The laſt words of exhortation of the Archb. to the people.

Every man (good people) deſireth at the time of his death to give ſome good exhortation that others may remember the ſame before their death, and be the better thereby: ſo I beſeech God grant me grace, that I may ſpeake ſomething at this my departing, whereby God may be glorified, and you edified.

Exhortation to contempt of the world.

Firſt, it is an heavy caſe to ſee that ſo many folk ſo much dote upon the love of this falſe world, and be ſo carefull for it, that of the love of God, or the world to come, they ſeeme to care very little or nothing. Therefore this ſhall be my firſt exhortation, that you ſet not your mindes overmuch upon this glozing world, but upon God, and upon the world to come; and to learne to know what this leſſon meaneth, which St. John teacheth, that the love of this world is hatred againſt God.

Exhortation to obedience.

The ſecond exhortation is, that next under God you obey your King and Queene willingly and gladly, without murmuring or grudging; not for feare of them onely, but much more for the feare of God; knowing that they be Gods Miniſters, appointed by God to rule and governe you: and therefore whoſoever reſiſteth them, reſiſteth the ordinance of God.

Exhortation to brotherly love.

The thrid exhortation is, that you love altogether like brethren and ſiſters. For alas, pitie it is to ſee what contention and hatred one Chriſtian man beareth to another, not taking each other as brother and ſiſter, but rather as ſtrangers and mortall enemies. But I pray you learn and beare well away this one leſſon, To doe good unto all men, as much as in you lieth, and to hurt no man, no more then you would hurt your owne naturall loving brother or ſiſter. For this you may be ſure of, that whoſoever hateth any perſon, and goeth about maliciouſly to hinder or hurt him, ſurely, and without all doubt God is not with that man, although he think himſelf never ſo much in Gods favour.

Exhortation to rich men of this world moving them to charitable almes.

The fourth exhortation ſhall be to them that have great ſubſtance and riches of this world, that they will well conſider and weigh three ſayings of the Scripture. One is of our Saviour Chriſt himſelfe, who ſaith, Luke 18. It is hard for a rich man to enter into the Kingdome of heaven. A ſore ſaying, and yet ſpoken of him that knoweth the truth.

The ſecond is of St. John, 1 Iohn 3. whoſe ſaying is this, He that hath the ſubſtance of this world, and ſeeth his brother in neceſſitie, and ſhutteth up his mercy from him, how can he ſay that he loveth God?

The third is of St. James, who ſpeaketh to the covetous rich man after this manner, Weepe you and howle for the miſerie that ſhall come upon you: your riches doe rot, your cloathes be moth-eaten, your gold and ſilver doth canker and ruſt, and their ruſt ſhall beare witneſſe againſt you, and conſume you like fire: you gather a hoard or treaſure of Gods indignation againſt the laſt day. Let them that be rich ponder well theſe three ſentences: for if they ever had occaſion to ſhew their charitie, they have it now at this preſent, the poore people being ſo many, and victuals ſo deare.

And now for as much as I am come to the laſt end of my life, whereupon hangeth all my life paſt, and all my life to come, either to live with my Maſter Chriſt for ever in joy, or elſe to be in paine for ever, with wicked devils in hell, and I ſee before mine eies preſently either heaven ready to receive me, and elſe hell ready to ſwallow me up: I ſhall therefore declare unto you my very faith how I beleeve, without any colour of diſſimulation: for now is no time to diſſemble, whatſoever I have ſaid or written in times paſt.

The Archb. declareth the true confeſſion of his faith without all colour or diſſembling.

Firſt, I beleeve in God the Father Almightie, maker of heaven and earth, &c. And I beleeve every article of the Catholik faith, every word, and ſentence taught by our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, his Apoſtles and Prophets, in the new and old Teſtament.

And now I come to the great thing, that ſo much troubleth my conſcience, more then any thing that ever I did or ſaid in my whole life, and that is the ſetting abroad of a writing contrary to the truth; which now here I renounce and refuſe, as things written with my hand, contrary to the truth which I thought in my heart, and written for feare of death, and to ſave my life if it might be, and that is, all ſuch bils and papers which I have written or ſigned with my hand ſince my degradation; wherein I have written many things untrue. And foraſmuch as my hand offended, writing contrary to my heart, my hand ſhall firſt be puniſhed therefore: for may I come to the fire it ſhall be firſt burned.

The Archb. revoketh his former recantation, and repenteth the ſame.

The Archb. refuſeth the pope as Chriſts enemy & Antichriſt. The Archbiſh. ſtandeth to his booke written againſt Winchester.

And as for the Pope, I refuſe him, as Chriſts enemy and Antichriſt, with all his falſe doctrine.

And as for the ſacrament, I beleeve as I have taught in my booke againſt the Biſhop of Wincheſter, the which my booke teacheth ſo true a doctrine of the ſacrament, that it ſhall ſtand at the laſt day before the judgement of God, where the Papiſticall doctrine contrary thereto ſhall be aſhamed to ſhew her face.

Here the ſtanders by were all aſtonied, marvelled, were amazed, did looke one upon another, whoſe expectation he had ſo notably deceived. Some began to admoniſh him of his recantation, and to accuſe him of falſhood.

The expectation of the Papiſts deceived.

Briefly, it was a world to ſee the Doctors beguiled of ſo great an hope. I think there was never cruelty more notably or better in time deluded and deceived. For it is not to be doubted but they looked for a glorious victorie, and a perpetuall triumph by this mans retractation.

The Papiſts in great chafe againſt the Archbiſhop.

Who aſſoone as they heard theſe things, began to let downe their eares, to rage, fret, & fume; and ſo much the more, becauſe they could not revenge their griefe: for they could now no longer threaten or hurt him. For the moſt miſerable man in the world can die but once: and whereas of neceſſitie he muſt needs die that day, though the Papiſts had beene never ſo well pleaſed: now being never ſo much offended with him, yet could he not be twice killed of them. And ſo when they could do nothing elſe unto him, yet leſt they ſhould ſay nothing, they ceaſed not to object unto him his falſhood and diſſimulation.

Cranmers anſwer to the Papiſts.

Unto which accuſation he anſwered, Ah my Maſters (quoth he) doe not you take it ſo. Alwaies ſince I lived hitherto, I have beene a hater of falſhood, and a lover of ſimplicitie, and never before this time have I diſſembled; and in ſaying this, all the teares that remained in his body, appeared in his eyes. And when he began to ſpeake more of the Sacrament and of the Papacie, ſome of them began to cry out, yalpe, and baule, and ſpecially Cole cried out upon him; Stop the heretikes mouth, and take him away.

Cranmer pulled downe from the ſtage. Cranmer led to the fire.

And then Cranmer being pulled downe from the ſtage was led to the fire, accompanied with thoſe Friars, vexing, troubling, and threatning him moſt cruelly. What madneſſe (ſay they) hath brought thee againe into this error, by which thou wilt draw innumerable ſoules with thee into hell? To whom he anſwered nothing, but directed all his talke to the people, ſaving that to one troubling him in the way he ſpake, and exhorted him to get him home to his ſtudie, and apply his booke diligently, ſaying, if he did diligently call upon God, by reading more he ſhould get knowledge.

But the other Spaniſh barker, raging and foming, was almoſt out of his wits, alwaies having this in his mouth, Non feciſti? diddeſt thou it not?

The Archbiſh. brought to the place of execution.

But when he came to the place where the holy Biſhops and Martyrs of God, Hugh Latimer and Ridley were burnt before him for the confeſſion of the truth, kneeling downe hee prayed, to God, and not long tarrying in his prayers, putting off his garments to his ſhirt, he prepared himſelfe to death. His ſhirt was made long downe to his feete. His feete were beare. Likewiſe his head, when both his caps were off, was ſo bare, that one haire could not be ſeene upon it. His beard was long and thick, covering his face with marvellous gravitie. Such a countenance of gravitie moved the hearts both of his friends, and of his enemies.

The deſcription of his perſon.

Then the Spaniſh Friars John and Richard, of whom mention was made before, began to exhort him and play their parts with him afreſh, but with vaine and loſt labour. Cranmer with ſtedfaſt purpoſe abiding in the profeſſion of his doctrine, gave his hand to certaine old men, and other that ſtood by bidding them farewell.

M. Ely refuſeth to give his hand to the Archbiſhop.

And when he had thought to have done ſo likewiſe to Ely, the ſaid Ely drew back his hand and refuſed, ſaying; it was not lawfull to ſalute heretikes, and ſpecially ſuch a one as falſely returned unto the opinions that he had forſworne. And if he had knowne before that he would have done ſo, he would never have uſed his company ſo familiarly, and chid thoſe Sergeants and Citizens, which had not refuſed to give him their hands. This Ely was a Prieſt lately made, and ſtudent in Divinity, being then one of the fellowes of Braſen-noſe.

The Archb. tyed to the ſtake.

Then was an iron chaine tyed about Cranmer, whom when they perceived to be more ſtedfaſt then that he could be moved from his ſentence, they commanded the fire to be ſet unto him.

Cranmer putteth his right hand which ſubſcribed, firſt into the fire.

And when the wood was kindled, and the fire began to burne neere him, ſtretching out his arme, he put his right hand into the flame, which he held ſo ſtedfaſt & immoveable (ſaving that once with the ſame hand he wiped his face) that all men might ſee his hand burned before his body was touched. His body did ſo abide the burning of the flame with ſuch conſtancie and ſtedfaſtneſſe, that ſtanding alwaies in one place without moving his body, he ſeemed to move no more then the ſtake to which he was bound; his eyes were lifted up into heaven, and oftentimes he repeated his unworthy right hand, ſo long as his voyce would ſuffer him; and uſing often the words of Steven Lord Ieſus receive my ſpirit, in the greatneſſe of the flame he gave up the ghoſt.

The laſt words of Cranmer at his death.

The Friars lying report of Cranmer.

This fortitude of minde, which perchance is rare and not found among the Spaniards, when Friar John ſaw, thinking it came not of fortitude, but of deſperation, although ſuch manner of examples which are of the like conſtancie, have beene common here in England, ranne to the Lord Williams of Tame, crying that the Archbiſhop was vexed in minde, and dyed in great deſperation. But he which was not ignorant of the Archbiſhops conſtancie, being unknowne to the Spaniards, ſmiled onely, and (as it were) by ſilence rebuked the Friars folly. And this was the end of this learned Archbiſhop, whom, leſt by evill ſubſcribing he ſhould have periſhed, by well recanting God preſerved; and leſt he ſhould have lived longer with ſhame and reproofe, it pleaſed GOD rather to take him away, to the glory of his name and profit of his Church. So good was the Lord both to his church, in fortifying the ſame with the teſtimonie and bloud of ſuch a Martyr; and ſo good alſo to the man with this croſſe of tribulation, to purge his offences in this world, not onely of his recantation, but alſo of his ſtanding againſt John Lambert and M. Allen, or if there were any other, with whoſe burning and bloud his hands had beene before any thing polluted. But eſpecially he had to rejoyce, that dying in ſuch a cauſe he was to be numbred amongſt Chriſts Martyrs, much more worthy the name of Saint Thomas of Canterburie, then he whom the Pope falſly before did Canoniſe.

Archb. Cranm. the middle Martyr of all the Martyrs burnt in Q. Maries time.

And thus have you the full ſtory concerning the life and death of this reverend Archbiſhop and Martyr of God, Thomas Cranmer, and alſo of divers other the learned ſort of Chriſts Martyrs burned in Queene Maries time, of whom this Archbiſhop was the laſt, being burnt about the very middle time of the reign of that Queen, and almoſt the very middle man of all the Martyrs which were burned in all her reign beſides.

Now after the life and ſtorie of this foreſaid Archbiſhop diſcourſed, let us adjoyne withall his letters, beginning firſt with his famous letter to Queene Marie, which he wrote unto her incontinent after he was cited up to Rome by Biſhop Brooks and his fellowes, the tenour whereof here followeth.

Letters of Doctor Thomas Cranmer, Archbiſhop of Canterburie.

The Archbiſhop of Canterburies letter to the Queenes Highneſſe.

A writing or letter of the Archb. ſent to Queen Mary.

IT may pleaſe your Majeſtie to pardon my preſumption, that I dare be ſo bold to write to your Highneſſe. But very neceſſitie conſtraineth me, that your Majeſtie may know my minde, rather by mine own writing, then by other mens reports. So it is that upon Wedneſday, being the twelfth day of this moneth, I was cited to appeare at Rome, the 80. day after, there to make anſwer to ſuch matters as ſhould be objected againſt me upon the behalfe of the King, and your moſt excellent Majeſtie, which matters the Thurſday following were objected againſt me by D. Martin, and D. Storie, your Majeſties Proctors before the Biſhop of Gloceſter, ſitting in judgement by commiſſion from Rome. But (alas) it cannot but grieve the heart of a naturall ſubject, to be accuſed of the King and Queene of his owne Realme; and ſpecially before an outward judge, or by authoritie coming from any perſon out of this Realme: where the King and Queene, as if they were ſubjects within their owne Realme, ſhall complaine, and require Juſtice at a ſtrangers hands againſt their owne ſubject, being already condemned to death by their owne lawes. As though the King and Queene could not doe or have juſtice within their owne Realmes againſt their owne ſubjects, but they muſt ſeek it at ſtrangers hands in a ſtrange land; the like whereof (I thinke) was never ſeene. I would have wiſhed to have had ſome meaner adverſaries: and I thinke that death ſhall not grieve me much more, then to have my moſt dread and moſt gracious Sovereigne Lord and Lady, to whom under God I doe own all obedience, to be mine accuſers in judgement within their owne Realme, before any ſtranger and outward power. But foraſmuch as in the time of the Prince of moſt famous memorie King Henrie the 8. your Graces father, I was ſworne never to conſent, that the Biſhop of Rome ſhould have or exerciſe any authority or juriſdiction in thts Realme of England, therefore leſt I ſhould allow his authoritie contrary to mine oath, I refuſed to make anſwer to the Biſhop of Gloceſter ſitting here in judgement by the popes authoritie, leſt I ſhould run into perjurie.

The King and Queene make themſelves no better then ſubjects complaining of their own ſubject unto the Pope.

The firſt cauſe why the archb. would not make anſwer to the Popes delegate is to avoid perjurie.

The ſecond cauſe is, that the popes laws are contrary to the Crown and lawes of England.

Another cauſe why I refuſed the Popes authoritie, is this, that his authoritie, as he claimeth it, repugneth to the crowne imperiall of this Realme, and to the Lawes of the ſame; which every true ſubject is bound to defend. Firſt, for that the Pope ſaith, that all manner of power, as well temporall as ſpirituall, is given firſt to him of God; and that the temporall power he giveth unto Emperours and Kings, to uſe it under him, but ſo as it be alwaies at his commandement and becke.

But contrary to this claime, the imperial crown and juriſdiction temporall of this Realme is taken immediately from God, to be uſed under him onely, and is ſubject unto none, but to God alone.

The oath of the King & juſtices, and the dutie of ſubjects.

Moreover, to the imperiall lawes and cuſtomes of this Realme the King in his coronation, and all Juſtices when they receive their offices, be ſworne, and all the whole Realme is bound to defend and maintain. But contrary hereunto, the Pope by his authoritie maketh voyde, and commandeth to blot out of our bookes, all lawes and cuſtomes being repugnant to his lawes, and declareth accurſed all rulers and governors, all the makers, writers, and executors of ſuch lawes or cuſtomes; as it appeareth by many of the Popes lawes, whereof one or two I ſhall rehearſe. In the decrees Diſt. 10. is written thus, Conſtitutiones contra Canones & Decreta præſulum Romanornm vel bonos mores, nullius ſunt monumenti. That is, The conſtitutions or ſtatutes enacted againſt the Canons and Decrees of the Biſhops of Rome or their good cuſtomes, are of none effect. Alſo Extra. de ſententia excommunicationis, noverit, Excommunicamus omnes hæreticos utriuſque ſexus, quocunque nomine cenſeantur, & fautores, & receptores, & defenſores eorum; nec non & qui de cætero ſervari fecerint ſtatuta edita & conſuetudines contra Eccleſiæ libertatem, niſi ea de capitularibus ſuis intra duos menſes poſt hujuſmodi publicationem ſententiæ fecerint amoveri. Item, excommunicamus ſtatutarios, & ſcriptores ſtatutorum ipſorum, nec non poteſtates, conſules, rectores, & conſiliarios locorum, ubi de cætero hujuſmodi ſtatuta & conſuetudines editæ fuerint vel ſervatæ; nec non & illos qui ſecundum ea preſumpſerint judicare, vel in publicam formam ſcribere judicata. That is to ſay, We excommunicate all heretikes of both ſexes, what name ſoever they be called by, and their fautors, and receptors, and defendors; and alſo them that ſhall hereafter cauſe to be obſerved the ſtatutes and cuſtomes made againſt the libertie of the Church, except they cauſe the ſame to be put out of their records and chapters within two moneths after the publication thereof. Alſo we excommuninate the ſtatute makers and writers of thoſe ſtatutes, and all the poteſtates, conſuls, Governours and Counſellors of places, where ſuch ſtatutes and cuſtomes ſhall be made or kept; and alſo thoſe that ſhall preſume to give judgement according to them, or ſhall notifie in publique forme the matter ſo adjudged.

Diſt. 10. Conſtitutiones.

Extrau. De Sentent. & re judic. Noverit.

Now by theſe lawes, if the Biſhop of Romes authoritie which he claimeth by God, be lawfull, all your Graces lawes and cuſtomes of your Realme, being contrary to the Popes lawes, be naught, and as well your Majeſtie, as your Judges, Juſtices, and all other executors of the ſame, ſtand accurſed amongſt heretikes, which God forbid. And yet this curſe can never be avoided (if the Pope have ſuch power as he claimeth) untill ſuch times as the lawes and cuſtomes of this Realme (being contrary to his laws) be taken away and blotted out of the law bookes. And although there be many lawes of this

The Popes laws and the laws of England doe vary how, and wherein.

Q. Marie.

Realm contrary to the laws of Rome, yet I named but a few; as to convict a Clerk before any temporall Judge of this Realm for debt, felonie, murther, or for any other crime; which Clerks by the Popes laws be ſo exempt from the Kings laws, that they can be no where ſued, but before their Ordinarie.

Caſes wherein the Popes laws repugne againſt our laws.

Alſo the Pope by his laws may give all Biſhopricks and benefices ſpirituall; which by the laws of this Realm can be given but onely by the King and other Patrons of the ſame, except they fall into the lapſe.

By the Popes laws, Ius patronatus ſhall be ſued onely before the Eccleſiaſticall Judge; but by the Laws of the Realm it ſhall be ſued before the temporall Judge.

Proviſion againſt the popes laws by Præmunire.

And to be ſhort, the laws of this Realm do agree with the Popes laws like fire and water. And yet the Kings of this Realm have provided for their laws by the præmunire; ſo that if any man have let the execution of the laws of this Realm by any authoritie from the See of Rome, he falleth into the præmunire.

The proviſion of the Pope againſt our præmunire.

But to meet with this, the Popes have provided for their laws by curſing. For whoſoever letteth the Popes laws to have full courſe within this Realm, by the Popes power ſtandeth accurſed. So that the Popes power treadeth all the laws and cuſtoms of this Realm under his feet, curſing all that execute them, untill ſuch time as they do give place unto his laws.

But it may be ſaid, that notwithſtanding all the Popes decrees, yet we do execute ſtill the laws and cuſtoms of this Realm. Nay, not all quietly without interruption of the Pope. And where we do execute them, yet we do it unjuſtly, if the Popes power be of force, and for the ſame we ſtand excommunicate, and ſhall do, untill we leave the execution of our owne Laws and cuſtomes. Thus we be well reconciled to Rome, allowing ſuch authoritie, whereby the Realm ſtandeth accurſed before God, if the Pope have any ſuch authoritie.

Mark this well.

Theſe things (as I ſuppoſe) were not fully opened in the Parliament houſe, when the Popes authority was received again within this Realm; for if they had, I do not beleeve that either the King or Queens Majeſtie, or the Nobles of this Realm, or the Commons of the ſame would ever have conſented to receive again ſuch a forrein authoritie, ſo injurious, hurtfull, and prejudiciall as well to the Crown, as to the laws and cuſtomes and ſtate of this Realm, as whereby they muſt needs acknowledge themſelves to be accurſed. “But none could open this matter well but the Clergie, and ſuch of them as had read the Popes Laws, whereby the Pope had made himſelf as it were a God. Theſe ſeek to maintaine the Pope whom they deſired to have their chief head, to the intent they might have as it were a kingdome and laws within themſelves, diſtinct from the laws of the Crown, and wherewith the Crown may not meddle; and ſo being exempted from the Laws of the Realm, might live in this Realm like Lords and Kings, without damage or fear of any man, ſo that they pleaſe their high and ſupreme head at Rome. For this conſideration (I weene) ſome that knew the truth, held their peace in the Parliament, whereas if they had done their duties to the Crowne and whole Realme, they ſhould have opened their mouthes, declared the truth, and ſhewed the perils and dangers that might enſue to the Crown and Realm.

“The Clergies dutie in the Parliament.

The Clergy of England more addicted to the Pope then to their true allegiance to their countrey.

And if I ſhould agree to allow ſuch authoritie within this realm, whereby I muſt needs confeſſe, that your moſt gracious Highneſſe, and alſo your Realm ſhould ever continue accurſed, untill ye ſhall ceaſe from the execution of your own laws and cuſtomes of your Realme; I could not think my ſelf true either to your Highneſſe, or to this my naturall countrey, knowing that I do know. Ignorance, I know, may excuſe other men; but he that knoweth how prejudiciall and injurious the power and authoritie, which he challengeth every where, is to the Crown, laws, and cuſtoms of this Realm, and yet will allow the ſame, I cannot ſee in any wiſe how he can keep his due allegiance, fidelitie, and truth to the Crown and ſtate of this Realm.

The third cauſe why he could not allow the Pope.

Another cauſe I alledged, why I could not allow the authority of the Pope, which is this; That by his authoritie he ſubverteth not onely the laws of this Realm, but alſo the laws of God: ſo that whoſoever be under his authoritie, he ſuffereth them not to be under Chriſts religion purely, as Chriſt did command. And for one example I brought forth, that whereas by Gods laws all Chriſtian people be bounden diligently to learne his Word, that they may know how to beleeve and live accordingly, for that purpoſe he ordained Holidayes, when they ought, leaving apart all other buſineſſe, to give themſelves wholly to know and ſerve God. Therefore Gods will and commandement is, that when the people be gathered together, Miniſters ſhould uſe ſuch language as the people may underſtand and take profit thereby, or elſe hold their peace. For as an Harp or Lute, if it give no certain ſound that men may know what is ſtricken, who can dance after it? for all the ſound is in vain; ſo is it in vain, and profiteth nothing, ſaith Almighty God by the mouth of ſaint Paul, if the Prieſt ſpeak to the people in a language which they know not; For elſe he may profit himſelfe: but profiteth not the people, ſaith ſaint Paul. But herein I was anſwered thus; that ſaint Paul ſpake onely of preaching, that the Preacher ſhould preach in a tongue which the people did know, or elſe his preaching availeth nothing: but if the preaching availeth nothing, being ſpoken in a language which the people underſtand not, how ſhould any other ſervice avail them, being ſpoken in the ſame language? And yet that ſaint Paul meant not onely of preaching, it appeareth plainly by his own words. For he ſpeaketh by name expreſly of praying, ſinging, and thanking of God, and of all other things which the Prieſts ſay in the Churches, whereunto the people ſay Amen; which they uſe not in preaching, but in other divine ſervice; that whether the Prieſts rehearſe the wonderfull works of God, or the great benefits of God unto mankinde above al other creatures, or give thanks unto God, or make open profeſſion of their faith, or humble confeſſion of their ſins, with earneſt requeſt of mercie and forgiveneſſe, or make ſute or requeſt unto God for any thing; then all the people underſtanding what the Prieſts ſay, might give their minds and voices with them, and ſay Amen, that is to ſay, allow what the Prieſts ſay, that the rehearſall of Gods univerſall works and benefits, the giving of thanks, the profeſſion of faith, the confeſſion of ſins, and the requeſts and petitions of the Prieſts and of the people might aſcend up into the ears of God altogether, and be as a ſweet ſavour, odour, and incenſe in his noſe; and thus was it uſed many hundred yeers after Chriſts Aſcenſion. But the foreſaid things cannot be done when the Prieſts ſpeaks to the people in a language not known, and ſo they (or their Clerke in their name) ſay Amen, but they cannot tell whereunto. Whereas ſaint Paul ſaith; How can the people ſay Amen to thy well ſaying, when they underſtand not what thou ſayeſt? And thus was ſaint Paul underſtood of all Interpreters, both the Greeks and Latines, old and new, new, ſchoole authors and other that I have read, untill above thirty yeers paſt. At which time one Eckius with other of his ſort began to deviſe a new expoſition, underſtanding St. Paul of preaching onely.

The Papiſts and proteſtants both agreed in Windſor, the ſervice of the Church to be in the mother tongue. Anno 1549.

But when a good number of the beſt learned men reputed within this Realm, ſome favouring the old, ſome the new learning, as they terme it, (where indeed that which they call the old, is the new, and that which they call the new, is indeed the old) but when a great number of ſuch learned men of both ſorts, were gathered together at Windſor, for the reformation of the ſervice of the Church; it was agreed by both, without controverſie (not one ſaying contrary) that the ſervice of the Church ought to be in the mother tongue, and that ſaint Paul in the fourteenth Chapter to the Corinthians was ſo to be underſtood. And ſo is ſaint Paul to be underſtood in the Civill Law, more then a thouſand yeers paſt, where Iuſtinianus, a moſt godly Emperour in a Synode writeth on this manner: Iubemus ut omnes Epiſcopi pariter & presbyteri non tacito modo, ſed clara voce, quæ à fideli populo exaudiatur, ſacram oblationem & preces in ſacro Baptiſmate adhibitas celebrent, quo majori exinde devotione in depromendis Domini Dei laudibus audientium animi afficiantur. Ita enim & Divus Paulus docet in Epiſtola ad Corinth. Si ſolummodo benedicat ſpiritus, quomodo is qui privati locum tenet, dicet ad gratiarum actionem tuam, Amen? quandoquidem quid dicas non videt. Tu quidem pulchré gratias agis, alter autem non ædificatur. That is to ſay, We command that all Biſhops and Prieſts celebrate the holy oblation and prayers uſed in holy baptiſme, not after a ſtill cloſe manner, but with a cleer loud voice, that they may be plainly heard of the faithfull people, ſo as the hearers mindes may be lifted up thereby with the greater devotion, in uttering the praiſes of the Lord God. For ſo Paul teacheth alſo in the Epiſtle to the Corinthians; If the ſpirit do onely bleſſe (or ſay well) how ſhall he that occupieth the place of a private perſon, ſay, Amen, to thy thankſgiving? for he perceiveth not what thou ſayeſt. Thou doeſt give thanks well, but the other is not edified. And not onely the Civill Law, and all other writers a thouſand and five hundreth yeers continually together have expounded ſaint Paul not of preaching onely, but of other ſervice ſaid in the Church; but alſo reaſon giveth the ſame, that if men be commanded to heare any thing, it muſt be ſpoken in a language which the hearers underſtand, or elſe (as ſaint Paul ſaith) what availeth it to heare? So that the Pope giving a contrarie commandement, that the people coming to the Church ſhall heare they wot not what, and ſhall anſwer they know not whereto, taketh upon him to command, not onely againſt reaſon, but alſo directly againſt God.

The Pope commandeth both againſt God and naturall reaſon.

The ſacrament ought to be received in both kinds of all Chriſtians.

Ex Theophilo Alexandrino.

And again I ſaid, whereas our Saviour Chriſt ordained the Sacrament of his moſt precious body and blood to be received of all Chriſtian people under the forms of bread and wine, and ſaid of the cup, Drink ye all of this: the Pope giveth a cleane contrarie commandement, that no lay man ſhall drink of the cup of their ſalvation; as though the cup of ſalvation by the blood of Chriſt pertained not to lay men. And whereas Theophilus Alexandrinus (whoſe works ſaint Hierome did tranſlate about eleven hundred yeers paſt) ſaith, That if Chriſt had been crucified for the devils, his cup ſhould not be denied them; yet the Pope denieth the cup of Chriſt to Chriſtian people, for whom Chriſt was crucified. So that if I ſhould obey the Pope in theſe things, I muſt needs diſobey my Saviour Chriſt.

But I was anſwered hereunto (as commonly the Papiſts do anſwer) that under the form of bread is whole Chriſts fleſh and blood: ſo that whoſoever receiveth the form of bread, receiveth as well Chriſts blood as his fleſh. Let it be ſo, yet in the forme of bread onely, Chriſts blood is not drunk, but eaten; nor is it received in the cup in the form of wine, as Chriſt commanded, but eaten with the fleſh under the form of bread. And moreover, the bread is not the Sacrament of his blood, but of his fleſh onely; nor is the cup the Sacrament of his fleſh, but of his blood onely. And ſo the Pope keepeth from all lay perſons, the Sacrament of their redemption by Chriſts blood, which Chriſt commandeth to be given unto them.

The excuſe of the Papiſts why they take away the cup.

And furthermore, Chriſt ordained the Sacrament in two kindes, the one ſeparated from the other, to be a repreſentation of his death, where his blood was ſeparated from his fleſh, which is not repreſented in one kinde alone: So that the lay people receive not the whole Sacrament whereby Chriſts death is repreſented as he commanded.

Moreover, as the Pope taketh upon him to give the temporall ſword, by royall and imperiall power, to Kings and Princes: ſo doth he likewiſe take upon him to depoſe them from their imperiall ſtates, if they be diſobedient to him, and commandeth the ſubjects to diſobey their Princes, aſſoyling the ſubjects as well of their obedience, as of their lawfull oaths made unto their true Kings and Princes, directly contrarie to Gods commandement, who commandeth all ſubjects to obey their Kings, or their Rulers under them.

Miſorder in the Pope in aſſoyling the diſobedience of ſubjects towards their Princes.

One John, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, in the time of Saint Gregory claimed ſuperioritie above all other Biſhops. To whom ſaint Gregory writeth, that therein he did injurie to his three brethren, which were equall with him, that is to ſay, the Biſhop of Rome, the Biſhop of Alexandria, and of Antiochia: which three were Patriarchall Sees, as well as Conſtantinople, and were brethren one to another. But (ſaith St. Gregorie) if any one ſhall exalt himſelf above all the reſt, to be the univerſall Biſhop, the ſame paſſeth in pride. But now the Biſhop of Rome exalteth himſelf not onely above all Kings and Emperours, and above all the whole world, but takes upon him to give and take away, to ſet up and pull down, as he ſhall think good. And as the devil having no ſuch authority, yet took upon him to give unto Chriſt all the kingdoms of the world, if he would fall down and worſhip him: in like manner the Pope taketh upon him to give Empires and Kingdoms being none of his, to ſuch as will fall down and worſhip him, and kiſſe his feet.

Note the ſaying of Gregory.

The devil & the Pope are like.

And moreover, his layers and gloſers ſo flatter him, that they fain he may command Emperours and Kings to hold his ſtirrop when he lighteth upon his horſe, and to be his foot-men: and that, if any Emperour and King give him any thing, they give him nothing but that is his own, and that he may diſpenſe againſt Gods word, againſt both the old and new Teſtament, againſt St. Pauls Epiſtles, and againſt the Goſpel. And furthermore whatſoever he doth, although he draw innumerable people by heaps with himſelf into hell, yet may no mortall man reprove him, becauſe he being judge of all men, may be judged of no man. And thus he ſitteth in the Temple of God, as if he were a God, and nameth himſelf Gods Vicar, and yet he diſpenſeth againſt God. If this be not to play Antichriſts part, I cannot tell what is Antichriſt, which is no more to ſay, but Chriſts enemy and adverſary; who ſhall ſit in the Temple of GOD, advancing himſelf above all other, yet by hypocriſie and fained Religion, ſhall ſubvert

Emperors and Kings made the Popes footmen.

The Pope is Antichriſt, that is, Chriſts enemy.

The true markes ſhewing that the Pope is Antichriſt.

The true marks proving that the Pope is Antichriſt.

ſubvert the true religion of Chriſt, and under pretence and colour of Chriſtian religion ſhall work againſt Chriſt, and therefore hath the name of Antichriſt. Now if any man lift himſelf higher then the Pope hath done, who lifteth himſelf above all the world; or can be more adverſarie to Chriſt, then to diſpenſe againſt Gods laws, and where Chriſt hath given any commandement, to command directly the contrarie, that man muſt needs be taken for Antichriſt. But untill the time that ſuch a perſon may be found, men may eaſily conjecture where to finde Antichriſt.

Note this concluſion.

Wherefore, ſeeing the Pope thus to overthrow both Gods laws and mans laws, taketh upon him to make Emperours and Kings to be vaſſals and ſubjects unto him, eſpecially the Crown of this Realm, with the laws and cuſtoms of the ſame; I ſee no mean how I may conſent to admit his uſurped power within this Realm, contrary to mine oath, mine obedience to Gods law, mine allegiance and duty to your majeſty, and my love and affection to this Realm.

The cauſe why the Archbiſhop ſpake and wrote thus.

This that I have ſpoken againſt the power and authoritie of the Pope, I have not ſpoken (I take God to record and judge) for any malice I owe to the Popes perſon, whom I know not, but I ſhall pray to God to give him grace, that he may ſeek above all things to promote Gods honour and glorie, and not to follow the trade of his predeceſſours in theſe latter dayes.

Math. 10.

Nor have I ſpoken it for fear of puniſhment, and to avoid the ſame, thinking it rather an occaſion to aggravate then to diminiſh my trouble; but I have ſpoken it for my moſt bounden dutie to the Crowne, liberties, laws, and cuſtomes of this Realme of England, but moſt ſpecially to diſcharge my conſcience in uttering the truth to GODS glorie, caſting away all fear by the comfort which I have in Chriſt, who ſaith; Fear not them that kill the bodie, and cannot kill the ſoul, but feare him that can caſt both bodie and ſoule into hell fire. He that for feare to loſe this life will forſake the truth, ſhall loſe the everlaſting life: And he that for the truths ſake will ſpend his life, ſhall finde everlaſting life. And Chriſt promiſeth to ſtand faſt with them before his Father, which will ſtand faſt with him here. Which comfort is ſo great, that whoſoever hath his eyes fixed upon Chriſt, cannot greatly paſſe on this life, knowing that he may be ſure to have Chriſt ſtand by him in the preſence of his Father in heaven.

The Sacrament.

A double error of the Papiſts in the words of the ſacrament. Cranmer ſtandeth to be judged by the old Church.

The Papiſts not able to bring forth one old Author above a thouſand yeers, to make with the ſacrament.

And as touching the ſacrament, I ſaid; Foraſmuch as the whole matter ſtandeth in the underſtanding of theſe words of Chriſt: This is my bodie, This is my blood; I ſaid that Chriſt in theſe words made demonſtration of the bread and wine, and ſpake figuratively, calling bread his bodie, and wine his blood, becauſe he ordained them to be ſacraments of his bodie and blood. And where the Papiſts ſay in thoſe two points contrary unto me, that Chriſt called not bread his bodie, but a ſubſtance uncertain, nor ſpake figuratively: Herein I ſaid I would be judged by the old Church, and which doctrine could be proved the elder, that I would ſtand unto. And foraſmuch as I have alledged in my book many old Authors, both Greeks and Latines, which above a thouſand yeers after Chriſt continually taught as I do; if they could bring forth but one old Author, that ſaith in theſe two points as they ſay, I offered ſix or ſeven yeers ago, and do offer yet ſtill, that I will give place unto them.

But when I bring forth any Author that ſaith in moſt plaine termes as I do, yet ſaith the other part, that the Authors meant not ſo; as who ſhould ſay, that the Authors ſpake one thing, and meant cleane contrary. And upon the other part, when they cannot finde any one Author, that ſaith in words as they ſay; yet ſay they, that the Authors meant as they ſay. Now, whether I or they ſpeak more to the purpoſe herein, I referre me to the judgement of all indifferent hearers; yea the old Church of Rome, above a thouſand yeers together, neither beleeved nor uſed the Sacrament, as the Church of Rome hath done of late yeers.

With the ſubſtance the uſe alſo changed of the ſacrament.

For in the beginning, the Church of Rome taught a pure and a ſound doctrine of the Sacrament. But after that the Church of Rome fell into a new doctrine of tranſubſtantiation; with the doctrine they changed the uſe of the Sacrament contrarie to that Chriſt commanded, and the old Church of Rome uſed above a thouſand yeers. And yet to deface the old, they ſay that the new is the old; wherein for my part I am content to ſtand to the triall. But their doctrine is ſo fond and uncomfortable, that I marvell that any man would allow it, if he knew what it is. But howſoever they bear the people in hand, that which they write in their books, hath neither truth nor comfort.

The Papiſts make Chriſt two bodies. Mark the errors of the Papiſts in their doctrine of the ſacrament.

Neither truth nor comfort in the Popes doctrine of the ſacrament.

For by their doctrine, of one body of Chriſt is made two bodies; one naturall, having diſtance of members, with forme and proportion of mans perfect bodie, and this bodie is in heaven; but the bodie of Chriſt in the Sacrament, by their own doctrine, muſt needs be a monſtrous bodie, having neither diſtance of members, nor form, faſhion or proportion of a mans naturall bodie. And ſuch a bodie is in the Sacrament (teach they) and goeth into the mouth with the form of bread, and entreth no further then the form of bread goeth, nor tarrieth no longer then the form of bread is by naturall heat in digeſting. So that when the form of bread is digeſted, that bodie of Chriſt is gone. And foraſmuch as evill men be as long in digeſting as good men, the bodie of Chriſt (by their doctrine) entreth as far, and tarrieth as long in wicked men as in godly men. And what comfort can be herein to any Chriſtian man, to receive Chriſts unſhapen body, and it to enter no further then the ſtomack, and to depart by and by as ſoone as the bread is conſumed?

The proteſtants doctrine of the ſacrament more comfortable then the doctrine of the Papiſts.

It ſeemeth to me a more ſound and comfortable doctrine, that Chriſt hath but one body, and that hath forme and faſhion of a mans true bodie; which body ſpiritually entreth into the whole man, body and ſoul: and though the ſacrament be conſumed, yet whole Chriſt remaineth, and feedeth the receiver unto eternall life, if he continue in godlineſſe, and never departeth untill the receiver forſake him. And as for the wicked, they have not Chriſt within them at all, who cannot be where Belial is. And this is my faith, and (as me ſeemeth) a ſound doctrine, according to Gods Word, and ſufficient for a Chriſtian to beleeve in that matter. And if it can be ſhewed unto me, that the Popes authoritie is not prejudiciall to the things before mentioned, or that my doctrine in the Sacrament is erroneous (which I thinke cannot be ſhewed) then I never was nor will be ſo perverſe to ſtand wilfully in mine own opinion, but I ſhall with all humilitie ſubmit my ſelf unto the Pope, not onely to kiſſe his feet, but another part alſo.

Another reaſon why the Archbiſhop refuſed B. Brooks to be his Judge.

Another cauſe why I refuſed to take the Biſhop of Gloceſter for my Judge, was the reſpect of his owne perſon, being more then once perjured. Firſt, for that he being divers times ſworne never to conſent that the Biſhop of Rome ſhould have any juriſdiction within this Realme, but to take the King and his ſucceſſors for ſupreme heads of this Realme, as by Gods laws they be: contrary to that lawfull oath the ſaid Biſhop ſat then in judgement by authority from Rome, wherein he was perjured, and not worthy to ſit as a Judge.

Double perjury in B. Brooks.

The ſecond perjurie was, that he took his Biſhoprick both of the Queens Majeſtie and of the Pope, making to each of them a ſolemne oath; which oaths be ſo contrary, that the one muſt needs be perjured. And furthermore in ſwearing to the Pope to maintain his Laws, Decrees, Conſtitutions, ordinances, reſervations, and proviſions, he declareth himſelf an enemie to the Imperiall Crown, and to the Laws and ſtate of this Realm, whereby he declareth himſelfe not worthie to ſit as a Judge within this Realm. And for theſe conſiderations I refuſed to take him for my Judge.

This was written in another Letter to the Queene.

A peece of another letter to the Queene. Contradiction in the Queens oaths, ſworn both to the Realm, and to the Pope in one day.

I Learned by Doctor Martin, that at the day of your Majeſties Coronation, you took an oath of obedience to the Pope of Rome, and the ſame time you took another oath to this Realm, to maintain the Laws, Liberties, and cuſtomes of the ſame. And if your Majeſtie did make an oath to the Pope, I think it was according to the other oaths which he uſeth to miniſter to Princes; which is, to be obedient to him, to defend his perſon, to maintaine his authoritie, honour, laws, lands and priviledges. And if it be ſo (which I know not but by report) then I beſeech your Majeſty to look upon your oath made to the Crown and Realm, and to expend and weigh the two oaths together, to ſee how they do agree, and then do as your Graces conſcience ſhall give you: For I am ſurely perſwaded, that willingly your Majeſtie will not offend, nor do againſt your conſcience for any thing.

But I fear me that there be contradictions in your oaths, and that thoſe which ſhould have informed your Grace thorowly, did not their duties therein. And if your majeſty ponder the two oaths diligently, I think you ſhall perceive you were deceived; and then your Highneſſe may uſe the matter as God ſhall put in your heart. Furthermore, I am kept here from company of learned men, from books, from counſell, from pen and inke, ſaving at this time to write unto your Majeſtie, which all were neceſſarie for a man being in my caſe. Wherefore I beſeech your Majeſty, that I may have ſuch of theſe as may ſtand with your Majeſties pleaſure. And as for my appearance at Rome, if your Majeſty will give me leave, I will appear there. And I truſt that God ſhall put in my mouth to defend his truth there, as well as here. But I refer it wholly to your Majeſties pleaſure.

Another letter of the Archbiſhop to Doctor Martin and Doctor Story.

His letter to D. Martin and D. Story.

I Have me commended unto you. And as I promiſed, I have ſent my letters unto the Queens Majeſtie unſigned, praying you to ſigne them, and deliver them with all ſpeed. I might have ſent them by the Carrier ſooner, but not ſurer. But hearing maſter Bayliffe ſay, that he would go to the Court on Friday, I thought him a meet meſſenger to ſend my letters by. For better is later and ſurer, then ſooner, and never to be delivered. Yet one thing I have written to the Queens Majeſty incloſed and ſealed; which I require you may be ſo delivered without delay, and not be opened untill it be delivered unto her Graces own hands. I have written all that I remember I ſaid, except that which I ſpake againſt the Biſhop of Glouceſters own perſon, which I thought not meet to write. And in ſome places I have written more then I ſaid, which I would have anſwered to the Biſhop if you would have ſuffered me.

You promiſed I ſhould ſee mine anſwers to the ſixteen Articles, that I might correct, amend, and change them where I thought good, which your promiſe you kept not. And mine anſwer was not made upon my oath, nor repeated, nor made in Iudicio, but extra Iudicium, as I proteſted; nor to the biſhop of Gloceſter as Judge, but to you the Kings and Queens Proctors. I truſt you deale ſincerely with me without fraud or craft, and uſe me as you would wiſh to be in like caſe your ſelves. Remember, that Qua menſura menſi fueritis, eadem remetietur vobis, i. What meaſure you mete, the ſame ſhall be meaſured to you again. Thus fare you well, and God ſend you his Spirit to induce you into truth.

Cranmers anſwers before B. Brooks extra judicium.

Ye heard before how the Archbiſhop Doctor Cranmer in the moneth of February was cited up to Rome, and in the moneth of March next following was degraded by the Biſhop of Ely and biſhop Boner. In time of which his degradation he put up his Appellation.

In this his Appellation, becauſe he needed the help of ſome good and godly Lawyer, he writeth to a certain friend of his about the ſame: the copie of which letter in Latine is before expreſſed in the old book of Acts, there to be read, pag. 1492. The Engliſh of the ſame I thought good here to inſert, as under enſueth.

A Letter of Doctor Cranmer Archbiſhop, to a Lawyer for the drawing out of his Appeale.

Another letter of the Archbiſhop to a certain learned Lawyer his friend, about his Appeal.

THe Law of nature requireth of all men, that ſo far forth as it may be done without offence to God, every one ſhould ſeek to defend and preſerve his own life. Which thing, when I about three daies ago bethought my ſelf of, and therewithall remembred how that Martin Luther appealed in his time from Pope Leo the tenth, to a generall Councell (leſt I ſhould ſeem raſhly and unadviſedly to caſt away my ſelf) I determined to appeal in like ſort to ſome lawfull and free generall Councell. But ſeeing the order and form of an Appeal pertaineth to the Lawyers, whereof I my ſelf am ignorant, and ſeeing that Luthers Appeal cometh not to my hand, I purpoſed to break my minde in this matter to ſome faithfull friend and ſkilfull in the Law, whoſe help I might uſe in this behalfe, and you onely among other came to my remembrance as a man moſt meet in this Univerſitie for my purpoſe. But this is a matter that requireth great ſilence, ſo that no man know of it before it be done. It is ſo that I am ſummoned to make mine anſwer at Rome, the 16. day of this moneth; before the which day I think it good, after ſentence pronounced, to make mine Appeal. But whether I ſhould firſt appeal from the Judge Delegate to the Pope, and ſo afterward to the generall Councell, or elſe leaving the Pope, I ſhould appeal immediately to the Councell, herein I ſtand in need of your counſell.

Many cauſes there be for the which I thinke good to appeal. Firſt, becauſe I am by an oath bound never to conſent to the receiving of the Biſhop of Romes authoritie into this Realme. Beſides this, whereas I utterly refuſed to make anſwer to the Articles objected unto me by the Biſhop of Gloceſter, appointed by the Pope to be my Judge, yet I was content to anſwer Martin and Storie, with this Proteſtation, that mine anſwer ſhould not be taken as made before a Judge, nor yet in place of judgement, but as pertaining nothing to judgement at all; and moreover, after I had made mine anſwer, I required to have a copy of the ſame, that I might either by adding thereunto, or by altering or taking from it, correct and amend it as I thought good. The which though both the Biſhop of Gloceſter, and alſo the King and Queens Proctors promiſed me, yet have they altogether broken promiſe with me, and have not permitted me to correct my ſaid anſwers according to my requeſt, and yet notwithſtanding have (as I underſtand) regiſtred the ſame as Acts formally done in place of judgement.

Finally, foraſmuch as all this my trouble commeth upon my departing from the Biſhop of Rome, and from the Popiſh religion, ſo that now the quarrell is betwixt the Pope himſelf and me, and no man can be a lawfull and indifferent Judge in his own cauſe; it ſeemeth (me thinks) good reaſon, that I ſhould be ſuffered to appeare to ſome generall Councell in this matter; ſpecially ſeeing the law of nature (as they ſay) denieth no man the remedie of appeal in ſuch caſes.

Now, ſince it is very requiſite that this matter ſhould be kept as cloſe as may be, if perhaps for lack of perfect ſkill herein you ſhall have need of further advice; then I beſeech you even for the fidelitie and love you bear to me in Chriſt, that you will open to no creature alive whoſe the caſe is. And foraſmuch as the time is now at hand, and the matter requireth great expedition, let me obtain thus much of you, I beſeech you, that laying aſide all other your ſtudies and buſineſſe for the time, you will apply this my matter onely, till you have brought it to paſſe. The chiefeſt cauſe in very deed (to tell you the truth) of this mine Appeal is, that I might gain time (if it ſhall ſo pleaſe God) to live untill I have finiſhed mine anſwer againſt Marcus Antonius Conſtantius, which I have now in hand. But if the adverſaries of the truth will not admit mine Appeal (as I fear they will not) Gods will be done; I paſſe not upon it, ſo that God may therein be glorified, be it by my life, or by my death. For it is much better for me to die in Chriſts quarrell and to reign with him, then here to be ſhut up, and kept in the priſon of this bodie, unleſſe it were to continue yet ſtill awhile in this warfare, for the commoditie and profit of my brethren, and to the further advancing of Gods glorie. To whom be all glorie for evermore, Amen.

This Conſtantius was Ste. Gardiner, as conſtant indeed as a Weathercock: who thus named himſelf, writing againſt this good Archbiſhop.

There is alſo yet another cauſe why I think good to appeal, that whereas I am cited to go to Rome to anſwer there for my ſelf, I am notwithſtanding kept here faſt in priſon, that I cannot there appeare at the time appointed. And moreover, foraſmuch as the ſtate I ſtand in is a matter of life and death, ſo that I have great need of learned counſell for my defence in this behalf; yet when I made my earneſt requeſt for the ſame, all manner of counſell and help of Proctors, Advocates, and Lawyers was utterly denied me.

Your loving friend, Tho. Cranmer.

Another letter of Doctor Cranmer Archbiſhop, to Miſtreſſe Wilkinſon, exhorting her to flie in the time of perſecution.

Another letter of the Archbiſh. to Miſtreſſe Wilkinſon.

The true comforter in all diſtreſſe is onely God, through his Son Jeſus Chriſt; and whoſoever hath him, hath companie enough, although he were in a wilderneſſe all alone: and he that hath twentie thouſand in his companie, if God be abſent, is in a miſerable wilderneſſe and deſolation. In him is all comfort, and without him is none. Wherefore I beſeech you ſeek your dwelling there where as you may truly and rightly ſerve God, and dwell in him, and have him ever dwelling in you. What can be ſo heavie a burden as an unquiet conſcience, to be in ſuch a place as a man cannot be ſuffered to ſerve God in Chriſts religion? If you be loath to depart from your kin and friends, remember that Chriſt calleth them his mother, ſiſters, and brothers, that do his Fathers will. Where we finde therefore God truly honoured according to his will, there we can lack neither friend nor kin.

Matth. 3.

If you be loath to depart for the ſlandering of Gods Word, remember that Chriſt, when his houre was not yet come, departed out of his countrey into Samaria, to avoid the malice of the Scribes and Phariſees; and commanded his Apoſtles that if they were purſued in one place, they ſhould flie to another. And was not Paul let down by a baſket out at a window, to avoid the perſecution of Aretas? And what wiſdome and policie he uſed from time to time to eſcape the malice of his enemies, the Acts of the Apoſtles do declare. And after the ſame ſort did the other Apoſtles; albeit, when it came to ſuch a point, that they could no longer eſcape danger of the perſecutors of Gods true religion, then they ſhewed themſelves, that they flying before came not of fear, but of godly wiſedome to do more good; and that they would not raſhly without urgent neceſſitie offer themſelves to death, which had been but a temptation of God. Yea, when they were apprehended, and could no longer avoid, then they ſtood boldly to the profeſſion of Chriſt; then they ſhewed how little they paſſed of death; how much they feared God more then men; how much they loved and preferred the eternall life to come above this ſhort and miſerable life.

John 4. Matth. 5. 2 Cor. 12.

Wherefore I exhort you as well by Chriſts commandement, as by the example of him and his Apoſtles, to withdraw your ſelf from the malice of yours and Gods enemies, into ſome place where God is moſt purely ſerved; which is no ſlandering of the truth, but a preſerving of your ſelf to God, and the truth, and to the ſocietie and comfort of Chriſts little flock. And that you will do, do it with ſpeed, leſt by your own folly you fall into the perſecutors hands. And the Lord ſend his holy Spirit to lead and guide you whereſoever you go, and all that be godly will ſay, Amen.

Unto theſe former letters of Doctor Cranmer Archbiſhop, written by him unto others, it ſeemeth to me not much out of place to annex withall a certain letter alſo of Doctor Taylor, written to him and his fellow-priſoners: the tenor of which letter here followeth.

To my deare Fathers and brethren, Doctor Cranmer, Doctor Ridley, and Doctor Latimer, priſoners in Oxford, for the faithfull teſtimony of Gods holy Word.

A letter written to D. Cranmer and his fellows by D. Taylor.

Right reverend Fathers in the Lord, I wiſh you to enjoy continually Gods grace and peace through Jeſus Chriſt; and God be praiſed again for this your moſt excellent promotion which ye are called unto at this preſent, that is, that ye are counted worthie to bee allowed amongſt the number of Chriſts records and witneſſes. England hath had but a few learned Biſhops, that would ſtick to Chriſt ad ignem incluſivè. Once againe I thanke God heartily in Chriſt for your moſt happie on-ſet, moſt valiant proceeding, moſt conſtant ſuffering of all ſuch infamies, hiſſings, clappings, taunts, open rebukes, loſſe of living and libertie, for the defence of Gods cauſe, truth, and glorie. I cannot utter with pen

Many profeſs God ad ignem excluſivè, that is, in words and outward profeſſion: but few ſtick to him ad ignem incluſivè, that is, in deed, and in ſuffering for his ſake.

how I rejoyce in my heart for you three ſuch Captains in the foreward under Chriſts Croſſe, Banner, or Standard in ſuch a cauſe and ſkirmiſh, when not onely one or two of our dear Redeemers ſtrong holds are beſieged, but all his chief Caſtles ordained for our ſafeguard, are traiterouſly impugned. This your enterpriſe in the ſight of all that be in heaven, and of all Gods people in earth, is moſt pleaſant to behold. This is another manner of Nobilitie, then to be in the fore-front in worldly warfairs. For Gods ſake pray for us, for we fail not daily to pray for you. We are ſtronger and ſtronger in the Lord, his name be praiſed, & we doubt not but ye be ſo in Chriſts own ſweet ſchool. Heaven is all and wholly of our ſide; therefore Gaudete in Domino ſemper, & iterum gaudete & exultate, i. Rejoyce alwayes in the Lord: and again, rejoyce and be glad.

Your aſſured in Chriſt,
Rowland Taylor.

Perſecution in Suffolke, Agnes Potten, and Ioan Trunchfield, Martyrs.

Agnes Potten, and Joan Trunchfield, Martyrs.

IN the ſtorie of Robert Samuel, mention was made before of two godly women of the ſame town of Ipſwich, which ſhortly after him ſuffered likewiſe, and obtained the crown of martyrdome; the names of whom was Agnes, the wife of Robert Potten; & another, wife of Michael Trunchfield, a Shoomaker, both dwelling in one town: who, about the ſame time that the Archbiſhop aforeſaid was burned at Oxford, ſuffered likewiſe in the foreſaid town of Ipſwich, either in the ſame moneth of March, or (as ſome ſay) in the end of February the next moneth before.

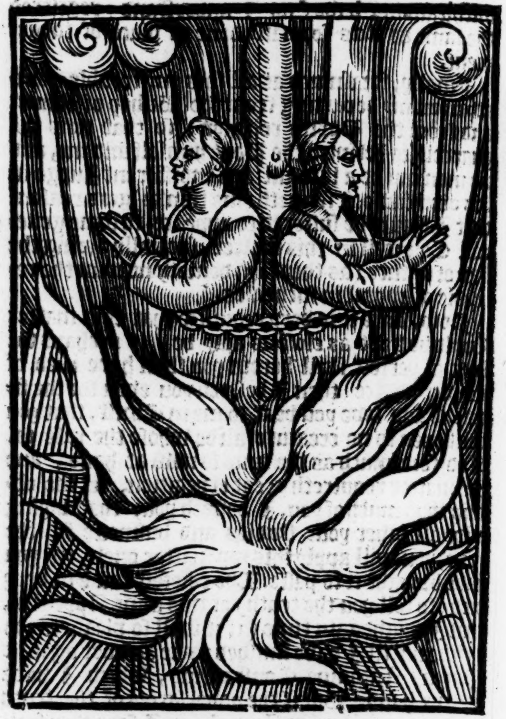
The opinions of theſe two Matrons and Martyrs.

Their opinion or perſwaſion was this, that in the ſacrament was the memoriall onely of Chriſts death and paſſion: for (ſaid they) Jeſus Chriſt is aſcended up into heaven, and is on the right hand of God the Father, according to the Scriptures, and not in the Sacrament, as he was born of the Virgin Mary.

The ſtrength of God in weak veſſels.

For this they were burned. In whoſe ſuffering their conſtancie worthily was to be wondered at, who being ſo ſimple women, ſo manfully ſtood to the confeſſion and teſtimonie of Gods Word and veritie: Inſomuch, that when they had prepared and undreſſed themſelves readie to the fire, with comfortable words of the Scripture they earneſtly required the people to credit and to lay hold on the Word of God, and not upon mans devices and inventions, deſpiſing the ordinances and inſtitutions of the Romiſh Antichriſt, with all his ſuperſtitions and rotten religion; and ſo continuing in the torment of fire, they held up their hands, and called unto God conſtantly ſo long as life did endure.

The burning of two Women.



The Martyrdome of Agnes Potten, & Joan Trunchfield at Ipſwich, Anno 1556. March.

The burning of Agnes Potten revealed to her before in her ſleep.

This Pottens wife in a night a little before her death, being aſleep in her bed, ſaw a bright burning fire, right up as a pole, and on the ſide of the fire ſhe thought there ſtood a number of Queene Maries friends looking on. Then being aſleep, ſhe ſeemed to muſe with her ſelf whether her fire ſhould burn ſo bright or no; and indeed her ſuffering was not far unlike to her dream.

God giveth ſtrength many times, where moſt weakneſſe is.

This alſo I thought further to note, how theſe two being alwayes together in priſon, the one which was Michaels wife, ſeemed to be nothing ſo ardent and zealous as Pottens wife was, although (God be thanked) they did ſtoutly ſtand to the confeſſion of the truth both; but when the ſaid Michaels wife came to the ſtake, and ſaw nothing but preſent death before her, ſhe much exceeded the other in joy and comfort; albeit both of them did ſo joyfully ſuffer, as it was marvelled at of thoſe that knew them, and did behold their end. And thus theſe two Martyrs ended their lives with great triumph: the Lord grant we may do the like, Amen.

Perſecution in the Dioceſſe of Salisbury.

March 14. Other three Martyrs ſuffering at Salisbury.

AFter theſe two women at Ipſwich, ſucceeded three men, which were burnt the ſame moneth at one fire in Saliſbury, who in the like quarrell with the other that went before them and led the dance, ſpared not their bodies, to bring their ſouls to the celeſtiall felicitie, whereof they were throughly aſſured in Chriſt Jeſus by his promiſes, as ſoon as the furious flames of fire had put their bodies and ſouls aſunder.

Their names were.

Iohn Maundrel, Husbandman.

The ſtory of Iohn Maundrel, William Coberley, and Iohn Spicer, Martyrs.

The ſtory of Io. Maundrel.

FIrſt Iohn Maundrel, which was the ſonne of Robert Maundrel of Rowd in the Countie of Wiltſhire Farmer, was from his childhood brought up in husbandrie, and after he came to mans ſtate, did abide and dwell in a village called Buchampton, in the Pariſh of Kevell within the Countie of Wiltſhire aforeſaid, where he had wife and children, being of good name and fame. Which Iohn Maundrel, after that the Scripture was tranſlated into Engliſh by the faithfull Apoſtle of England, William Tindall, became a diligent hearer, and a fervent embracer of Gods true Religion, ſo that he delighted in nothing ſo much, as to heare and ſpeake of Gods Word, never being without the New Teſtament about him, although he could not reade himſelfe. But when he came into any company that could reade, his booke was alwaies ready, having a verie good memorie; ſo that he could recite by heart moſt places of the New Teſtament, his converſation and living being very honeſt and charitable, as his neighbours are able to teſtifie.

Maundrel converted firſt by Tindals Teſtament.
Maundrel an earneſt lover and hearer of Gods Word.

Maundrel accuſed for ſpeaking againſt holy bread and holy water.
Maundrel put to open penance in King Henries dayes.

So it was, that in the dayes of King Henrie the eighth, at what time Doctor Trigonion, and Doctor Lee did viſit Abbeyes, the ſaid Iohn Maundrel was brought before Doctor Trigonion at an Abbey called Edyngton, within the Countie of Wiltſhire aforeſaid; where he was accuſed that he had ſpoken againſt the holy water and holy bread, and ſuch like ceremonies, and for the ſame did weare a white ſheete, bearing a candle in his hand about the Market, in the town of the Deviſes, which is in the ſaid Countie. Nevertheleſſe, his fervencie did not abate, but by Gods mercifull aſſiſtance he took better hold, as the ſequele hereof did declare.

For in the dayes of Queen Marie, when Poperie was reſtored againe, and Gods true religion put to ſilence, the ſaid Iohn Maundrel left his owne houſe, and departed into the Countie of Glouceſterſhire, and into the North part of Wiltſhire, wandring from one to another to ſuch men as he knew feared GOD, with whom as a ſervant to keepe their cattell, he there did remaine with Iohn Bridges or ſome other at Kingſwood; but after a time he returned to his countrey, and there coming to the Vyes to a friend of his, named Anthony Clee, had talke and conference with him in a Garden, of returning home to his houſe.

Anthony Clee of the Vyes.

And when the other exhorted him by the words of Scripture, to flye from one Citie to another, he replyed againe by the words of the Apocalyps 21. of them that be fearefull, &c. ſaid, that he needs muſt go home, and ſo did. Where he with Spicer and Coberley uſed at times to reſort and conferre together.

At length upon the Sunday following they agreed together to go to the Pariſh Church called Kevell, where the ſaid Maundrel and the other two, ſeeing the Pariſhioners in the proceſſion to follow and worſhip the Idoll there carried, adverticed them to leave the ſame, and to returne to the living GOD, namely ſpeaking to one Robert Barkſdale head man of the Pariſh, but he tooke no regard to their words.

Maundrel, Spicer, and Coberley, ſpeaking againſt the Proceſſion.

After this, the Vicar came into the Pulpit, who there being about to reade his bederoll, and to pray for the ſoules in Purgatorie; the ſaid Iohn Maundrel ſpeaking with an audible voyce, ſaid, that that was the Popes pinfold, the other two affirming the ſame. After which words, by commandement of the Prieſt they were had to the ſtocks, where they remained till their ſervice was done, and there were brought before a Iuſtice of Peace, and ſo the next day carried to Saliſburie all three, and preſented before Biſhop Capon, and W. Geffrey being Chancellor of the Dioceſſe. By whom they were impriſoned, and oftentimes examined of their faith in their houſes, but ſeldome openly. And at the laſt examination theſe were the Articles which the Chancellor alledged againſt them, being accompanied with the Sheriffe of the ſhire, one Maſter Saint Iohns, and other Popiſh Prieſts in the Pariſh Church of Fiſherton Anger, demanding how they did beleeve.

Maundrel calleth Purgatorie the Popes pinfold.

Maundrel, Spicer, and Coberley, ſent to Salisburie. Doct. Capon biſhop of Saliſburie.

They anſwered, as Chriſtian men ſhould and ought to beleeve: and firſt they ſaid, they beleeved in God the Father, and in the Sonne, and in the Holy Ghoſt, the 12. Articles of the Creede, the holy Scripture from the firſt of Geneſis to the laſt of the Apocalyps.

Confeſſion of their beliefe.

But that faith the Chancellor would not allow. Wherefore he appoſed them in particular Articles: Firſt, whether that they did not beleeve that in the ſacrament of the altar (as he termed it) after the words of conſecration ſpoken by the Prieſt at Maſſe, there remained no ſubſtance of bread nor wine, but Chriſts body, fleſh and bloud, as he was borne of the Virgin Mary. Whereunto they anſwered negatively, ſaying, that the Popiſh Maſſe was abominable Idolatrie, and injurious to the bloud of Chriſt; but confeſſing that in a faithfull congregation, receiving the ſacrament of Chriſts body and bloud, being duely miniſtred according to Chriſts inſtitution, Chriſts body and bloud is ſpiritually received of the faithfull beleever.

Sacrament of the altar.

Alſo, being asked whether the Pope was ſupreme head of the Church, and Chriſts Vicar on earth; they anſwered negatively, ſaying, that the Biſhop of Rome doth uſurpe over Emperors and Kings, being Antichriſt, and Gods enemy.

Againſt the Popes ſupremacie.

The Chancellor ſaid, Wil you have the Church without head?

They anſwered, Chriſt was head of his Church, and under Chriſt the Queenes Maieſtie. What, ſaid the Chancellor? a woman head of the church? Yea, ſaid they, within her Graces Dominions.

Chriſt onely ſupreme head of his Church: under him every Prince in his owne dominions.

Alſo, whether the ſoules in Purgatorie were delivered by the Popes pardons, and the ſuffrages of the Church.

They ſaid, they beleeved faithfully that the bloud of Chriſt had purged their ſinnes, and the ſinnes of them that were ſaved, unto the end of the world, ſo that they feared nothing the Popes Purgatorie, or eſteemed his pardons.

Purgatorie.

Alſo, whether Images were neceſſary to be in the Churches, as Lay-mens books, and Saints to be prayed unto and worſhipped.

Images.

They anſwered negatively; Iohn Maundrel adding (that wooden Images were good to roſt a ſhoulder of Mutton, but evill in the Church; whereby Idolatry was committed.

Thoſe Articles thus anſwered (for their Articles were one, and their anſwers in manner like) the Chancellor read their condemnation, and ſo delivered them to the Sheriffe. Then ſpake Iohn Spicer, ſaying; Oh Maſter Sheriffe, now muſt you be their Butcher, that you may be guiltie alſo with them of innocent bloud before the Lord. This was the 23. day of March, Anno 1556. and the 24. day of the ſame moneth they were carried out of the common Goale to a place betwixt Salisburie and Wilton, where were two poſtes ſet for them to be burnt at. Which men coming to the place, kneeled downe, and made their prayers ſecretly together, and then being diſclothed to their ſhirts, Iohn Maundrell ſpake with a loud voyce, Not for all Saliſburie. Which words men judged to be an anſwer to the Sheriffe, which offered him the Queenes pardon if he would recant. And after that in like manner ſpake Iohn Spicer, ſaying, This is the joyfulleſt day that ever I ſaw. Thus were they three burnt at two ſtakes: where moſt conſtantly they gave their bodies to the fire, and their ſoules to the Lord for teſtimonie of his truth.

Alice Coberley being in durance, how ſhe was brought by the Keepers wife to revoke.

As touching William Coberley, this moreover is to be noted, that his wife alſo, called Alice, being apprehended, was in the Keepers houſe the ſame time detained while her huſband was in priſon. Where the Keepers wife named Agnes Penicote, had ſecretly heated a key fire hot, and laid it in the graſſe on the backſide. So ſpeaking to Alice Coberley to fetch her the key in all haſte, the ſaid Alice went with ſpeed to bring the key, and ſo taking up the key in haſte did pitteouſly burne her hand. Whereupon ſhe crying out at the ſudden burning of her hand, Ah thou drab, quoth the other, thou that canſt not abide the burning of the key, how wilt thou be able to abide burning thy whole body, and ſo ſhe afterward revoked. But to returne againe to the ſtory of Coberley, who being ſomewhat learned, and being at the ſtake was ſomewhat long a burning as the winde ſtood: after his body was ſcorched with the fire, and his left arme drawn and taken from him by the violence of the fire, the fleſh being burnt to the white bone, at length he ſtooped over the chaine, and with the right hand, being ſomewhat ſtarkned, knocked upon his breaſt ſoftly, the bloud and matter iſſuing out of his mouth. Afterward when they all thought he had been dead, ſuddenly he roſe right up with his body againe. And thus much concerning theſe three Saliſbury Martyrs.

A diſcourſe of the death and martyrdome of ſix other Martyrs ſuffering at London, whoſe names here follow.

April 23. ſix Martyrs burnt in Smithfield at one ſtake.

ABout the xxiij. day of April, Anno Dom. 1556. were burned in Smithfield at one fire, theſe ſix conſtant Martyrs of Chriſt, ſuffering for the profeſſion of the Goſpel, viz.

Robert Drakes, Miniſter.
William Tyms, Curate.
Richard Spurge Shereman.
Thomas Spurge, Fuller.
Iohn Cavel, Weaver.
George Ambroſe, Fuller.

Theſe Martyrs were ſent up by the Lord Rich, by M. Tyrell, and others.

They were all of Eſſex, and ſo of the Dioceſſe of London, and were ſent up; ſome by the Lord Rich, and ſome by others at ſundry times, unto Stephen Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, then Lord Chancellor, of England, about the 22. day of March, Anno 1555. Who after ſmall examination, ſent them, ſome unto the Kings Bench, and others unto the Marſhalſea, where they remained almoſt all the whole yeere, untill the death of the ſaid Biſhop of Wincheſter, and had during that time nothing ſaid unto them. Whereupon, after that D. Heath, Archb. of Yorke was choſen to the office of Lord Chancellorſhip, foure of theſe perſecuted brethren, being now wearie of this their long impriſonment, made their ſupplication unto the ſaid D. Heath, requiring his favor and aide for their deliverance: the copie whereof enſueth.

To the right reverend Father, Thomas Archbiſhop of Yorke, L. Chancellor of England.

A ſupplication to the Lord Chancellor.

MAy it pleaſe your honourable good Lordſhip, for the love of GOD, to tender the humble ſuite of your Lordſhips poore Orators, whoſe names are ſubſcribed, which have lien in great miſerie in the Marſhalſea, by the ſpace of ten moneths and more, at the commandement of the late Lord Chancellor, to their utter undoing, with their wives and children. In conſideration whereof, your Lordſhips ſaid Orators doe moſt humbly pray and beſeech your good Lordſhip to ſuffer them to be brought before your Honour; and there, if any man of good conſcience can lay any thing to our charge, we truſt either to declare our innocencie againſt their accuſations, or if otherwiſe their accuſations can be proved true and we faultie, we are ready (God helping us) with our condigne puniſhments to ſatisfie the law according to your wiſe judgement, as we hope, full of fatherly mercy toward us and all men, according to your godly office, in the which we pray for your godly ſucceſſe to the good pleaſure of God, Amen.

This Supplication was ſent (as is ſaid) and ſubſcribed with the names of theſe foure under following:

Richard Spurge.
Thomas Spurge.
George Ambroſe.
Iohn Cavel.

Names ſubſcribed to the ſupplication.

Richard Spurge.

Rich. Spurge examined.

VPon the receit and ſight hereof, it was not long after, but ſir Richard Reade Knight, then one of the Officers of the Court of the Chancery, the 16. day of Ianuarie, was ſent unto the Marſhalſea to examine the ſaid foure priſoners; and therefore beginning firſt with Richard Spurge upon certaine demands, received his anſwers thereunto: the effect whereof was, that he with others were complained upon by the Parſon of Bocking unto the Lord Rich, for that they came not unto their Pariſh Church of Bocking, where they had inhabited; and thereupon was by the ſaid Lord Rich ſent unto the late Lord Chancellor, about the 22. day of March laſt paſt, viz. Anno 1555.

The Parſon of Bocking accuſer.

For not coming to the Popiſh Church.

And farther, he ſaid, that he came not to the church ſince the firſt alteration of the Engliſh ſervice into Latine Chriſtmas day then a twelvemoneth onely excepted) and that, becauſe he miſliked both the ſame and the Maſſe alſo, as not conſonant and agreeing with Gods holy Word.

Moreover, he required that he might not be any more examined upon the matter, unleſſe it pleaſed the Lord Chancellor that then was, to know his fault therein, which to him he would willingly utter.

Thomas Spurge.

Tho. Spurge examined. Not coming to the Church, and why.

THomas Spurge being then next examined, made the ſame anſwer in effect that the other had done; confeſſing, that he abſented himſelfe from the Church, becauſe the Word of God was not there truly taught, nor the ſacraments of Chriſt duely miniſtred in ſuch ſort as was preſcribed by the ſame Word. And being farther examined of his beliefe concerning the ſacrament of the Altar, he ſaid; That if any could accuſe him thereof, he would then make anſwer as God had given him knowledge therein.

Sacrament of the Altar.

George Ambroſe.

George Ambroſe examined.

THe like anſwer made George Ambroſe, adding moreover, that after he had read the late Biſhop of Wincheſters booke, intituled, De vera obedientia, with Boners Preface thereunto annexed, inveighing (both) againſt the authoritie of the Biſhop of Rome, he did much leſſe ſet by their doings then before.

John Cavel.

John Cavel examined.

The cauſe why John Cavel came not to Church.

IOhn Cavel agreeing in other matters with them, anſwered, that the cauſe why he did forbear the coming to the Church, was, that the Parſon there had preached two contrarie doctrines. For firſt, in a ſermon that he made at the Queens firſt entrie to the Crowne, he did exhort the people to beleeve the Goſpel; for it was the truth, and if they did not beleeve it, they ſhould be damned. But in a ſecond ſermon, he preached that the Teſtament was falſe in fortie places, which contrarietie in him was a cauſe amongſt other of his abſenting from the Church.

The Parſon of Bocking falſe & contrarie to his owne doctrine.

Robert Drakes.

Robert Drakes Parſon of Thunderſley examined.

ABout the fourth day of March next after, Robert Drakes alſo was examined, who was Parſon of Thunderſley in Eſſex, and had there remained the ſpace of three yeeres. He was firſt made Deacon by Doctor Taylor of Hadley, at the commandement of Doctor Cranmer, late Archbiſhop of Canterburie. And within one yeere after (which was the third yeere of the reigne of King Edward) he was by the ſaid Archbiſhop and Doctor Ridley Biſhop of London, admitted Miniſter of Gods holy Word and Sacraments, not after the order then in force, but after ſuch order as was after eſtabliſhed; and was preſented unto the ſaid benefice of Thunderſley by the Lord Rich, at the ſute of Maſter Cauſton and Maſter Treheron; and now notwithſtanding was ſent up by the ſaid Lord Rich, with the others before mentioned: and at his coming to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, was by him demanded whether he would conforme himſelfe like a ſubject to the laws of this Realme then in force. To the which he ſaid he would abide all lawes that ſtood with the lawes of God; and thereupon was committed to priſon, where he and the reſt above named did remaine ever ſince.

Drakes placed in the benefice of Thunderſley by the L. Rich.

William Tyms.

NOw remaineth likewiſe to declare the examination of William Tyms, Deacon and Curate of Hockley in Eſſex. But before I come to his examination, firſt here is to be opened and ſet forth the order and manner of his trouble, how and by whom he was firſt apprehended in Eſſex, and from thence ſent up to London: the ſtorie whereof followeth in this manner.

The ſtory of William Tyms Deacon, and Curate of Hockley, with the manner of his taking.

The firſt occaſion of taking Wil. Tyms.

THere was at Hockley in Queene Maries dayes two ſermons preached in the woods, the which woods were appertaining to Maſter Tyrel; and the name of the one wood was called Plumborow wood, and the other Becheſwood, and there was at the ſame ſermons an honeſt man and his wife with him, whoſe name was John Gye, the which Gye was Maſter Tyrels ſervant, and did dwell under him, being his herd at a farme of his called Plumborow. Shortly after it was knowne to Maſter Tyrel, how that his woods were polluted with ſermons, the which he did take very evill, and much mattter did ariſe about it, as an unlawfull aſſembly; the which was laid to John Gyes charge, becauſe he did not diſcloſe that unlawfull act to his Maſter, being then in the commiſſion of peace, appointed at that time to keepe downe the Goſpel, the which he did to the uttermoſt, as it may appeare in many of his acts. Good God give him repentance if it be thy will.

M. Tyrel offended with ſermons preached in his woods.

Shortly after it pleaſed Maſter Tyrel to come to Hockley to ſift out this matter, and to know who was at theſe preachings. Well, there were found many faulty; for it is ſuppoſed there were an hundred perſons at the leaſt. So it pleaſed Maſter Tyrel to begin firſt with John Gye, and asked him where that naughty fellow was that ſerved their Pariſh, one Tyms; for it is told me (ſaid he) that he is the cauſer to bring theſe naughtie fellowes into the countrey. Therefore I charge thee Gye to fetch me this naughtie fellow Tyms, for thou knoweſt where he is. No, ſaid Gye, I doe not know. So in no wiſe could he make him fetch him.

John Gye, M. Tyrels ſervant, an honeſt man.

Then ſtepped forth another of Maſter Tyrels men, willing to ſhew his Maſter pleaſure, whoſe name was Richard Sheriffe, and ſaid to his Maſter; Sir, I know where he is. Well, ſaid Maſter Tyrel, goe to the Conſtables and charge them to bring him to me.

So this Sheriffe being diligent, made ſure work, and had him brought before his Maſter with the Conſtables, whoſe names be theſe, Edward Hedge, and John James.

Richard Sheriffe, M. Tyrels man, perſecutor. Edw. Hedge, John James, Conſtables.

So when he came before Maſter Tyrel, then Maſter Tyrel commanded all men to depart; and it was wiſely done, for he was not able to open his mouth againſt Tyms without reproach, and there he kept him about three houres. But there were ſome that liſtened at the wals, and heard Maſter Tyrel ſay thus to Tyms:

Me thinketh (ſaid he) that when I ſee the bleſſed Roode, it maketh me thinke of God.

Talke betweene M. Tyrel, and Wil. Tyms.

Why ſir, ſaid Tyms, if an Idoll that is made with mans hands doth make you remember God; how much more ought the creatures of God, as man, being his workmanſhip, or the graſſe, or the trees that bring forth fruit, make you remember God?

So Maſter Tyrel ended his talke with Tyms, it ſhould ſeeme in an heate, for he braſt out and called him traitorly knave.

Why ſir, ſaid Tyms, in King Edwards daies you did affirme the truth that I do now.

Affirme, quoth Tyrel? nay by Gods body, I never thought it with my heart.

Well, ſaid Tyms, then I pray you Maſter Tyrel beare with me, for I have beene a Traitor but a while, but you have beene a Traitor ſixe yeeres.

After this, Tyms was ſent to London to the Biſhop, and from him to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and ſo from him to the Kings Bench, and then was M. Tyrels rage ceaſed with them that were in the woods at the ſermons. So M. Tyrel tooke away Gyes coat, and gave it to John Traiford, and ſent him to Saint Toſies to ſee good rule kept there.

Tyms ſent up to London.

When Tyms came before the Biſhop of London, there was at that time the Biſhop of Bathe, and there was William Tyms examined of his faith before them both. So mightily God wrought with this true hearted man, that he had wherewith to anſwer them both, for the Conſtables did ſay that brought him before the Biſhop, that they never heard the like. Then the Biſhop (as though he would have had Tyms to turne from the truth) ſaid to the Conſtables; I pray you (ſaid he) give him good counſell, that he may turne from his errour. My Lord, ſaid the Conſtables, he is at a point, for he will not turne.

Wil. Tyms brought & examined before Biſhop Boner, and the Biſhop of Bathe.

Then both the Biſhops waxed wearie of him, for he had troubled them about a ſixe or ſeven houres. Then the Biſhops began to pitie Tyms caſe, and to flatter him, ſaying; Ah good fellow (ſaid they) thou art bold, and thou haſt a good freſh ſpirit, we would thou haddeſt learning to thy ſpirit. I thanke you (my Lords) ſaid Tyms, and both you be learned, and I would you had a good ſpirit to your learning. So thus they broke up, and ſent Tyms to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and there were Edward Hedge and John James the Conſtables aforenamed diſcharged, and Tyms was commanded to the Kings Bench, where he was mightily ſtrengthened with the good men that he found there.

Wil. Tyms ſent from biſh. Boner, to the biſhop of Wincheſter.

And thus hitherto ye have heard, firſt upon what occaſion this William Tyms was apprehended, how he was intreated of Maſter Tyrel the Juſtice, and by him ſent up to the Ordinarie of the Dioceſſe, which was Biſhop Boner; who after certain talke and debating he had with the ſaid Tyms, at length directed him to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, being then Lord Chancellor, and yet living, and ſo was commanded by him upon the ſame to the Kings Bench.

Talke between the biſhop of Wincheſter, and William Tyms.

Here by the way is to be underſtood, that Tyms as he was but a Deacon, ſo was he but ſimply, or at leaſt not Prieſtly apparelled, foraſmuch as he went not in a gowne, but in a coate; and his hoſen were of two colours, the upper part white, and the neather ſtocks of ſheepes ruſſet. Whereupon the proud Prelate ſending for him to come before him, and ſeeing his ſimple attire, began to mock him, ſaying; Ah ſirra, are you a Deacon? Yes, my Lord, that I am, quoth Tyms. So me thinketh, ſaid the Biſhop, ye are decked like a Deacon. My Lord, ſaid Tyms, my veſture doth not ſo much varie from a Deacon, but me thinketh your apparrell doth as much varie from an Apoſtle.

So then there ſpake one of the Biſhops Gentlemen; My Lord (ſaid he in mockage) give him a chaire, a toſte, and drink, and he will be luſtie. But the Biſhop bade, have him away, and commanded him to come before him againe the next day at an houre appointed.

Theſe five Martyrs were R. Drakes, Tho. Spurge, Rich. Spurge, Cavel, and Ambroſe. Their examinations before the biſhop of London. Sacrament of the Altar.

But Wincheſter, for lack of leaſure, or becauſe of ſickneſſe growing upon him, or for what cauſe elſe I know not, either would not, or could not attend unto him, but returned him againe to his ordinarie Biſhop from whence he came. So William Tyms being put off againe to Biſhop Boner, was placed together and coupled with the other five Martyrs above named, and with them brought together to publike examination before the Biſhop the 21. day of March, firſt in the Biſhops Palace of London, where the ſaid Biſhop after his accuſtomed manner proceeding againſt them, enquired of them their faith upon the ſacrament of the altar. To whom they anſwered, that the body of Chriſt was not in the ſacrament of the altar really and corporally, after the words of conſecration ſpoken by the Prieſt: of the which opinion they had been of long time, ſome later, ſome ſooner, even as God of his mercie did call upon them unto the knowledge of his Goſpel.

Then the Biſhops Chaplaines began to reaſon with them, but with no great authorities either of the Scriptures, or of the ancient Fathers (ye may be ſure) as other their large conferences with the learned do already declare.

Another examination of Tyms and Drakes, and the reſt before the Biſhop of London.

March 23.

THe 23. day of the ſame moneth next after, the Biſhop ſent againe for Tyms and Drakes, and Ex officio, did object unto them certaine Articles, the ſumme and manner whereof were the ſame which before were objected to Whittel, Greene, Tudſon, Went, Brown, Eliz. Foſter, Joane Laſhford, look before. And the 26. day of the ſame moneth, he ſent for the other foure, miniſtring unto them alſo the ſame generall Articles. Unto the which they all in effect anſwered in matters touching their faith, as did the ſaid Bartlet Greene and the reſt. Other appearings they had, as the Biſhops common manner of proceeding was, more (as I have often ſaid) for order and forme of law, then for any zeale of juſtice.

Wil. Tyms with the reſt againe examined.

March 28.

But in concluſion, the 28. day of this moneth of March, William Tyms, and Robert Drakes, with the other foure above named, were brought to the open Conſiſtorie in Pauls before the ſaid Biſhop of London to be condemned for hereſie.

B. Boners words to Wil. Tyms.

The Biſhop firſt began in this or like ſort; Tyms, quoth he, I will begin with thee firſt, for thou art and haſt been the ring-leader of theſe thy companions, thou haſt taught them hereſies, and confirmed them in their erroneous opinions, and haſt endeavoured as much as in thee lyeth, to make them like unto thy ſelfe. If thy fault had not tended to the hurt of other, I would then have uſed thee more charitably, and not have brought thee to this open rebuke. I would according to the rule of Chriſt in the 18. of Matthew, have told thee thy fault between me and thee; if thou wouldeſt not have heard me, I would not ſo have left thee, but I with two or three other would have exhorted thee; if that would not have ſerved, then would I have told the Church, &c. But for that thy fault is open and manifeſt to the world, and thou thy ſelfe remaineſt ſtout in thine errour, this charitable dealing is not to be extended towards thee: I have therefore thought good to proceede by another rule, whereof St. Paul ſpeaketh, 1 Timothy 5. Such as ſinne, rebuke them openly, that other may feare. For this cauſe art thou brought before me in the face of this people, to receive judgement according to thy deſerts. Let me ſee what thou canſt ſay, why I ſhould not proceed againſt thee as thine Ordinarie.

Matth. 18.

1 Tim. 5.

The anſwer of Wil. Tyms to Biſh. Boner.

My Lord (quoth Tyms) will you now give me leave to ſpeake? Yea, quoth the Biſhop. Then ſaid Tyms; My Lord, I marvell that you will begin with a lie. You call me the ring-leader and teacher of this companie, but how untruly you have ſaid, ſhall ſhortly appeare: for there is none of all theſe my brethren, which are brought hither as priſoners, but when they were at liberty and out of priſon, they diſſented from you and your doings, as much as they doe at this preſent; and for that cauſe they are now priſoners.

So it is evident, that they learned not their religion in priſon. And as for me, I never knew them, untill ſuch time as I by your commandement was priſoner with them; how could I then be their ring-leader and teacher? So that all the world may ſee how untruly you have ſpoken. And as for my fault which you make ſo grievous, whatſoever you judge of me, I am well aſſured that I hold none other religion then Chriſt preached, the Apoſtles witneſſed, the Primitive Church received, and now of late the Apoſtolicall and Evangelicall Preachers of this Realme have faithfully taught; for the which you have cruelly burned them, and now you ſeeke our bloud alſo. Proceede on hardly by what rule you will; I force not, I doe not refuſe you for my Ordinarie.

Biſh. Boners words.

Then ſaid the Biſhop, I perceive thou wilt not be counted their ring-leader. How ſaiſt thou, wilt thou ſubmit thy ſelfe to the Catholike church as an obedient childe? in ſo doing thou ſhalt be receiued and doe well enough, otherwiſe thou ſhalt have judgement as an hereticke.

One of the priſoners anſwereth to Biſhop Boner.

Then one of the priſoners (whoſe name is not certainly knowne) ſaid; My Lord, you are no upright Judge, for you judge after your owne luſt. But if you will judge us according to the holy Teſtament of Chriſt, which is the Word of truth, we will accord to your judgement; for unto that Word we wholly ſubmit our ſelves. But as for your judgement without the truth GOD ſhall condemne. And this priſoner was very earneſtly in hand with the Biſhop, that they might be judged by the Word of God.

With this the Biſhop was offended, calling him buſie knave, and commanded him to hold his tongue, or elſe he ſhould be had away to a place of ſmaller eaſe.

Wil. Tyms again anſwereth

Then Tyms anſwered and ſaid; My Lord, I doubt not but I am of the Catholike Church, whatſoever you judge of me. But as for your Church, you have before this day renounced it, and by corporall oath promiſed never to conſent to the ſame. Contrarie to the which you have received into this Realme the Popes authoritie, and therefore you are falſly perjured and forſworn all the ſort of you. Beſides this, you have both ſpoken and written very earneſtly againſt that uſurped power, and now you doe burne men that will not acknowledge the Pope to be ſupreme head.

B. Boner charged with perjury and inconſtancy.

Have I, quoth the Biſhop? Where have I written any thing againſt the Church of Rome?

My Lord, quoth Tyms, the Biſhop of Wincheſter wrote a very learned Oration, intituled, De vera obedientia, which containeth worthy matter againſt the Romiſh authoritie. Unto the which booke you made a Preface, inveighing largely againſt the Biſhop of Rome, reproving his tyrannie and falſhood, calling his power falſe and pretenſed. The booke is extant, and you cannot denie it.

Boners Preface to Winch. book De vera obedientia.

Then was the Biſhop ſomewhat abaſhed, and looking upon ſuch as were preſent, ſpake very gently, ſaying; Lo, here is a goodly matter indeede. My Lord of Wincheſter being a great learned man, did write a booke againſt the ſupremacy of the Popes Holineſſe, and I alſo did write a Preface before the ſame book, tending to the ſame effect. And thus did we becauſe of the perillous world that then was. For then was it made treaſon by the lawes of this Realme to maintaine the Popes authoritie, and great danger it was to be ſuſpected a favourer of the See of Rome; and therefore feare compelled us to beare with the time, for otherwiſe there had been no way but one. You know when any uttered his conſcience in maintaining the Popes authoritie, he ſuffered death for it.

B. Boner excuſeth himſelfe by feare.

And then turning his tale unto Tyms, he ſaid; But ſince that time, even ſince the coming in of the Queenes Majeſtie, when we might be bold to ſpeake our conſcience, we have acknowledged our faults, and my Lord of Wincheſter himſelfe ſhamed not to recant the ſame at Pauls Croſſe. And alſo thou thy ſelfe ſeeſt that I ſtand not in it, but willingly have ſubmitted my ſelfe. Doe thou alſo as we have done.

Tyms againe replyeth to the Biſhop.

My Lord, quoth Tyms, that which you have written againſt the ſupremacie of the Pope, may be well approved by the Scriptures. But that which you now doe, is againſt the Word of God, as I can well prove.

Then another, I ſuppoſe it was Doctor Cooke, ſaid; Tyms, I pray thee let me talke with thee a little, for I thinke we two are learned alike. Thou ſpeakeſt much of the Scripture, and yet underſtandeſt it not. I will tell thee to whom thou maieſt be compared. Thou art like to one which intending to goe on hunting, riſeth up early in the morning, taketh his hounds, and forth he goeth, up to the hils, and down into the vallies; he paſſeth over the fields, over hedge and ditch, he ſearcheth the woods and thickets; thus laboureth he all the whole day, without finding any game. At night home he cometh wearie of his travell, not having caught any thing at all; and thus fareth it by thee. Thou laboureſt in reading of the Scriptures, thou takeſt the letter, but the meaning thou knoweſt not, and thus thy reading is as unprofitable unto thee, as hunting was unto the man I ſpake of even now.

An hunters parable againſt Wil. Tyms wiſely applied.

Sir, quoth Tyms, you have not well applied your ſimilitude; for I praiſe God, I have not read the Scriptures unprofitably: but God, I thanke him, hath revealed unto me ſo much as I doubt not is ſufficient for my ſalvation.

The anſwer of Tyms to the hunters ſimilitude.

Then ſaid the Biſhop; You bragge much of knowledge, and yet you know nothing: you ſpeake much of Scripture, and you know not what Scripture is. I pray thee tell me; How knoweſt thou that thing to be the Word of God, which thou calleſt Scripture?

B. Boners reaſon.

To this anſwered Robert Drakes, that he did know it to be the Word of God, for that it doth ſhew unto men their ſalvation in Chriſt, and doth revoke and call back all men from wicked life, unto a pure and undefiled converſation.

Robert Drakes anſwereth.

The Biſhop replied, that the heathen Writers have taught precepts of good living, as well as the Scripture, and yet their writings are not eſteemed to be Gods Word.

Boner replieth.

To this anſwered Tyms, ſaying; The Old Teſtament beareth witneſſe of thoſe things which are written in the New, for (quoth he) there is nothing taught in the New Teſtament, but it was fore-ſhewed in the Law and Prophets.

Tyms anſwereth to Boner.

I will denie all, quoth the Biſhop, I will deny all; what ſayeſt thou then? Then Robert Drakes alledged a ſentence in Latine out of the Prophet Eſay, in the 59. chapter of his propheſie; Spiritus meus qui eſt in te, &c. My ſpirit which is in thee, and my words wich I have put in thy mouth, ſhall not depart out of the mouth of thy ſeed, nor out of the mouth of the ſeed of thy ſeed, from henceforth even for ever; meaning thereby to prove, that he which had the Spirit of God, could thereby diſcerne and judge truly which was Gods word: But before he could explicate his minde, he was interrupted by the Biſhop, who ſpake unto Doctor Pendleton, ſaying:

Boner denying the principles of Divinitie. Eſay 59.

Maſter Doctor, I pray you ſay ſomewhat unto theſe folkes that may doe them ſome good. Then Doctor Pendleton, as he leaned neere unto the Biſhop, covered his face with both his hands, to the end he might the more quietly deviſe what to ſay; but other talke was preſently miniſtred, ſo that for that time he ſaid nothing.

B. Boner calleth for more helpe.
D. Pendleton ſtudieth for talke.

And thus much William Aleſburie, witneſſe hereof, being preſent thereat, ſo far as he heard, hath faithfully recorded and reported. What more was ſpoken and there ſaid (for they made not yet an end a good while after) becauſe he departed then out of the houſe, he doth not know, nor did heare.

Then the Biſhop, after this and ſuch like communication thus paſſed betweene them, proceeding at length in forme of law, cauſed both his articles and anſwers to the ſame, there and then to be openly read; the ſumme of which his confeſſion recorded and left by his owne hand writing, tended to this effect as followeth.

The Articles for the which William Tyms of Hockley in Eſſex, was condemned in the Conſiſtory in Pauls, the 28. day of March, with his anſwers and confeſſion upon the ſame.

Articles anſwered by Wil. Tyms.

FIrſt, I did truly confeſſe and beleeve, that I was baptized in the true Catholike Church of Chriſt; for when I was baptized, there was the element and the Word of GOD, according to Chriſts inſtitution. And my Godfathers and Godmothers did promiſe for me, that I ſhould forſake the Devill and all his workes, and that I ſhould keepe Gods commandements, and beleeve all the Articles of the Chriſtian faith; the which I do beleeve at this day, and with Gods helpe I truſt to do while I live; for it was not the wickedneſſe of the Miniſter that made the ſacrament of none effect, &c.

His Baptiſme by his Godfathers.

Onely two Sacraments.

Item, I confeſſed two Sacraments, and but two in Chriſts true Church; that is, the ſacrament of Baptiſme, and the ſacrament of the body and bloud of Chriſt, and that Chriſt is preſent with his ſacraments, as it pleaſeth him.

The true viſible Church.

Item, I confeſſed that Chriſt hath a viſible Church, wherein the Word of God is truly preached, and the ſacraments truly miniſtred.

Wincheſters book De vera obedientia.

Item, I confeſſed the See of Rome to be as the late Biſhop of Wincheſter hath written in his booke, De vera obedientia, to the which I ſaid unto the Biſhop of London, that he had made a godly Preface; and alſo John Bale hath plainly declared in his book, called the Image of both Churches, even ſo much as I beleeve thereof.

The Maſſe blaſphemous.

Item, I confeſſed the Maſſe to be blaſphemy to Chriſts death and paſſion.

Sacrament of the Altar an Idoll.

Item, I confeſſed that in the ſacrament of the Altar Chriſt is not preſent either ſpiritually or corporally; but as they uſe it, it is an abominable Idoll.

Laſt of all, I confeſſed the Biſhop of London to be mine Ordinarie.

After this, the Biſhop falling to intreating and perſwaſions, earneſtly exhorted him to revoke his hereſies (as he termed them) and to reforme himſelfe unto the Church of Rome, and not to ſtick ſo much to the literall ſenſe of the Scriptures, but to uſe the interpretation of the old Fathers.

To the which, Tyms anſwered, I will not reforme my ſelfe thereunto. And I thanke God, of this day; for I truſt he will turne your curſings into bleſſings.

And furthermore, asking this queſtion, he ſaid; And what have you to maintaine the reall preſence of Chriſt in the ſacrament, but only the bare letter?

We have (quoth the Biſhop) the Catholike Church.

The Popes Church. The See of Rome, the See of Antichriſt.

No, ſaid Tyms, you have the Popiſh Church of Rome for you, for which you be perjured and forſworne. And the See of Rome is the See of Antichriſt; and therefore to that Church I will not conforme my ſelfe, nor once conſent unto it.

Sentence read againſt William Tyms.

Then the Biſhop ſeeing his conſtant boldneſſe to be unmoveable, proceeding to his condemnation, pronounced the ſentence definitive upon him, and gave him over to the ſecular power.

The condemnation of Robert Drakes.

The anſwer of Rob. Drakes.

After, calling for Robert Drakes, he uſed towards him the like manner of exhortation that he did before. To whom Drakes ſaid; As for your Church of Rome, I utterly defie and denie it, with all the workes thereof, even as I denie the Devill and all his workes.

Sentence given againſt Drakes.

The Biſhop then uſing his accuſtomed order of law, with his like exhortations, at laſt gave him the like bleſſing that Tyms had, and ſo charged the Sheriffe with him.

The condemnation of Thomas Spurge, and of the other three Martyrs.

The anſwer of Tho. Spurge.

Thomas Spurge being next demanded if he would returne to the Catholike Church, ſaid as followeth; As for your Church of Rome, I doe utterly deny it: but to the true Catholike Church I am content to returne, and continue in the ſame, whereof I beleeve the Church of Rome to be no part or member. Then in fine, calling the reſt in their courſes, and upon the like demands receiving the like anſwers, the ſaid Biſhop gave unto each of them their ſeverall judgements, and ſo ridding his bloudy hands, committed them unto the cuſtodie of the Sheriffes of London, who ſent them unto Newgate, whither they went all moſt joyfully, abiding there the Lords good time, wherein they ſhould ſeale this their faith with the ſhedding of their bloud; which they moſt ſtoutly and willingly performed, the fourteenth day of April, as before is mentioned.

Sentence given againſt Tho. Spurge, Rich. Spurge, Cavel, and Ambroſe.

Letters of William Tyms.

To his faithfull ſiſter in the Lord, Pariſhioner in the Towne of Hockley, named Agnes Glaſcocke.

A letter of W. Tyms to Agnes Glaſcocke.

THe grace, mercie, and peace of God our Father through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord and Saviour, with the ſweet comfort of his holy & mighty Spirit, to the performance of his will, to your everlaſting comfort, be with you my deare ſiſter Glaſcocke, both now and evermore, Amen.

My moſt deare and entirely beloved ſiſter, yea mother I might rightly well call you for the motherly care which you have alwaies had for me, I have me moſt heartily commended unto you, giving God moſt hearty thankes for you, that he hath given you ſo loving a heart to Chriſts poore Goſpel, and his poore afflicted flock for the ſame: and as you have full godly begun, ſo I beſeech God to give you power to go forward in the ſame, and never more to look back, fearing neither fire, neither ſword; and then I warrant you, you have not farre to runne.

And now (my deare heart) remember well what I have taught you when I was preſent with you, and alſo written being abſent, and no doubt we ſhall ſhortly meet againe with a moſt joyfull meeting. I goe upon Friday next to the Biſhop of Londons Colehouſe, which is the 20. day of March, where I thinke it will be hard for any of my friends to ſpeake with me. Howbeit I truſt I ſhall not long tarry there, but ſhortly after be carried up after my deare brethren and ſiſters, which are gone before me into heaven in a fiery chariot: therefore now I take my leave of you, till we meet in heaven; and hie you after. I have tarried a great while for you, and ſeeing you be ſo long a making ready, I will tarrie no longer for you. You ſhall finde me merrily ſinging, Hloy, holy, holy, Lord God of Sabbath, at my journies end. Therefore now (my deare heart) make good haſte, and loyter not by the way, leſt night take you, and ſo ye be ſhut out of the gate with the fooliſh Virgins. And now (my ſiſter) in witneſſe that I have taught you nothing but the truth, here I write my name with my bloud for a teſtimoniall unto you, that I will ſeale the ſimple doctrine which I have taught you, with the reſt. And thus fare you well: And God defend you from Antichriſt, and all his miniſters, the falſe Prieſts, Amen.

Theſe words following were written with his own blood.

GOd be mercifull unto you, pardon, and forgive all your ſins, and ſend you faith to beleeve the ſame, that you may be partaker of his heavenly kingdome, Amen.

My dear ſiſter, I have me moſt heartily commended unto you; and as I have lamented your falling from God, by being partaker with that Idolatrous Prieſt; ſo have I, ſince I heard of your earneſt repentance, verie much rejoyced, and alſo praiſed Almightie God for his mercie ſhewed unto you, in that he hath not left you to your ſelf, but ſince your deniall, he hath ſhewed his mercie on you, by looking back on you as he did on Peter, and ſo cauſed you to repent as Peter did, and bitterly to weep for your ſins: whereas if God had left you to your ſelf, you had run forward from one evill to another, till at length your heart ſhould either have been hardened, or elſe you ſhould have deſpaired of the mercie of God. And ſeeing that God hath been ſo mercifull unto you as he hath been, be you not unthankfull unto him for the ſame. For I certifie you that your ſorrowful heart, that you have had, doth declare unto me that God hath pardoned and forgiven all your ſins for the blood-ſhedding of that immaculate Lambe Ieſus Chriſt our Lord and Saviour.

Therefore as Peter, after the time that Chriſt had forgiven him his ſin, did boldly confeſſe Chriſt before all his enemies; even ſo my dear heart in the Lord, ſeeing that God hath ſo mercifully pardoned and forgiven you your ſins, now cleave unto him, and be at defiance with his enemies the Papiſts: and as they do bear witneſſe with their father the devil, by going to the Church, and ſhedding of the innocent blood of all thoſe that will not go with them; even ſo do you bear witneſſe with Chriſt, by not coming there: for all thoſe that do go thither ſhall be partakers of their brethrens blood, that is ſhed for the teſtimony of Chriſt, except they repent and amend; which grace that they may ſo do, I beſeech the eternall God for his Chriſts ſake, if it be his good will, to give them in his good time. And the ſame good God that hath been ſo mercifull unto you to call you to repentance, him I beſeech to keep you in his fear and love, that you may have alwayes affiance in him, and evermore ſeek his honour and glory to your everlaſting comfort in Chriſt, Amen. Thus fare you wel from the Kings bench this 28. of Auguſt.

GRace, mercie, and peace from God the Father, through our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, be with you both now and evermore, Amen.

Dear ſiſters, I have me moſt heartily commended unto you, thanking you for the great kindneſſe ſhewed unto me in this time of mine impriſonment, and not onely unto me, but alſo unto my poore wife and children; and alſo for the great kindneſſe that you ſhew unto all the living Saints that be diſperſed abroad, and are faine to hide their heads for fear of this cruell perſecution.

Dear ſiſters, when I do remember your conſtancie in Chriſt, I call to remembrance the conſtancie of divers godly women, as Suſanna, Iudith, Heſter, and the good wife of Nabal, that through her godly conditions ſaved both her huſbands life, and all her houſhold, when David had thought to have ſlain him for his churliſh anſwer that he ſent him. Alſo I do remember Rahab that lodged the Lords ſpies, how GOD preſerved her and her whole houſhold for her faithfulneſſe that ſhe bare to Gods people. So I do beleeve that when the Lord ſhall ſend his Angel to deſtroy theſe Idolatrous Egyptians here in England, and ſhall finde the blood of the Lambe ſprinkled on the doore poſt of your hearts, he will go by and not hurt you, but ſpare your whole houſholds for your ſakes. Alſo I do remember Marie Magdalen, how faithfull ſhe was; for ſhe was the firſt that preached the reſurrection of Chriſt. Remember the bleſſed Martyr Anne Aſkew in our time, and follow her example of conſtancie. And for the love of God take heed that in no caſe you do conſent to idolatry, but ſtand faſt to the Lord, as the good woman did that had her ſeven ſons put to death before her face, and ſhe alwayes comforting them, yea and laſt of all ſuffered death her ſelf, for the teſtimonie of her God, which is the living God. Thus I beſeech God to ſend you grace and ſtrength to ſtand faſt to the Lord, as ſhe did, and then you ſhall be ſure of the ſame kingdome that ſhe is ſure of; to the which kingdome I pray God bring both you and me, Amen.

My dearly beloved, I beſeech God to reward the great goodneſſe that you have ſhewed unto me, ſeven fold into your boſomes; and as you have alwayes had a moſt godly love unto his Word, even ſo I beſeech him to give you grace to love your owne ſoules, and then I truſt that you will flee from all thoſe things that ſhould diſpleaſe our good and mercifull God, and hate and abhorre all the companie of thoſe that would have you to worſhip God any otherwiſe then is contained in his holy Word. And beware of thoſe Maſters of Idolatrie, that is, theſe Papiſticall Prieſts. My dear brethren, for the tender mercie of God, remember well what I have ſaid unto you, and alſo written, the which I am now readie to ſeale with my blood. I praiſe God that ever I lived to ſee the day, and bleſſed be my good and mercifull God, that ever he gave me a bodie to glorifie his Name. And (deare hearts) I do now write unto you for none other cauſe, but to put you in remembrance, that I have not forgotten you, to the end, that I would not have you forget me but to remember well what I have ſimply by word of mouth and writing taught you. The which although it were moſt ſimply done, yet truly, as your own conſcience beareth me record: and therefore in any caſe take good heed that you do not that thing which your own conſcience doth condemne. Therefore come out of Sodom, and go to heaven-ward with the ſervants and Martyrs of God, leſt you be partakers of the vengeance of God, that is coming upon this wicked nation, from the which the Lord God defend you, and ſend us a joyfull meeting in the kingdome of heaven: unto the which God bring you all, Amen. Thus now I take my leave of you for ever in this world, except I be burned amongſt you, which thing is uncertain unto me, as yet.

My moſt dear brethren and ſiſters in our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, I have me moſt heartily commended unto you, with heartie thanks for all the great liberalitie that you have ſhewed unto me, and eſpecially now in this time of my neceſſitie, when that GOD hath ſent my poore wife a childe in my captivitie; which is no little care to me, ſo to provide, that I might keep both the child and my wife from the Antichriſtian Church: the which thing, I thank my good God, through his moſt gracious providence, I have yet done, though it be (as ye know) great charge, not to me, but to the congregation of God; and it grieveth me that I have been ſo chargeable to them as I have been, and ſpecially you my dear brethren, I being ſo unworthie a member as I have been, and alſo of ſo ſmall acquaintance; but ſuch is the mercifull goodneſſe of God, ſo to move your hearts with charitie towards me. And as he hath moved your hearts ſo to do, even ſo I beſeech God to give you power to forſake and refuſe all things which be diſpleaſant in his ſight, and to do all things which be requiſite to a Chriſtian; and ſend you grace to go forwards in the ſame as you have godly begun, neither fearing fire nor ſword. And my moſt dear hearts, remember well the ſimple plain doctrine the which I have taught you and alſo written unto you, which was the truth, and for a teſtimonie of the ſame, I truſt that you ſhall ſhortly hear, or elſe ſee that I will ſeal the ſame with my blood. And in the meane time I deſire you all to remember me in your prayers, as I know you do, and as with Gods help I will do for you, that God, for his dear Son Chriſts ſake, will ſo finiſh the dayes of our pilgrimage, that we may reſt together with Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, in the everlaſting kingdome of heaven; to the which I beſeech the eternall God for his Chriſts ſake to bring both you and all yours, Amen.

My moſt deare and entirely beloved ſiſters in the Lord, after my moſt heartie commendations, according to my moſt bounden dutie, I do as I am accuſtomed, or at leaſt bound to do, that is, I give you warning of your enemies, which be the Papiſts, and take good heed to them, for they ſerve a craftie Maſter; yea and as ſaint Peter ſaith, he ſleepeth not, but goeth about like a roaring Lion, ſeeking whom he may devoure. For your old familiar friends, or worldly companions, when they ſee that you will not run to the idols Temple with them, it will ſeem a ſtrange thing unto them, that ye run not to the ſame exceſſe of riot, as ſaint Peter ſaith, and therefore they will ſpeak evill of you, raile on you, and perſecute you.

1 Pet. 4.

But my deare ſiſters, let it not trouble you, for it is but to trie you, and let it not ſeeme a ſtrange thing unto you. But when they do ſo, remember wherefore it is, and for whoſe ſake, even becauſe you will not forſake God as they do. For the hatred they bear you, is for the word of God, and then it is Gods cauſe, and I tell you he will revenge it. And therefore if ye be railed on, and troubled for his ſake, think your ſelves moſt happie. For if you ſuffer with the Patriarches, Prophets, and Apoſtles, then ſhall ye be ſure to be partakers of the ſame joy that they are in. Yea, you have heard by the word of God, how cruelly the tyrants alwaies have perſecuted the true members of Chriſt, as he himſelf hath promiſed that they ſhall do unto the end of the world.

Rom. 12.

By the way I will bring to your remembrance the holy Martyr ſaint Stephen, who for favouring, maintaining, and defending the ſame doctrine that we now ſuffer for, was called a blaſphemer, and ſtoned to death at Jeruſalem. And Chriſts Apoſtles were diverſly afflicted the world over, for the ſame by this viperous generation. Antipas the faithfull witneſſe of Chriſt was ſlain at Pergamus. Jaſon for receiving of Paul and Silas with other diſciples and teachers of the Goſpel, was brought before the Councell at Theſſalonica, and accuſed for a ſeditious traitor againſt Ceſar. No marvell therefore though at this day we be vexed on the ſame ſort, maintaining the ſame cauſe, and favouring the teachers thereof. Is there any other reward following the true ſervants of God now, then hath been aforetimes? No ſurely, for ſo hath Chriſt promiſed. And if they have perſecuted him, needs muſt they perſecute his members, if they have called the Maſter of the houſe Beelzebub, ſo will they do his houſhold; You ſhall be hated of all men (ſaith Chriſt) for my names ſake.

Math. 19.

It is no new thing my deare hearts to ſee the true members of Chriſt handled as in our dayes they be, as it is not unknown to you how they be cruelly entreated, and blaſphemed without any reaſonable cauſe. For heretiques muſt they be taken, which follow not their traditions. And then they may as well call Chriſt an heretique, for he never allowed their dirty ceremonies. He never went a proceſſion with a Cope, Croſſe, or Candleſtick. He never ſenſed Image, nor ſang Latine ſervice. He never ſat in confeſſion. He never preached of Purgatorie, nor of the Popes pardons. He never honoured Saints, nor prayed for the dead. He never ſaid Maſſe, Mattins, nor Evenſong. He never commanded to faſt Friday nor Vigil, Lent nor Advent. He never hallowed Church nor chalice, aſhes nor palms, candles nor bels, Chriſt may as well be called an heretique as theſe men.

vels. He never made holy water nor holy bread, with ſuch like. But ſuch dumbe ceremonies, not having the expreſſe commandement of GOD, he calleth the leaven of the Phariſees, and damnable hypocriſie; admoniſhing his diſciples to beware of them. He curſeth all thoſe that adde to his word ſuch beggarly ſhadows, wiping their names clean out of the book of life. Saint Paul ſaith, they have no portion with Chriſt, which wrap themſelves again with ſuch yokes of bondage.

Matth. 16. Luke 12. Deut. 4. Apoc. 22. Pſal. 68. Gal. 4.

Therefore my deare hearts, ſeeing that our good God hath by the light of his holy word, delivered us from all ſuch dark, blinde, dumbe, beggarly traditions of men, ſtand faſt in the libertie wherewith Chriſt hath made you free, and wrap not your ſelves again in the yoke of bondage. But let us alwayes be readie, looking for the coming of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, which as Saint Peter ſaith, will come as a thiefe in the night. And as our Captain Chriſt ſaith, If the good man of the houſe knew what houre the thiefe would come, he would ſurely watch.

Galath. 5. 2 Pet. 3. Matth. 14.

Therefore my dear hearts, be of good comfort, although the world rage never ſo ſore againſt you. And for your comfort marke well the great mercie of God, who according to his promiſe for the weakneſſe of our nature hath ſo aſſwaged the heat of the fire, that our deare brethren which are gone before us, to the ſight of all men, have found it rather to be joy then pain. And think you ſurely God will be as mercifull unto you, as he hath been unto them; and ſay with ſaint Paul, Rom. 8. Who ſhall ſeparate us from the love of God? ſhall tribulation, or anguiſh, or perſecution, either hunger, either nakedneſſe, either perill, either ſword? as it is written, for thy ſake are we killed all the day long, &c.

Rom. 8.

Therefore (my deare ſiſters) if to ſave your lives, any diſſembling Goſpellers would have you to go to the idols temple with them, ſay unto them; No, for my Maſter Chriſt ſaith, Matth. 10. He that would ſave his life, ſhall loſe it. And in another place to comfort us he ſaith, There ſhall not one hair fall from your head, without it be your heavenly Fathers will. And therefore ſay you that you will not be of that ſort, that be neither hot nor cold, leſt God ſhould ſpue you out of his mouth. But make them this anſwer, ſaying; Saint Paul ſaith, 2 Corinth. 6. Bear no ſtrange yoke with the unbeleevers. For what fellowſhip hath righteouſneſſe with unrighteouſneſſe, what company hath light with darkneſſe, what concord hath Chriſt with Belial, either what part hath he that beleeveth, with an infidel? How agreeth the Temple of God with images? And ye are the temple of God, as God ſaith, I will dwell among them, walk among them, and will be their God, and they ſhall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and ſeparate your ſelves (ſaith the Lord) and touch no uncleane thing: ſo will I receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye ſhall be my ſons and daughters, ſaith the Lord.

Math. 10. 2 Cor. 6.

Thus mine own bowels in the Lord, as I began, ſo make I an end, bidding you beware of your enemies, and take up your croſſe, and follow your Captain Chriſt in at the narrow gate here by perſecution, and then you ſhall be ſure to reign and rejoyce with him in his everlaſting kingdome, which he himſelf hath purchaſed with his own moſt precious blood: to whom with the Father and the holy Ghoſt, be all honour both now and for ever, Amen.

By me William Tyms.

Another letter of William Tyms, with an exhortation to all Gods faithfull ſervants, to eſchew the ſociety of Idolaters, and Gods enemies.

Another letter of Wil. Tyms to Gods faithful ſervants.

Grace be with you, and peace from God the Father, and from the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

I thank my God with all remembrance of you alwayes in my prayers for you, and pray with gladneſſe, becauſe of the fellowſhip which ye have in the Goſpel, from the firſt day that I knew you, untill this day; and I am ſurely certified of this, that he which hath begun a good work in you, ſhall go forth with it, untill the day of Jeſus Chriſt, as it becometh me to judge of you; whom I have in my heart, and as companions of grace with me, even in my bonds. And thus I pray, that your love may increaſe more and more in knowledge. Good brethren, I moſt heartily deſire God, that as you have a willing minde to comfort my vile earthly bodie in this time of perſecution, ſo he will ſtrengthen you with his holy ſpirit, that my impriſonment do not diſcomfort, but rather ſtrengthen and comfort you, to ſee the goodneſſe of God ſhewed unto me, in that being a man without learning, and brought before three ſuch Biſhops concerning worldly wiſdome, he gave me both mouth and wiſedome; inſomuch that the Biſhop of London went away in a great haſte from me, and after that he ſent his man with a Bible, turning to the ninth chapter to the Hebrews, and the Biſhop of Bathe looking on it, ſaid; What meaneth my Lord? this maketh nothing for his purpoſe. Then I looked on it, and ſaid; my Lord ſeeth that I was weak, and therefore he hath holpen me; for here he hath condemned the ſacrifice of your Maſſe: for you ſay that you offer a daily ſacrifice in your Maſſe, both for the quick and the dead; and here ſaint Paul ſaith, Without blood-ſhedding there is no forgiveneſſe of ſins; therefore that is here condemned. He anſwered, Yea, ſaith he ſo? So ſay all ſuch heretiques; and ſo forth, with many like arguments, which my neighbors that heard them, can declare, therefore I leave them. This have I written, that you ſhould not be afraid, but call upon God, as he hath commanded us to aſk, and we ſhall have; Seek and you ſhall finde, knock and it ſhall be opened unto you. Alſo he hath commanded us to call on him in the day of trouble, and he hath promiſed to hear us. Therefore if we have not both mouth and wiſedome at his hand, the fault is in us, that either we will not repent us of our wickedneſſe, and amend our lives, or elſe we be unfaithfull, and beleeve not the promiſes of God; and ſo we our ſelves are the cauſe that this wiſedome is lacking in us. Therefore let us repent and amend our lives, and God is mercifull. And in any caſe, as I have alwayes ſaid unto you, ſince I firſt knew you, ſo ſay I now: Beware of Idolatrie, and of your good intents; if not, marke what hath followed upon them that have left Gods commandements, and done their owne good intents. Remember when the children of Iſrael had made them a golden Calfe, did not God ſay they had mard all, and would have deſtroyed them, had not Moſes earneſtly prayed for them? I let many other places alone that prove the wrath of God to come upon the people for Idolatrie; therefore as we will avoid the wrath of God, let us keep us unſtained from it. You have examples out of the Old Teſtament, how loth the godly Fathers were to be partakers with the wicked: And yet to ſee how little we regarded it, it would make any Chriſtian mans heart to weep. God ſend us more grace. Firſt look in the 11. and 12. of Geneſis; Abraham,

B. Boner went away from W. Tyms, belike not able to make his part good.

Heb. 9. God giveth mouth and utterance to his ſaints.

Warning to come away from the wicked.

ham, becauſe he would not be partaker of their Idolatry, fled from the people of Caldea, being his native countrey. And in the 19. of Geneſ. Lot at the commandement of the Angels departed from Sodome, leſt he tarrying with the Sodomites ſhould have been conſumed with them. In the 21. of Geneſis, Sarah would not ſuffer Iſmael, which was given to mocking, to keep companie with her ſon Iſaac, leſt he ſhould alſo become a mocker. Look in the 16. of Numbers, Moſes at Gods appointment commanded the people to depart from the dwelling places of Chore, Dathan, and Abiram, leſt they alſo ſhould be all wrapped in their ſins, and ſo periſh among them. So do I, even as Moſes commanded them that they ſhould not keep companie with thoſe wicked people, leſt the vengeance of God ſhould light on them, ſo do I (I ſay) give you warning that you ſhould not keep companie with the Idolaters, in their idolatrous temples, leſt the wrath of God come upon you to deſtroy you.

2 Cor.6.

Look what ſaint Paul ſaith in the ſecond Epiſtle, and the ſixth chapter to the Corinthians; Set your ſelves (ſaith he) therefore at large, and beare no ſtrange yoke with the unbeleevers: for what fellowſhip hath righteouſneſſe with unrighteouſneſſe? what companie hath light with darkneſſe? what concord hath Chriſt with Belial? either what part hath he that beleeveth, with an Infidell? How agreeth the Temple of God with Images? And ye are the Temple of God, as ſaith GOD; I will dwell among them, and walk among them, and will be their God, and they ſhall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and ſeparate your ſelves (ſaith the Lord) and touch no unclean thing.

Syrach 13.

Good brethren mark what cometh of keeping companie with the wicked. Syrach ſaith, He that toucheth pitch, ſhall be defiled withall: and he that keepeth companie with the proud, ſhall clothe himſelf with pride. Even ſo he that is familiar with idolaters, cannot be unſtained from idolatrie, except he do it to winne them to Chriſt, as there be but a few that do: Yea, it may not be where Idolatrie is openly committed, as for an enſample; Peter, ſo long as he continued with Chriſt and Chriſts diſciples, he continued in the truth, preached the truth, confeſſed openly Chriſt to be the Sonne of the living God, and promiſed that he would not onely go to priſon, but alſo to verie death with him: but when he came once into the Court into the Biſhops houſe, he ſtraight-way was ſtricken with ſuch feare, that a poore maiden and ſimple ruffian (ſuch a one as my Lord of London hath, that ſaid, By Gods blood, if I meete with any of theſe vile heretiques, I will thruſt an arrow in him) when Peter (I ſay) was amongſt them, he denied his Maſter, and ſwore that he never knew him, whom he, before he came there, boldly confeſſed before all men: and again, after that he had repented him of his wicked deed, he boldly preached to the beleeving Iews, commanding them among other his godly exhortations, to ſave themſelves from that untoward generation. How many of our Prieſts before this ſtorme of perſecution, when the Goſpel was truly preached, were bold, and could ſay, they would die rather then denie their Maſter? But when they some once into the Biſhops houſes, they preach no more Chriſt, but utterly denie him: therefore I pray GOD keep them from thence, or elſe ſend them more grace and ſtrength. It is needfull to pray; therefore watch in prayer.

What it is to be aſſociate in ill company.

A vile ſervant of B. Boners.

Acts 1.

Paul, all the while he was among the Biſhops, was a cruell perſecutor, but after he was called of God from the Biſhops, he became a true Preacher: therefore God keep all Chriſtian men out of the hands of our Biſhops. S. Paul in the fifteenth to the Romanes ſaith; I dare not ſpeak any of thoſe things that Chriſt hath not wrought by me. He ſaith alſo, Rom. 16. I beſeech you brethren, mark them that make diviſion, and give occaſion of evil, contrary to the doctrine that ye have learned, and them avoid: for they that are ſuch ſerve not the Lord Ieſus Chriſt, but their own bellies, and with ſweet and flattering words deceive the hearts of the ſimple. Our Maſter Chriſt himſelf hath given us warning which they be: for he hath ſet the plain mark on them, in the 24. of Matthew, If they ſay here is Chriſt, or there is Chriſt, beleeve them not, ſaith Chriſt. If they ſay, he is in the deſert, go not forth. If they ſay, he is in the ſecret place, beleeve them not. And I pray you, where can he be more ſecret, then in ſo ſmall a piece of bread? For my Lord of London like a liar, ſaid to me, that after the words be ſpoken, there remaineth neither bread nor wine. Then I aſked him what he ſaid to David, where he ſaith; Thou ſhalt not ſuffer thy holy one to ſee corruption? How ſay you to that? Will not the Sacrament of the Altar putrifie or corrupt? He anſwered, Yes. I aſked him, what it was that did corrupt, if there were neither bread nor wine. He anſwered, and ſaid the accidents. I ſaid unto him, it was a mad accident without ſubſtance: for you ſay, there is neither bread nor wine, and then there is nothing to (a) corrupt: with many ſuch like arguments.

B. Boner not able to anſwer to this place of David.

(a) How can corruption be referred to accidents, when by all Philoſophy generation and corruption belong onely to the predicament of ſubſtance?

Therefore beware of them, for they go about to deceive you with ſuch arguments. Say not but ye be warned, and a great deale the more worthie of your damnation, if they deceive you, becauſe you have had ſo much warning. Repent you betimes of your ſinfull lives, and amend, and then no doubt but God will either turne their hearts, or elſe take them away, or elſe he will give us that, that he promiſed to his Diſciples, if we be contented to take the ſame reward they had. And if we diſdaine the one, let us not look for the other. For he that will be his fathers heire, muſt be contented to receive his fathers correction. For ſaint Paul ſaith in the twelfth to the Hebrews, If we be not under correction, whereof all are partakers, then are we baſtards and not ſons.

And you know what belongeth to a baſtard; he ſhall not be his fathers heire. And if we remember our ſelves well, how negligent, we have been to keep our Fathers commandement, we ſhall finde our ſelves worthie to be corrected at his hand. If we refuſe his correction, he will refuſe us to be his ſons. I pray you look what he promiſed to his Diſciples, and I pray you alſo look how willingly they received it. And ſo muſt we do, if we will be partakers with them. Firſt let us ſee what Chriſt promiſed to his diſciples. Look in the tenth of ſaint Matthew, and there ſhall you ſee theſe words, Behold, I ſend you forth as ſheep among Wolves. Be wiſe therefore as Serpents, and innocent as Doves. Beware of men, for they ſhall deliver you up to the Councels, and ſhall ſcourge you in their Synagogues: ye ſhall be brought before the head rulers and Kings for my Names ſake. But when they put you up, take ye no thought, how or what ye ſhall ſpeake: for it ſhall be given you in the ſame houre what ye ſhall ſpeake. For it is not you that ſpeake, but the ſpirit of my Father which ſpeaketh in you, &c. Read the whole Chapter, for it is very comfortable to a Chriſtian man; and mark it well, and you ſhall finde what we ought to do in the time of perſecution. Alſo look in the ſecond Epiſtle of ſaint Paul to the Corinthians, and the fourth Chapter, he ſaith, For we which live are alwayes delivered unto death for Ieſus ſake, that the life alſo of Ieſus might appeare in our mortall fleſh. Thus have you heard that St. Paul doth boaſt of perſecution; even ſo ſhould we, for it is the way to bring us to reſt.

Therefore let us ſtrive to enter in at the narrow gate, and let us remember the ſaying of ſaint Paul in the 21. Chapter of the Acts of the Apoſtles, when he was going to Ieruſalem. When he was in the houſe of Philip the Evangeliſt, there came in a Prophet, and took off his girdle, and bound his hands and his feet, ſaying; thus ſhall they do with the man that oweth this girdle when he cometh to Ieruſalem. When the Diſciples heard that, they would have perſwaded him he ſhould not go thither. Here you ſhall ſee what anſwer this Paſtor made them; he was a faithfull Shepherd, What do ye weeping and breaking of my heart? I am not readie to be bound onely, but alſo to die at Ieruſalem, for the name of the Lord Ieſus.

Yet I think there be ſome that will ſay, that I needed not to have been taken, if I would have kept me out of the way. But I ſay unto them, that the ſhrinking away of ſo many of our ſhepherds as be gone, maketh ſo many of the flock to ſcatter; which will be required at their hands, of the Maſter of the ſheep. What will he ſay to them at the day of account when they ſhall come to receive their wages? He ſhall ſay to them, Depart from me ye wicked hirelings, for when ye ſaw the wolfe come, ye ran away, and left my ſheep in the wilderneſſe. If you had been good ſhepherds, you would rather have loſt your lives then have loſt one ſheep committed to your charge, through your fault. And I pray you, what caſe be the ſheep in, when their ſhepherd runneth away from them? I need not to tell you, you know the danger that followeth ſo well.

A note for them which ſhrink away having cure.

Therefore let us pray to God to ſend us faithfull ſhepherds and alſo obedient ſheep, that will not hear a ſtrangers voice. I would all men would mark well the ſaying of ſaint Paul in the eight to the Romanes, where he ſaith in theſe words, Who ſhall ſeparate us from the love of God? ſhall tribulation, or anguiſh, or perſecution, either nakedneſſe, either perill, either ſword? As it is written, For thy ſake are we killed all the day long, and are counted as ſheep appointed to be ſlain: neverthaleſſe we overcome ſtrongly through his help that loved us. Yea, I am ſure that neither death, neither life, neither Angels, neither rule, neither power, neither things preſent, neither things to come, neither height, neither depth, neither any other creature ſhall be able to ſeparate us from the love of God; and ſo forth. Alſo he ſaith in another place, All that will live godly in Chriſt Ieſus, muſt ſuffer perſecution, 2 Tim. 3. Thus I prove it to be our heavenly Fathers rod: therefore let us thankfully receive it like obedient children, and then our Father will love us.

Yet heare what Saint Peter ſaith in his firſt Epiſtle, and the fourth Chapter, Dearly beloved (ſaith he) be not troubled in this heat which is now come among you to try you, as though ſome ſtrange thing had happened unto you: but rejoyce inaſmuch as ye are partakers of Chriſts paſſions, that when his glorie appeareth you may be merrie and glad. If ye be railed on for the name of Chriſt, happie are ye, for the ſpirit of glorie, and the ſpirit of God reſteth upon you. On their part he is evill ſpoken of, but on your part he is glorified. Here ſaint Peter ſaith, it is no ſtrange thing; and that I have partly proved before, becauſe we have nothing elſe promiſed us in this world.

Therefore let us call on God for grace. Be ye ſure that they can do nothing to us, till GOD permit it. As for enſample, Look in the firſt book of Kings, the nineteenth Chapter, you ſhall ſee how Saul perſecuted David, purpoſing to kill him: but his labour was in vain.

Alſo in the third book of Kings, the 19. chapter, Ieſabel threatned and ſware to ſlay Elias, but the Lord preſerved him. Alſo in the ſecond chapter of Iob, you ſee that Satan could do nothing to Iob, till God ſuffered him, neither exerciſe his cruelneſſe any further then GOD had appointed him. The godly woman Suſanna, in the thirteenth of Daniel, through the falſe accuſation of the wicked judges, was even at a point to die, yet God wonderfully delivered her. Theſe have I written to put you in remembrance, that man can do no more then is the will of God: therefore let us not reſiſt his will, but refer all to him: and let us be doing that thing that God hath commanded us in his holy word.

Dear brethren, for the blood of Chriſt refuſe not the croſſe of Chriſt, but remember the ſaying of the godly man David in his 119. Pſalm, where he ſaith, It is good for me that I have been in trouble, that I may learne thy ſtatutes. In the ſame place he ſaith, Before I was in trouble, I went wrong, but now I have kept thy word. Even ſo it is in trouble with us, for the word of God was never ſo ſweet and comfortable, as it is now that we be in trouble. Alſo ſaint Paul ſaith in the fifth chapter to the Romanes, We rejoyce in tribulation: For we know that tribulation bringeth patience, patience bringeth experience, experience bringeth hope, and hope maketh not aſhamed.

Exhortation not to refuſe Chriſts croſſe.

Gods word never ſo ſweet as in trouble.

Alſo I pray you remember the ſaying of ſaint Paul in the ſecond to Timothy and the firſt chapter, where he ſaith, Be not aſhamed to teſtifie the Lord: neither be aſhamed of me. Even ſo I ſay unto you, dear brethren, Be not aſhamed of my impriſonment, neither ſorie, but rejoyce with me, that it hath pleaſed God of his goodneſſe to call me to ſuch a dignitie as this ſhall be unto me, if I may have his grace to loſe my life (which I regard as moſt vile) for his names ſake: for then I ſhall be ſure to finde it again with advantage. Therefore I deſire you all that you will pray with me unto Almightie God, that he of his mercifull goodneſſe will ſend me his grace and ſtrength, that I may continue unto the end; as I will pray for you, that God will preſerve you from all the wicked wayes of Antichriſt, and ſtrengthen and comfort you, if it be his good pleaſure that you ſhall ſuffer any thing for his names ſake: as he hath faithfully promiſed to do. And I certifie you, that if all men knew the comfort they ſhould receive at the hand of God, being in priſon, I think there would come more to priſon then there do. For ſurely we finde ſuch comfort at the hand of God ſince we have been in priſon, that we had rather die then be abroad to ſee the idolatrie that is committed among them that be abroad; beſide the ſeeking one of anothers blood, with other wickedneſſe too much, God ſend me more grace. But I truſt, among you there be none ſuch: and if there be, repent and amend, leſt it be verified on you, that is ſpoken by the Prophet Ieremie, the ſecond Chapter, where he ſaith, My people hath committed two great evils. They have forſaken me the fountain of the living waters, and digged them pits: pits (I ſay) that are broken, and can hold no water. Alſo in the ſeventh Chapter, he ſaith, Take heed: ye truſt in councels that beguile you, and do you no good. In the 23. Chapter he ſaith. Hear not the words of the Prophets that preach their owne dreames. Good brethren beware of thoſe falſe prophets that I have given you warning of.

Experiment of Gods comfort in the priſonment of his ſervants.

Dearly beloved, here I make an end for this time, deſiring the ſame health both of bodie and ſoule unto you all, that I would have my ſelfe, and I end with the ſame that ſaint Peter ſaith in his firſt Epiſtle and the fifth Chapter, Submit your ſelves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you when the time is come. Caſt all your care on him, for he careth for you. Be ſober and watch, for your adverſary the devil like a roaring lion walketh about, ſeeking whom he may devoure, whom reſiſt ſtedfaſt in faith: remembring that ye do but fulfill the ſame afflictions, that are appointed to your brethren that are in the world. The God of all grace that called you unto his eternall glorie, by Chriſt Jeſus, ſhall his own ſelf, after you have ſuffered a little affliction, make you perfect, ſhall ſettle, ſtrengthen and ſtabliſh you. To him be glorie and dominion for ever, and while the world endureth, Amen.

Greet one another with an holy kiſſe of love. Peace be with you all which are in Chriſt Jeſus. I pray you all ſay, Amen.

Theſe be in the ſame priſon where I am; the Biſhop of St. Davids, Doctor Taylor of Hadley, maſter Philpot, and my ſingular good father maſter Bradford, with five other of Suſſex, Laymen.

I deſire ſome good brother, to write this new, for I wrote it (as I do many times) with fear. For if the Keepers had found me, they would have taken it from me, and my pen and inke alſo.

Good brethren, I am kept alone, and yet I thank God he comforteth me paſt all the comfort of any man: for I thank him, I was never merrier in Chriſt.

By me William Tyms, priſoner in the Kings Bench.

About this time or ſomewhat before, came down certain Commiſſioners aſſigned by the Queen and Councell, to Northfolk and Suffolke (as to other countreys elſe beſides) to enquire of matters of religion: unto the which Commiſſioners there was a ſupplication then exhibited by ſome good and well diſpoſed men (as by the ſame may appear) dwelling about thoſe parts. Which ſupplication as I thought it not unworthy to be read, bearing the date of this preſent yeer, to be printed; ſo I thought it was not to be omitted, nor unworthy here to be placed, in conſideration of the fruit which thereof might enſue to the Reader.

¶ A certain godly Supplication exhibited by certain Inhabitants of the County of Northfolke, to the Commiſſioners come down to Northfolke and Suffolke, fruitfull to be read and marked of all men.

A ſupplication exhibited to the Commiſſioners in Northfolke.

In moſt humble and lowly wiſe, we beſeech your honors, right honourable Commiſſioners, to tender and pitie the humble ſuit of us poore men, and true faithfu'l, and obedient ſubjects, who as we have ever heretofore, ſo intend we with Gods grace, to continue in Chriſtian obedience unto the end, and (according to the word of God) with all reverend fear of God, to do our bounden duty to all thoſe ſuperiour powers, whom God hath appointed over us, doing as St. Paul ſaith, Rom. 13. Let every ſoul be ſubject to the ſuperiour powers. For there is no power but of God: but thoſe powers that are, are ordained of God. Wherefore whoſoever reſiſteth the powers, the ſame reſiſteth God, and they that reſiſt, get themſelves judgement. Theſe leſſons (right honourable Commiſſioners) we have learned of the holy word of God, in our mother tongue.

The authoritie of Kings and Queens approved.

Firſt, that the authoritie of a King, Queen, Lord, and other their officers under them, is no tyrannicall uſurpation, but a juſt, holy, lawfull, and neceſſarie eſtate for man to be governed by, and that the ſame is of God, the fountain and author of righteouſneſſe.

Secondly, that to obey the ſame in all things not againſt God, is to obey God; and to reſiſt them, is to reſiſt God. Therefore as to obey God in his Miniſters and Magiſtrates bringeth life: ſo to reſiſt God in them, bringeth puniſhment and death. The ſame leſſon have we learned of ſaint Peter, 1. Pet. 5. ſaying, Be ye ſubject to all humane ordinances for the Lords ſake, whether it be to the King, as to the moſt higheſt, or to the Lieutenants ſent from him, to the puniſhment of evil doers, but to the praiſe of ſuch as do well. For ſo is the will of God, that with well doing, ye ſhould ſtop the mouthes of fooliſh and ignorant men; as free, and not as having the liberty to be a cloak to malice, but as the ſervants of God.

Chriſtian men bound to obey God in his Magiſtrates.

Wherefore conſidering with our ſelves, both that the Magiſtrates power is of God, and that for the Lords ſake we be bound to Chriſtian obedience unto them, having now preſently a commandement, as though it were from the Queens Majeſtie; with all humble obedience due to the regall power and authoritie ordained of GOD (which we acknowledge to ſtand wholly and perfectly in her Grace) and with due reverence unto you her Graces Commiſſioners, we humbly beſeech you with patience and pitie to receive this our anſwer unto this commandement, given unto us.

The honour of God to be preferred before all regall honour and power.

Firſt, right honourable Commiſſioners, we have conſidered our ſelves to be not onely Engliſh men, but alſo Chriſtians, and therefore bound by the holy vow made to GOD in our baptiſme, to preferre Gods honour in all things, and that all obedience (not onely of us mortall men, but even of the verie Angels and heavenly ſpirits) is due unto Gods word; in ſo much that no obedience can be true and perfect, either before GOD or man, that wholly and fully agreeth not with Gods word.

Q. Maries Injunctions diſagreeing from Gods word, how and wherein.

Then have we weighed the commandement concerning the reſtitution of the late aboliſhed Latine ſervice, given unto us to diſſent and diſagree from Gods word, and to command manifeſt impietie, and the overthrow of godlineſſe and true religion, and to import a ſubverſion of the regall power of this our native Countrey and Realm of England, with the bringing in of the Romiſh Biſhops ſupremacie, with all errors, ſuperſtitions, and idolatrie, waſting of our goods and bodies, deſtroying of our ſouls, bringing with it nothing, but the ſevere wrath of GOD, which we alreadie feele, and feare leſt the ſame ſhall be more fiercely kindled upon us. Wherefore we humbly proteſt, that we cannot be perſwaded, that the ſame wicked commandement ſhould come from the Queens Majeſtie, but rather from ſome other, abuſing the Queens goodneſſe and favour, and ſtudying to work ſome feat againſt the Queene, her Crowne, and the Realm, to pleaſe with it the Romane Biſhop, at whoſe hands the ſame thinketh hereafter to be advanced.

Heſt. 3.

1 Eſd. 4.

As the Agagite Aman wrought maliciouſly againſt the Noble King Aſſuerus, and as the Princes of Babel wrought againſt the good King Darius: ſo thinke we the Queenes moſt gentle heart to be abuſed of ſome, who ſeeking themſelves and their owne vaine glorie, procure ſuch commandements as are againſt the glorie of God. For we cannot have ſo evill an opinion in her Majeſtie, that ſhe ſhould ſubvert the moſt godly and holy Religion (ſo accordingly to Gods word ſet forth by the moſt noble, vertuous, and innocent King, a verie Saint of God, our late moſt deare King Edward, her Graces Brother) except ſhe were wonderfully abuſed; who, as Religion ſet forth in K. Edwards time commended.

hating reformation, will rather the deſtruction of all others, then acknowledge their errors, and to be according to Gods word, reformed. For truely the religion lately ſet forth by King Edward, is ſuch in our conſciences as every Chriſtian man is bound to confeſſe to be the truth of God, and every member of Chriſts Church here in England muſt needs imbrace the ſame in heart, and confeſſe it with mouth, and (if need require) loſe and forſake, not onely houſe, land and poſſeſſions, riches, wife, children, and friends; but alſo (if God will ſo call them) gladly to ſuffer all manner of perſecution, and to loſe their lives in the defence of Gods word and truth ſet out amongſt us. For our Saviour Chriſt requireth the ſame of us, ſaying, Whoſoever ſhall be aſhamed of me and my word before this adulterous and ſinfull generation, the Son of man will alſo be aſhamed of him, when he ſhall come in the glory of his Father with the holy Angels. And againe ſaith he, Whoſoever will confeſſe me before men, I will confeſſe him before my Father that is in heaven. And whoſoever will deny me before men, I will alſo deny him before my Father that is in heaven. And whoſoever ſhall ſpeake a word againſt the Sonne of man, it ſhall be forgiven him, but whoſoever ſhall raile againſt the holy Ghoſt, it ſhall not be forgiven him.

Math. 11.

An honeſt petition to Q. Mary.

We humbly beſeech the Queenes Maieſtie, and you her honorable Commiſſioners, be not offended with us, for confeſſing this truth of God, ſo ſtraitly given us in charge of Chriſt; neither bring upon us that great ſin that never ſhal be forgiven, and ſhall cauſe our Saviour Ieſus Chriſt in the great day of judgement, before his heavenly Father and all his Angels, to deny us, and to take from us the bleſſed price and ranſome of his bloudſhed, wherewith we are redeemed.

For in that day, neither the Queenes highneſſe, neither you, nor any man ſhall be able to excuſe us, nor to purchaſe a pardon of Chriſt for this horrible ſinne and blaſphemie of caſting aſide, and condemning his word. We cannot agree nor conſent unto this ſo horrible a ſinne; but we beſeech God for his mercy to give us and all men grace moſt earneſtly to flee from it, and rather (if the will of God be ſo) to ſuffer all extremitie and puniſhment in this world, then to incurre ſuch damnation before God.

Example of K. Manaſſes.

4 Reg. 23.

Manaſſes, who reſtored againe the wickedneſſe of Idolatrous religion (before put downe by Ezechias his father) brought the wrath of God upon the people: ſo that the Scripture ſaith, Notwithſtanding the reformation made by Ioſias, the Lord turned not from the fierceneſſe of his great wrath wherewith he was angry againſt Iuda, becauſe of the provocation with the which Manaſſes provoked him. And the Lord ſaid; even Iuda will I take away from my preſence, as I caſt away Iſrael: and I will caſt away this Citie of Ieruſalem, and the houſe whereof I ſaid, My name ſhall be there. Ieroboam, who at Bethel and Dan erected up a new found ſervice of God, and not onely ſinned himſelfe, but alſo made all Iſrael to ſinne with him, ſo that not onely he was damned for commanding, but the wrath of God came upon all Iſrael, for obeying that his ungodly commandement: Yet was it not ſo heinous an offence to bring in an Idolatry never yet heard of, as after reformation made by the godly Kings and Princes, by the vertuous and holy Biſhops, by the Prophets and ſervants of God, to reject and caſt off the Word and true religion of God, and to receive againe a damned impietie.

Example of Ieroboam.

This moſt heinous offence is now offered unto us, although the ſame be painted and coloured with the name of reformation, reſtoring of religion, ancient faith, with the name of the Catholike Church, of unitie, Catholike truth, and with the cloake of fained holineſſe. Theſe are ſheepeskinnes, under the which (as Chriſt ſaith) ravening Wolves cover themſelves. But Chriſt willeth us to looke upon their fruits, whereby we may know them; and truely that is no good fruit, to caſt aſide Gods word, and to baniſh the Engliſh ſervice out of the Churches, and in the place of it to bring in a Latine tongue unknowne unto the people. Which as it edifieth no man, ſo it hath bin occaſion of all blindneſſe and errour among the people. For afore the bleſſed reformation begun by the moſt noble Prince of godly memorie the Queenes good father; and by our late holy and innocent King, her good brother, finiſhed; it is not unknowne what blindneſſe and error we were all in, when not one man in all this Realme unlearned in the Latine, could ſay in Engliſh the Lords Prayer, or knew any one article of his beliefe, or rehearſe any one of the ten Commandements. And that ignorance, mother of miſchife, was the very roote and well-ſpring of all Idolatrie, Sodomiticall Monkerie, and whoriſh chaſtitie of unmarried Prieſts, of all whoredome, drunkenneſſe, covetouſneſſe, ſwearing and blaſphemie, with all other wicked ſinfull living. Theſe brought in the ſevere wrath and vengeance of God plaguing ſin with famine & peſtilence; and at laſt the ſword conſumed & avenged all their impiety and wicked living. As it is greatly to be feared the ſame or more grievous plagues ſhall now againe follow.

Foule idolatry ſet out with faire ſhews and pretenſes.

Ignorance wilfully maintained.

Service in Latine not to be admitted.

Iohn 10.

We cannot therefore conſent nor agree that the word of God and prayers in our Engliſh tongue, which we underſtand, ſhould be taken away from us, and for it a Latine ſervice, we wot not what (for none of us underſtand it) to be againe brought in amongſt us, ſpecially ſeeing that Chriſt hath ſaid, My ſheepe heare my voyce, and follow me, and I give to them everlaſting life. The ſervice in Engliſh teacheth us, that we are the Lords people and the ſheepe of his paſture, and commandeth that we harden not our hearts, as when they provoked the Lords wrath in the wilderneſſe, leſt he ſweare unto us, as he did ſweare unto them, that they ſhould not enter into his reſt.

Againſt Latine Mattins.

The ſervice in Latine is a confuſed noiſe, which if it be good, (as they ſay it is) yet unto us that lack underſtanding, what goodneſſe can it bring? Saint Paul commandeth, that in the Churches all things ſhould be done to edifying, which we are ſure is Gods commandement. But in the Latine ſervice nothing is done to edifying, but contrarily all to deſtroy thoſe that are already edified, and to drive us from Gods word and truth, and from beleeving of the ſame, and ſo to bring us to beleeve lyes and fables, that tempting and provoking God, we ſhould be brought into that judgement that bleſſed Paul ſpeaketh of, ſaying, Antichriſt ſhall come according to the working of Sathan, with all manner of power and ſignes, and lying wonders in all deceiveableneſſe of unrighteouſnes in thoſe that periſh: becauſe they have not received the love of the truth, that they might be ſaved. And therefore God will ſend them ſtrong deluſion, that they ſhould beleeve lyes and be damned, as many as have not beleeved the truth, but have approved unrighteouſneſſe.

In the Popes ſervice there is no edifying, what fables be in it the Lord knoweth.

2 Theſ. 2.

Thus, altogether drawn from God, we ſhal fall into his wrath through unbeliefe, till he ſweare unto us as he did unto the unfaithfull Iewes, that ſuch infidels ſhall not enter into his reſt.

The true uſe of the Lords ſupper extinct.

In the adminiſtration of the Lords Supper, which we confeſſe to be the holy Communion, and partaking with Chriſt and his holy Congregation, we have learned Gods holy commandements, and at the rehearſall of every one of them to aske God mercy for our moſt grievous tranſgreſſions againſt them, and to aske grace of God, to keepe them in time to come, that the ſame may not onely outwardly ſound in our eares, but alſo inwardly by the holy Ghoſt be written in our hearts.

We have learned alſo the holy prayer made for the Queenes Maieſtie; wherein we learne that her power and authoritie is of God, therefore we pray to God for her, that ſhe and all Magiſtrates under her, may rule according to Gods word, and we her ſubiects obey according to the ſame.

Cauſes why the Commiſſioners commandement ought not to be received.

Truely (moſt honorable Commiſſioners) we cannot thinke theſe things evill, but thinke them moſt worthy to be retained in our Churches, and we would thinke our ſelves not to have true ſubiects hearts, if we ſhould goe about to put away ſuch godly prayers, as put us perpetually in memorie of our bounden obedience and dutie to God and our Rulers. For, as we think, at this preſent the unquiet multitude had more need to have theſe things more often and earneſtly beaten and driven into them (ſpecially given in many places to ſtir and trouble) then to take from them that bleſſed doctrine, whereby only they may to their ſalvation be kept in quiet.

Receiving in both kindes.

Furthermore, we cannot forſake that bleſſed partaking of the body and bloud of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſts inſtitution, miniſtred with ſuch godly prayers, exhortations, & admonitions, teaching us the knowledge of God, the exceeding love and charity of our loving Redeemer Chriſt, breaking his body upon the croſſe for our ſins, and ſhedding his moſt precious bloud for our redemption: which we in eating of that bleſſed bread, & drinking of the bleſſed cup, aſſuredly beleeve that we receive, and be perfectly joyned with Chriſt and his holy Catholike Church into one body, and into one unitie and brotherly love, whereby each member faithfully embraceth other. We muſt needs confeſſe this inſtitution of Chriſt to be moſt holy and godly, whereof we have the onely comfort in conſcience againſt ſinne and damnation, with the aſſurance of ſalvation, and whereof hath enſued reformation of many heinous ſinnes, much lawing, ſtrife, and contention is ended; drunkenneſſe, whoredome, and other vices, in ſome reformed, goodneſſe and vertue increaſed and nouriſhed.

The Maſſe hath nothing in it but an heape of Ceremonies.

In the Latine Maſſe we never had no ſuch edifying, but onely we ſaw a great many of ceremonies and ſtrange geſtures; as turning of the Prieſt, croſſings, bleſſings, breathings, waſhing of hands, and ſpreading abroad of his armes, with like ceremonies that we underſtand not. And concerning the Latine tongue, wherein the Prieſt prayeth, we wot not whether he bleſſeth or curſeth us. We are not partakers of the Sacrament, as Chriſts inſtitution appointeth we ſhould be.

In the miniſtring of the ſacrament, the Prieſts altar the inſtitution of Chriſt, committing theft and ſacriledge, robbing us of the cup of Chriſts bloud, contrary to Chriſts commandement, ſaying, Drinke ye all of this.

The people robbed of Gods Word.

Phil. 2.

They rob us alſo of Gods word, ſpeaking all things in Latine, which nothing edifieth us either in faith or manners. Chriſt commanded not that his ſupper ſhould be miniſtred in an unknowne tongue: but foraſmuch as faith cometh by hearing, and hearing cometh of Gods Word, how can we beleeve Chriſts word and promiſe made unto us in this holy Sacrament, ſaying, This is my body broken for you, and this is my bloud of the New Teſtament, which is ſhed for you, for the remiſſion of ſinnes, if the ſame promiſes of Chriſt either be not at all recited, or elſe ſo recited in Latine, that the Congregation underſtandeth not nor heareth not what is ſpoken? Saint Paul ſaith thus, reciting the ſaying of Eſay, As truely as I live, ſaith the Lord, all knees ſhall bow unto me, all tongues ſhall give praiſe unto God. Alſo he ſaith, All tongues muſt confeſſe, that Ieſus Chriſt is the Lord, unto the glory of God the Father. The holy Ghoſt came upon the Apoſtles in fiery tongues, ſo that they ſpake the tongues of all nations under heaven. Saint Paul miniſtred to the Corinthians, and preached to them in their owne mother tongue, and rebuked the bringing in of ſtrange tongues into the Congregations. We cannot thinke it to be well, that ſo holy an Apoſtle rebuked. And whatſoever vertue the Latine tongue hath to ſuch as underſtand it, to us Engliſhmen not underſtanding it, it is altogether without vertue and edifying, and therefore unmeet for our Churches.

All things done in the Church ought to be in a known tongue.

That Prieſts be not had in honor, it is their owne fault.

The Prieſts complaine that we Lay-men love them not, nor have them in honor, but it is their own fault. For how ſhould we love them, that onely ſeek to keep us in blindneſſe and ignorance, to damne our ſoules, to deſtroy our bodies, to rob and ſpoyle our goods and ſubſtance under a colour of pretenſed holineſſe? We know (right honorable Commiſſioners) what honour is due to ſuch Wolves, and how by the authoritie of Gods word, ſuch are to be fled, as peſtilences to the Lords Lambes, whom they miſerably daily murder.

Gods word and true religion caſt out of the church in Q. Maries time.

But we have rather choſen by this our meeke ſupplication, humbly to deſire the Queenes Maieſtie, and you her honourable Commiſſioners, to render Gods word againe unto the Churches, and to permit us freely to enjoy the ſame. For we certainly know, that the whole religion lately ſet out by the holy Saint of God, our late moſt deare King Edward, is Chriſts true religion written in the holy Scripture of God, and by Chriſt and his Apoſtles taught unto his Church. Wherefore we cannot allow with ſafe conſciences this refuſall of it, and caſting of it out of our Churches; foraſmuch as to refuſe, caſt off, and to reject it, is to caſt off Chriſt himſelfe, and to refuſe our part in his bleſſed body broken for our ſinnes, and his bloud ſhed for our redemption. Which thing whoſo doth, the ſame without repentance can look for no ſacrifice for his ſinnes, but moſt fearefully waite for the judgement, and for that vehement fire that ſhall deſtroy Chriſts adverſaries. For if he that deſpiſeth the Law of Moſes, is without mercie put to death under two or three witneſſes, how much more grievous torments ſhall he ſuffer that treadeth under foot the Son of God, and eſteemeth the bloud of the teſtament (whereby he was ſanctified) as a profane thing, and contumeliouſly uſeth the ſpirit of grace?

Wherefore, we moſt humbly pray and beſeech the Queenes gracious Maieſtie, to have mercie and pitie upon us her poore and faithfull ſubiects, and not to compell us to doe the thing that is againſt our conſciences, and ſhall ſo incurably wound us in heart, by bringing into the Church the Latine Maſſe and ſervice that nothing edifieth us, and caſting out of Chriſts holy communion and Engliſh ſervice, ſo cauſing us to ſinne againſt our redemption. For ſuch as willingly and wittingly againſt their conſciences ſhall ſo doe (as it is to be feared many a one doth) they are in a miſerable ſtate, untill the mercy of God turne them; which if he doe not, we certainly beleeve, that they ſhall eternally be damned: and as in this world they deny Chriſts holy word and communion before men, ſo ſhall Chriſt deny them before his heavenly father and his angels.

The popiſh following of Chriſts croſſe in proceſſion.

And whereas it is very earneſtly required, that we ſhould go in proceſſion (as they call it) at which time the Prieſts ſay in Latine ſuch things as we are ignorant of, the ſame edifieth nothing at all

The true followers of Chriſts croſſe.

all unto godlineſſe, and we have learned that to follow Chriſts Croſſe, is another matter, namely, to take up our Croſſe, and to follow Chriſt in patient ſuffering for his love, tribulations, ſickneſſe, povertie, priſon, or any other adverſitie, whenſoever Gods holy will and pleaſure is to lay the ſame upon us. The triumphant Paſſion, and death of Chriſt, whereby in his own perſon he conquered death, ſinne, hell, and damnation hath moſt lively beene preached unto us, and the glory of Chriſts Croſſe declared by our Preachers; whereby we have learned the cauſes and effects of the ſame more lively in one Sermon, then in all the proceſſions that ever we went in, or ever ſhall go in.

When we worſhipped the divine Trinitie kneeling, and in the Letanie invocating the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt, asking mercie for our ſinnes, and deſiring ſuch petitions as the need of our fraile eſtate and this mortall life requireth, we were edified, both to know unto whom all Chriſtian prayers ſhould be directed, and alſo to know that of Gods hand we receive all things, as well to the ſalvation of our ſoules, as to the reliefe of our mortall neceſſities. And we humbly beſeech the Queenes Majeſtie, that the ſame moſt holy prayers may be continued amongſt us; that our Miniſters praying in our mother tongue, and we underſtanding their prayers and petitions, may anſwer, Amen, unto them. At evening ſervice we underſtood our Miniſters prayers, we were taught and admoniſhed by the Scriptures then read; which in the Latine Evenſong is all gone.

Prayers and evening ſervice in Engliſh.

Baptiſme in Engliſh.

At the miniſtration of holy baptiſme, we learned what league and covenant God had made with us, and what vowes and promiſes we upon our part had made, namely to beleeve in him, to forſake Satan and his workes, and to walke in the way of Gods holy word and commandements.

Catechiſme in Engliſh.

The Chriſtian Catechiſme continually taught and called to remembrance the ſame, whereas before no man knew any thing at all. And many good men of fortie yeers, that had been godfathers to thirtie children, knew no more of the Godfathers office, but to waſh their hands ere they departed the Church, or elſe to faſt five Fridaies with bread and water.

The effects of Gods word deſcribed.

Oh mercifull God, have pitie upon us. Shall we be altogether caſt from thy preſence? we may well lament our miſerable eſtate, to receive ſuch a commandement, to reject and caſt out of our Churches all theſe moſt godly prayers, inſtructions, admonitions and doctrines, and thus to be compelled to denie God, and Chriſt our Saviour, his holy word, and all his doctrine of our ſalvation, the candle to our feete, and the light to our ſteps, the bread coming downe from heaven that giveth life, which whoſo drinketh, it ſhall be in him a wel-ſpring ſtreaming unto eternall life; whereby we have learned all righteouſneſſe, all true religion, all true obedience towards our governours, all charitie one towards another, all good workes that God would us to walke in, what puniſhment abideth the wicked, and what heavenly reward God will give to thoſe that reverently walke in his waies and commandements.

Wherefore right honorable Commiſſioners, we cannot without impietie refuſe and caſt from us the holy word of God which we have received, or condemne any thing ſet forth by our moſt godly late King Edward and his vertuous proceedings, ſo agreeable to Gods word. And our moſt humble ſute is, that the commandement may be revoked, ſo that we be not conſtrained thereunto. For we proteſt before God, we thinke if the holy word of God had not taken ſome roote amongſt us, we could not in times paſt have done that poore dutie of ours, which we did in aſſiſting the Queen our moſt deare Soveraigne againſt her graces mortall foe, that then ſought her deſtruction. It was our bounden dutie, and we thanke God for the knowledge of his word and grace, that we then did ſome part of our bounden ſervice.

Suffolke and Norfolke men moved by Gods word did ſet up the Queene.

And we meekly pray and beſeech the Queenes Majeſtie for the deare paſſion of Jeſus Chriſt, that the ſame word be not taken away out of her Churches, nor from us her loving, faithfull and true ſubjects; leſt if the like neceſſitie ſhould hereafter chance (which God for his mercie ſake forbid, and ever ſave and defend her grace, and us all) the want of knowledge and due remembrance of Gods word may be occaſion of great ruine to an infinite number of her graces true ſubjects. And truly we judge this to be one ſubtile part of the Divell (enemie to all godly peace and quietneſſe) that by taking Gods word from among us, and planting ignorance, he may make a way to all miſchife and wickedneſſe; and by baniſhing the holy Goſpel of peace, he may bring upon us the heavie wrath of God, with all manner of plagues; as death, ſtrange ſickneſſe, peſtilence, murren, moſt terrible uprores, commotions, and ſeditions. Theſe things did the Lord threaten, unto the Jewes for refuſing his word, ſaying, Goe, and thou ſhalt ſay unto this people: Ye ſhall heare indeed, but ye ſhall not underſtand, ye ſhall plainly ſee, and not perceive. Harden the heart of this people, ſtop their eares, and ſhut their eyes, that they ſee not with their eyes, heare not with their eares, and underſtand not with their hearts, and convert and be healed. And I ſaid, How long Lord? And he anſwered, Vntill the Cities be deſtroyed, utterly waſted without inhabitants, and the houſes without men, till the Land alſo be deſolate and lye unbuilded. And the Prophet Micheas, conſidering the contempt of Gods word among the Iſraelites, threatned them thus, When the day, that thy preachers warned thee of, cometh, thou ſhalt be waſted away. And let no man beleeve his friend, or put confidence in his brother. Keepe the doore of thy mouth from her that lyeth in thy boſome: for the ſonne ſhall put his father to diſhonour, and the daughter ſhall riſe againſt her mother, the daughter in law againſt the mother in law; and a mans foes ſhall be even they of his owne houſhhold. The ſame plague threatned Chriſt unto the Jewes, for refuſing his peace profered them in the Goſpel, and he wept on the citie Jeruſalem, which murdered the Prophets, and ſtoned ſuch as were ſent unto her.

Inconveniences that followed by taking away Gods word.

Eſay 6.

Mich. 6.

Luke 19.

The ſame plagues we are afraide, will alſo fall upon us. For whereas heretofore with the receiving of Chriſts word and peaceable Goſpel, we had great benedictions of God, eſpecially this chriſtian concord and holy peace, ſo that all were at a full and perfect ſtay in religion, no man offended with another, but as the ſons of peace, each of us with Chriſtian charitie imbraced other: now alas for pitie, the Devill (riding upon the red horſe, ſhewed unto St. John in the Revelation) is come forth, and power is given unto him to take peace from the earth. For now a man can goe to no place, but malicious buſie-bodies curiouſly ſearch out his deeds, marke his words, and if he agree not with them in deſpiſing Gods word, then will they ſpitefully and hatefully rayle againſt him and it, calling it error and hereſie, and the profeſſors thereof heretikes and ſchiſmatikes, with other odious and deſpitefull names, as traitors and not the Queens friends, not favourers of the Queens proceedings; as if to love Gods word were hereſie, and as though to talke of Chriſt, were to be ſchiſmatike; as though none could be true to the

Apoc. 6.

Loving Gods word made hereſie.

Queene, that were not falſe to God; as though none were the Queenes friends, but ſuch as deſpitefully raile on her graces father and brother, and on Gods word that they ſet forth; as though none favoured the Queenes Maieſtie, but ſuch as hate all godly knowledge.

All that the papiſts ſtrive for are but mans meere inventions beſides Gods word.

And in very deed theſe things that all this turmoyle is made for, are meere inventions of Popes, brought into the Church of their owne imaginations, without commandement or enſample either of Chriſt or of his Apoſtles; and there is not one word in the Bible, that being truely alledged, maintaineth them, nor any Doctor of antiquitie before Saint Auſtins dayes, as it hath beene divers times ſufficiently proved before all the whole Parliament and Convocation of this Realme. Yet theſe, being meere traditions of Biſhops, are ſet out for Gods commandements; and the Queenes authoritie (given to her of God to maintaine his word) muſt be abuſed to put downe Gods word. And you right honorable Juſtices, and keepers of lawes and righteouſneſſe, are alſo abuſed and made the Biſhops Apparatours, to ſet forth ſuch Romiſh traſh as is to Chriſts diſhonour, and againſt the ſupreme authoritie of the Regall eſtate of this Realme. And we poore ſubjects, for ſpeaking of that which is truth, and our bounden allegeance, are daily puniſhed, railed upon, and noted for ſeditious, and not the Queenes friends.

The Queene, her Commiſſioners, and Juſtices abuſed by the Biſhops.

True ſubjects wrongfully ſlandered.

But God (who is bleſſed for ever) knoweth that they ſlander us, and pull the thorne out of their owne foote, and put it in ours: for the ſearcher of hearts knoweth, that we beare a faithfull and true heart unto her grace, and unto all her proceedings, that are not againſt GOD and his holy word. And we daily pray unto the heavenly father, to lighten her Graces royall heart with the glorious light of the Goſpel, that ſhe may eſtabliſh and confirme that Religion, that her Graces brother, our moſt deare King, did ſet out amongſt us; and ſo governing and ruling this her Realme in the feare and true way of God, ſhe may long live, and with proſperitie, peace, and honor reigne over us.

But we cannot thinke that thoſe men doe ſeeke either Gods honor, or her Graces proſperitie, or wealth of the Realme, that take from her Graces faithfull ſubjects Gods word, which onely is the roote of all love and faithfull obedience under her Grace, and of all honeſty, good life, and vertuous concord among her Commons. And this we feare, leſt the roote being taken away, the branches will ſoone wither and be fruitleſſe. And when the Philiſtines have ſtopped up the wellſpring, the faire ſtreames that ſhould flow ſhall ſoon be dried up. All our watchmen, our true Preachers have taught us, that as long as we retained Gods word, we ſhould have God our gracious mercifull Father; but if we refuſed and caſt off the Lords yoke of his doctrine, then ſhall we looke for the Lords wrath, and ſevere viſitation to plague us, as he did the Jewes for the like offences. And Paul ſaith, Rom. 2. God gave to them the ſpirit of unquietneſſe and uprore, eies wherewith they ſhould not ſee, and eares wherewith they ſhould not heare, untill this day: And as David ſaid, Pſal. 69. Let their table be made a ſnare to take themſelves with all, a trap to catch them, and a ſtumbling block to fall at. Let their eies be blinded, that they ſee not, and bow thou downe their backs alwaies.

What unquietneſſe followeth the lack of Gods word.

O mercifull God, all this is now come upon us, and daily more and more increaſed, and we feare at laſt it will ſo bow downe our backs, that we ſhall utterly be deſtroyed; the troubleſome ſpirit of uprores and unquietneſſe daily troubleth mens hearts, and worketh ſuch unquietneſſe in all places, that no man that loveth quietneſſe, can tell where to place himſelfe. Men have eyes, and ſee not how grievous an offence it is to caſt off the yoke of Gods doctrine, and to beare the heavie burden that unfaithfull hypocrites lay upon us. We have eares and heare not the warning of Gods word, calling us to true repentance, nor his threats againſt our impietie. Our moſt ſweet table of Chriſts word and moſt holy Communion is taken away, and turned to a moſt perillous ſnare, through the brawling diſputations of men. And as the Idoll of abomination betokened finall ſubverſion unto the Jewiſh Nation; ſo we feare, this ſetting aſide of the Goſpel and holy Communion of Chriſt, and the placing in of Romiſh Religion, betokeneth deſolation of this noble Realme of England to be at hand.

For the plagues of hunger, peſtilence, and ſword, cannot long tarry; but except we repent, and turne againe to the Lord, our backs ſhall be ſo bowed, that the like horrible plagues were never ſeene. And no marvell: for the like offence was never committed, as to reject and caſt off Chriſt and his word, and in plaine Engliſh to ſay, We will not have him to reigne over us. O Lord, how terrible is it that followeth in the Goſpel? Thoſe mine enemies that would not have me to reigne over them, bring them hither, and ſlay them before me, Luke 19. God be mercifull unto us, and move the Queenes Maieſties heart, and the hearts of her honourable Councell, and your hearts (right honourable Commiſſioners) to weigh theſe dangers in due time; and to call Gods word into you Councell, and then you ſhall ſee how it agreeth with this Biſhoplike commandement; and to be as warie to avoide the contempt of the eternall God, and dangers of the ſame, as you are prudent and wiſe in matters of this world, leſt if the Almightie be contemned, he ſtretch forth his arme which no man can turne, and kindle his wrath, that no man can quench.

Warning to Q. Mary, to her Councell and Commiſſioners.

The dutie of true ſubjects declared, firſt to Chriſt, then to the Queene.

We have humbly opened unto your conſciences, doubtleſſe ſore wounded and grieved by this commandement; and we meekely pray and beſeech the Queenes Maieſtie, for the precious death and bloudſheding of Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour, to have mercie and pitie upon us her gracious poore Commons, faithfull and true ſubjects, members of the ſame body politike, whereof her Grace is ſupreme head. All our bodies, goods, lands, and lives are ready to doe her Grace faithful obedience, and true ſervice of all commandements that are not againſt God, and his word: but in things that import a deniall of Chriſt, and refuſall of his word and holy communion, we cannot conſent nor agree unto it. For we have bound our ſelves in baptiſme to be Chriſts Diſciples, and to keepe his holy word and ordinances. And if we deny him before men, he will deny us before his heavenly Father and his holy Angels in the day of judgement: which we truſt her benigne Grace will not require of us.

How farre a Prince ought to require obedience of his ſubjects.

And we humbly beſeech her Maieſtie, that we be not enforced unto it; but as we ſerve her Grace with body and goods, and due obedience, according to Gods commandement: ſo we may be permitted freely to ſerve GOD and Chriſt our Saviour, and keepe unto him our ſoules, which he hath with his precious bloud redeemed, that ſo (as Chriſt teacheth) we may render to Cæſar that which is due to Cæſar, and to God that which is due to God.

True obedience how farre it ſtretcheth.

For we thinke it no true obedience unto the Queenes highneſſe, or to any other Magiſtrate ordained of God under her, to obey in the things contrarie to Gods word, although the ſame be never ſo ſtraitly charged in her graces name. The Biſhop of Wincheſter hath truely taught in the point, in his booke of true obedience, that true obedience is in the Lord, and not againſt the Lord: as the Apoſtle anſwered before the Councell at Ieruſalem, commanding them no more to preach in the name of the Lord Ieſus, Iudge you (ſaid they) whether it be right in the ſight of God, to heare you rather then God. And again they ſaid, We muſt obey God rather then man. Wherefore we learne, that true obedience is to obey God, King of all Kings, and Lord of all Lords, and for him, in him, and not againſt him and his word, to obey the Princes and Magiſtrates of this world, who are not truly obeyed when God is diſobeyed, nor yet diſobeyed when God is faithfully obeyed.

True obedience

Example of true obedience.

Tobias diſobeyed not his King, although contrary to his commandement, and contrary to the uſage of all other, when they went to Dan, and Bethel, he went unto Ieruſalem, and worſhipped in the Temple of the Lord. The three young men in Babylon, refuſing Nabuchodonoſors commandement, pleaſed GOD more then the whole multitude that obeyed. And Daniel that prayed to the God of heaven, contrary to King Darius commandement, bare a more true and faithfull heart to the King, then thoſe wicked Counſellors, that procured that wicked law, or thoſe that for feare or flatterie obeyed it. Which two peſtilences (feare and flatterie) have ever deſtroyed true obedience to God and man; when wicked godleſſe men (that care not if the Devill were worſhipped, ſo they might get and obtaine riches, promotions, and dignitie, and worldly glorie) turne to and fro, as every winde bloweth; and weake and fraile men fearing loſſe of goods, puniſhment, or death, doe outwardly in body that thing, that their hearts and conſciences inwardly abhorreth, and ſo outwardly diſobey God, and in heart diſſemble with man, which diſſimulation we thinke worthy hate of all men, and moſt uncomely for Chriſtian men.

Feare and flattery, enemies to true obedience, to God and man.

Falſe diſſemblers worthy to be hated of all men.

Wherefore we humbly beſeech the Queenes Majeſtie, with pitie and mercie to tender the lamentable ſute of us her poore ſubjects, which be by this commandement ſore hurt, and wounded in our conſciences, and driven to many miſeries, and by the malicious attempts of wicked men ſuffer great wrongs and injuries, ſlanders, loſſe of goods, and bodily vexations. We thinke not good, by any unlawfull ſtirre or commotion to ſeeke remedie; but intend, by Gods grace, to obey her Majeſtie in all things, not againſt God, and his holy word. But unto ſuch ungodly Biſhoplike commandements, as are againſt God, we anſwer with the Apoſtles, God muſt be obeyed rather then man. If perſecution ſhall enſue (which ſome threaten us with) we deſire the heavenly Father, according to his promiſe, to looke from heaven, to heare our cry, to judge between us and our adverſaries, and to give us faith, ſtrength and patience to continue faithfull unto the end, and to ſhorten theſe evill dayes, for his choſens ſake; and ſo we faithfully beleeve he will.

Queene Maries authoritie, ſtriving againſt mens conſciences.

Notwithſtanding, we truſt the Queenes gracious and mercifull heart will not ſuffer ſuch tyrannie to be done againſt her poore, innocent, faithfull, and obedient ſubjects, that daily pray unto God for her; which have no remedy in this world, but to ſue unto her highnes, our moſt gracious and benigne Soveraigne; whom we pray and beſeech, for the deare bloud of Chriſt, to pitie our lamentable caſe and hurt of conſcience, and to call back all ſuch commandements as are againſt Gods honour, as the good King Darius, Aſſuerus, Trajanus, Theodoſius, and divers other have done, and permit the holy Word of God and true religion (ſet forth by our moſt holy & innocent King Edward, a very Saint of God) to be reſtored againe unto our Churches, to be frequented amongſt us. So ſhall we grow and increaſe in the knowledge of God and of Chriſt, in true repentance and amendment of life: ſo ſhall we exhibite true obedience to our lawfull Magiſtrates and all ſuperiours ordained of God: ſo ſhall love and charitie (of late through this commandement ſo decayed) be again reſtored, the honour of her regall eſtate the more confirmed and eſtabliſhed, and godlineſſe and vertuous life among her loving ſubjects increaſed and maintained.

And we moſt heartily pray you (right honorable Commiſſioners) to be meanes unto the Queenes Highneſſe, and to her honorable Councel, that this our humble ſute may be favourably tendered, and graciouſly heard and granted. And we ſhall not ceaſe day and night to pray unto the heavenly Father long to preſerve her Grace, and all other Magiſtrates in his feare, and love, and in proſperous peace and wealth, with long life and honor, Amen.

The ſtory of Iohn Harpole, of the pariſh of S. Nicholas in Rocheſter, Ioane Beach widow, of Tunbridge, Martyrs.

Iohn Harpole, Ioane Beach, martyrs.

TOuching the examination of Ioane Beach widow, and of Iohn Harpole within the Dioceſſe of Rocheſter, by Maurice biſhop of the ſaid Dioceſſe, remembrance was made before in the ſtory of Nicholas Hall, wherein was declared the foure articles Conſiſtoriall of the Biſhop, objected and laid, as unto the ſaid Nicholas Hall and his company, ſo alſo to this Ioane Beach widow: whereof the firſt was this;

Ex Regiſt. Articles laid to Ioane Beach.

1 That ſhe was of the Pariſh of Tunbridge, in the Dioceſſe of Rocheſter.

2 Item, that all perſons which preach, teach, beleeve, or ſay otherwiſe or contrary to that their mother holy Catholike Church of Chriſt, are excommunicate perſons and heretikes.

3 Item, that the ſaid Ioane Beach hath, and yet doth affirme, maintaine, and beleeve contrary to the ſaid mother Church of Chriſt, videlicet, that in the bleſſed ſacrament of the Altar, under forme of bread and wine, there is not the very body and bloud of our Saviour in ſubſtance, but onely a token and memoriall thereof; that the very body and bloud of Chriſt is in heaven, and not in the Sacrament.

4 Item, that ſhe hath been, and yet is, amongſt the Pariſhioners of Tunbridge, openly noted, and vehemently ſuſpected to be a Sacramentarie, and heretike.

Her perſonall Anſwers to the ſaid Articles.

Anſwers of Ioane Beach to the articles.

TO the which foreſaid articles, her anſwers were theſe. Firſt, that ſhe was and is of the ſaid Pariſh of Tunbridge, in the Dioces of Rocheſter.

2 That all perſons which doe preach and hold otherwiſe and contrary to that, which the holy Catholike church of Chriſt doth, are to be reputed for excommunicate and heretikes; adding withall, that nevertheleſſe ſhe beleeveth not the holy Catholike Church to be her mother, but beleeveth onely the Father of heaven to be her Father.

The Catholike Church no mother.

3 Thirdly, that ſhe hath, & yet doth verily beleeve, hold, & affirme, in the ſacrament of the altar under formes of bread and wine, not to be the very body and bloud of our Saviour in ſubſtance, but onely a token and remembrance of his death to the faithfull receiver, and that his body and ſubſtance is onely in heaven, and not in the Sacrament.

Laſtly, as touching how ſhe hath beene or is noted and reputed among the Pariſhioners of Tunbridge, ſhe ſaid, ſhe could not tell; howbeit ſhe beleeved, ſhe was not ſo taken and reputed.

Examination and condemnation of Iohn Harpole and Ioane Beach.

The martyrdome of Iohn Harpole, and Ioane Beach, at Rocheſter, Anno 1556. April 1.

THe like matter, and the ſame foure articles were alſo the ſame preſent time and place miniſtred to John Harpole by the foreſaid Biſhop Maurice; who after the like anſwers received of him, as of the other before, adjudged and condemned them both together to death, by one forme of ſentence, according to the tenour and courſe of their ſeverall ſentence, which ye may reade before in Maſter Rogers ſtorie.

And thus theſe two Chriſtian Martyrs coupled in one confeſſion, being condemned by the biſhop, ſuffered together at one fire, in the towne of Rocheſter, where they together ended their lives about the firſt day of this preſent moneth of April.

Iohn Hullier, Miniſter and Martyr.

John Hullier Martyr.

The martyrdome of John Hullier Miniſter, who ſuffered at Cambridge, Anno 1556. April 2.

NExt after theſe enſueth the Martyrdome of John Hullier, Miniſter, who firſt being brought up in the Schoole of Eaton, was afterward Scholler, and then Conduct in the Kings Colledge at Cambridge ſuffered under Doctor Thurlby Biſhop of Ely, and his Chancellour, for the ſincere ſetting out of the light of Gods gracious Goſpel revealed in theſe our daies. In whoſe behalfe this is to be lamented, that among ſo many freſh wits and ſtirring pennes in that Univerſitie, ſo little matter is left unto us touching the proceſſe of his judgement, and order of his ſuffering, which ſo innocently gave his life in ſuch a cauſe among the middeſt of them. By certaine letters which he himſelfe left behinde, it appeareth that he was zealous and earneſt in that doctrine of truth, which every true Chriſtian man ought to embrace. His Martyrdome was about the ſecond day of this preſent moneth of April.

Letters of Maſter Iohn Hullier, Miniſter.

*A Letter of Iohn Hullier to the Chriſtian Congre*gation, exhorting them faithfully to abide in the doctrine of the Lord.

A letter exhortatory of John Hullier to the flock of the faithfull Chriſtians.

IT ſtandeth now moſt in hand (O deare Chriſtians) all them that looke to be accounted of Chriſts flock at the great and terrible day, when a ſeparation ſhall be made of the ſort that ſhall be received from the other which ſhall be refuſed, faithfully in this time of great afflictions, to heare our Maſter Chriſts voyce, the onely true ſhepheard of our ſoules, which ſaith, Whoſoever ſhall endure to the end, ſhall be ſafe. For even now is that great trouble in hand (as here in England we may well ſee) that our Saviour Chriſt ſpake of ſo long before, which ſhould follow the true & ſincere preaching of his Goſpel. Therefore in this time we muſt needs either ſhew that we be his faithfull Souldiers, and continue in his battell unto the end, putting on the armour of God, the buckler of faith, the breſtplate of love, the helmet of hope and ſalvation, and the ſword of his holy word (which we have heard plentifully) with all inſtance of ſupplication and prayer; or elſe if we doe not worke and labour with theſe, we are Apoſtataes and falſe ſouldiers, ſhrinking moſt unthankfully from our gracious and ſoveraigne Lord and Captaine Chriſt, and leaning to Belial. For as he ſaith plainly, Luke 14. Whoſoever beareth not my croſſe and followeth me, he cannot be my diſciple. And Matth. 6. No man can ſerve two maſters: for either he muſt hate the one, and love the other, or elſe he ſhall leane to the one, and deſpiſe the other. The which thing the faithful Prophet Helias ſignified when he came to the people, and ſaid, Why halt ye between two opinions? If the Lord be God, follow him, or if Baal be he, then follow him, 3 Reg. 18.

Matth. 24.

Epheſ. 6.
1 Theſ. 5.

Now let us not think, but that the ſame was recorded in writing for our inſtruction, whom the ends of the world are come upon, as the Apoſtle St. Paul ſaith, Rom. 15. Whatſoever things are written aforehand, they are written for our learning. If Chriſt be that onely good and true ſhepheard that gave his life for us, then let us that beare his mark, and have our conſciences ſprinkled with his blood, follow altogether, for our ſalvation, his heavenly voyce and calling, according to our profeſſion and firſt promiſe. But if we ſhall not ſo doe, certainly (ſay what we can) although we beare the name of Chriſt, yet we be none of his ſheepe indeed. For he ſaith very manifeſtly, Iohn 10. My ſheepe heare my voyce, and follow me: a ſtranger they will not follow, but will flee from him, for they know not the voyce of a ſtranger.

The wilineſſe of the ſubtle Serpent.

Therefore let every man take good heed in theſe perillous dayes (whereof we have had ſo much warning aforehand) that he be not beguiled by the goodly outward ſhew and appearance, as Eve was of our old ſubtill enemie, whoſe craft and wilineſſe is ſo manifold and divers, and ſo full of cloſe windings, that if he cannot bring him directly and the plaine ſtraight way to conſent to his ſuggeſtions, then he wil allure him and winde him in by ſome other falſe waies (as it were by a traine) that he ſhall not perceive it, to deceive him withall, and to ſteale from him that goodly victorie of the incorruptible and eternall crowne of glory, which no man elſe can have, but he that fighteth lawfully: as at this preſent day, if he cannot induce him throughly, as other doe, to favour his Devilliſh Religion, and of good will and free heart to helpe to uphold the ſame, yet he will inveigle him to reſort to his wicked and whoriſh ſchoole-houſe, and at the leaſt wiſe to be converſant and keepe company with his congregation there, and to hold his peace and ſay nothing, whatſoever he thinke, ſo that he be not a diligent ſouldier and a good labourer on Chriſts ſide, to further his Kingdome; by that ſubtill meanes flattering him that he ſhall both ſave his life, and alſo his goods, and live in quiet.

2 Tim. 2.

Matth. 10.
Iohn 14.15.16.

The peace of Chriſt to them that ſuſtaine the troubles of this world.

Luke 14.

But if we looke well on Chriſts holy will and teſtament, we ſhall perceive that he came not to make any ſuch peace upon earth, nor yet that he gave any ſuch peace to his Diſciples; I leave peace with you (ſaith he) my peace I give you, not as the world giveth it, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, nor fearefull. Theſe things have I ſpoken unto you, that in me ye ſhould have peace. In the world ye ſhall have affliction, but be of good cheare, I have overcome the world. The ſervant is not greater then his Lord and Maſter: If they have perſecuted me, they ſhall alſo perſecute you. If any man come to me, and hateth not his own father and mother, wife, children, ſiſters, yea, and moreover his owne life, it is not poſſible for him to be my diſciple. Bleſſed be ye that now weep, for ye ſhall laugh: and woe be unto you that now laugh, for ye ſhall mourne and weepe. He that will finde his life, ſhall loſe it.

Q. MARIE.
Anno 1556.

Therefore the God of that true peace and comfort, preſerve and keep us, that we never obey ſuch a falſe flattering, which at length will pay us home once for all, bringing for temporall peace and quietneſſe, everlaſting trouble, vexation, and diſquietneſſe; for theſe vain and tranſitorie goods, extreme loſſe and utter damage of the eternall treaſure and inheritance; for this mortall life, deprivation of the moſt joyfull life immortall; finally, the entrance into endleſſe death moſt miſerable, unmeaſurable pain and torment both of bodie and ſoul.

The ſtrait way of Chriſt better then the broad way of this world.

Now conferring theſe two Schoolmaſters together, let us conſider the thing well, and determine with our ſelves which way we ought to take, and not to take the common broad way which ſeemeth here moſt pleaſant, and that the moſt part of people take. Surely I judge it to be better, to go to ſchoole with our Maſter Chriſt, and to be under his Ferula and rod (although it ſeemeth ſharpe and grievous for a time) that at the length we may be inheritors with him of everlaſting joy, rather then to keep companie with the Devils ſchollers, the adulterous generation, in his ſchoole that is all fall of pleaſure for a while, and at the end to be paied with the wages of continuall burning in the moſt horrible lake which burneth evermore with fire and brimſtone without any end. What ſhall then theſe vain goods and temporall pleaſures availe? Who ſhall then help when we crie inceſſantly, Wo, wo, alas, and weale away, for unmeaſurable paine, griefe, and ſorrow? O let us therefore take heed betime, and rather be content to take paines in this world for a time, that we may pleaſe God. Our Saviour Chriſt the true teacher ſaith; Everie branch that bringeth not forth fruit in me, my Father will take away, Iohn 15.

Ungodly company to be avoided.

It is alſo not written in vain, Eccleſ. 41. The children of the ungodly are abominable children, and ſo are they that keep companie with the ungodly. What doth he elſe, I pray you, that reſorteth to the miniſtration and ſervice that is moſt repugnant and contrarie to Chriſts holy Teſtament, there keeping ſtill ſilence, and nothing reproving the ſame, but in the face of the world, by his verie deed it ſelfe, declare himſelfe to be of a falſe, fearfull, diſſembling, fained, and unfaithfull heart, and to have laid away from him the armour of light, diſcouraging as much as lieth in him all the reſidue of Chriſts hoſte, and giving a manifeſt offence to the weake, and alſo confirming, encouraging, and rejoycing the hearts of the adverſaries in all their evill doing? By which example he doth ſhew himſelfe neither to love God, whom he ſeeth to be diſhonoured and blaſphemed of an Antichriſtian miniſter, nor yet his neighbour before whom he ſhould rebuke the evill, as it is expreſly commanded in Gods holy Law, where it is ſaid, Thou ſhalt in any wiſe rebuke thy neighbour, that thou beare not ſinne for his ſake, Levit. 18. Wherefore let ſuch a one never fantaſie to deceive himſelf, that his name is regiſtred in the book of life, to have the ſtipend of Chriſts ſouldier, except he do the dutie, and performe the part of a faithfull and right true ſouldier, as other have done before. For ſuch fearfulneſſe cometh not from God, as teſtifieth ſaint Paul, 2 Tim. 1. ſaying, God hath not given us the ſpirit of feare, but of power and love. Be not aſhamed, ſaith he, to teſtifie our Lord, but ſuffer adverſitie alſo with the Goſpel, through the power of God, which ſaved us, and called us with an holy calling.

Gods ſtipend cometh not, but to ſuch as play his ſouldiers.

Fearfulneſſe in Chriſts cauſe diſproved.

To be now fearfull, when moſt need is that we ſhould be of ſtrong hearts, is utterly the rejecting of the fear of God, and plain unfaithfulneſſe and diſobedience to the expreſſe commandement of our Saviour Chriſt, which ſaith in his holy Goſpel, Matth. 10. Fear not them that kill the body, &c. For what faithfulneſſe do we expreſſe towards him, when he ſaith thus to us, and yet we declare in our doings the verie contrarie, being ever fearfull, even as the unbeleeving Iſraelites, which unfaithfully feared Gods enemies the heathen Cananites, whereas he had oftentimes given them commandement by his true Prophet Moſes, to do the contrarie? For the which cauſe, all the whole number of that ſect were deſtroyed in proceſſe of time in the wilderneſſe, and enjoyed not the pleaſant land of promiſe. Which was a bodily figure ſhewed before, and now agreeing to the promiſe of the heavenly inheritance, which ſhall be given to none other, but onely to all ſuch as with love unfained be wholly bent, without any fear of man, to fulfill Gods holy will and pleaſure. But all they that pertain to the lively faith, to the winning of the ſoul, will faithfully ſtick to the commandement, truſting moſt firmly and faithfully, that he that gave the ſame, will alſo give ſtrength plentifully to perform it, even in the weakeſt veſſels of all, even as we have heard and ſeen by many and divers examples; he onely be praiſed therefore.

Numb. 13. 14.

Example by the fearfull Iſraelites.

Saint Peter ſaith, 1 Pet. 3. Fear not though they ſeeme terrible unto you, neither be troubled, but ſanctifie the Lord God in your hearts. Onely (ſaith ſaint Paul, Philippi. 1.) let your converſation be as it becometh the Goſpel of Chriſt. Continue in one ſpirit, and in one ſoul, labouring as we do, to maintaine the faith of the Goſpel, and in nothing fearing your adverſaries, which is to them a token of damnation, and to you of ſalvation, and that of God: for unto you it is given that not onely ye ſhould beleeve in Chriſt, but alſo ſuffer for his ſake. Wherefore let us be right well aſſured, that we ſhall yeeld a moſt ſtrait reckoning and account, if we tranſgreſſe the ſaid moſt wholſome precepts given us of our Maſter Chriſt, and of his Apoſtles, and now in this troubleſome time wherein the Goſpel is perſecuted, ſhew our ſelves fearfull ſouldiers; as it is manifeſtly declared in the Revelation of Saint Iohn, Chapter 21. where it is written, That the fearfull ſhall have their part with the unbeleeving and abominable, in the lake that burneth with fire and brimſtone, which is the ſecond death. Againe, it is written in the ſame booke for our warning, Chapter the third, Becauſe thou art betwixt both, and neither cold nor hot, I will ſpew thee out of my mouth.

Now therefore (good Chriſtians) theſe true teſtimonies of Gods lively word deeply conſidered and weighed, let us chiefly ſtand in aw of his moſt terrible judgements, and be not as they that preſumptuouſly tempt him. Let him alwayes be our fear and dread. He now chaſteneth, he now nourtereth us for our profit, delighting in us even as a loving father in his beloved childe, to make us perfect, and to have us to be partakers of his holineſſe. He now judgeth us (not utterly taking away his everlaſting love and mercie from us, as he doth from the malignant and wicked) that we ſhould not be condemned with the wicked world: but if we now refuſe his moſt loving chaſtiſing, and follow the world, we muſt needs have our portion with the world. Wide is the gate, and broad is the way which leadeth to deſtruction, and many there be which go in thereat. But ſtrait is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that finde it. O how much better is it to go this narrow way with the people of God, then to enjoy the pleaſures of ſin for a time?

Matth. 7.

In conſideration whereof, let us without any more ſlacking and further delayes in this great warning by Gods loving viſitation, ſubmit our ſelves betime under his mightie hand, that he may exalt us when the time is come. And thus I wholly commit you to him, and to the Word of his grace, which is able to build further, beſeeching you moſt heartily to pray for me, that I may be ſtrong through the power of his might, and ſtand perfect in all things, being alwayes prepared and readie, looking for the mercie of our Lord unto eternall reſt, and I will pray for you as I am moſt bound. So I truſt he will graciouſly hear us for his promiſe ſake made unto all the faithfull in his dearly beloved Son Chriſt our alone Saviour, whoſe grace be with your ſpirit, moſt dear Chriſtians, for ever. So be it.

1 Pet. 5.

By your chriſtian brother, Iohn Hullier, a priſoner of the Lord.

Iohn Hullier being of long time priſoner, and now openly judged to die for the teſtimonie of the Lord Ieſus, wiſheth heartily to the whole congregation of God, the ſtrength of his holy ſpirit, to their everlaſting health both of bodie and ſoule.

Another letter of Jo. Hullier to the congregation of Chriſts faithfull followers.

I Now (moſt dear Chriſtians) having the ſweet comfort of Gods ſaving health, and being confirmed with his free ſpirit (be he onely praiſed therefore) am conſtrained in my conſcience, thinking it my very dutie to admoniſh you, as ye tender the ſalvation of your ſouls, by all manner of means to ſeparate your ſelves from the companie of the Popes hirelings, conſidering what is ſaid in the Revelation of ſaint John, by the Angel of God, touching all men. The words be theſe; If any man worſhip the Beaſt and his Image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, the ſame ſhall drink the wine of the wrath of God, which is powred into the cup of his wrath, and he ſhall be puniſhed with fire and brimſtone before the holy Angels, and before the Lambe, and the ſmoke of their torment aſcendeth up evermore. Mark well here (good Chriſtians) who is this Beaſt and worſhippers that ſhall be partakers of that unſpeakable torment. The beaſt is none other but the carnall and fleſhly kingdome of Antichriſt, the Pope with his rabble of falſe prophets and miniſters, as it is moſt manifeſt: which to maintain their high titles, worldly promotions and dignities, do with much cruelty, daily more and more ſet forth and eſtabliſh their own traditions, decrees, decretals, contrarie to Gods holy ordinances, ſtatutes, laws, and commandements, and wholly repugnant to his ſincere and pure religion and true worſhipping.

Apoc. 14.

He exhorteth the faithfull to ſeparate themſelves from the Popes marked miniſters.

Now what do they elſe but worſhip this Beaſt and his Image, who after they had once alreadie eſcaped from the filthineſſe of the world, through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, are yet again tangled therein and overcome, uſing diſſimulation unfaithfully for feare of their diſpleaſure, doing one thing outwardly, and thinking inwardly another; ſo having them in reverence under a cloke and colour, to whom they ought not ſo much as to ſay, God ſpeed; and adjoyning themſelves to the malignant congregation, which they ought to abhorre as a denne of theeves and murtherers, and as the brothel houſe of moſt blaſphemous fornicators: whoſe voices being contrarie to Chriſts voice, if they were of his flock, they would not know, but would flee from them; as he himſelf being the good Shepheard of our ſoules doth full well in his holy Goſpel teſtifie. Again, what do they elſe I pray you, but receive the Beaſts marke in their foreheads and in their hands, which do beare a faire face and countenance outwardly in ſupporting them as other do, being aſhamed openly to confeſſe Chriſt and his holy Goſpel? But this fainedneſſe and diſſimulation Chriſt and his Goſpel will in no wiſe allow. Of whom it is ſaid, Luke 9. Whoſoever ſhall be aſhamed of me and of my words in this adulterous and ſinfull generation, of him alſo ſhall the Sonne of man be aſhamed, when he ſhall come in the glory of his Father with his holy Angels. Therefore ſaith Almightie God by his Prophet Malachy, Malach. 1. Curſed be the diſſemblers. Ye were once lightned, and taſted of the heavenly gift, and were become partakers of the holy Ghoſt, and taſted of the Word of God, and of the power of the world to come. And our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, Luke 6. No man that putteth his hand to the plough and looketh back, is apt for the kingdome of God. Therefore ſaint John the Apoſtle uſeth this for a manifeſt token, that the backſliding of the true Preachers of Gods Word declare evidently, that they be not of the number of them. For, ſaith he, 1 Iohn 2. They went out from us, but they were not of us: for if they had been of us, no doubt they would have continued with us. Surely ſo long as we uſe diſſimulation, and to play on both hands, we are not in the light. For whatſoever is manifeſt, the ſame is light, as the elect veſſell of GOD ſaint Paul witneſſeth in Epheſ. 4.

Wherefore (good Chriſtians) for Gods moſt deare love, deceive not your ſelves through your owne wiſedome, and through the wiſedome of the world, which is fooliſhneſſe before God; but certifie and ſtay your owne conſcience with the ſure truth and faithfull Word of God, and with the infallible teſtimonies of holy Scripture. For although Gods mercie is over all his works; yet it doth not extend but onely to them that hold faſt the confidence and rejoycing of hope unto the end, not being wearie in well doing, but rather waxing everie day ſtronger and ſtronger in the inward man. Therefore in the Revelation of ſaint John, where it is entreated of the Beaſt and his Image, it is alſo ſaid, Here is the ſufferance of Saints, and here are they that keep the Commandements, and the faith of Ieſus Chriſt, Revelat. 13. Whereby Almightie GOD doth ſhew plainly, that he doth uſe thoſe wicked men as inſtruments for a time, to trie the patience and faith of his peculiar people, without the performance whereof, we can have no part among the living; but as it is ſaid in the ſame Revelation, The fearfull ſhall have their part in the Lake that burneth with fire and brimſtone, which is the ſecond death.

Gods mercy to whom it belongeth.

But peradventure ye will object and ſay unto me; What ſhall we do? Shall we caſt our ſelves headlong to death? I ſay not ſo. But this I ſay, that we are all bound (if ever we look to receive ſalvation at Gods hand) in this caſe wholly to be obedient to his determinate counſell and foreknowledge, expreſſed by the gift of the Spirit in holy Scripture; and then to caſt all our care upon him, who worketh all in all for the beſt, unto them that love him: and thus he giveth commandement, ſaying; Come away from her my people, that ye be not partakers of her ſins, and that ye receive not of her plagues, Apoc. 18. Now who hearing this terrible voice of GOD, which muſt needs be fulfilled, will not with all ſpeed and diligence apply himſelf to do thereafter, except ſuch as will preſumptuouſly tempt him? And as touching ſuch, the wiſe man ſaith, Eccleſ. 3. He that loveth perill and danger, ſhall periſh therein. But they that be of the faith of Abraham, even as he did, ſo will they in all aſſayes and trials be obedient to the heavenly voice, howſoever it ſeemeth contrarie to their owne naturall will and carnall reaſon, according to the ſure word of faith, which ſaith; Hope thou in the Lord, and keep his way:

way : hold thee ſtill in the Lord, and abide patiently upon him. Let not thy jealouſie move thee alſo to do evill. Come out from among them, and joyne not your ſelves to their unlawfull aſſemblies; yea, do not once ſhew your ſelves with the leaſt part of your bodie to favour their wicked doings, but glorifie GOD (as moſt right is) as well in your whole bodie outwardly, as inwardly in your ſpirit, or elſe you can do neither of both well; for your bodie doth belong to GOD as well as your ſpirit. At the dreadfull day of judgement we ſhall all receive the works of our bodies, according to that we have done, whether it be good or bad.

The body muſt joyne with the ſpirit in ſerving God.

Therefore whatſoever we do, we may not bring the ſpirit in bondage to the bodie, but contrariwiſe we muſt ſubdue the bodie and the will of the fleſh to the ſpirit, that the ſpirit may freely accompliſh the will of GOD in all things; for otherwiſe we ſhall never be partakers of his promiſe, with the true children of Abraham. For as Saint Paul ſaith; They which are the children of the fleſh, are not the children of God. If we ſhall live according to the fleſh, we ſhall die. For to be carnally minded, is death; but to be ſpiritually minded, is life and peace, becauſe that the fleſhly minde is enmitie to God : for it is not obedient to the Law of God, neither can be. So then they that are in the fleſh, cannot pleaſe God. Now chuſe you which way you will take; either the narrow way that leadeth unto life, which Chriſt himſelf and his faithfull followers have gone thorow before; or elſe the broad path-way that leadeth to deſtruction, which the wicked worldlings take their pleaſure in for a while. I for my part have now written this ſhort admonition unto you of good will (as GOD is my witneſſe) to exhort you to that way, which at length you your ſelves ſhall prove and finde to be beſt, yea and rejoyce thereof. And I do not onely write this, but I will alſo (with the aſſiſtance of Gods grace) ratifie and confirm, and ſeale the ſame with the effuſion of my blood, when the full time ſhall be expired that he hath appointed; which (ſo farre forth as I may judge) muſt needs be within theſe few dayes. Therefore I now bid you all moſt heartily farewell in the Lord, whoſe grace be with your ſpirit, Amen. Watch and pray, watch and pray, pray, pray. So be it.

Faithfull admonitions.

The death and martyrdome of ſix conſtant profeſſors of Chriſt, burned at Colcheſter, for the teſtimony of the Goſpel, the 28. day of April.

April 28. The Martyrdome of 6. men at Colcheſter.

NOt long after the death of Robert Drakes, William Tyms, and the other Eſſex Martyrs, executed in Smithfield, as is above ſpecified, followed in the ſame order likewiſe of martyrdome, at one like fire in the town of Colcheſter, (where the moſt part of them did inhabite) ſix other bleſſed Martyrs, whoſe names be theſe :

Chryſtopher Lyſter of Dagneham, husbandman.
Iohn Mace of Colcheſter, Apothecary.
Iohn Spenſer of Colcheſter, Weaver.
Simon Ioyne, Sawyer.
Richard Nichols of Colcheſter, Weaver.
Iohn Hamond of Colcheſter, Tanner.

With theſe ſix was alſo joyned another, whoſe name was Roger Graſbroke, but he afterward ſubmitted himſelf. Of theſe above named, the Biſhop, becauſe he (as it ſeemed by the ſhort proceſſe recorded by his Regiſter) waxed now wearie, made a very quick diſpatch. For ſoon after that, they were delivered unto one John Kingſtone, Bachelor of Civill law, and then Commiſſarie to the Biſhop, by the Earle of Oxford and other Commiſſioners (as appeareth by a bill endented, made between the Commiſſioners and the ſaid Commiſſarie, for the receit of the ſaid priſoners dated the 28. day of March, Anno regni Regis & Reginæ Philippi & Mariæ ſecundo & tertio, which is the yeer of our Lord, 1556.) and by him ſent up unto his Lord and Maſter, the Biſhop cauſed them to be brought unto his houſe at Fulham: Where in the open Church, judicially were miniſtred unto them the ſame Articles that were propounded unto Bartlet Green and others, mentioned before. To the which they made their ſeverall anſwers, agreeing altogether in one truth, as by the ſumme and effect thereof here enſuing, more plainly appeareth.

Roger Graſbroke.

Theſe martyrs were delivered by the Earl of Oxford to the Commiſſary, & by the Commiſſary ſent to the Biſhop.

Their anſwers to the Biſhops Articles.

The Church of Rome no part of Chriſts Catholique Church.

1 To the firſt Article they all conſented and agreed; John Spenſer adding further thereto, that the Church malignant (which is the Church of Rome) is no part of Chriſts Catholique Church; and that he neither hath, nor doth beleeve the doctrine and religion taught and ſet forth in the ſaid Romiſh and malignant Church.

Two Sacraments.

2 To the ſecond they anſwered, that they beleeved, that in the true Catholique Church of Chriſt there be but two Sacraments; that is to ſay, the ſacrament of Baptiſme, and the ſacrament of the bodie and blood of Chriſt.

Profeſſion of Baptiſme.

3 To the third Article they all agreed, confeſſing that they were baptized in the faith and beliefe of the Catholique Church, and that their Godfathers and Godmothers had profeſſed and promiſed for them, as is contained in the ſame Article.

4 To the fourth they anſwered, that they alwayes were, and yet then did continue in the faith and profeſſion wherein they were baptized; Richard Nichols adding alſo, that he had more plainly learned the truth of his profeſſion by the doctrine ſet forth in King Edward the ſixth his dayes, and thereupon he had builded his faith, and would continue in the ſame to his lives end, God aſſiſting him.

To denie the beggarly uſages of the Popes Church, is not to deny the Catholique faith of Chriſt.

5 To the fifth they anſwered, that they neither ſwarved nor went away from the catholique faith of Chriſt. Howbeit they confeſſed, that within the time articulate (and before) they had miſliked, and earneſtly ſpoken againſt the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, and againſt the ſacrament of the altar, affirming that they would not come to hear or be partakers thereof, becauſe they had and then did beleeve, that they were ſet forth and uſed contrary to Gods word and glory. And moreover they did grant, that they had ſpoken againſt the uſurped authoritie of the Biſhop of Rome, as an oppreſſor of Chriſts Church and Goſpel, and that he ought not to have any authoritie in England. For all which ſayings they were no whit ſorrie, but rather rejoyced and were glad.

The Pope ought to have no authority in England.

6 To the ſixth they anſwered, that they never refuſed, nor yet then preſently did refuſe to be reconciled to the unity of Chriſts catholike Church: but they ſaid they had, and then did, and ſo ever would hereafter utterly refuſe to come to the Church of Rome, or to acknowledge the authority of the ſeat thereof, but did utterly abhor the ſame, for putting down the book of God the Bible, and ſetting up the Babylonicall Maſſe, with all other of Antichriſts merchandiſe.

The Church of Rome to be abhorred.

all granted. And Simon Joyne declared further, that the cauſe of his refuſing to be partaker of their trumperie was, for that the commandements of God were there broken, and Chriſts ordinances changed and put out, and the Biſhop of Romes ordinances in ſtead thereof put in. Moreover, as touching the ſacrament of Chriſts bodie, Chriſtopher Liſter affirmed, that in the ſaid ſacrament there is the ſubſtance of bread and wine, as well after the words of conſecration as before, and that there is not in the ſame the verie bodie and blood of Chriſt really, ſubſtantially, and truly, but onely ſacramentally and ſpiritually by faith in the faithfull receivers, and that the Maſſe is not propitiatory for the quick or for the dead, but meer idolatrie and abomination.

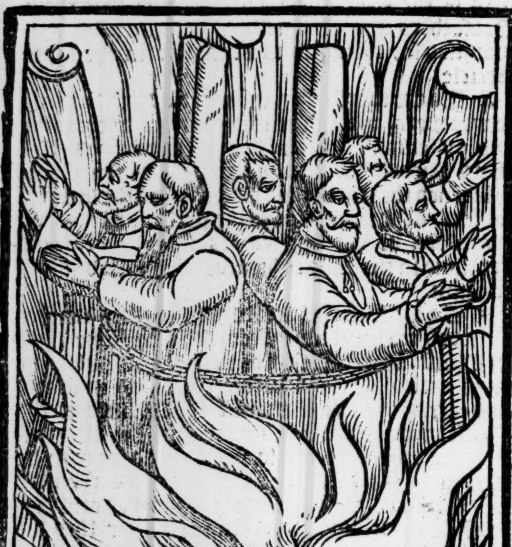
8 To the eighth they ſaid, that they were ſent to Colcheſter priſon by the King and Queenes Commiſſioners, becauſe they would not come to their Pariſh Churches, and by them ſent unto the Biſhop of London, to be thereof further examined.

9 To the ninth they all generally agreed, that that which they had ſaid in the premiſſes was true, and that they were of the Dioceſſe of London.

These anſwers thus made, the Biſhop did diſmiſſe them for that preſent untill the afternoon. At which time having firſt their Articles and anſwers read unto them again, and they ſtanding moſt firmly unto their Chriſtian profeſſion, they were by divers wayes and means aſſayed and tried if they would revoke the ſame their profeſſed faith, and return to the unitie of Antichriſts Church.

The burning of the foreſaid ſix men at Colcheſter.

The martyrdom of Chriſtopher Liſter, John Mace, John Spencer, Simon Joyne, Richard Nichols, John Hamond, at Colcheſter. Anno 1556. April 28.



Sentence given againſt them by Boner.

Which thing when they refuſed, the Biſhop ſtoutly pronounced the ſentence of condemnation againſt them, committing them unto the temporall power. Who, upon the receit of the King and Queens Writ, ſent them unto Colcheſter, where the 28. day of April moſt cheerfully they ended their lives, to the glorie of Gods holy name, and the great incouragement of others.

Hugh Laverock an old lame man, Iohn Apprice a blinde man, Martyrs, burned at Stratford the Bowe.

May 15. Two burned together at one ſtake, Hugh Laverock an old lame man, and John Apprice a blinde man.

IN the diſcourſe of this parcell or part of hiſtory, I know not whether more to marvell at the great and unſearchable mercies of God (with whom there is no reſpect in degrees of perſons, but he chuſeth as well the poore, lame, and blinde, as the rich, mightie, and healthfull, to ſet forth his glorie) or elſe to note the unreaſonable, or rather unnaturall doing of theſe unmercifull Catholikes (I mean Biſhop Boner and his complices) in whom was ſo little favour or mercie to all ſorts and kindes of men, that alſo they ſpared neither impotent age, neither lame nor blinde, as may well appear by theſe poore creatures, whoſe names and ſtories here under follow.

Hugh Laverock, of the Pariſh of Barking, Painter, of the age of 68. a lame cripple.

Iohn Apprice, a blinde man.

These two poore and ſimple creatures being belike accuſed by ſome promoting neighbour of theirs, unto the Biſhop and other of the King and Queens Commiſſioners, were ſent for by their Officer; and ſo being brought and delivered into the hands of the ſaid Biſhop, were the firſt day of May examined before him in his palace at London: where he firſt propounded and objected againſt them thoſe nine Articles, whereof mention is made before, miniſtred as well unto Bartlet Greene, as alſo unto many others. To the which they anſwered in effect, as Chriſtopher Liſter, John Mace, and other before mentioned had done.

Whereupon they were again ſent to priſon, and beſide other times, the ninth day of the ſame moneth, in the Conſiſtorie of Pauls were again openly produced, and there (after the old order) travelled withall to recant their opinions againſt the ſacrament of the altar.

The words of Hugh Laverock to Boner.

Whereunto Hugh Laverock firſt ſaid; I will ſtand to mine anſwers, and to that that I have confeſſed; and I cannot finde in the Scriptures, that the Prieſts ſhould lift up over their head a cake of bread.

The Biſhop then turned him unto John Apprice, and aſked what he would ſay.

The words of John Apprice to the Biſhop.

To whom he anſwered; Your doctrine (ſaid he) that ye ſet forth and teach, is ſo agreeable with the world, and embraced of the ſame, that it cannot be agreeable with the Scripture of GOD. And ye are not of the Catholique Church; for ye make laws to kill men, and make the Queene your Hangman.

Sentence of condemnation given againſt Hugh Laverock and John Apprice.

At which words the Biſhop, belike, ſomewhat tickled, and therefore verie loth to delay their condemnation any longer (ſuch was now his hot burning charitie) commanded that they ſhould be brought after him unto Fulham, whither he before dinner did go, and there in the afternoon, after his ſolemne manner, in the open Church he pronounced the definitive ſentence of condemnation againſt them, and ſo delivering them into the hands of the temporall Officer, thought to diſpatch his hands of them, but could not ſo diſpatch his conſcience before the judgement of God, from the guiltineſſe of innocent blood.

The poore men, being now in the temporall Officers hands, might not there be ſuffered long to remain, and therefore the fifteenth day of May, verie early in the morning, they were carried from Newgate in a cart to Stratford the Bowe, and moſt quietly in the fire praiſing God, yeelded up their ſouls into his hands, through a lively faith in Jeſus Chriſt, whom unto the end they did moſt conſtantly confeſſe.

At their death, Hugh Laverock, after he was chained, caſting away his crutch, and comforting John Apprice his fellow-Martyr, ſaid unto him; Be of good comfort my brother; for my Lord of London is our good Phyſitian. He will heal us both ſhortly; thee of thy blindneſſe, and me of my lameneſſe. And ſo patiently theſe two good Saints of God together ſuffered.

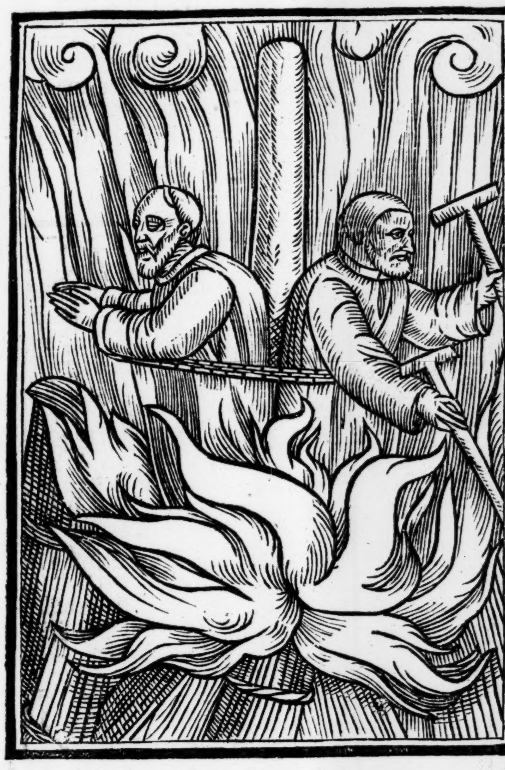
The martyrdome of Hugh Laverock and John Apprice at Stratford the Bowe. Anno 1556. May 15.



Three women the ſame time burned in Smithfield, Katherine Hut, Elizabeth Thackvel, and Ioan Horns.

May 16.

The next day after the martyrdome of this lame and blinde man above ſpecified, in the ſaid moneth of May, were brought to the fire three women, with whom alſo was adjoyned another, who being in the ſame conſtancie with them, was likewiſe partaker of the ſaid condemnation. The names of theſe were:

Katherine Hut, Elizab. Thackvell, Joan Horns, Martyrs.

Katherine Hut of Bocking, Widow.
Ioan Horns of Billerica, Maid.
Elizabeth Thackvell of great Burſted, Maid.
Margaret Ellis of Billerica, Maid.

How theſe with divers other moe were perſecuted and ſent up, eſpecially by ſir John Mordant, and Edmund Tyrel Eſquire, Juſtices of Peace, this their letter following will declare.

A letter ſent unto Boner Biſhop of London, from ſir Iohn Mordant Knight, and Edmund Tyrel Eſquire, Iuſtices of Peace for the County of Eſſex.

A letter of certain perſecuting Juſtices to Boner.

Our humble commendations to your Lordſhip: theſe ſhall be to advertiſe you, that we have ſent unto your good Lordſhip Joan Potter, the wife of Hugh Potter, James Harris, ſervant of William Harris of Bromhill, and Margaret Ellis, for that they be not conformable to the orders of the Church, nor to the reall preſence of Chriſts bodie and blood in the ſacrament of the Altar, to uſe your Lordſhips pleaſure with them, as you think good; not doubting, with the puniſhment of theſe and other before ſent to your Lordſhip, but that the Pariſh of great Burſted and Billerica ſhall be brought to good conformitie. Thus, committing your good Lordſhip to the tuition of the Almightie God, we take our leave. From great Burſted this preſent ſecond day of March, 1556.

Your Lordſhips to command, Iohn
Mordant, Edmund Tyrel.

After the receit of theſe letters, Biſhop Boner entring to examination of theſe foure women above named, laid and objected the like articles to them, as after his uſuall form he uſed to miniſter, and are before expreſſed: Whereunto the ſaid women likewiſe agreeing in the ſame unity of ſpirit and doctrine, accorded in their anſwers, much agreeing unto the other before them.

As firſt, to the article in the firſt place objected, they conſented and granted, beleeving the ſaid article to be true in every part thereof.

The ſimple ignorance of theſe women had more need to be inſtructed, then they to be burned.

2 To the ſecond, partly they anſwered, they could not tell what a Sacrament is; Elizabeth Thackvell, and Katherine Hut adding moreover, that Matrimonie, and Baptiſme, and the Lords Supper were ſacraments ordained in the Church: but whether the other ſpecified in this Article be ſacraments (as they heard them called) ordained by God or not, they could not tell. Margaret Ellis being examined ſeverally, as the other were, upon the ſame, how many Sacraments there were, anſwered (as a young maid unſkilled, in her ſimple ignorance) that ſhe could not tell. Howbeit ſhe had heard (ſhe ſaid) that there was one Sacrament, but what it was ſhe could not tell, &c.

3 To the third likewiſe they granted, that they were baptized by their Godfathers and Godmothers, which Godfathers and Godmothers (ſaid Margaret Ellis) did not then know ſo much, as ſhe doth now know: Katherine Hut adding withall and ſaying, that ſhe was baptized; but what her Godfather and Godmothers did then promiſe for her in her name, ſhe could not tell, &c.

4 To the fourth Article, Margaret Ellis, and Elizabeth Thackvell did grant thereunto: Katherine Hut ſaid moreover, that ſhe, being of the age of fourteen yeers, was of the faith wherein ſhe was chriſtned; and yet nevertheleſſe the ſaid faith in that age (ſhe ſaid) was but a dead faith, becauſe ſhe did not then underſtand what ſhe did beleeve. Joan Horns added, that ſhe, being eleven yeers of age, began to learn the faith ſet forth in King Edwards daies, in the which faith and religion (ſhe ſaid) ſhe hath hitherto, and yet doth, and ſo will hereafter continue, God ſo aſſiſting her.

Againſt the Maſſe and Sacrament of the altar.

5 To the fifth Article they anſwered and confeſſed, according all in this effect, that as touching the Maſſe, they knew no goodneſſe in it; and as touching the ſacrament of the Altar, they beleeved that Chriſts naturall bodie is in heaven, and not in the ſacrament of the Altar: and as concerning the See of Rome, they acknowledged no ſuch ſupremacie in that See, neither have they any thing to do therewith.

6 In anſwering the ſixth Article, they did all generally refuſe to be reconciled or united to the Church of Rome, or any other Church, contrarie to that wherein they now ſtood and did profeſſe.

7 To the ſeventh Article they anſwered likewiſe, wiſe, that they had ſo done and ſaid in all things, as it is in this Article contained: Katherine Hut adding moreover the reaſon why; for that (ſaid ſhe) neither the Service in Latine, Maſſe, Mattens, and Evenſong, nor the Sacraments were uſed and miniſtred according to Gods word: And furthermore, that the Maſſe is an Idol, neither is the true bodie and blood of Chriſt in the ſacrament of the altar, as they make men beleeve.

Sir Iohn Mordant Promoter.

8 Their anſwer to the eighth Article, declared that they were all and everie one ſent up to Boner by ſir Iohn Mordant Knight, and Iuſtice of Peace in Eſſex (the Lord of his mercie ſend us better Iuſtices I beſeech him) for that they could not affirm the preſence of Chriſts bodie and blood to be truly and really in the ſacrament, and for that they came not to their Popiſh Pariſh Church.

Katherine Hut.

9 To the ninth Article, they anſwered and confeſſed the premiſſes thereof to be true, and denied not the ſame; ſave that Katherine Hut ſaid, that ſhe was of Bocking in Eſſex of the peculiar juriſdiction of Canterburie, and not of the Dioceſſe and juriſdiction of London.

After theſe their anſwers received, they were produced again about the thirteenth of April to further examination, and ſo at length to their finall judgement; where Katherine Hut widow, ſtanding before the Biſhop, boldly and conſtantly ſtood to that which ſhe had ſaid before, neither yeelding to his faire promiſes, nor overthrown with his terrour. Who being required of the ſacrament to ſay her minde, and to revoke her ſelfe unto the fellowſhip of the Catholique faith, openly proteſted, ſaying; I denie it to be God, becauſe it is a dumbe God, and made with mens hands. Wherein the good and faithfull Martyr of Chriſt firmly perſiſting, ſo received her ſentence, being condemned of Boner to the fire; which ſhe with great conſtancie ſuſtained by the grace and ſtrength of the Lord, and did abide for the cauſe and love of Chriſt.

The words of Katherine Hut of the ſacrament.

Ioan Horns maid.

Ioan Horns maid, produced likewiſe to her judgement and condemnation, with like firmneſſe and Chriſtian fortitude declared her ſelf a true Martyr and follower of Chriſts teſtament, giving no place to the adverſarie; but being charged that ſhe did not beleeve the ſacrament of Chriſts body and blood to be Chriſt himſelf, of the which ſacrament (contrarie to the nature of a ſacrament) the adverſaries are wont to make an Idoll ſervice; to this ſhe proteſting openly her minde, ſaid as followeth; If you can make your God to ſhed blood, or to ſhew any condition of a true lively bodie, then will I beleeve you: but it is but bread (as touching the ſubſtance thereof) meaning the matter whereof the ſacrament conſiſteth; and that which you call hereſie, I truſt to ſerve my Lord God in, &c.

The words and profeſſion of Ioan Horns touching the ſacrament.

And as concerning the Romiſh See, ſhe ſaid; My Lord (ſpeaking to Boner) I forſake all his abominations, and from them good Lord deliver us. From this her ſtable and conſtant aſſertion when the Biſhop was too weak to remove her; and too ignorant to convince her, he knockt her down with the butcherly ax of his ſentence. And ſo the holy Virgin and Martyr committed to the ſhambles of the ſecular ſword, was offered up with her other fellows a burnt ſacrifice to the Lord, In odorem bonæ fragrantiæ, in the ſavour of a ſweet and pleaſant ſmell.

The butcherly Ax of Boner.

As touching Margaret Ellis, ſhe likewiſe perſevering in her foreſaid confeſſion, and reſiſting the falſe catholique errors and hereſies of the Papiſts, was by the ſaid Boner adjudged and condemned; but before the time of her burning came, prevented by death in Newgate priſon, departed and ſlept in the Lord.

Margaret Ellis died in Newgate.

No leſſe ſtrength in the grace of the Lord appeared in the other maid Elizabeth Thackvell, whoſe heart and minde the Lord had ſo confirmed in his truth, ſo armed with patience, that as her adverſaries could by no ſufficient knowledge of Scripture convince her affirmation, ſo by no forcible attempts they could remove her confeſſion. Whereupon ſhe ſtanding to the death, being in like ſort condemned, by the ſaid unbiſhoplike “ πλήκτης, gave her life willingly and mildly for the confirmation and ſealing up of the ſincere truth of Gods Word.

Elizabeth Thackvell, maid & martyr.

“ i. A perſecutor.

Theſe three innocent and godly women, thus falſly and wrongfully by men condemned for the juſt quarrell and cauſe of Gods Goſpel, were had to Smithfield, and there cruelly bound to the ſtake, gave their bodies to the tormentors, their ſpirits they commended to God. For whoſe glorie they were willing and readie to ſuffer whatſoever the cruell hands of their enemies ſhould work againſt them, dying more joyfully in the flaming fire, then ſome of them that burned them did peradventure in their beds. Such a Lord is God, glorious and wonderfull in all his Saints. The martyrdome of theſe Saints of God was the 16. of May.

May 5. Tho. Drowrie a blinde boy, and Tho. Croker, Martyrs. Perſecution at Glocester.

YE heard a little before of two men, the one blinde, the other lame, which ſuffered about the 15. of May. And here is not to be forgotten another as godly a couple, which ſuffered the like paſſion and martyrdome for the ſame cauſe of religion at Glocester: of the which two, the one was the blinde boy, named Thomas Drowrie, mentioned before in the hiſtory of Biſhop Hooper, whom the ſaid vertuous Biſhop confirmed then in the Lord, and in the doctrine of his Word.

Of this blinde boy, read before.

With him alſo was burned another in the ſame place, and at the ſame fire in Gloceſter, about bout the fifth of May, whoſe name was Thomas Croker Bricklayer.

Q. MARIE. Anno 1556.

Concerning the which blinde boy, how long he was in priſon, and in what yeere he ſuffered, I am not certaine. Of this credible intelligence I have received by thee teſtimonie of the Regiſter then of Gloceſter, named John Taylor, alias Barker, that the ſaid blinde boy at his laſt examination and finall condemnation, was brought (by the Officers, under whoſe cuſtodie he had remained) before Doctor Williams then Chancellor of Gloceſter, ſitting Judicially with the ſaid Regiſter in the Conſiſtorie, neere unto the South doore, in the neather end of the Church of Gloceſter. Where the ſaid Chancellor then miniſtred unto the boy ſuch uſuall Articles as are accuſtomed in ſuch caſes, and are ſundry times mentioned in this booke. Amongſt which, he chiefly urged the Article of Tranſubſtantiation, ſaying in effect as followeth.

Chancellor. Doeſt thou not beleeve, that after the words of conſecration ſpoken by the Prieſt, there remaineth the very reall body of Chriſt in the ſacrament of the altar?

Thom. To whom the blinde boy anſwered; No, that I doe not.

Chan. Then thou art an heretike, and ſhalt be burned: But who hath taught thee this hereſie?

Thom. You Maſter Chancellor.

Chan. Where I pray thee?

Thom. Even in yonder place; pointing with his hand, and turning towards the Pulpit, ſtanding upon the North ſide of the Church.

Chan. When did I teach thee ſo?

Thom. When you preached there (naming the day) a ſermon to all men as well as to me, upon the Sacrament. You ſaid, the Sacrament was to be received ſpiritually by faith, and not carnally and really, as the Papiſts have heretofore taught.

Chan. Then doe as I have done, and thou ſhalt live as I doe, and eſcape burning.

Thom. Though you can ſo eaſily diſpenſe with your ſelfe, and mock with God, the world, and your conſcience, yet I will not ſo doe.

Chancel. Then God have mercy upon thee; for I will read the condemnation ſentence againſt thee.

Thom. Gods will be fulfilled.

The Regiſter being herewith ſomewhat moved, ſtood up, and ſaid to the Chancellor;

Regiſter. Fie for ſhame man, will you reade the ſentence againſt him, and condemne your ſelfe? away, away, and ſubſtitute ſome other to give ſentence and judgement.

Chan. No Regiſter, I will obey the law, and give ſentence my ſelfe according to mine office.

And ſo he read the ſentence condemnatory againſt the boy (with an unhappy tongue, and a more unhappy conſcience) delivering him over unto the ſecular power. Who the ſaid fifth day of May, brought the ſaid blinde boy to the place of execution at Gloceſter; together with one Thomas Croker a Bricklayer, condemned alſo for the like teſtimonie of the truth. Where both together in one fire moſt conſtantly and joyfully yeelded their ſoules into the hands of the Lord Jeſus, Perſecution in Suffolke.

Three burnt at Beckles, May 21.

The martyrdome of three men burned at Beckles.

After the death of theſe above rehearſed, were three men burnt at Beckles in Suffolke, in one fire, about the 21. of May, Anno 1556. Whoſe names are here ſpecified.

Thomas Spicer of Winſton, Labourer.
Iohn Denny and Edmund Poole.

This Thomas Spicer was a ſingle man, of the age of nineteene yeeres, and by vocation a Labourer, dwelling in Winſton in the Countie of Suffolke, and there taken in his Maſters houſe in Summer, about or anon after the riſing of the Sunne (being in his bed) by James Ling and John Keretch of the ſame towne, and William Davies of Debnam in the ſaid Countie.

James Ling, John Keretch, Wil. Davies, perſecutors.

The occaſion of his taking was, for that he would not goe to their Popiſh Church to heare Maſſe, and receive their Idoll at the commandement of ſir John Tyrel Knight, of Gipping hall in Suffolke, and certaine other Juſtices there, who ſent both him and them to Eye dungeon in Suffolke, till at length they were all three together brought before Dunning then Chancellor of Norwich, and M. Mings the Regiſter ſitting at the town of Beckles to be examined.

Dunning, and Mings, perſecutors.

And there the ſaid Chancellor, perſwading what he could to turne them from the truth, could by no means prevaile of his purpoſe. Wherefore minding in the end to give ſentence on them, he burſt out in teares, intreating them to remember themſelves, and to turne againe to the holy mother Church, for that they were deceived and out of the truth, and that they ſhould not wilfully caſt away themſelves, with ſuch like words.

Now as he was thus labouring them, and ſeemed very loth to read the ſentence (for they were the firſt that he condemned in that Dioceſſe) the Regiſter there ſitting by, being wearie belike of tarrying, or elſe perceiving the conſtant Martyrs to be at a point, called upon the Chancellor in haſte to rid them out of the way, and to make an end. At the which words the Chancellor read the condemnation over them with teares, and delivered them to the ſecular power.

Their Articles.

The Articles objected to theſe, and commonly to all other condemned in that Dioceſſe by Doctor Hopton Biſhop of Norwich, and by Dunning his Chancellour, were theſe:

The articles whereupon they were condemned.

1 Firſt, it was articulate againſt them, that they beleeved not the Pope of Rome to be ſupreme head immediately under Chriſt in earth of the univerſall Catholike Church.

2 Item, that they beleeved not holy bread and holy water, aſhes, palmes, and all other like ceremonies uſed in the Church, to be good and laudable for ſtirring up the people to devotion.

Ceremonies.

3 Item, that they beleeved not, after the words of conſecration ſpoken by the Prieſt, the very naturall body of Chriſt, and no other ſubſtance of bread and wine to be in the Sacrament of the Altar.

4 Item, that they beleeved it to be Idolatrie to worſhip Chriſt in the ſacrament of the altar.

Sacrament of the Altar.

5 Item, that they took bread and wine in remembrance of Chriſts paſſion.

6 Item, that they would not follow the Croſſe in Proceſſion, nor be confeſſed to a Prieſt.

7 Item, that they affirmed no mortall man to have in himſelfe free-will to doe good or evill.

For this doctrine and articles above prefixed, theſe three (as is aforeſaid) were condemned by D. Dunning, and committed to the ſecular power, ſir John Silliard being the ſame time high Sheriffe of Norfolke and Suffolke.

And the next day following upon the ſame, they were all burnt together in the ſaid towne of Beckles. Whereupon it is to be thought, that the Writ De comburendo was not yet come down, nor could be, the Lord Chancellour Biſhop Heath being the ſame time at London. Which if it be true, then it is plaine, that both they went beyond their Commiſſion, that were the Executioners, and alſo the Clergie, which were the inſtigators thereof, cannot make good that they now pretend; ſaying, that they did nothing but by law. But this let the Lord finde out when he ſeeth his time.

Execution of burning in Suffolke done without a writ.

In the meane time while theſe good men were at the ſtake, and had prayed, they ſaid their beliefe; and when they came to the reciting of the Catholike Church, ſir John Silliard ſpake to them; That is well ſaid ſirs, quoth he, I am glad to hear you ſay, you do beleeve the catholike Church. That is the beſt word I have heard of you yet.

Sir John Silliards words.

Edmund Pool refuſeth the Popiſh Church.

To which his ſayings Edmund Poole anſwered, that though they beleeve the catholike Church, yet doe they not beleeve in their Popiſh Church, which is no part of Chriſts Catholike Church, and therefore no part of their beliefe.

When they roſe from prayer, they all went joyfully to the ſtake, and being bound thereto, and the fire burning about them, they praiſed God in ſuch an audible voice, that it was wonderfull to all thoſe which ſtood by and heard them.

Robert Bacon an enemy.

Then one Robert Bacon, dwelling in the ſaid Beckles, a very enemie of Gods truth, and a perſecutor of his people, being there preſent within hearing thereof, willed the tormentors to throw one fagot to ſtop the knaves breathes, as he termed them; ſo hot was his burning charitie. But theſe good men, not regarding their malice, confeſſed the truth, and yeelded their lives to the death for the teſtimony of the ſame, very gloriouſly and joyfully. The which their conſtancie in the like cauſe the Lord grant we may imitate and follow unto the end: Whether it be death or life, to glorifie the name of Chriſt, Amen.

And forſomuch as we have here entred into the perſecution of Northfolke and Suffolke, it cometh therefore to minde, by occaſion hereof, briefly to touch by the way, ſome part (for the whole matter cannot be ſo expreſt as it was done) touching the troubles of the towne of Winſon and Mendleſam in Suffolke, raiſed and ſtirred by the ſaid ſir John Tyrel and other Juſtices there of the like affinitie. The ſumme and effect of which briefly is thus ſignified to me by writing.

The perſecution in the townes of Winſon and Mendleſam in Suffolke.

Sir Jo. Tyrel perſecutor. Perſecution at Winſon and Mendleſam in Suffolke.

By the procurement of ſir John Tyrel Knight, and other of his colleagues, there were perſecuted out of the towne of Winſon in Suffolke theſe perſons hereafter following, Anno 1556.

The names of good men perſecuted in Suff. at Mendleſam.

Miſtreſſe Alice Twaites Gentlewoman, of the age of threeſcore yeeres and more, and two of her ſervants.
Humfrey Smith and his wife.
William Catchpoole and his wife.
Iohn Mauling and his wife.
Nicholas Burlingham and his wife.
And one Rought and his wife.

Such as were perſecuted and driven out of the towne of Mendleſam, in the Countie of Suffolke.

Simon Harlſtone, and Katherine his wife, with his five children.
William Whitting, and Katherine his wife.
Thomas Dobſon and his wife.
Thomas Hubbard and his wife.
Iohn Doncon, and his wife, and his mayde.
William Doncon.
Thomas Woodward the elder.
One Konnolds wife.
A poore widow.
One mother Semons mayde.

Gods people perſecuted.

Beſides thoſe that were conſtrained to doe againſt their conſcience, by the helpe of the Pariſh Prieſt, whoſe name was ſir John Brodiſh.

Theſe be the chiefeſt cauſes why thoſe above named were perſecuted.

The faith and doctrine of theſe men.

First, they did hold and beleeve the holy Word of God to be the ſufficient doctrine unto their ſalvation.

Secondly, they denied the Popes uſurped authoritie, and did hold all that Church of Antichriſt to be Chriſts adverſaries. And further, they refuſed the abuſed ſacraments, defied the Maſſe and all Popiſh ſervice and ceremonies, ſaying, they robbed God of his honour, and Chriſt of his death and glory, and would not come at the Church, without it were to the defacing of that they did there.

Thirdly, they did hold that the Miniſters of the Church by Gods Word might lawfully marry.

Fourthly, they held the Queene to be as chiefe head, and wicked rulers to be a great plague ſent of God for ſinne, &c.

Fifthly, they denied mans free-will, and held that the Popes Church did erre, and many other in that point with them, rebuking their falſe confidence in workes, and their falſe truſt in mans righteouſneſſe. Alſo when any rebuked thoſe perſecuted for going ſo openly, and talking ſo freely; their anſwer was, they knowledged, confeſſed, and beleeved, and therefore they muſt ſpeake: and that their tribulation was Gods good will and providence, and that his judgements were right, to puniſh them with other for their ſins; and that of very faithfulneſſe and mercy GOD had cauſed them to be troubled, ſo that one haire of their heads ſhould not periſh before the time, but all things ſhould work unto the beſt to them that love GOD, and that Chriſt Jeſus was their life and onely righteouſneſſe, and that onely by faith in him, and for his ſake all good things were freely given them, alſo forgiveneſſe of ſins and life everlaſting.

Witneſſed by the faithfull report of Suffolke men.

Many of theſe perſecuted were of great ſubſtance, and had poſſeſſions of their owne.

Give God the praiſe.

¶ Foraſmuch as we are now in the moneth of May, before we overpaſſe the ſame, and becauſe the ſtorie is not long, and not unworthy peradventure of noting, it ſhall not grieve the ſtudious Reader, a little to give the hearing thereof, whereby to learne to marvell and muſe at the great workes of the Lord. They that goe downe (ſaith the Pſalme) into the ſea, labouring upon the water, have ſeene the workes of the Lord, and his mightie wonders upon the deepe, Pſal. 106. &c. The truth whereof may well appeare in this ſtorie following; which ſtorie as it is ſignified and written to me by relation of the partie himſelfe which was doer thereof, called Thomas Morſe, ſo I thought to purport the ſame as followeth.

A ſtory of one Gregory Crow, marvellouſly preſerved with his New Teſtament upon the ſeas, May 26.

A ſtory of Gregory Crow marvellouſly preſerved upon the ſea with his New Teſtament.

Vpon Tueſday after Whitſunday, which was the 26. day of May, in this preſent yeere 1556. (or elſe, as he rather thinketh, in the yeere next before, which was 1555.) a certaine poore man, whoſe name was Gregorie Crow, dwelling in Maulden, went to the ſea, minding to have gone into Kent for Fulling earth, but by the way, being foule weather, was driven upon a ſand, where preſently the boate ſunke, and was full of water, ſo that the men were forced to hold themſelves by the maſt of the boate, and all things that would ſwimme did ſwimme out of her. Amongſt which Crow ſaw his Teſtament in the water, and caught it and put it in his boſome. Now it was ebbing water, ſo that within one houre the boate was drie, but broken ſo as they could not ſave her; but they went themſelves upon the ſand (being ten miles at the leaſt from the land) and there made their prayers together, that God would ſend ſome ſhip that way to ſave them (being two men and one boy in all;) for they might not tarry upon the ſand but halfe an houre, but it would be floud. In the which time they found their cheſt wherein was money to the ſumme of five pound ſixe ſhillings eight pence, the which money the man which was with the ſaid Crow (whoſe name I know not) tooke and gave it unto Crow who was owner thereof, and he caſt it into the ſea, ſaying; If the Lord will ſave our lives he will provide us a living, and ſo they went upon the maſt there, hanging by the armes and legges for the ſpace of ten houres, in the which time the boy was ſo weary and beaten with the ſea, that he fell off and was drowned.

Crowes boate broken upon the ſand.

Crow taketh his Teſtament, and caſteth his money away.

The boy beaten with the ſea, and drowned.

And when the water was gone againe, and the ſand drie, Crow ſaid to his man, It were beſt for us to take down our maſts, and when the floud cometh we will ſit upon them, and ſo it may pleaſe GOD to bring us to ſome ſhip that may take us up. Which thing they did, and ſo at ten of the clocke in the night of the ſame Tueſday, the floud did beare up the maſt whereupon they ſate.

And upon the Wedneſday in the night the man died, being overcome with hunger and watching. So there was none left but this Crow, who, driving up and down in the ſea, called upon God as he could, and might not ſleep for feare that the ſea would have beaten him off.

Crowes man dead upon the maſt.

Gregorie Crow driven upon the ſeas ſitting upon a maſt.

So at length I my ſelfe (ſaid Thomas Morſe) being laden to Antwerpe with my Crayer, going from Lee upon Friday, having within my Crayer, of Mariners and Merchants, to the number of 46. perſons, and ſo coming to the Foreland, the winde was not very good, ſo that I was conſtrained to goe ſomewhat out of my way, being in the afternoone about ſixe of the clocke, where at the laſt we ſaw a thing a farre off, appearing unto us like a ſmall boy, that Fiſhermen do uſe to lay with their hookes.

Gods providence to be noted.

When we ſaw it, ſome ſaid, Let us have ſome fiſh. And I ſaid to him that was at the helme; Keepe your courſe away, for we ſhall but hinder the Fiſherman, and have no fiſh neither, and ſo at my commandement he did. But at length he at the helme ſtanding higher then all we did, ſaid; Me thinke Maſter, it is a man. But yet they, being in doubt that it was but a Fiſhers Boy, returned the ſhip from him againe to keepe their courſe.

God a marvellous helper in time of need.

Crow beholding the ſhip to turne from him, being then in utter deſpaire, and readie now to periſh with watching, famine, and moreover miſerably beaten with the ſeas, at laſt tooke his Mariners cap from his head, and holding up the ſame with his arme, as high as he could, thought by ſhaking it as well as he might, to give them ſome token of better ſight.

Whereupon the Steeremán more ſenſibly perceiving a thing to move, advertiſed us againe, declaring how he did ſee plainly a mans arme; and with that we all beheld him well, and ſo came to him and tooke him up. And as ſoone as we had him in our ſhip, he began to put his hand in his boſome; and one asked him if he had money there. No, ſaid he, I have a booke here, I thinke it be wet; and ſo drew out his Teſtament which we then dried. But the ſea had ſo beaten him, that his eyes, noſe, and mouth were almoſt cloſed with ſalt, that the heate of his face and the weather had made. So we made a fire and ſhifted him with drie clothes, and gave him Aqua compoſita to drinke, and ſuch meate as was in the ſhip, and then let him ſleep.

Crow with the Teſtament preſerved on the ſea.

The next day we awaked him about eight of the clocke in the morning, and his blood began ſomewhat to appeare in his fleſh (for when we tooke him up, his fleſh was even as though it had beene ſodden, or as a drowned mans is) and then we talked with him of all the matter before rehearſed. And ſo ſayling to Antwerpe, the Merchants which ſaw the thing publiſhed the ſame in Antwerpe; and becauſe it was wonderfull, the people there both men and women came to the ſhip to ſee him many of them. Some gave him a petticoate, and ſome a ſhirt, ſome hoſen, and ſome money (alwaies noting how he caſt away his money, and kept his booke.)

And many of the women wept when they heard and ſaw him. And Maſter Governour of the Engliſh nation there had him before him, and talked with him of all the matter; and pittying his caſe, commanded the Officer of the Engliſh houſe to goe with him to the free Oſte houſes amongſt the Engliſh Merchants, and I with them, and at three houſes there was given him ſix pound ten ſhillings. And ſo from thence he went with me to Roane, where the people alſo came to him to ſee him, marvelling at the great workes of God.

The ſumme of his money caſt into the ſea reſtored him againe.

And thus much concerning this poore man with his New Teſtament preſerved in the Sea (which Teſtament the Popes Clergie condemneth on the land) ye have heard, as I received by the relation of the partie above named, who was the doer thereof, and yet alive dwelling in Lee, well knowne to all Merchants of London. In which ſtorie this by the way underſtand, good Reader (which rightly may be ſuppoſed) that if this poore man, thus found and preſerved in the Sea with a New Teſtament in his boſome, had had inſtead of that a Pixe with a conſecrated hoſte about him, no doubt it had beene rung ere this time all Chriſtendome over for a miracle, ſo farre as the Pope hath any land. But to let the Pope with his falſe miracles goe, let us returne again to our matter begun, and adjoyne another hiſtorie of much like condition, teſtified likewiſe by the information of the ſaid Thomas Morſe above mentioned, to the intent to make knowne the worthy acts of the Almightie; that he may be magnified in all his wondrous works. The ſtorie is thus declared, which happened, Anno 1556. about Michaelmas.

Another like ſtory of Gods providence, upon three men delivered upon the ſea.

There was a ſhip (ſaith the ſaid Thomas Morſe) whereof I had a part, going toward the Bay for ſalt, with two ſhips of Brickleſey, which Another like ſtory of three men that feared God, by Gods providence preſerved on the ſeas.

Three ſitting upon a peece of their ſhip two dayes and two nights in the ſea.

were altogether going for ſalt, as before is ſaid. At what time we were within tenne mile of the North Foreland, otherwiſe called Tenet, the winde did come ſo contrarie to our ſhip, that we were forced to goe cleane out of the way, and the other two ſhips kept their courſe ſtill, untill our ſhip was almoſt out of ſight of them. And then they ſaw a thing driving upon the ſea, and hoiſed up their boat and went unto it; and it was three men ſitting upon a peece of their ſhip, which had ſitten ſo two dayes and two nights.

There had beene in their ſhip eight men more, which were drowned, being all Frenchmen, dwelling in a place in France called Olloronne. They had beene at Danſwike and loſt their ſhip about Orford Nas, as might be learned by their words. They were men that feared God, the one of them was owner of the Ship. Their exerciſe, while they were in our ſhip, was, that after their coming in, they gave thanks for their deliverance: both morning and evening they exerciſed prayer, and alſo before and after meate; and when they came into France, our ſhips went to the ſame place where theſe men dwelled, and one of them did ſell unto our men their ſhips lading of ſalt, and did uſe them very courteouſly and friendly, and not at that time onely, but alwaies whenſoever that ſhip cometh thither (as ſhe hath beene there twice ſince) he alwaies doth for them, ſo that they can lacke nothing. I ſhould have noted that after our ſhip had taken up thoſe three men out of the ſea, they had the winde faire preſently, and came and overtooke the other two ſhips againe, and ſo they proceeded in their voyage together.

¶ For the more credit of this ſtory above recited, to ſatisfie either the doubtfull, or to prevent the quareller, I have not onely alledged the name of the partie which was the doer thereof, but alſo expreſſed the matter in his owne words as I of him received it; the partie and reporter himſelfe being yet alive, and dwelling at Lee, a man ſo well knowne amongſt the merchants of London, that whoſoever heareth the name of Thomas Morſe, will never doubt thereof. And againe, the matter it ſelfe being ſo notoriouſly knowne to Merchants as well here as at Antwerpe, that though his name were not expreſſed, the ſtory can lack no witneſſes.

The death of William Slech in the Kings Bench.

May 31. William Slech dead in the Kings Bench, and buried in the fields.

The laſt day of the ſaid moneth of May, in the yeere aforeſaid, William Slech being in priſon for the ſaid doctrine of the Lords Goſpel, and the confeſſion of his truth, died in the Kings Bench, and was buried on the backſide of the ſaid priſon, for that the Romiſh Catholike ſpiritualty thought him not worthy to come within their Pope holy Church-yards, neither in any other Chriſtian buriall, as they call it.

The ſtory of foure men condemned at Lewys the 6. day of Iune.

June 6. 4. Martyrs burnt at Lewys

In June next following, about the firſt day of the ſame moneth, foure Martyrs ſuffered together at Lewys, whoſe names were theſe:

Thomas Harland of Woodmancote,
Carpenter.
Iohn Oſwald of Woodmancote,
Huſbandman.
Thomas Avington of Ardingly,
Turner.
Thomas Read.

To Thomas Harland I finde in the Biſhop of Londons Regiſters, to be objected for not coming to Church. Whereunto he anſwered, that after the maſſe was reſtored, he never had will to heare the ſame, becauſe (ſaid he) it was in Latine which he did not underſtand, and therefore as good, quoth he, never a whit as never the better.

Ex Regiſt. Anſwer of Tho. Harland.

Anſwer of Io. Oſwald.

John Oſwald denied to anſwer any thing, untill his accuſers ſhould be brought face to face before him; and nevertheleſſe ſaid, that fire and fagots could not make him afraid: but as the good Preachers which were in King Edwards time have ſuffered and gone before, ſo was he ready to ſuffer and come after, and would be glad thereof.

Theſe foure, after long impriſonment in the Kings Bench, were burned together at Lewys in Suſſex, in one fire, the day of the moneth aforeſaid.

The Martyrdome of Thomas Whood, and Thomas Milles.

June 20. Two Martyrs burnt at Lewys

In the ſame towne of Lewys, and in the ſame moneth likewiſe, were burned Thomas Whood Miniſter, and Thomas Milles, about the twentieth day of the ſame moneth, for reſiſting the erroneous and hereticall doctrine of the pretended Catholike Church of Rome.

Two dead in the Kings Bench.

June 24. W. Adherall.

June 25. John Clement.

In the which moneth likewiſe, William Adherall Miniſter, impriſoned in the Kings Bench, there died the 24. day of the ſame moneth, and was buried on the backſide: Alſo John Clement Wheelewright, who dying in the ſaid priſon, in like ſort upon the dunghill was buried in the backſide two dayes after, viz. the 25. day of June.

A Merchants ſervant burned at Leyceſter.

June 26. A Merchants ſervant.

The next day following of the ſaid moneth of June, we reade of a certaine young man a Merchants ſervant, who for the like godlineſſe ſuffered cruell perſecution of the Papiſts, and was burnt at Lyceſter, the 26. day of the moneth of June above named.

Thirteene Martyrs burned at Stratford the Bowe.

June 27. 13. Martyrs ſuffering at Stratford the Bowe.

Not long after the death of the Merchans ſervant, before mentioned, there followed in this happie and bleſſed order of Martyrs burned in one fire at Stratford the Bowe by London, eleven men and two women; whoſe dwellings were in ſundry places in Eſſex, and whoſe names hereafter follow.

Agnes George.

Unto whom the 6. of June, An. 1556. D. Darbyſhire, Boners Chancellor, in forme of law miniſtred the ſame articles that were propounded unto Tho. Whittle and his company, mentioned before, to the which they made their ſeverall anſwers, in ſimplicitie and in a good conſcience. The ſumme and effect whereof enſueth.

To the firſt, they all anſwered affirmatively;

but Lyon Cawch added further, that he beleeved that the true faith and religion of Chriſt is, whereſoever the Word of God is truly preached.

Anſwer to the 2. article.

To the ſecond Article they all anſwered in effect, denying that there be ſeven Sacraments; ſome affirming that in the Church of Chriſt there be but two Sacraments, that is to ſay, Baptiſme and the Lords Supper: Others referring themſelves to beleeve as the Scripture teacheth them: And other ſome refuſed to make anſwer becauſe of their ſimplicitie.

Anſwer to the 3. article.

To the third Article they all anſwered affirmatively.

Anſwer to the 4. article.

To the fourth Article they all anſwered affirmatively; ſaving John Routh, who ſaid he would make no anſwer thereunto. But Lyon Cawch added, that he beleeved the Article to be true; but it was becauſe he had no better knowledge. And Agnes George added, that in King Edward the ſixth his time ſhe went from her old faith and religion, and beleeved in the faith and religion that was then taught and ſet forth.

Anſwer to the 5. article.

To the fifth they all anſwered in effect affirmatively; ſaving John Routh, whoſe anſwer was, that the Maſſe is ſuch a thing, which neither can nor will enter into his conſcience. And Henrie Adlington anſwered, that for nine or ten yeeres before, he miſliked the Maſſe, and alſo the Sacrament of the Altar, becauſe they cannot be proved by the Scriptures. And as touching the authoritie of the See of Rome, he being but foureteene yeeres of age, took an oath againſt the ſame, which oath (he ſaid) he intended to keepe by the grace of God.

Anſwer to the 6. article.

To the ſixth they all anſwered affirmatively; ſaving John Routh, and William Halliwell, who both refuſed to anſwer, becauſe they knew not what they meant by this Article. But the two Women added, that they refuſed to be reconciled to the faith and religion that was then uſed in the Realme of England. And Laurence Pernam added, that he never refuſed to be reconciled and brought to unitie of the Catholique Church of Chriſt.

Anſwer to the 7. article.

To the ſeventh Article they all anſwered affirmatively; but William Halliwell denied that ever he called the Maſſe Idolatrie and abomination. And Henry Wye affirming the Article to be true; yet he confeſſed his infirmitie, that he went to his Pariſh Church and received, before he was put in priſon.

Anſwer to the 8. article.

To the eighth Article Edmund Hurſt, Ralfe Jackſon, and George Searles anſwered affirmatively: Henry Wye ſaid he was brought before certaine Juſtices of Peace in Eſſex, concerning one Higbed his late Maſter, and thereupon he was committed to Colcheſter Caſtle, and from thence ſent to London to the Biſhop to be further examined. William Halliwell affirmed the like confeſſion as Henrie Wye did, only Higbed excepted. John Derifall ſaid he was called before the Lord Rich, and Maſter Mildmay of Chelmeſford, and was by them ſent to Boner Biſhop of London, to be further by him examined. Thomas Bowyer ſaid he was brought before one Maſter Wiſeman of Felſed, and by him was ſent to Colcheſter Caſtle, and from thence was carried to Boner Biſhop of London, to be by him further examined. Lyon Cawch ſaid that he was ſent to come before the King and Queenes Majeſties Commiſſioners, and there before them appearing three times, was ſent to Boner Biſhop of London, to be by him further examined. Henry Adlington ſaid, that he coming to Newgate to ſpeake with one Gratwike there being priſoner for the teſtimonie of Jeſus Chriſt, was apprehended and brought before Doctor Storie, and by him ſent to Boner Biſhop of London, to be by him further examined. John Routh ſaid, that he was convented before the Earle of Oxford, and by him ſent to the Caſtle of Colcheſter, and from thence conveighed to Boner Biſhop of London, to be by him further examined. Laurence Pernam ſaid; that he was committed to Hartford priſon, becauſe he would not goe to Church, and from thence ſent to Boner Biſhop of London, to be by him further examined. Agnes George ſaid, that ſhe was committed to priſon in Colcheſter, at the commandement of one Maſter Maynard an Alderman of the towne, becauſe ſhe would not goe to Church, and from thence was ſent to Boner Biſhop of London, to be by him further examined. Elizabeth Pepper ſaid ſhe was apprehended by two Conſtables and an Alderman, for that ſhe would not come to Church, and by them was ſent to Boner Biſhop of London, to be by him further examined.

Anſwer to the 9. article.

To the ninth Article, they all beleeved the premiſſes to be true above by them confeſſed, and that they were of the Dioceſſe and juriſdiction of London. But Elizabeth Pepper added, that ſhe was of the towne of Colcheſter.

And Agnes George added, that ſhe was of the Pariſh of Barefold. And Lyon Cawch added, that he was then of the Citie of London, by reaſon that he was at that preſent a Merchant there.

Henry Wye.

Henry Wye Brewer, was of the Pariſh of Stantford le Hore, and of 32. yeeres of age.

Wil. Halliwel.

William Halliwell was a Smith, of the Pariſh of Waltham Hollecroſſe, and of the age of 24. yeeres, or thereabouts.

Rafe Jackſon.

Rafe Jackſon was a Servingman, of Shepping Onger, and of the age of 24. yeeres.

Lau. Pernam.

Laurence Pernam was a Smith of Hodſdon, within the Pariſh of Amwell, in the Countie of Hartford, and of the age of 22. yeeres.

John Derifall.

John Derifall was a Labourer, of the Pariſh of Kettington in Eſſex, and of the age of 50. yeers.

Edmund Hurſt.

Edmund Hurſt was a Labourer, of the Pariſh of St. James in Colcheſter, and of the age of 50. yeers and above.

Tho. Bowyer.

Thomas Bowyer was a Weaver of Much Dunnemowe, and of the age of 36. yeers.

Geor. Searles.

George Searles was a Taylor, between 20. or 21. yeers of age, of the Pariſh of White Nottle, where he was taken and carried to the Lord Rich, who ſent him to Colcheſter Caſtle, with a commandement that no friend he had ſhould ſpeake with him. There he lay ſixe weeks, and was ſent up to London, where he was ſometime in the Biſhops Colehouſe, ſometime in Lollards Tower, and laſt of all in Newgate. He was apprehended in Lent about a fortnight before Eaſter in the place aforeſaid.

Lyon Cawch.

Lyon Cawce was a Broker, borne in Flanders, and then reſident, at his taking, in the Citie of London, and of the age of 28. yeeres or thereabouts.

Hen. Adlington.

Henrie Adlington was a Sawyer, and of Greenſted in the countie of Suſſex, and of the age of 30. yeers.

John Routh.

John Routh was a Labourer, and of the pariſh of Wiekes in Eſſex, and of the age of 26. yeers.

Eliz. Pepper.

Elizabeth Pepper was the wife of Thomas Pepper Weaver, of the Pariſh of Saint James in the Towne of Colcheſter, and of the age of 30. yeers, or thereabouts, who when ſhe was burned at Stratford, was eleven weeks gone with childe, as ſhe then teſtified to one Boſoms wife, who then unlooſed her neckerchiefe, ſaying moreover, when ſhe was asked why ſhe did not tell them, and anſwering, Why, quoth ſhe, they knew it well enough. Ex Regiſt. Anſwer of Tho. Harland.

Anſwer of Io. Oſwald.

Iohn Oſwald denied to anſwer any thing, untill his accuſers ſhould be brought face to face before him; and neverthelesse ſaid, that fire and fagots could not make him afraid: but as the good Preachers which were in King Edwards time have ſuffered and gone before, ſo was he ready to ſuffer and come after, and would be glad thereof.

Theſe foure, after long impriſonment in the Kings Bench, were burned together at Lewys in Suſſex, in one fire, the day of the moneth aforeſaid.

The Martyrdome of Thomas Whood, and Thomas Milles.

Iune 20. Two Martyrs burnt at Lewys.

IN the ſame towne of Lewys, and in the ſame moneth likewiſe, were burned Thomas Whood Miniſter, and Thomas Milles, about the twentieth day of the ſame moneth, for reſiſting the erroneous and hereticall doctrine of the pretended Catholike Church of Rome.

Two dead in the Kings Bench.

Iune 24. W. Adherall.

Iune 25. Iohn Clement.

IN the which moneth likewiſe, William Adherall Miniſter, impriſoned in the Kings Bench, there died the 24. day of the ſame moneth, and was buried on the backſide: Alſo Iohn Clement Wheelewright, who dying in the ſaid priſon, in like ſort upon the dunghill was buried in the backſide two dayes after, viz. the 25. day of Iune.

A Merchants ſervant burned at Leyceſter.

Iune 26. A Merchants ſervant.

THe next day following of the ſaid moneth of Iune, we reade of a certaine young man a Merchants ſervant, who for the like godlineſſe ſuffered cruell perſecution of the Papiſts, and was burnt at Leyceſter, the 26. day of the moneth of Iune above named.

Thirteene Martyrs burned at Stratford the Bowe.

Iune 27. 13. Martyrs ſuffering at Stratford the Bowe.

NOt long after the death of the Merchans ſervant, before mentioned, there followed in this happie and bleſſed order of Martyrs burned in one fire at Stratford the Bowe by London, eleven men and two women; whoſe dwellings were in ſundry places in Eſſex, and whoſe names hereafter follow.

Unto whom the 6. of Iune, An. 1556. D. Darbyſhire. Boners Chancellor, in forme of law miniſtred the ſame articles that were propounded unto Tho. Whittle and his company, mentioned before, to the which they made their ſeverall anſwers, in ſimplicitie and in a good conſcience. The ſumme and effect whereof enſueth.

To the firſt, they all anſwered affirmatively; but

Their anſwers to the articles.

but Lyon Cawch added further, that he beléeved that the true faith and religion of Chriſt is, wherſoever the Word of God is truly preached.

Anſwer to the 2. article.

To the ſecond Article they all anſwered in effect, denying that there be ſeven Sacraments; ſome affirming that in the Church of Chriſt there be but two Sacraments, that is to ſay, Baptiſme and the Lords Supper: Others referring themſelves to beléeve as the Scripture teacheth them: And other ſome refuſed to make anſwer becauſe of their ſimplicitie.

Anſwer to the 3. article.

To the third Article they all anſwered affirmatively.

Anſwer to the 4. article.

To the fourth Article they all anſwered affirmatively; ſaving John Routh, who ſaid he would make no anſwer thereunto. But Lyon Cawch added, that he beléeved the Article to be true; but it was becauſe he had no better knowledge. And Agnes George added, that in King Edward the ſixth his time ſhe went from her old faith and religion, and beléeved in the faith and religion that was then taught and ſet forth.

Anſwer to the 5. article.

To the fifth they all anſwered in effect affirmatively; ſaving John Routh, whoſe anſwer was, that the Maſſe is ſuch a thing, which neither can nor will enter into his conſcience. And Henrie Adlington anſwered, that for nine or ten yéeres before, he miſliked the Maſſe, and alſo the Sacrament of the Altar, becauſe they cannot be proved by the Scriptures. And as touching the authoritie of the Sée of Rome, he being but fourtéene yéeres of age, took an oath againſt the ſame, which oath (he ſaid) he intended to kéepe by the grace of God.

Anſwer to the 6. article.

To the ſixth they all anſwered affirmatively; ſaving John Routh, and William Halliwell, who both refuſed to anſwer, becauſe they knew not what they meant by this Article. But the two Women added, that they refuſed to be reconciled to the faith and religion that was then uſed in the Realme of England. And Laurence Pernam added, that he never refuſed to be reconciled and brought to unitie of the Catholique Church of Chriſt.

Anſwer to the 7. article.

To the ſeventh Article they all anſwered affirmatively; but William Halliwell denied that ever he called the Maſſe Idolatrie and abomination. And Henry Wye affirming the Article to be true; yet he confeſſed his infirmitie, that he went to his Pariſh Church and received, before he was put in priſon.

Anſwer to the 8. article.

To the eighth Article Edmund Hurſt, Ralfe Jackſon, and George Searles anſwered affirmatively: Henry Wye ſaid he was brought before certaine Juſtices of Peace in Eſſex, concerning one Higbed his late Maſter, and thereupon he was committed to Colcheſter Caſtle, and from thence ſent to London to the Biſhop to be further examined. William Halliwell affirmed the like confeſſion as Henrie Wye did, only Higbed excepted. John Derifall ſaid he was called before the Lord Rich, and Maſter Mildmay of Chelmeſford, and was by them ſent to Boner Biſhop of London, to be further by him examined. Thomas Bowyer ſaid he was brought before one Maſter Wiſeman of Felſed, and by him was ſent to Colcheſter Caſtle, and from thence was carried to Boner Biſhop of London, to be by him further examined. Lyon Cawch ſaid that he was ſent to come before the King and Quéenes Majeſties Commiſſioners, and there before them appearing thrée times, was ſent to Boner Biſhop of London, to be by him further examined. Henry Adlington ſaid, that he coming to Newgate to ſpeake with one Gratwike there being priſoner for the teſtimonie of Jeſus Chriſt, was apprehended and brought before Doctor Storie, and by him ſent to Boner Biſhop of London, to be by him further examined. John Routh ſaid, that he was convented before the Earle of Oxford, and by him ſent to the Caſtle of Colcheſter, and from thence conveighed to Boner Biſhop of London, to be by him further examined. Laurence Pernam ſaid, that he was committed to Hartford priſon, becauſe he would not goe to Church, and from thence ſent to Boner Biſhop of London, to be by him further examined. Agnes George ſaid, that ſhe was committed to priſon in Colcheſter, at the commandement of one Maſter Maynard an Alderman of the towne, becauſe ſhe would not goe to Church, and from thence was ſent to Boner Biſhop of London, to be by him further examined. Elizabeth Pepper ſaid ſhe was apprehended by two Conſtables and an Alderman, for that ſhe would not come to Church, and by them was ſent to Boner Biſhop of London, to be by him further examined.

Anſwer to the 9. article.

To the ninth Article, they all beleeved the premiſſes to be true above by them confeſſed, and that they were of the Dioceſſe and juriſdiction of London. But Elizabeth Pepper added, that ſhe was of the towne of Colcheſter.

And Agnes George added, that ſhe was of the Pariſh of Barefold. And Lyon Cawch added, that he was then of the Citie of London, by reaſon that he was at that preſent a Merchant there.

Henry Wye.

Henry Wye Brewer, was of the Pariſh of Stantford le Hore, and of 32. yéeres of age.

Wil. Halliwel.

William Halliwell was a Smith, of the Pariſh of Waltham Hollecroſſe, and of the age of 24. yéeres, or thereabouts.

Rafe Jackſon.

Rafe Jackſon was a Servingman, of Shepping Onger, and of the age of 24. yeeres.

Lau. Pernam.

Laurence Pernam was a Smith of Hodſdon, within the Pariſh of Amwell, in the Countie of Hartford, and of the age of 22. yeeres.

John Derifall.

John Derifall was a Labourer, of the Pariſh of Rettington in Eſſex, and of the age of 50. yeers.

Edmund Hurſt.

Edmund Hurſt was a Labourer, of the Pariſh of St. James in Colcheſter, and of the age of 50. yeers and above.

Tho. Bowyer.

Thomas Bowyer was a Weaver of Much Dunnemowe, and of the age of 36. yeers.

Geor. Searles.

George Searles was a Taylor, between 20. or 21. yeers of age, of the Pariſh of White Nottle, where he was taken and carried to the Lord Rich, who ſent him to Colcheſter Caſtle, with a commandement that no friend he had ſhould ſpeake with him. There he lay ſixe weeks, and was ſent up to London, where he was ſometime in the Biſhops Colehouſe, ſometime in Lollards Tower, and laſt of all in Newgate. He was apprehended in Lent about a fortnight before Eaſter in the place aforeſaid.

Lyon Cawch.

Lyon Cawce was a Broker, borne in Flanders, and then reſident, at his taking, in the Citie of London, and of the age of 28. yeeres or thereabouts.

Hen. Adlington.

Henrie Adlington was a Sawyer, and of Greenſted in the countie of Suſſex, and of the age of 30. yeers.

John Routh.

John Routh was a Labourer, and of the pariſh of Wiekes in Eſſex, and of the age of 26. yeers.

Eliz. Pepper.

Elizabeth Pepper was the wife of Thomas Pepper Weaver, of the Pariſh of Saint James in the Towne of Colcheſter, and of the age of 30. yeers, or thereabouts, who when ſhe was burned at Stratford, was eleven weeks gone with childe, as ſhe then teſtified to one Boſoms wife, who then unlooſed her neckerchiefe, ſaying moreover, when ſhe was asked why ſhe did not tell them, and anſwering, Why, quoth ſhe, they knew it well enough. Oh ſuch be the bloudie hearts of this cruell generation, that no occaſion can ſtay them from their miſchievous murthering of the Saints of the Lord, which truly profeſſe Chriſt crucified onely and alone, for the ſatisfaction of their ſinnes.

Agnes George. Ex. Regiſt.

Agnes George was the wife of Richard George Husbandman, of Weſt Barefold in the countie of Eſſex, and of the age of 26. yeers. This Richard George had another wife burned beſide her in the Poſterne at Colcheſter, and himſelfe lay in priſon untill Queene Elizabeth came to the crowne, and then was delivered.

When theſe thirteene were condemned, and the day appointed they ſhould ſuffer, which was the 27. day of June, An. 1556. they were carried from Newgate in London the ſaid day to Stratford the Bowe (which was the place appointed for their martyrdome) and there divided into two parts, in two ſeverall chambers. Afterward the Sheriffe who there attended upon them, came to the one part, and told them that the other had recanted, and their lives therefore ſhould be ſaved, willing and exhorting them to doe the like, and not to caſt away themſelves.

A practice of policy in the Sheriffe of London.

Unto whom they anſwered, that their faith was not builded on man, but on Chriſt crucified. Then the Sheriffe perceiving no good to be done with them, went to the other part, and ſaid (like a lyar) the like to them, that they whom he had been with before, had recanted, and ſhould therefore not ſuffer death, counſelling them to doe the like, and not wilfully to kill themſelves, but to play the wiſe men, &c.

Unto whom they anſwered as their brethren had done before, that their faith was not builded on man, but on Chriſt and his Word, &c.

Now when he ſaw it booted not to perſwade (for they were, God be praiſed, ſurely grounded on the Rock Jeſus Chriſt) he then led them to the place where they ſhould ſuffer, and being all there together, moſt earneſtly they prayed unto God, and joyfully went to the ſtake and kiſſed it, and embraced it very heartily.

The eleven men were tied to thrée ſtakes, and the two women looſe in the middeſt without any ſtake, and ſo they were all burnt in one fire, with ſuch love to each others, and conſtancie in our Saviour Chriſt, that it made all the lookers on to marvell. The Lord grant us the like grace in the like neede, according to the good pleaſure of his will, Amen.

Two women ſtanding at the ſtake unbound.

In the companie of theſe foreſaid thirteen were three more condemned to die; whoſe names are here under ſpecified:

Thomas Freeman.
William Stannard.
William Adams.

Theſe three were diſpenſed all by the Cardinall.

Which thrée anſwered to thoſe Articles that were propounded unto the ſaid thirteen, in effect as they did. And being thus in the hands of the ſecular power, Cardinal Pool ſent his diſpenſation for their lives, by what occaſion I cannot ſafely ſay, but by meanes thereof they then eſcaped. The copy of which diſpenſation, becauſe it is exemplified in our firſt impreſſion, I ſhall deſire the Reader to reſort to the place of the page. 1525.

The Sunday after theſe aforeſaid 16. were condemned, Fecknam Deane of Pauls preached at Pauls Croſſe, where he declared, that they had as many ſundrie opinions as they were ſundrie perſons. At the hearing whereof they drew out their faith, and ſet to their hands as hereafter

Vnto all our dearly beloved friends, and the holy Congregation of Ieſus Chriſt, even ſo many as love God, grace be with you, and peace from God our Father, and from our Lord Ieſus Chriſt.
So be it.

A letter oꝛ apology of the martyꝛs, purging themſelves of the falſe ſlander oꝛ M. Fecknam

BE it manifeſt to all unto whom this our Certificate ſhall be ſeene, that whereupon Saturday, being the thirteenth day of Iune, at Fulham before the Biſhop of London, ſixteen of us (whoſe names here under are ſubſcribed) were condemned to die for the moſt pure and ſincere truth of Chriſts veritie; which moſt godly truth hath been from the beginning with the wicked adverſaries thereof continually defaced, and is by the Devill and his imps even at this preſent likewiſe daily ſlandered: Vpon this occaſion, dearly beloved brethren, we are moved, yea conſtrained, in the eares of all men to manifeſt our beliefe, and alſo briefly the Articles wherefore we are condemned, for the avoiding of falſe reports and ſlanderous tongues, which might happen by the moſt ungodly and uncharitable Sermon lately preached at Pauls Croſſe, the fourteenth of the ſaid moneth, being Sunday, by maſter Fecknam, now Deane of the ſame Church; where he in that moſt worthie audience defamed us to be in ſixteene ſundrie opinions, which were a thing prejudiciall to all Chriſtian veritie; and for a teſtimoniall thereof, this here under written ſhall anſwer our cauſe, and therefore we pray you that are of God to judge.

Uniform agreement in their faith.

The firſt, we beleeve we were baptized in the faith of Chriſts Church, and incorporate unto him, and made members of his Church, in the which faith we continue. And although we have erred for a certain time, yet the root of faith was preſerved in us by the holy Ghoſt, which hath reduced us into a full certainty of the ſame, and we do perſiſt, and will by Gods aſſiſtance to the end. Now mark, that although the Miniſter were of the Church malignant, yet his wickedneſſe did not hurt us, for that he baptized us in the Name of the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt.

The pꝛofeſſion of their baptiſme.

There was both the Word and the Element, and our Godfathers and Godmothers renouncing for us the Devill and all his works, and confeſſing the Articles of the Chriſtian faith for us, and alſo witneſſes that we were baptized, not in the faith of the Church of Rome, but in the faith of Chriſts Church.

Sacraments of the Church.

1 Item, there are but two Sacraments in Chriſts Church, that is, the ſacrament of Baptiſme, and the Lords Supper. For in theſe are contained the faith of Chriſt his Church; that is, the two Teſtaments, the Law and the Goſpel. The effect of the Law is repentance, and the effect of the Goſpel remiſſion of ſins.

The viſible Church.

2 Item, we beleeve that there is a viſible Church, wherein the Word of God is preached, and the holy Sacraments truly miniſtred, viſible to the wicked world, although it be not credited, and by the death of Saints confirmed, as it was in the time of Helias the Prophet as well as now.

The See of Rome.

3 The See of Rome is the See of Antichriſt, the congregation of the wicked, &c. whereof the Pope is head under the Devill.

The Maſſe.

4 Item, the Maſſe is not onely a prophanation of the Lords Supper, but alſo a blaſphemous Idoll.

Tranſubſtantiation denied.

5 Item, God is neither ſpiritually nor corporally in the ſacrament of the altar, and there remaineth no ſubſtance in the ſame, but onely the ſubſtance of bread and wine.

For theſe the Articles of our beliefe we being condemned to die, do willingly offer our corruptible bodies to be diſſolved in the fire, all with one voice aſſenting and conſenting thereunto, and in no point diſſenting or diſagreeing from any of our former Articles.

Apparant alſo let it be and known, that being of the former Articles before the bloodie biſhop examined, the ſaid day and time, we affirmed to beleeve all that he or they would approve by the Scriptures. But he ſaid that he would not ſtand to prove it with Heretiques, but ſaid they themſelves were the holy Church, and that we ought to beleeve them, or elſe to be cut off like withered branches.

Thirteen of theſe were martyꝛs, as is befoꝛe ſaid.

Trouble and buſineſſe in the Dioceſſe of Lichfield.

June 14. Rafe Bane B. of Coventry & Lichfield, a cruell perſecutoꝛ.

IN the Dioceſſe of Lichfield, about the fourteenth of June, in the ſame yéer, John Colſtock who was lately come from London befoꝛe, and now dwelling at Welington, though he ſuffered no martyꝛdome, yet ſuſtained ſome trouble, being attached and examined by the Biſhop named Rafe Bane, foꝛ his religion, eſpecially foꝛ two points, in holding againſt the realtie of Chꝛiſt in the ſacrament, and againſt auricular confeſſion to be made to the Pꝛieſt. Foꝛ the which cauſe being compelled to recant, he was injoyned in the Church of Saint Cedde to beare a fagot befoꝛe the Croſſe, bare-headed, having in the one hand a Taper, and in the other a paire of Beads, &c.

Amongſt divers other which in the ſame Dioceſſe, and the ſame time were ſuſpected and troubled foꝛ the like, was Thomas Flier of Uttorater Shoomaker, Nich. Ball of Uttorater Capper, Thomas Pyot of Chedull.

Marrying in Lent puniſhed. June 26. Thomas Johnſon foꝛ ſwearing by the holy Maſſe, did penance.

Item, Henry Crimes foꝛ marrying his wife on Palm-ſunday even, &c. Some other alſo there were which had the like penance injoyned them, as Thom. Johnſon about the 26. day of this moneth of June, becauſe he ſware by the holy Maſſe befoꝛe the Biſhop ſitting in judgement; who foꝛ the ſame was dꝛiven to go befoꝛe the croſſe with his Taper and Beads, &c.

Concerning the which Thomas Flier above named, being a godly and a zealous man, this furthermoꝛe is to be noted, and not unwoꝛthie of gratefull memoꝛie, that whereas in the towne of Uttorater commandement was directed unto him amongſt others from the Oꝛdinarie, foꝛ pulling down monuments of ſuperſtition, and namely the Rood loft; he being one of the Churchwardens oꝛ Sidemen, on a time had talk upon the ſame with certain of his neighbours, where one wiſhed them ill to chieve, that ſhould go about ſuch an act.

Thomas Flier ſlain in Gods quarrell.

What woꝛds paſſed elſe amongſt them, miniſtring matter of further pꝛovocation, it is not perfectly known. In fine, the ſaid Flier being offended, and afterward méeting with him that had uſed ſuch woꝛds befoꝛe, began to commune with him of the matter; but in the end the man ſo little repented him of thoſe ſayings, that he added yet moꝛe fierce woꝛds, and at length ſtrokes alſo, in ſuch wiſe, that at that conflict the ſaid Thomas Flier was ſlain; and yet ſo was the matter handled, and ſuch amends was made with money by the murtherer and his friends, to the ſaid Fliers wife, that he ſuffered little or nothing for the ſame, ſave onely that he was baniſhed the town, and ſworn and bound never to come in it ſo long as the ſaid Fliers wife ſhould live.

Three men dead in the priſon of the Kings Bench.

June 27. Tho. Parret.

After the burning of theſe in Stratford, the ſame moneth died in the priſon of the Kings Bench in Southwark, one Thomas Parret, and was buried in the backſide, the 27. day of the moneth abovesaid.

June 29. Martin Hunt.

Alſo Martin Hunt (as is reported) in the ſame priſon was famiſhed the 29. day. At which time likewiſe died in the ſame priſon, as I finde recorded, one John Norice, and after the ſame ſort as the other was buried on the backſide of the ſaid priſon, the day above mentioned.

The ſtory of three Martyrs ſuffering at Saint Edmundsbury.

June 30.

After the death of the aforeſaid Thomas Parret, Martin Hunt, and John Norice, were three martyred at Saint Edmundſburie in Suffolk, in one fire, whoſe names are hereunder ſpecified.

Roger Bernard.
Adam Foſter.
Robert Lawſon.

The firſt examination of Roger Bernard, before D. Hopton Biſhop of Norwich.

Roger Bernard Martyr.

Roger Bernard refuſeth auricular confeſſion.

WHen Roger Bernard came before the Biſhop, firſt he was aſked whether he had been with the Prieſt at Eaſter to be ſhriven, and whether he had received the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar or no? Unto whom Roger Bernard anſwered no: I have not been with the Prieſt, nor confeſſed my ſelf unto him, but I have confeſſed my ſins to Almighty God, and I truſt he hath forgiven me; whereof I ſhall not need to go to the Prieſt for ſuch matters, who cannot help himſelf.

Biſh. Surely Bernard thou muſt needs go, and confeſſe thy ſelf unto him.

Rog. That ſhall I not do (by Gods grace) while I live.

Biſh. What a ſtout boyly heretique is this? How malapertly he anſwereth?

Rog. My Lord, it grieveth me no whit (I thank God) to be called heretique at your hands: for ſo your forefathers called the Prophets and Confeſſors of Chriſt, long before this time.

At theſe words the Biſhop roſe up in a great heat, and bade Bernard follow him. Then the Biſhop went and kneeled before that they call the ſacrament of the Altar, and as he was in his prayers kneeling, he looked back, and aſked Bernard why he came not and did as he did. Unto whom Bernard anſwered, I cannot tell why I ſhould ſo do. Why, quoth the Biſhop, thou lewd fellow, whom ſeeſt thou yonder, pointing to the pix over the Altar?

Rog. I ſee no bodie there. Do you my Lord?

Biſh. Why naughty man, doeſt thou not ſee thy maker?

Note the Catholique charity of this Prelate.

Rog. My maker? No, I ſee nothing but a few clouts hanging together on a heap. With that the Biſhop roſe up ſore diſpleaſed, and commanded the jayler to take him away, and to lay irons enow on him. For, quoth he, I will tame him ere he go from me, I trow ſo: and ſo he was carried away.

The ſecond examination of Roger Bernard before the ſaid Biſhop.

Another examination of Roger Bernard.

THe next day Bernard was brought again before the Biſhop, who aſked him if he did not remember himſelf ſince the day before, that he was before him.

Rog. Yes my Lord, I have remembred my ſelf very well, for the ſame man I was yeſterday, I am this day, and I hope ſhall be all the dayes of my life, concerning the matter you talked with me of.

One of the guard taketh Bernard to ſchoole.

Then one of the guard ſtanding by, ſaid, My Lord, I pray you trouble not your ſelf any more with him, but let me have the examining of him, I ſhall handle him after another ſort, I trow, and make him a fair childe ere he go, you ſhall ſee.

A wholſome company of caterpillers.

So was he committed to him, and brought by him to an Inne, where were a great many of Prieſts aſſembled together, and there they fell all in flattering him and perſwading him with gay intiſing words what they could; but when therein they might not prevail, for that the Lord aſſiſted the good poore man, then began they to threaten him with whipping, ſtocking, burning, and ſuch like, that it was wonderfull the do they made with him. Unto whom Bernard ſaid, Friends, I am not better then my Maſter Chriſt and the Prophets, which your Fathers ſerved after ſuch ſort; and I for his Names ſake am content to ſuffer the like at your hands, if God ſhall ſo permit, truſting that he will ſtrengthen me in the ſame according to his promiſe, in ſpite of the devil and all his miniſters. So when they could not make him to relent or yeeld, they ſaid, behold a right ſcholler of John Fortune, whom they had then in priſon. Then carried they him to the Biſhop, who immediately condemned him as an heretique, and delivered him to the ſecular power.

Roger Bernard condemned by the Biſhop of Norwich.

This Roger Bernard was a ſingle man; and by his vocation a labourer, dwelling in Franſden in Suffolke, who was taken in the night by maſter Tamages men, becauſe he would not go to church to hear their unſavorie ſervice, and ſo by them carried to priſon.

Bernard taken by Tamages men.

Adam Foſter.

June 30. Adam Foſter Martyr.

ADam Foſter of the age of ſix and twenty yeers, huſbandman, being married, dwelling in Mendleſam in the County of Suffolke, was taken at home in his houſe a little before the Sun going down by the Conſtables of the ſaid town, George Revet and Thomas Mouſe, at the commandement of ſir John Tyrrell of Gyppinghall in Suffolke, Knight, becauſe he would not go to Church and heare Maſſe, and receive at Eaſter, except he might have it after Chriſts holy ordinance. When they came for him, they told him he muſt go with them unto the Juſtice. Unto whom Adam Foſter ſaid, for Chriſts cauſe, and to ſave his conſcience, he was well contented, and ſo they led him to ſir John Tyrrell, and he ſent him to Aye dungeon in Suffolke, from whence at length he was ſent to Norwich, and there condemned by Biſhop Hopton.

George Revet, Tho. Mouſe, ſir Jo. Tyrrell perſecutors.

Gods ſtroke upon wilfull perſecutors.

Now after his taking, the ſaid Thomas Mouſe and George Revet were ſtricken with a great feare and ſickneſſe, whereby Mouſe pined and conſumed away even unto death, although he was a man of young and luſtie age. But George Revet who was the ſaid Mouſes fellow, and a great Reader of the Scripture, or (as a man may terme it) a talkative Goſpeller, would not be premoniſhed by the works of God, but ſet his ſon to help the Prieſt ſay Maſſe, and to be clerk of the ſame town of Mendleſham for lucres ſake; yet was there a fair warning given him of God, although he had not the grace ſo to conſider it, the which thing was this.

A young man pariſh clerk againſt his conſcience.

A young man of the ſame pariſh newly married, called Robert Edgore, being of a ripe wit and ſound, was clerk in the ſaid Church before the ſaid Revet ſet his ſon in that roome, and executed the office a little, yea, alas too long, againſt his own conſcience; whereby at length the Lord ſo took away his wits, that many yeers after, his poore and wofull wife, good woman, was compelled to keep him chained, and bound continually, leſt he ſhould unawares do himſelf or ſome other ſome miſchief, as many times (the more pity) he was ready enough to do.

This (as I ſaid) would not adminiſh Revet, but needs he muſt perſiſt in his wicked purpoſe. Notwithſtanding at the length, as many men were offended with him in the pariſh, ſo honeſt women eſpecially (being mightily grieved at his ungodly doings) came to him and ſaid, Neighbour Revet are ye not afraid to let your ſon help the naughty prieſt to ſay Maſſe, and to ſerve that abominable idol? and he ſaid, No.

Then ſaid they, we fear not to go to Church and hear Maſſe, ſeeing you, being a man that ſo much profeſſe Chriſtianitie, will let your ſon help the prieſt ſay Maſſe, &c.

Revet prayed for a ſtrange token.

At which words Revet waxed angry, and in his rage immediately made his prayer unto God after this manner or with ſuch like words, ſaying; O Lord, if it be not thy will that my ſon ſhould ſo do, then I beſeech thee ſend ſome ſtrange token to let me underſtand what thy good pleaſure is therein, &c. So according to his petition, within ſhort ſpace after, his neighbors Bull came into his paſture, and there he having a very proper gelding, which was his felicity above any thing he had, the Bull running upon him, did ſo wound and gore him, that immediately thereof his Gelding died, and he thereby nothing amended. For although he knew and confeſſed, that it was the Lords hand upon him for the ſufferance of his ſon in that wicked vocation; yet would he not take him from it, but permitted him ſtill to uſe and frequent the ſame againſt his own conſcience.

Revet confeſſed the Lords hand againſt him, & yet continued in his ſin.

Revet died of a ſtrange ſicknes. The Lords hand upon Revet.

At the laſt the Lord juſtly ſent upon him a great ſwelling in his legges, which did ſo grievouſly vex and trouble him by reaſon it ſwelled upward, that at length having thereby brought upon him a very ſtrange ſickneſſe, he died moſt miſerably, in ſo impatient manner, that it terrified all good hearts to hear thereof. The Lord grant for Chriſts ſake, that we may obſerve his judgements better, to his glorie and our comfort, Amen. Ex teſtimonio quorundam Suffolcenſium.

Robert Lawſon.

June 30. Robert Lawſon Martyr. Robert Kereth a perſecutor.

Robert Lawſon was a ſingle man, of the age of thirtie yeers, and by vocation a linen Weaver, who was apprehended in the night by one Robert Kereth, at the commandement of Sir John Tyrrel of Gyppinghall in Suffolke, Knight, and ſo was immediately carried to Aye dungeon in Suffolke, where he remained a certain time, and after was led to Burie. The cauſe of his taking was, for that he would not go to Church to heare Maſſe, and receive their Popiſh Idoll.

The Martyrdome of Roger Bernard, Adam Foſter, Robert Lawſon at Bury Ann. 1556. June 30.

When theſe three foreſaid Martyrs were carried to their deaths, viz. Roger Bernard, Adam Foſter, and Robert Lawſon at Bury, after they had made their prayer, being at the ſtake, and the tormentors attending the fire, they moſt triumphantly ended their lives, in ſuch happy and bleſſed condition, as did notably ſet forth their conſtancie and joyfull end, to the great praiſe of God, and their commendation in him, and alſo to the incouragement of others in the ſame quarrell to do the like. The Lord of ſtrength fortifie us to ſtand as his true ſouldiers in what ſtanding ſoever he ſhall think it good to place us, Amen.

In the examination of Roger Bernard, ye heard a little before, how he was compared by the prieſts there, to John Fortune, and called his ſcholler. This John Fortune, otherwiſe called Cutler, of Hintleſham in Suffolke, was by his occupation a black Smith, whom they had before them in examination a little before, the 20. day of April. In ſpirit he was zealous and ardent, in the Scriptures readie, in Chriſts cauſe ſtout and valiant, in his anſwers marvellous, and no leſſe patient in his wrongfull ſuffering then conſtant in his doctrine. Whether he was burned, or died in priſon, I cannot certainly finde; but rather I ſuppoſe that he was burned. Certain it is, howſoever he was made away, he never yeelded. What his anſwers and examinations were before D. Parker and the Biſhop, ye ſhall hear him, although not with his own mouth ſpeaking, yet with his own hand you ſhall ſee written, what he did ſay, as followeth.

The examination of Iohn Fortune before Doctor Parker and M. Foſter.

The examination of John Fortune before D. Parker, and M. Foſter.

First D. Parker aſked me how I beleeved in the Catholike faith.

And I aſked him which faith he meant; whether the faith that Stephen had, or the faith of them that put Stephen to death.

D. Parker being moved, ſaid, What a naughtie fellow is this? you ſhall ſee anon he will deny the bleſſed ſacrament of the altar.

M. Foſter. Then ſaid maſter Foſter, I know you well enough. You are a buſie Merchant. How ſayeſt thou by the bleſſed Maſſe?

For. And I ſtood ſtill and made no anſwer.

Foſt. Then ſaid Maſter Foſter, why ſpeakeſt thou not, and make the Gentleman an anſwer?

Fort. And I ſaid, ſilence is a good anſwer to a fooliſh queſtion.

The ſacrament of the altar.

Park. Then ſaid the Doctor, I am ſure he will deny the bleſſed ſacrament of the altar alſo.

Fort. And I ſaid, I know none ſuch, but onely the Sacrament of the body and blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Park. Then ſaid he, you deny the order of the ſeven ſacraments. And why doeſt thou not beleeve in the ſacrament of the Altar?

Fort. And I ſaid, becauſe it is not written in Gods book.

Park. Then ſaid he, you will not beleeve unwritten verities.

Fort. And I ſaid, I will beleeve that thoſe unwritten verities that agree with the written verities be true: but thoſe unwritten verities that be of your own making, and invented of your own brain, I do not beleeve.

M. Foſter threatneth Io. Fortune to be whipped.

Foſt, Well, ſaid M. Foſter, you ſhall be whipped and burned for this geare I trow.

Fort. Then ſaid I, if you knew how theſe words do rejoyce my heart, you would not have ſpoken them.

Foſt. Why thou foole, doeſt thou rejoyce in whipping?

Fort. Yea, ſaid I, for it is written in the Scriptures, and Chriſt ſaith, Thou ſhalt be whipped for my names ſake: and ſince the time that the ſword of tyranny came into your hands, I heard of none that was whipped. Happie were I, if I had the maiden-head of this perſecution.

Away with him then (ſaid he) for he is ten times worſe then Sammel: and ſo was he carried to priſon again.

The ſecond examination of Iohn Fortune before the Biſhop of Norwich.

WHen I came before the Biſhop, he aſked me if I did not beleeve in the Catholique Church. I ſaid, I beleeve that Church whereof Chriſt is the head.

Then ſaid the Biſhop, Doeſt thou not beleeve that the Pope is ſupreme head of the Church? And I ſaid, No, Chriſt is the head of the true Church.

Biſh. So do I beleeve alſo: but the Pope is Gods vicar upon earth, and the head of the church, and I beleeve that he hath power to forgive ſins alſo.

Pſal. 49.

Fort. Then ſaid I, the Pope is but a man, and the Prophet David ſaith, That no man can deliver his brother, nor make agreement for him unto God: For it coſt more to redeem their ſouls, ſo that he muſt let that alone for ever.

The Pope likened to a Belweather or a Maſter Bee.

Biſh. And the Biſhop again fetching about a great circumſtance, ſaid, Like as the Belweather weareth the bell, and is the head of the flock of ſheep: ſo is the Pope our head. And as the hives of Bees have a maſter Bee that bringeth the Bees to the hive again: ſo doth our head bring us home again to our true Church.

Poyſoned Popes.

Fort. Then I aſked him, whether the Pope were a ſpirituall man: and he ſaid, Yea. And I ſaid again, They are ſpitefull men; for in ſeventeen moneths there were three Popes, and one poyſoned another for that preſumptuous ſeat of Antichriſt.

Biſh. It is maliciouſly ſpoken (ſaid he) for thou muſt obey the power and not the man. And thus was the Pope denied to be ſupreme head.

Ceremonies of the Church.
Matth. 15.

Well, ſaid he, what ſayſt thou to the ceremonies of the Church?

Fort. And I anſwered, All things that are not planted by my heavenly Father, ſhall be plucked up by the roots, ſaith Chriſt. For they are not from the beginning, neither ſhall they continue to the end.

Biſh. They are good and godly and neceſſary to be uſed.

Fort. Saint Paul called them weake and beggarly.

Biſh. No that is a lie.

Fort, I hearing that, ſaid, that ſaint Paul writeth thus in the fourth to the Galathians, You fooliſh Galathians (ſaith he) who hath bewitched you, that ye ſeek to be in bondage to theſe weak and beggarly ceremonies? Now which of you do lie? you or ſaint Paul? And alſo it is ſaid, that works inſtituted, and injoyned without the commandement of God, pertain not to the worſhip of God, according to the text, Matth. 15. In vain do men worſhip me with mens traditions and commandements. And ſaint Paul ſaith, Wherefore do ye carrie us away from the grace of Chriſt to another kinde of doctrine? And Chriſt openly rebuked the Scribes, Lawyers, Phariſees, Doctors, Prieſts, Biſhops, and Hypocrites, for making Gods commandements of none effect, to ſupport their own tradition.

Biſh. Thou lieſt, there is not ſuch a word in all the Scriptures, thou naughty heretique. Thou art worſe then all other heretiques: for Hooper (ſaid he) and Bradford allow them to be good, and thou doeſt not. Away with him.

Here you may perceive, how that the Catholique Church cannot erre, but whatſoever they ſay muſt needs be true. And ſo my Lord Biſhop cannot lie, as it may appeare to all men plainly in the Text.

Q. MARIE.

It is pitie that popiſh Prelates cannot lie.

The third examination of Iohn Fortune before the Biſhop of Norwich.

Anno. 1556.

Another examination of Iohn Fortune.

THe next day I was brought before the ſaid Biſhop again, where he made a Sermon upon the ſixth Chapter of St. Iohns Goſpel, of Chriſts words, I am the bread that came down from heaven, &c. And thereupon had a great bibble babble to no purpoſe. So in the end I was called before him, and he ſaid to me:

Sacrament of the altar.

Biſh. How beleeveſt thou in the ſacrament of the altar? Doeſt thou not beleeve, that after the conſecration, there is the reall ſubſtance of the body of Chriſt?

Fort. And I anſwered him, that is the greateſt plague that ever came into England.

Biſh. Why ſo?

Fort. I ſaid, If I were a Biſhop, and you a poore man as I am, I would be aſhamed to aſke ſuch a queſtion. For a biſhop ſhould be apt to teach and not to learn.

Biſh. I am appointed by the Law to teach, ſo are not you.

Catholique prelates obſequious to higher powers ſo long as they make for their dignitie, but when they do otherwiſe, then they excommunicate them.

Fort. And I ſaid, Your Law breaketh out very well: for you have burned up the true Biſhops and Preachers, and maintained liars to be in their ſtead.

Biſh. Now you may underſtand that he is a Traitor: for he denieth the higher powers.

Fort. I am no Traitor: for ſaint Paul ſaith, All ſouls muſt obey the higher powers, and I reſiſt not the higher powers, concerning my body, but I muſt reſiſt your evill doctrine wherewith you would infect my ſoul.

A Doct. Then ſaid a Doctor, My Lord, you do not well; let him anſwer ſhortly to his articles.

Biſh. How ſaieſt thou? make an anſwer quickly to theſe articles.

Fort. Saint Paul ſaith, Heb. 10. Chriſt did one ſacrifice once for all, and ſet him down on the right hand of his Father, triumphing over hell and death making interceſſion for ſins.

Biſh. I aſke thee no ſuch queſtion, but make anſwer to this article.

Fort. If it be not God before the conſecration, it is not God after: for God is without beginning and without ending.

Biſh. Then ſaid he, lo, what a ſtiffe heretique is this? He hath denied all together: how ſayeſt thou? Is it idolatry to worſhip the bleſſed ſacrament or no?

Fort. God is a ſpirit, and will be worſhipped in ſpirit and truth.

Biſh. I aſke thee no ſuch queſtion: anſwer me directly.

Dan. 11.

Fort. I anſwer that this is the god Mauzzim, that robbeth God of his honour.

Biſh. It is pitie that the ground beareth thee, or that thou haſt a tongue to ſpeak. Then ſaid the Scribe; Here are a great many more articles.

Biſh. Then ſaid the Biſhop, Away with him: for he hath ſpoken too much.

Another examination of Iohn Fortune.

Other talk between Iohn Fortune and the B. of Norwich.

ANd when I came to mine examination again, the Biſhop aſked me if I would ſtand unto mine anſwer that I had made before: and I ſaid, Yea: for I had ſpoken nothing but the truth. And after that he made a great circumſtance upon the ſacrament.

Then I deſired him to ſtand to the Text, and he read the Goſpel on Corpus Chriſti day, which ſaid, I am the bread which came down from heaven: beleeveſt thou not this? And I ſaid, Yea truly.

John 6.

And he ſaid, Why doeſt thou denie the Sacrament?

Becauſe your doctrine is falſe, ſaid I.

Then ſaid he, How can that be falſe which is ſpoken in the Scripture? And I ſaid, Chriſt ſaid, I am the bread, and you ſay the bread is he. Therefore your doctrine is falſe, ſaid I.

And he ſaid, Doſt thou not beleeve that the bread is he? And I ſaid, No.

Biſh. I will bring thee to it by the Scriptures.

Fort. Hold that faſt my Lord: for that is the beſt argument that you have yet.

Biſh. Thou ſhalt be burned like an heretique.

Fort. Who ſhall give judgement upon me?

Biſh. I will judge an hundred ſuch as thou art, and never be ſhriven upon it.

Fort. Is there not law for the Spiritualtie as well as for the Temporalty? And Sir Clement Higham ſaid, Yes. What meaneſt thou by that?

The B. of Norwich charged with perjury.

Fort. When a man is perjured by the law, he is caſt over the Bar, and ſitteth no more in judgement. And the biſhop is a perjured man, and ought to ſit in judgement of no man.

Biſh. How proveſt thou that?

Fort. Becauſe you took an oath in King Henries dayes to reſiſt the Pope. So both ſpirituall and temporall are perjured, that here can be no true judgement.

Biſh. Thinkeſt thou to eſcape judgement by that? No: for my Chancellor ſhall judge thee. He tooke no oath, for he was then out of the Realme.

M. Higham. It is time to weede out ſuch fellows as you be, indeed.

Biſh. Good fellow, why beleeveſt not thou in the ſacrament of the altar?

Fort. Becauſe I finde it not in Gods book, nor yet in the Doctors. If it were there I would beleeve it with all my heart.

Biſh. How knoweſt thou it is not there?

Fort. Becauſe it is contrarie to the ſecond commandement: and ſeeing it is not written in Gods book, why do you then rob me of my life?

Then the Biſhop having no more to ſay, commanded the Bailiffe to take him away.

The death of John Fortune.

And thus much touching the examinations of this man. Now whether he died in fire, or was otherwiſe prevented with death, as I ſaid before I am uncertain.

In the Regiſters of Norwich this I do finde, that his ſentence of condemnation was drawn and regiſtred; but whether it was pronounced, in the ſaid Regiſter it is not expreſſed, according as the uſuall manner of the Notarie is ſo to declare, in the end of the ſentence. Nevertheleſſe this is moſt certain, that he never abjured nor recanted, howſoever it pleaſed the Lord by death to call him out of the world.

The death of Iohn Careles in the Kings Bench.

July 1. The death of John Careles priſoner in the Kings Bench.

About this time, the firſt day of July, amongſt divers other priſoners which died the ſame yeer in the Kings Bench, was alſo one John Careles of Coventry a Weaver. Who though he were by the ſecret judgement of Almightie God prevented by death, ſo that he came not to the full Martyrdome of his bodie, yet is he no leſſe worthy to be counted in honour and place of Chriſts Martyrs, then other that ſuffered moſt cruell torments, as well for that he was for the ſame truths ſake a long time impriſoned, as alſo for his willing minde and zealous affection he had thereunto, if the Lord had ſo determined it, as well may appear by his examination had before Doctor Martin. Which examination becauſe it containeth nothing almoſt but wrangling interrogations, and matters of contention, wherein Doctor Martin would enter into no communication about the articles of his accuſation, but onely urged him to detect his fellows, it ſhall not be greatly materiall therefore to expreſſe the whole, but onely to excerpt ſo much as pertaining to the queſtion of predeſtination, may bring ſome fruit to the Reader.

John Careles examined before D. Martin.

The effect of Iohn Careles examination before Doctor Martin briefly declared.

The effect of John Careles examination.

First, Doctor Martin calling John Careles to him in his chamber, demanded what was his name. To whom when the other had anſwered, that his name was John Careles, then began Doctor Martin to deſcant at his pleaſure upon that name, ſaying, that it would appear by his condition, by that time he had done with him, that he would be a true careles man indeed. And ſo after other by-talke there ſpent about much needleſſe matter, then he aſked him where he was born.

Careles. Forſooth, ſaith he, at Coventry.

How John Careles was brought to the Kings Bench.

Martin. At Coventry? what ſo far, man? How cameſt thou hither? Who ſent thee to the Kings Bench to priſon?

Carel. I was brought thither by a writ, I trow, what he was I cannot tell. I think maſter Marſhall can tell you.

Marſhal. In good faith I cannot tell what the matter is; but indeed my Lord chief Juſtice ſent him from the bar.

Mart. Well Careles, I would wiſh thou ſhouldſt play the wiſe mans part. Thou art a handſome man, and it is pitie but thou ſhouldeſt do well, and ſave that which God hath bought.

Carel. I thank your good maſterſhip moſt heartily: and I put you out of doubt, that I am moſt ſure and certain of my ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt; ſo that my ſoul is ſafe already, whatſoever pains my body ſuffer here for a little time.

John Careles examined upon predeſtination.

Mart. Yea marie, you ſay truth. For thou art ſo predeſtinate to life, that thou canſt not periſh, in whatſoever opinion thou doſt die.

Carel. That God hath predeſtinate me to eternall life in Jeſus Chriſt, I am moſt certain, and even ſo am I ſure that his holy ſpirit (wherewith I am ſealed) will ſo preſerve me from all hereſies and evil opinions, that I ſhall die in none at all.

Mart. Go to, let me hear your faith in predeſtination. For that ſhall be written alſo.

Carel. Your maſterſhip ſhall pardon me herein. For you ſaid your ſelf ere while, that you had no Commiſſion to examine my conſcience. I will trouble my ſelfe with anſwering no moe matters then I needs muſt, untill I come before them that ſhall have more authoritie further to examine me.

D. Martin declareth his commiſſion.

Mart. I tell thee then I have Commiſſion; yea, and commandement from the Councell to examine thee: for they delivered me thy articles.

Carel. Yea I think indeed that your Maſterſhip is appointed to examine me of my articles, which you have there in writing, and I have told you the truth. I do confeſſe them to be mine own fact and deed: but you do now examine me of predeſtination, whereof my articles ſpeak nothing at all.

Martin. I tell thee yet again, that I muſt alſo examine thee of ſuch things as be in controverſie betweene thee and thy fellows in the Kings Bench, whereof predeſtination is a part, as thy fellow N. hath confeſſed, and thy ſelf doſt not deny it.

Carel. I do not deny it. But he that firſt told you that matter, might have found himſelf much better occupied.

Why D. Martin would not examine him of the ſacrament.

Mart. Why? what if he had not told me? thinkeſt that I would not have known it? Yes, or elſe thou ſhouldeſt have withſtood my Commiſſion. For I tell thee truth, I may now examine thee of the bleſſed Sacrament, or any other thing that I liſt, but that I would ſhew thee favour, and not be too haſty with thee at the firſt.

Marſh. Yea in deed Careles, M. Doctor hath commiſſion to examine you or any other of your fellows.

Martin. Yea marie have I, I tell thee the truth of it.

Carel. Then let your Scribe ſet his pen to the paper, and you ſhall have it roundly, even as the truth is. I beleeve that almighty God our moſt dear loving Father, of his great mercy and infinite goodneſſe, did elect in Chriſt.

Mart. Tuſh, what need all that long circumſtance? Write, I beleeve God elected, and make no more ado.

Carel. No, not ſo M. Doctor. It is an high myſtery, and ought reverently to be ſpoken of. And if my words may not be written as I do utter them, I will not ſpeak at all.

Mart. Go to, go to, write what he will. Here is more buſineſſe then needeth.

Careles opinion of Gods election.

Carel. I beleeve that almightie God our moſt dear loving Father, of his great mercy and infinite goodneſſe (through Ieſus Chriſt) did elect and appoint in him before the foundation of the earth was laid, a Church or Congregation, which he doth continually guide and govern by his grace and holy ſpirit, ſo that not one of them ſhall ever finally periſh. When this was written, M. Doctor took it in his hand and read it, ſaying:

Mart. Why, who will deny this?

D. Martin avoweth Careles judgement of Gods election.

Carel. If your Maſterſhip do allow it, and other learned men when they ſhall ſee it, I have my hearts deſire.

Mart. And do you hold none otherwiſe, then is there written?

Carel. No verily, nor never did.

Mart. Write what he ſaith, otherwiſe he holdeth not. So that was written. It was told me alſo that thou doeſt affirm, that Chriſt did not die effectually for all men.

Carel. Whatſoever hath been told you, it is not much material unto me. Let the tellers of ſuch tales come before my face, and I truſt to make them anſwer. For indeed I do beleeve that Chriſt did effectually die for all thoſe that do effectually repent and beleeve, and for none other: ſo that was written alſo.

Mart. Now Sir, what is Trews faith of predeſtination? He beleeveth that all men be predeſtinate, and that none ſhall be damned. Doth he not?

A wrong faith of predeſtination beleeving to be elected in reſpect of good works.

Carel. No forſooth, that he doth not.

Mart. How then?

Carel. Truly I think he doth beleeve as your Maſterſhip and the reſt of the Clergie do beleeve of predeſtination, that we be elected in reſpect of our good works, and ſo long elected, as we do them, and no longer.

Mart. Write what he ſaith, that his fellow Trew beleeveth of predeſtination as the Papiſts do beleeve.

Carel. Ah maſter Doctor, did I ſo terme you? Seeing that this my confeſſion ſhall come before the Councell, I pray you place my termes as reverently as I ſpake them.

Mart. Well, well, write that Trew is of the ſame faith as the Catholiques be.

Carel. I did not ſo call you neither, I wonder what you mean.

Mart. You ſaid the Clergie, did you not Careles?

Carel. Yes forſooth did I. So then it was written of the Clergie.

Mart. Now ſir, what ſay you more?

Carel. Forſooth I have no further to ſay in this matter.

Mart. Well Careles, I pray thee prove thy ſelf a wiſe man, and do not caſt away thy life wilfully.

Carel. Now the Lord he knoweth, good M. Doctor, I would full gladly live, ſo that I might do the ſame with a ſafe conſcience. And your maſterſhip ſhall right well perceive that I will be no wilfull man, but in all things that I ſtand upon I will have ſure ground.

D. Martin pretendeth favour to Careles.

Mart. Now the Lord knoweth, good Careles, that I would gladly make ſome means to preſerve thy life. But thou ſpeakeſt ſo much of the Lord, the Lord; wilt thou be content to go with my Lord Fitzwater into Ireland? me thinks thou art a goodly tall fellow to do the Queene ſervice there. How ſayſt thou?

Carel. Verily maſter Doctor, whether I be in Ireland, France, or Spaine, or any place, elſe, I am ready to do her Grace the beſt ſervice that I can, with body, goods, and life, ſo long as it doth laſt.

Mart. That is honeſtly ſaid, I promiſe thee every man will not ſay ſo. How ſay you M. Marſhall? this man is meet for all manner of ſervice. Indeed thou art worthie Careles to have the more favour.

Carel. Indeed ſir, I hope to be meet and readie unto all things that pertain unto a true Chriſtian ſubject to do. And if her Grace or her officers under her do require me to any thing contrarie to Chriſts religion, I am ready alſo to do my ſervice in Smithfield for not obſerving it, as my bed-fellow and other brethren have done, praiſed be God for them.

Mart. By my troth thou art a pleaſant fellow as ever I talked with of all the Proteſtants, except it were Tomſon. I am ſorie that I muſt depart with thee ſo ſoone; but I have ſuch buſineſſe now, that I can tarrie with thee no longer. Well yet thou canſt not deny, but you are at jarre amongſt your ſelves in the Kings Bench, and it is ſo throughout all your congregation: for you will not be a Church.

More varietie in the Popes church then is amongſt the Proteſtants.

Careles. No Maſter Doctor that is not ſo. There is a thouſand times more varietie in opinions among your Doctors, which you call of the Catholique church, yea and that in the ſacrament, for the which there is ſo much blood ſhed now adayes, I meane of your later Doctors and new Writers; as for the old they agree wholly with us.

Mart. No Careles this is not ſo; there thou art deceived.

Carel. Verily it is ſo, maſter Doctor. I am not deceived therein any thing at all, as it hath been, and is evidently proved by ſuch as GOD hath indued with great learning. Then he turned to the Marſhall, and whiſpered with him a while.

D. Martin taketh his leave gently of Careles.

Mart. Turning unto me again, he ſaid, Farewell Careles: for I can tarrie no longer with thee now, my buſineſſe is ſuch.

Carel. God be with you, good Maſter Doctor, The Lord give your maſterſhip health of bodie and ſoul.

Mart. God have mercy good Careles, and God keep thee from all errors, and give thee grace to do as well as I would wiſh my ſelf.

Q. MARIE. Anno. 1556.

Carel. I thank your good Maſterſhip. I pray God I may do alwayes that is acceptable in his ſight. Whereunto they all ſaid, Amen. And ſo I departed with a glad heart; God onely have the whole praiſe, Amen.

It appeareth by the examination of the foreſaid John Careles, that he endured priſoner the ſpace of two whole yeers, having wife and children. In the which his captivitie, firſt being in Coventrie jayle, he was there in ſuch credit with his Keeper, that upon his word he was let out to play in the Pageant about the Citie with his companions. And that done, keeping touch with his keeper, he turned again into priſon at his houre appointed.

John Careles died in priſon, and was buried in the fields.

And after that being brought up to London, he was indued with ſuch patience and conſtant fortitude, that he longed for nothing more earneſtly, than to come to the promotion to die in the fire for the profeſſion of his faith: and yet it ſo pleaſed the Lord to prevent him with death that he came not to it, but died in the priſon, and after was buried in the fields in a dunghill.

In the meane time while he was in priſon in the Kings Bench, it chanced he was in great heavineſſe and purturbation of minde and conſcience, whereupon he wrote to Maſter Philpot being then in the Colehouſe. Upon the occaſion hereof M. Philpot ſent an Epiſtle conſolatory unto him, ſpecified before among M. Philpots letters. Unto the which Epiſtle John Careles maketh anſwer again as followeth.

Letters of Iohn Careles.

A letter of Iohn Careles anſwering to the loving Epiſtle or letter ſent to him before by M. Iohn Philpot.

A faithfull friend is a ſtrong defence, whoſo findeth ſuch a one, findeth a treaſure.

A faithfull friend hath no peere, the weight of gold and ſilver is not to be compared to the goodneſſe of his faith.

A faithfull friend is a medicine of life, and they that feare the Lord ſhall finde him, Eccleſ. 6.

A letter of Joh. Careles to M. Philpot.

The Father of mercie and God of all conſolation, comfort you with his eternall ſpirit (my moſt dear and faithfull loving friend, good Maſter Philpot) as you have comforted me by the mightie operation of the ſame; the everlaſting God be praiſed therefore for ever, Amen.

Ah my deare heart and moſt loving brother, if I ſhould do nothing elſe day and night ſo long as the dayes of heaven do endure, but kneele on my knees, and reade Pſalmes, I can never be able to render unto God condigne thanks, for his great mercie, fatherly kindneſſe, and moſt loving compaſſion extended unto me moſt vile, ſinfull, wicked, and unworthy wretch. Oh that the Lord would open my mouth and give me a thankefull heart, that from the bottome of the ſame might flow his continuall praiſe. Oh that my ſinfull fleſh (which is the cauſe of ſorrow) were cleane ſeparated from me, that I might ſing Pſalmes of thankſgiving unto the Lords name for ever; that with good Samuels mother I might continually record this noble verſe following, the which by good experience I have found moſt true, praiſed be my good God therefore.

1 Reg. 2. John Careles raiſed up by the Lord, out of great heavines.

The Lord (ſaith that good woman) killeth and maketh alive; he bringeth downe to hell, and fetcheth up againe. Praiſed be the Lord for ever, yea and praiſed be his name, for that he hath given me true experience and lively feeling of the ſame. Bleſſed be the Lord God, whoſe mercie endureth for ever, which hath not dealt with me according to my deepe deſerts, nor deſtroyed me in his diſpleaſure when I had juſtly deſerved it. Oh what reward ſhall I give again unto the Lord for all the great benefits that he hath done for my ſoule? I will gladly receive the cup of ſalvation at his hand, and will worſhip his name with prayer and with praiſe.

Ah my deare heart, yea moſt deare unto me in the Lord, thinke not this ſudden change in me, to be ſome fickle phantaſie of my fooliſh head (as indeed ſome other would ſurely ſuſpect it to be.) For doubtleſſe it is the marvellous doing of the Lord, moſt mercifull unto me his unworthy creature. God for his great mercies ſake give me grace to be more thankfull unto him then I heretofore have been, and keep me that I never fall forth of his favour again.

And now my deare brother, and moſt bleſſed meſſenger of the Lord, whoſe beautifull feet have brought much glad tidings to my ſoule, what ſhall I doe or ſay unto you, in the leaſt part to recompence the fatherly affection and godly care that you continually keep for me? Oh that GOD would give me the ſpirit of fervent prayer, that I might yet that way ſupply ſome little part of my dutie toward you. Ah my true loving friend, how ſoone did you lay aſide all other buſineſſe, to make a ſweet plaiſter for my wounded conſcience, yea and that out of a painfull paire of ſtocks, which place muſt needs be uneaſie to write in? But God hath brought you into a ſtraight place, that you might ſet my ſoule at libertie. Out of your pinching, and painfull ſeat you have plentifully poured upon me your precious Nard, the ſweet ſavour whereof hath greatly refreſhed my tired ſoul. The Lord likewiſe refreſh you both body and ſoule, by pouring the oyle of his gracious ſpirit into your ſweet heart.

This comfort received of M. Philpot, reade in M. Philpots letters.

Ier. 20. Ier. 26.

Ah good Jeremy, hath Phaſſur put thee into the ſtocks? why, now thou haſt the right reward of a Prophet. Thy glorie never began to appeare untill now. I doubt not but ſhortly, in ſtead of Ahikam the ſonne of Shaphan, Jeſus the ſonne of the living God will come and deliver thee forth of the hands of all thine enemies, and will alſo make good, againſt them and their Antichriſtian Synagogue, all the words that thou haſt ſpoken in his name. The Lord hath made thee this day a ſtrong defenſed Tower, an iron Pillar, and a brazen Wall againſt the whole robble of Antichriſt, and though they fight againſt thee never ſo fiercely, yet ſhall they not overcome thee, for the Lord himſelfe is with thee to help and deliver thee; and he will rid thee out of the hands of the wicked, and will deliver thee out of the hands of the Tyrants. And in that you are not buſie in caſting pearles before ſwine, nor in giving the holy things unto dogs, you are much to be commended in my ſimple judgement. And ſure I am that your circumſpect and modeſt behaviour hitherto hath beene as much to Gods glory and to the ſhame and confuſion of your enemies, as any mans doings that are gone before you.

Ier. 1. Ier. 15. Math. 7.

The circumſpect behaviour of M. Philpot.

John Careles advice to M. Philpot.

Wherefore mine advice and moſt earneſt deſire is, with all other of your loving friends, that you ſtill keepe that order with thoſe blood-thirſtie biteſheepes, Biſhops I ſhould ſay, that you have begun. For though in concluſion they will ſurely have your blood, yet ſhall they come by it with ſhame enough, and to their perpetuall infamy whiles the world doth endure. They would in deede condemne you in hugger mugger, to darken Gods glorie if it might be. But Sathans thoughts are not unknowne to you, and the depth of his ſubtiltie is by you well foreſeen. Therefore let them do whatſoever God ſhall ſuffer them to do: for I know all things ſhall turne to your beſt. Though you lie in the darke, ſloried with the Biſhops blacke coale duſt: yet ſhall you be ſhortly reſtored unto the heavenly light, and made as white as ſnow in Salmon, and as the wings of a Dove that is covered with ſilver wings, and her feathers like gold. You know the veſſell, before it be made bright, is ſoiled with oile, and other things, that it may ſcoure the better.

I. Careles care turned into joy.

Oh happy be you that you be now in the ſcouring houſe: for ſhortly you ſhall be ſet upon the celeſtiall ſhelfe as bright as Angels. Therefore my deare heart, I will now according to your loving requeſt, caſt away all care, and rejoyce with you, and praiſe God for you, and pray for you day and night; yea, I will now with Gods grace ſing Pſalmes of praiſe and thankeſgiving with you. For now my ſoule is turned to her old reſt againe, and hath taken a ſweet nap in Chriſts lap. I have caſt my care upon the Lord, which careth for me, and will be Careles, according to my name, in that reſpect which you would have me. I will leave out my unſeemely addition as long as I live: for it can take no place where true faith and hope is reſident. So ſoone as I had read your moſt godly and comfortable letter, my ſorrowes baniſhed away as ſmoke in the winde, my ſpirit revived, and comfort came againe, whereby I am ſure the ſpirit of God was author of it.

Gods gracious worke through M. Philpots letter.

Oh my good M. Philpot, which art a principall pot indeed filled with moſt precious liquor, as it appeareth by the plenteous pouring forth of the ſame; Oh pot moſt happie, of the high potter ordained to honour, which doeſt containe ſuch heavenly treaſure in the earthen veſſell; Oh Pot thrice happy, in whom Chriſt hath wrought a great miracle, altering thy nature, and turning water into wine, and that of the beſt, whereout the Maſter of the feaſt hath filled my cup ſo full, that I am become drunken in the joy of the ſpirit through the ſame: When Martyrdome ſhall break thee (O veſſell of honor) I know the fragrant ſavor of thy precious Nard will much rejoyce the heavie hearts of Chriſts true members, although the Judaſſes will grudge and murmure at the ſame. Yea and burſt out into words of ſlander, ſaying, it is but loſt and waſte.

John Careles drunken with the joy of the ſpirit.

2 Reg. 6.

Be not offended deare heart, at my metaphoricall ſpeech. For I am diſpoſed to be merry, & with David to dance before the Arke of the Lord; and though you play upon a paire of Organs not very comely or eaſie to the fleſh, yet the ſweet ſound that came from the ſame cauſeth me thus to doe. Oh that I were with you in body, as preſent I am in ſpirit, that I might ſing all care away in Chriſt: for now the time of comfort is come. I hope to be with you ſhortly, if all things happen right. For my old friends of Coventrie have put the Councel in remembrance of me, not ſixe dayes ago, ſaying, that I am more worthy to be burned then any that was burned yet. Gods bleſſing on their hearts for their good report. God make me worthy of that dignitie, and haſten the time that I might ſet forth his glory.

Careles accuſed to the Councell by certaine back friends in Coventry.

Pray for me deare heart, I beſeech you, and will all your company to doe the ſame, and I will pray God for you all, ſo long as I live. And now farewell in Chriſt, thou bleſſed of Gods owne mouth. I will for a time take my leave, but not my laſt farewel. Bleſſed be the time that ever I came into the Kings Bench, to be joyned in love and fellowſhip with ſuch deare children of the Lord. My good brother Bradford ſhall not be dead whiles you be alive: for verily the ſpirit of him doth reſt on you in moſt ample wiſe. Your letters of comfort unto me in each point doe agree, as though the one were a copy of the other. He hath planted in me, and you doe water, the Lord give good increaſe. My deare brethren and fellow priſoners here, have them humbly and heartily commended unto you, and your company, mourning for your miſery, but yet rejoycing for your plenteous conſolation and comfort in Chriſt. We are all cheerefull and merry under our croſſe, and do lack no neceſſaries, praiſed be God for his providence and great mercy towards us for evermore, Amen.

Note how comfortably the Lord worketh in his priſoned Saints.

Gods providence toward his people.

To his Wife.

Another letter of J. Careles to his wife.

AS by the great mercy of God, at the time of his good will and providence appointed (my dearely beloved Wife) you and I were joyned together in the holy and chriſtian ſtate of godly matrimony, as well to our great joy and comfort in Chriſt, as alſo to the increaſe of his bleſſed Church and faithfull Congregation, by having lawfull children by & in the ſame, with the which God of his mercy hath bleſſed us, praiſed be his name therefore: even ſo now by his mercifull will and divine ordinance, the time is come (ſo far as I can perceive) wherein he will, for his glorie and our eternall comfort, diſſolve the ſame, and ſeparate us aſunder againe for a time. Wherefore I thought it good, yea and my bounden dutie, by this ſimple letter to provoke, ſtirre, and admoniſh you, to behave your ſelfe in all your doings, ſayings, and thoughts, moſt thankfully unto our good God for the ſame. And therefore (my deare wife) as you have heartily rejoyced in the Lord, and oftentimes given God thanks for his goodnes, in bringing us together in his holy ordinance: even ſo now I deſire you, when this time of our ſeparation ſhall come, to rejoyce with me in the Lord, and to give him moſt heartie thankes, that he hath (to his glory and our endleſſe commoditie) ſeparated us againe for a little time, and hath mercifully taken me unto himſelfe, forth of this miſerable world, into his celeſtiall Kingdome; beleeving and hoping alſo aſſuredly, that God of his goodneſſe, for his Son Chriſts ſake, wil ſhortly bring you, and your deare children thither to me, that we may moſt joyfully together ſing praiſes unto his glorious name for ever. And yet once againe I deſire you for the love of God, and as ever you loved me, to rejoyce with me, and to give God continuall thankes for doing his moſt mercifull will upon me.

Here is a true marke of a faithfull Chriſtian, forſaking wife and children for Chriſts ſake.

True obedience of a faithfull woman.

I heare ſay that you doe oftentimes uſe to repeate this godly ſaying, The Lords will be fulfilled. Doubtleſſe it rejoyceth my poore heart to heare that report of you, and for the Lords ſake, uſe that godly prayer continually, and teach your children and family to ſay the ſame day and night: and not onely ſay it with your tongues, but alſo with your heart and minde, and joyfully ſubmit your will to Gods will in very deede, knowing and beleeving aſſuredly, that nothing ſhall come to you or any of yours, otherwiſe then it ſhall be his Almightie and Fatherly good will and pleaſure, and for your eternall comfort and commoditie. Which thing to be moſt true and certaine, Chriſt teſtifieth in his holy Goſpel, ſaying, Are not two little Sparrowes ſold for a farthing, and yet not one of them ſhall periſh without the will of your heavenly Father? And he concludeth ſaying, Feare not ye therefore, for ye are better then many Sparrowes. As though he ſhould have ſaid, If God have ſuch reſpect and care for a poore Sparrow, which is not worth one farthing, that it ſhall not be taken in the limetwig, net, nor pitfall, untill it be his good will and pleaſure; you may be well aſſured, that not one of you (whom he ſo dearely loveth, that he hath given his onely deare Son for you) ſhall periſh, or depart forth of this miſerable life without his Almightie good will and pleaſure.

his will be fulfilled, and not yours, except it be agreeing to his will; the which I pray God it may ever be, Amen. And as for worldly things, take you no care, but be you well aſſured the Lord your deare God and Father will not ſee you nor yours lacke, if you continue in his love and childly feare, and keepe a cleare conſcience from all kinde of idolatrie, ſuperſtition and wickedneſſe, as my truſt is that you will doe, although it be with the loſſe and danger of this temporall life. And good Margaret, feare not them that can but kill the bodie (and yet can they not doe that, untill God give them leave, but feare to diſpleaſe him that can kill both body and ſoule, and caſt them into hell fire. Let not the remembrance of your children keep you from God. The Lord himſelfe will be a father and a mother, better then ever you or I could have been unto them. He himſelfe will doe all things neceſſarie for them; yea, as much as rock the cradle, if need be. He hath given his Angels charge over them, therefore commit them unto him. But if you may live with a cleare conſcience (for elſe I would not have you to live) and ſee the bringing up of your children your ſelfe, looke that you nurture them in the feare of God, and keepe them farre from idolatrie, ſuperſtition, and other kinde of wickedneſſe; and for Gods ſake help them to ſome learning if it be poſſible, that they may increaſe in vertue and godly knowledge, which ſhall be a better dowrie to marry them withall, then any worldly ſubſtance; and when they be come to age, provide them ſuch husbands as feare God, and love his holy word. I charge you take heed that you match them with no Papiſts; and if you live and marry again your ſelf (which thing I would wiſh you to do, if need require, or elſe not) good wife take heed how you beſtow your ſelfe, that you and my poore children be not compelled to wickedneſſe. But if you ſhall be able well to live Gods true widow, I would counſell you ſo to live ſtill, for the more quietneſſe of your ſelf and your poore children. Take heed Margaret, and play the wiſe womans part. You have warning by other, if you will take an example. And thus I commit you and my ſweet children unto Gods moſt mercifull defence. The bleſſing of God be with you, and God ſend us a merry meeting together in heaven. Farewell in Chriſt, farewell mine own dear hearts all. Pray, pray.

To my good brother, Maſter Iohn Bradford.

A ſweet letter of Io. Careles to M. Bradford a little before his martyrdom.

The peace of God in Ieſus Chriſt, the eternall comfort of his ſweet ſpirit, which hath ſurely ſealed you unto eternall ſalvation, be with you and ſtrengthen you in your joyfull journey towards the celeſtiall Hieruſalem (my deare friend and moſt faithfull brother Maſter Bradford) to the ſetting forth of Gods glorie, and to your eternall joy in Chriſt, Amen.

He mourneth for the loſſe and lacke of M. Bradford in the Church.

Ever ſince that good M. Philpot ſhewed me your laſt letter (my deare heart in the Lord) I have continued in great heavineſſe and perplexitie; not for any hurt or diſcommoditie that I can perceive comming towards you, unto whom doubtleſſe death is made life and great felicitie, but for the great loſſe that Gods Church here in England ſhall ſuſtaine by the taking away of ſo godly, worthy, and neceſſary an inſtrument, as the Lord hath made you to be. O that my life and a thouſand ſuch wretched lives moe might goe for yours. Oh, why doth God ſuffer me and ſuch other Caterpillers to live, that can doe nothing but conſume the almes of the Church, and take away you, ſo worthy a workman and labourer in the Lords vineyard? But woe be to our ſinnes and great unthankfulneſſe, which is the greateſt cauſe of the taking away of ſuch worthie inſtruments of God, as ſhould ſet forth his glorie, and inſtruct his people. If we had beene thankfull unto God for the good Miniſters of his word, we had not beene ſo ſoone deprived both of it and them. The Lord forgive our great ingratitude and ſinnes, and give us true repentance and faith and hold his hand of mercie over us, for his deare Sonne Chriſts ſake. Take not away all thy true Preachers forth of this Realme (O Lord) but leave us a ſeed, leſt England be made like unto Sodome and Gomorrah, when thy true Lots be gone.

He rejoyceth for the honour of M. Bradfords martyrdome.

But what goe I about to mingle your mirth, with my mourning, and your juſt joy with my deſerved ſorrow? If I loved you indeed, as I have pretended, I ſhould ſurely rejoyce with you moſt heartily, and praiſe God on your behalfe from the very bottome of my heart; I ſhould praiſe God day and night for your excellent election in and through his great mercie, and ſhould give him moſt humble thankes for your vocation by his Goſpell, and your true knowledge in the ſame; I ſhould earneſtly praiſe him for your ſweet juſtification, whereof you are moſt certaine by Gods grace and ſpirit, and ſhould inſtantly pray unto him for your glorification, which ſhall ſhortly enſue; I ſhould rejoyce and be glad to ſee you ſo dignified by the crown of Martyrdome, and to be appointed to that honour, to teſtifie his truth, and to ſeale it with your blood; I ſhould highly extoll the Lord, who hath given you a glorious victorie over all your enemies, viſible and inviſible, and hath given you grace and ſtrength to finiſh the Tower that you have begun to build. Finally, if I loved you, I ſhould moſt heartily rejoyce and be glad to ſee you delivered from his body of ſinne and vile priſon of the fleſh, and brought into that heavenly tabernacle where you ſhall be ſafely kept, and never offend him more.

This and much more ſhould I doe, if I had a good heart towards God, or you his deare childe. But (alas) I am an hypocrite, and do ſeek nothing but mine own commoditie. I would have Gods everlaſting providence give place to my peeviſh will and purpoſe, although it were to the hinderance of his glorie and your ſweet commoditie. God forgive me my horrible ingratitude, ſinnes and offences againſt him: and good brother, doe you forgive mee my great negligence and unthankfulneſſe toward you, and henceforth I promiſe you, I will put my will to Gods will, and pray that the ſame may be fulfilled in you, ſo long as you be on this earth; and when you are taken hence, I will moſt heartily praiſe the Lord for you, ſo long as I have my being in this world. Ah my dear heart, now I muſt take my leave of you, and as I think, my Vltimum vale in this life; but in the life to come I am right well aſſured we ſhall merrily meet together, and that ſhortly I truſt. And in taking of my leave of you (my deare heart in the Lord) I ſhall deſire you faithfully to remember all the ſweet meſſages that the Lord our good God and moſt dear loving Father hath ſent you by me his moſt unworthie ſervant, which as they are moſt true, ſo ſhall they be moſt truly accompliſhed upon you eternally; and for the more aſſurance and certificate thereof to your godly conſcience, he hath commanded me to repeat the ſame unto you again, in his own name and word.

Io. Careles taketh his leave of M. Bradford.

Teſtimony of Gods ſpirit.

Io. Careles doth Gods meſſage to M. Bradford.

Therefore now give ear and faithfull credence. Hearken O ye heavens, and thou earth give eare, and beare me witneſſe at the great day, that I do here faithfully and truly the Lords meſſage unto his dear ſervant, his ſingularly beloved and elect childe John Bradford. John Bradford, thou man ſo ſpecially beloved of God, I pronounce & teſtifie unto thee in the word and name of the Lord Iehova that all thy ſinnes whatſoever they be, be they never ſo many, ſo grievous or ſo great, be fully and freely pardoned, releaſed and forgiven thee, by the mercy of God in Ieſus Chriſt thine onely Lord and ſweet Saviour, in whom thou doeſt undoubtedly beleeve. Chriſt hath cleanſed thee with his bloud, and clothed the withe his righteouſnes, and hath made thee in the ſight of God his Father, without ſpot or wrinkle; ſo that when the fire doth his appointed office, thou ſhalt be received (as a ſweete burnt ſacrifice) into heaven, where thou ſhalt joyfully remaine in Gods preſence for ever, as the true inheritor of his everlaſting Kingdome, unto the which thou waſt undoubtedly predeſtinate and ordained by the Lords infallible purpoſe and decree, before the foundation of the world was laid. And that this is moſt true that I have ſaid, I call the whole Trinitie, the almightie and eternall Maieſty of God the Father, the Son, and the holy Ghoſt, to my record at this preſent; whom I humbly beſeech to confirme and ſtabliſh in thee the true and lively feeling of the ſame, Amen. Selah.

Now with a merry heart and joyfull ſpirit, ſomething mixed with lawfull teares, I take my farewell of you, mine owne deare brother in the Lord; who ſend us ſhortly a merry meeting in his Kingdome, that we may both ſing praiſes together unto him with his holy Angels and bleſſed ſpirits for ever and ever. Farewell thou bleſſed in the Lord, farewell in Chriſt, depart unto my reſt in the Lord; and pray for me for Gods ſake.

As I had made an end of this ſimple letter, I heard ſome comfort both of good Maſter Philpots ſervant and yours: but (alas) I doe ſcarcely beleeve them. Well, I will hope in God, and pray all night that God will ſend me ſome comfort to morrow, and if the Lord give you ſparing to morrow, let me heare foure words of comfort from you, for Gods ſake. The bleſſing of God be with you now and for ever, Amen.

Yours for ever in the Lord Ieſus, I. Careles, living in hope againſt hope.

In reading this letter of Iohn Careles to M. Bradford above prefixed, wherein he maketh ſo much mention of a certaine letter of his ſent to him, and of the great exceeding conſolation he received of the ſame, thou wilt wiſh peradventure (good loving Reader) in thy minde, to have ſome ſight alſo of the ſaid letter of M. Bradford. Wherein to ſatiſfie thy deſire, or rather to prevent thy petition, I have hereunto annexed the ſame, to the intent thou mayſt not onely underſtand the contents thereof, but alſo receive fruite thereof to thy conſolation likewiſe. The purport of the letter here followeth.

M. Bradford to Careles.

A comfortable letter of M. Bradford to Iohn Careles.

ALmighty God our deare Father, through and for the merits of his dearely beloved Sonne Ieſus Chriſt, be mercifull unto us, pardon us our offences, and under the wings of his mercy protect us from all evill, from henceforth and for ever, Amen.

Deare brother Careles, I heartily pray you to pray to God for me, for the pardon of my manifold ſinnes and moſt grievous offences, which neede none other demonſtration unto you then this, namely, that I have behaved my ſelfe ſo negligently in anſwering your godly triple letters, which are three witneſſes againſt me. God lay not them, nor any other thing to my charge to condemnation, though to correction, not my will, but his will be done. Concerning your requeſt of abſolution (my deareſt Brother) what ſhall I ſay, but even as truth is, that the Lord of all mercy, and Father of all comfort, through the merits and mediation of his deare Sonne thy onely Lord and Saviour, hath clearely remitted and pardoned all thy offences whatſoever they be, that ever hitherto thou haſt committed againſt his Majeſtie: and therefore he hath given to thee as to his childe (deare brother Iohn Careles) in token that thy ſinnes are pardoned; he (I ſay) hath given thee a penitent and beleeving heart, that is, a heart which deſireth to repent and beleeve: For ſuch a one is taken of him (he accepting the will for the deed) for a penitent and beleeving heart in deed.

Practice of the keyes of the Goſpel.

Wherefore (my good brother) be merry, glad, and of good cheare, for the Lord hath taken away thy ſinnes; thou ſhalt not die. Goe thy wayes; the Lord hath put away thy ſinnes. The Eaſt is not ſo farre from the Weſt, as the Lord hath now put thy ſinnes from thee. Looke how the heavens be in compariſon of the earth, ſo farre hath his mercy prevailed towards thee his deare childe, Iohn Careles, through Chriſt the beloved. Say therefore with David, Praiſe the Lord, O my ſoule, and all that is within me praiſe his holy name: for he hath forgiven thee all thy ſins; as truely he hath. And hereof I deſire to be a witneſſe. God make me worthy to heare from you the like true meſſage for my ſelfe. Mine owne dearely beloved, you have great cauſe to thanke God moſt heartily that he hath given you ſuch repentance and faith; the Lord increaſe the ſame in you and me a moſt miſerable wretch, whoſe heart is harder then the Adamant ſtone, or elſe I could not thus long have ſtayed from writing unto you. If I live and may, I purpoſe and promiſe you to make amends. Pray for me, my moſt deare brother, I heartily beſeech you, and forgive me my long ſilence. God our Father be with us for ever, Amen.

Yours in the Lord, Iohn Bradford.

To my moſt deare and faithfull brethren in Newgate, condemned to die for the teſtimonie of Gods everlaſting truth.

Another letter of Io. Careles to the conſtant brethren in Newgate condemned.

THe everlaſting peace of God, in Ieſus Chriſt, the continuall joy, ſtrength and comfort of his moſt pure, holy, and mighty ſpirit, with the increaſe of faith & lively feeling of his eternal mercy, be with you, my moſt deare and faithfull loving brother Tyms, and with all the reſt of my deare hearts in the Lord, your faithfull fellow ſouldiers, and moſt conſtant companions in bonds, yea of men condemned moſt cruelly for the ſincere teſtimony of Gods everlaſting truth, to the full finiſhing of that good work, which he hath ſo graciouſly begun in you all, that the ſame may be to his glory, the commoditie of his poore afflicted church, and to your everlaſting comfort in him, Amen.

Ah my moſt ſweet and loving brethren, and deareſt hearts in the Lord, what ſhall I ſay, or how ſhall I write unto you, in the leaſt point or part to utter the great joy that my poore heart hath conceived in God, through the moſt godly example of your Chriſtian conſtancie and ſincere confeſſion of Chriſts veritie? Truly my tongue cannot declare nor my pen expreſſe the abundance of ſpirituall mirth and gladneſſe, that my minde and inward man hath felt, ever ſince I heard of your hearty boldneſſe, and modeſt behaviour before that bloudy butcher, in the time of all your craftie examinations, eſpecially at your cruell condemnation, in their curſed Conſiſtorie place. Bleſſed be God the Father of all mercie, and praiſed be his name, for that he hath ſo graciouſly performed upon you his deare dearelings, his moſt ſweet and comfortable promiſes, in not onely giving you the continuall ayd, ſtrength, & comfort of his holy and mightie ſpirit to the faithfull confeſſion of his Chriſt, for whoſe cauſe (O moſt happy men) ye are condemned to die: but alſo in giving you ſuch a mouth and wiſdome, as all your wicked enemies were not able to reſiſt, but were faine to crie, Peace, peace, and not ſuffer you to ſpeake. As truely as God liveth (my deare brethren) this is not onely unto you a moſt evident probation that God is on our ſide, and a ſure certaintie of your everlaſting ſalvation in him, but alſo to your cruell adverſaries (or rather Gods curſed enemies) a plaine demonſtration of their juſt eternall woe and damnation, which they ſhall be full ſure ſhortly to feele, when ye ſhall ful ſweetly poſſeſſe the place of felicitie and pleaſure prepared for you from the beginning.

Therefore (my dearely beloved) ceaſe not ſo long as ye be in this life, to praiſe the Lord with a luſtie courage, for that of his great mercy and infinite goodneſſe, he hath vouched you worthy of this great dignity, to ſuffer for his ſake not onely the loſſe of goods, wife, and children, long impriſonment, cruell oppreſſion, &c. but alſo the very deprivation of this mortall life with the diſſolution of your bodies in the fire. The which is the greateſt promotion that God can bring you or any other unto in this vale of miſerie, yea ſo great an honour, as the higheſt Angel in heaven is not permitted to have; and yet hath the Lord for his deare Sonne Chriſts ſake reputed you worthy of the ſame, yea and that before me and many other, which have both long looked and longed for the ſame.

Io. Careles longeth to die a Martyr in the Goſpels cauſe.

Ah my moſt deare brother Tyms, whoſe time reſteth altogether in the hands of the Lord, in a full happy time cameſt thou into this troubleſome world, but in a much more bleſſed houre ſhalt thou depart out of the ſame: ſo that the ſweete ſaying of Solomon, or rather of the holy Ghoſt, ſhall be ful well verified upon thee, yea and all thy faithfull fellowes, Better is the day of death (ſaith he) then the day of birth. This ſaying cannot be verified upon every man, but upon thee my deare brother, and ſuch as thou art, whoſe death is moſt precious before God, and full deare ſhall your bloud be in his ſight. Bleſſed be God for thee my deare brother Tyms, and bleſſed be God againe that ever I knew thee, for in a moſt happy time I came firſt into thy company. Pray for me, deare brother, pray for me, that God will once vouch me worthy of that great dignitie whereunto he hath brought you.

Ah my loving brother Drake, whoſe ſoule now draweth nigh unto God, of whom ye have received the ſame, full glad may you be that ever God gave you a life to leave for his ſake: Full well will he reſtore it to you againe in a thouſand fold more glorious wiſe. Praiſe God, good brother, as you have a great cauſe, and pray for me, I beſeech you, which am ſo much unworthy (ſo great are my ſinnes) of that great dignitie whereunto the Lord hath called you and the reſt of your godly brethren; whom I beſeech you to comfort in the Lord, as you can full well; praiſed be God for his gifts, which you have heartily applied to the ſetting forth of his glory, & the commodity of his poore afflicted Church. Which thing ſhal ſurely redound to your everlaſting joy, and comfort, as you ſhall moſt effectually feele ere ever it be long, though the wicked of the world judge far otherwiſe.

Ah mine owne hearts, and moſt dearely beloved brethren, Cavel, Ambroſe, and both the Spurges; bleſſed be the Lord on your behalfe, and praiſed be his name, which hath given you ſuch a glorious victorie; Full valiant have you ſhewed your ſelves in the Lords fight, and full faithfull in your painefull ſervice. Faint not, but goe on forward as yee have moſt godly begun, for great ſhall your reward be at the end of this your travell. Ah my good faithfull brethren all, what ſhall I ſay, or what ſhall I write unto you, but even the ſame that good Elizabeth did ſay to her godly kinſwoman Marie the bleſſed Mother of Chriſt, Happy art thou (quoth that good woman) which haſt beleeved: for all things which the Lord hath ſpoken to thee, ſhall be fulfilled. So I ſay to you (my deare hearts in the Lord) happie are ye all, yea twice happie ſhall you be for evermore, becauſe ye have ſtedfaſtly beleeved the moſt ſweet promiſes which God the Father hath made unto you with his owne mouth, in that he hath promiſed you (which are the faithfull ſeed of the beleeving Abraham) that ye ſhall be bleſſed ever, world without end. The promiſes of God your moſt ſweet Father, as ye doe beleeve, ſo do ye beare record that God is true. The teſtimonie whereof ye have full worthily borne to the world, and ſhortly will full ſurely ſeale the ſame with your bloud, yea even to morrow, I doe underſtand. Oh conſtant Chriſtians, O valiant ſouldiers of the high Captaine Jeſus Chriſt, who for your ſake hath conquered the Devill, death, ſinne, and hell, and hath given you full victory over them for evermore. Oh worthy witneſſes, and moſt glorious Martyrs, whoſe invincible faith hath overcome that proud, ſturdy, bragging Prince of the world, and all his wicked armie, over whom ye ſhall ſhortly triumph for evermore. Ah my ſweete hearts, the everlaſting treaſures are full ſurely laid up for you in heaven. The immarceſſible and moſt glorious crowne of victorie is already made and prepared for you, to be ſhortly clapt upon all your happie heads. The holy Angels of you heavenly Father are already appointed to conduct your ſweet ſoules into Abrahams boſome. All the heavenly hoſt rejoyceth already, for that they ſhall ſhortly receive you with joy, and felicitie, into their bleſſed fellowſhip, Selah.

Rejoyce with double joy, and be glad my deare brethren, for doubtleſſe ye have more cauſe then can be expreſſed. But (alas) I that for my ſins am left behinde, may lie and lament with the holy Prophet, ſaying, Woe is me that the dayes of my joyfull reſt are prolonged. Ah curſed Satan, which hath cauſed me ſo ſore to offend my moſt deare loving Father, whereby mine exile and baniſhment is ſo much prolonged. Oh Chriſt my deare Advocate, pacifie thy Fathers wrath, which I have juſtly deſerved, that he may take me home to him in his ſweet mercie. O that I might now come home unto thee with thy bleſſed brethren. Well, thy will O Lord be effectuouſly fulfilled, for it is onely good, and turneth all things to the beſt, for ſuch as thou in thy mercy haſt choſen.

Pſal. 119.

And now farewell my deare hearts, moſt happy in the Lord, I truſt in my good God, yet ſhortly to ſee you in the celeſtiall Citie, whereof undoubtedly the Lord hath already made you free Citizens. Though you be yet with us for a little time, your very home is in heaven, where your treaſure doth remaine with your ſweet Lord and Redeemer Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe calling you have heard with the eares of your hearts, and therefore ye ſhall never come into judgement, but paſſe from death to life. Your ſins ſhal never more be remembred, be they never ſo many, ſo grievous, or ſo great: for your Saviour hath caſt them all into the bottome of the ſea; he hath removed them from you, as far as the Eaſt is from the Weſt, and his mercie hath much more prevailed over you, then is diſtance betweene heaven and earth; and he hath given you for an everlaſting poſſeſſion of the ſame, all his holines, righteouſnes, and juſtification, yea and the holy Ghoſt into your hearts, wherewith ye are ſurely ſealed unto the day of redemption, to certifie you of your eternall election, and that ye are his true adopted ſons, whereby ye may boldly cry unto God, Abba deare father, for evermore: ſo that now no creature in heaven, earth nor hell, ſhall be able to accuſe you before the throne of the heavenly King. Sathan is now caſt out from you; he himſelfe is judged, and hath no part in you. He will once more bite you by the heele, and then he hath done, for at that time you ſhall ſquiſe his head through your owne good Chriſt, and ſo have you finall victory for evermore. In joyfull triumph whereof, ye ſhall ſweetly aſcend into the place of eternall reſt, whither your eldeſt brother Chriſt is gone before you, to take poſſeſſion for you, and to prepare your place under the holy altar, with Cranmer, Latimer, Ridley, Rogers, Hooper, Sanders, Farrar, Tailor, Bradford, Philpot, with many other, who will be full glad of your coming, to ſee ſixe more of their appointed number, that their bloud may ſo much the ſooner be revenged upon them that dwell on the earth.

Geneſ. 3.

Thus I make an end, committing you all to Gods moſt mercifull defence, whoſe quarrell ye have defended, whoſe cauſe ye have promoted, whoſe glory ye have ſet forth, and whoſe name ye have conſtantly confeſſed. Farewell for a while my deare hearts in the Lord, I will make as much haſte after you as I may. All our deare brethren ſalute you. They pray for you, and praiſe God for you continually. Bleſſed be the dead that die in the Lord, for they reſt from their labours, ſaith the holy Ghoſt, and their works follow them.

Apoc. 11.

Your own Iohn Careles, a moſt unprofitable ſervant of the Lord. Pray, pray, pray.

Ye heard before the letter of Thomas Whittle, written to John Careles, wherein he yeeldeth great thankes unto him for the ſingular joy & conſolation received by his letters. The copy of which letters ſent unto him if any be diſpoſed to peruſe, here under followeth to ſatisfie his deſire.

To M. Green, M. Whittle, and certaine other priſoners in Newgate, condemned, and ready to be burnt for the teſtimonie of our Lord Ieſus.

Another letter of Jo. Careles, wherein he doth animate Green, Whittle, & the reſt of that company unto their martyrdome.

The everlaſting peace in Jeſus Chriſt, the continuall comfort of his moſt pure and holy ſpirit, be with you my moſt deare and faithfull brethren and ſiſters of Newgate, the Lords appointed ſheep unto the ſlaughter, to the good performance of the great and notable work of the Lord, which he hath ſo graciouſly begun in you all; that the ſame may redound to the ſetting forth of his glory, and to the commoditie of his Church, and to your owne everlaſting comfort in him. So be it.

Ah my deare hearts, and moſt faithfull brethren and ſiſters in the Lord, what high lauds and praiſe, yea what humble and continuall thankes am I bound to give to God our Father for you and on your moſt happy behalfe, who ſo mightily hath magnified himſelfe in you thus far forth, in giving you his holy and mightie ſpirit, to the conſtant confeſſing of Chriſts veritie, even to the cruell condemnation, and I doubt not but he will doe the ſame to the death. Oh happie and bleſſed are you that ever you were borne, that the Lord will vouch you worthy of this great dignitie, to die for his ſake. Doubtleſſe it is the greateſt honour that God can give you in this life. Yea if they be ſo bleſſed of God that die in the Lord, as the holy Ghoſt ſaith they be; how much more bleſſed and happy then are you, that die not onely in the Lord, but alſo for the Lord. O that it were the good will of God, that the good houre were now come, that I might goe with you. Ah that my ſins made me not unworthy of ſuch an excellent dignitie.

Apoc. 11.

To die in the Lord, and for the Lord.

Be thankfull deare hearts, be thankfull and rejoyce in the Lord: for mightie is his mercy towards you, and great is your reward in heaven, the which you like faithfull perſons have plucked to you with a godly violence of an invincible faith. Oh worthy Warriours of the moſt high Captaine. Oh conſtant confeſſors of the everlaſting veritie, how glorious a crowne of victorie ſhall you ſhortly receive, which is prepared for all ſuch as doe continue to the end? Oh you ſweete Saints of the Lord, how precious ſhall your death be in his ſight? Oh how deare are your ſoules to your Redeemer, in whoſe hand they ſhall moſt joyfully reſt, and the paines of death ſhall never touch you? Oh how bleſſed ſhall you be, when Chriſt ſhall appeare, at the which time you ſhall receive your bodies againe full of immortalitie? Oh how joyfull ſhall you be, when Chriſt according to his promiſe ſhall knowledge you before his Father and his holy Angels, as you have moſt conſtantly confeſſed him to be your Lord and onely Saviour before men?

Of this Bartlet Green, reade before.

Oh bleſſed Green, thou meek and loving lambe of the Lord, how happy art thou to be appointed to die for his ſake? A full daintie diſh art thou for the Lords owne tooth. Freſh and Green ſhalt thou be in the houſe of the Lord, and thy fruits ſhall never wither nor decay. Although thou goe here forth ſowing thy good fruits with teares, the time ſhall come that thou ſhalt reap with joy and gladneſſe the fruits of everlaſting life, and that without ceaſing. Be merrie therefore and feare not, for it is thy Fathers will to give thee a Kingdome, whereunto he hath choſen thee before the foundations of the world were laid.

Luke 12.

Of this Tho. Whittle, reade before.

Oh happie Miniſter, thou man of God, how glad mayeſt thou be of Gods moſt gracious favour, which hath prevented thee in the day of thy triall? Oh happie Peter, whoſe part thou haſt well played; therefore thy reward and portion ſhall be like unto his. Now haſt thou good experience of mans infirmitie, but much more proofe and taſte, yea ſenſe and feeling of Gods abundant bottomeleſſe mercie. Although Satan deſired to ſift thee, yet Chriſt thy good Captaine prayed that thy faith ſhould not faile. Gods ſtrength is made perfect by thy weakeneſſe, and his grace is ſufficient for thee his deare childe. Thine example did ſo encourage and ſtrengthen thy poore brethren, that God is every way glorified by thee, and ſhortly will he glorifie thee with himſelfe, with that glory which he hath prepared for thee his elect deareling before the world was made. Therefore rejoyce and be glad, for thou haſt good occaſion, in finding ſuch favour in his ſight.

Luke 22.

This is moſt true (O my other brethren, whom I doe not know, neither have I heard much of you) happy are you that ever you were borne, and bleſſed be our God which hath given you ſuch victory over the bloudy beaſt; ſhortly ſhall you be cloathed in large white garments, and fine robes of righteouſnes, and ſo ſhall you follow the lambe on Mount Sion with new ſongs of mirth and melodie, for your delivery forth of Satans power and tyrannie. God for evermore be bleſſed for you, and ſtrengthen you to the end, as I doubt not but he will: for he never failed them that put their truſt in him.

Apoc. 15.

Of Joane Warne, reade before.

O my deare and faithfull ſiſter Joane Warne, what ſhall I ſay to thee? Thy triall hath beene great; thy victorie in Chriſt hath beene notable. Thou haſt overcome many a ſharpe ſhower and ſtorme. Shortly ſhalt thou arrive at the haven of quiet reſt, and receive a reward due to a conſtant Martyr. Thou ſhalt goe home to thy heavenly Father, and poſſeſſe for ever the inheritance which Chriſt hath purchaſed for thee, where thy earthly parents be, ſtil looking for thee, which have triumphed over Antichriſt moſt victoriouſly. Oh bleſſed parents of happie children, which have ſhewed ſuch an example as the like hath been ſeldome ſeen. I ſalute thee dear ſiſter of like conſtant minde, whoſe conſtant example is worthie of continuall memorie. Praiſed be God for you mine own ſweet ſiſters, which hath made you play ſuch wiſe virgins parts. He hath plentifully poured the oile of his ſpirit into the lamps of your faith, ſo that the light thereof ſhall never be extinct. You ſhall enter with your Bridegroome into everlaſting joy, whereunto you were choſen in him from the beginning.

Oh my deare brethren and ſiſters, you bleſſed Saints of the Lord, how much, and how deeply am I bound to praiſe God for you both day and night. Pray, pray for me (my deare hearts) for the tender mercie of God, that I may be made worthy to follow your trace. Oh that I had run the race of my life as far as you have done yours, and were as nigh my journeys end as you be unto yours. But alas, I lie like the lame man at the pools ſide by Solomons porch, and everie man goeth into the place of health before me. But God will appoint me one, one day to put me in. I truſt my Lord of Londons Colehouſe is emptie, and all his Officers idle. Therefore they muſt ſhortly fetch more ſheep to the ſhambles; for he is the common ſlaughter ſlave of all England. But happie are you that are paſſed through the pikes, and delivered out of his hands, and from all the angels of the darkneſſe of this world, which long tempted you in the wilderneſſe of the ſame: but now ſhall the Angels of God come and miniſter unto you; for they are your ſervants to hold you up in their hands, that you ſhall not hurt your foot, no nor one haire of your head ſhall periſh. They ſhall carrie you up to heaven in a fierie chariot, though you leave your mantle behinde you for a time, untill God reſtore the ſame again in a more ample and glorious ſort.

Thus in haſte, as it doth appeare, I am conſtrained to make an end, committing you all to Gods moſt mercifull defence; who ever have you in his bleſſed keeping, deſiring you all to remember me in your godly and faithfull prayers, as I will not forget you in mine, by Gods grace. The bleſſing of God be with you all my deare brethren and ſiſters. All our brethren and fellow-priſoners here have them moſt heartily commended unto you, and pray for you without ceaſing. God ſend us a merrie meeting in his Kingdome, Amen.

By your brother and unfained lover, Iohn Careles, priſoner, abiding his moſt mercifull will and pleaſure. Pray, pray, pray.

To my dear and faithfull brother, William Tyms, priſoner in Newgate.

Another letter of Jo. Careles, privately written to his bedfellow Wil. Tyms.

The everlaſting peace of God in Jeſus Chriſt, with the continuall joy, comfort, and ſtrength of his ſweet ſpirit, be multiplied, and daily more and more increaſed in your good heart (my moſt faithfull and deare brother Tyms) to the full quieting of your conſcience, and beating back of all the fierie darts of the wicked, that you may ſhortly receive the glorious crown of victorie, and in the ſame triumph over all your enemies, for evermore, Amen.

Gods children never tempted above their ſtrength.

He confirmeth W. Tyms, being condemned, to the day of his martyrdome.

I cannot expreſſe the exceeding great joy and conſolation of my poore heart, conſidering the marvellous works of GOD moſt graciouſly wrought upon you, not onely in proving you and trying your faith by his great and huge croſſes, both inwardly and outwardly, but alſo in giving you ſo great conſolation and conſtancie in the midſt of the ſame. Faithfull is God, and true of his promiſes, who hath ſaid; That he will never ſuffer his choſen children to be tempted above their ſtrength, but in the middeſt of their temptation will make an out-ſcape for them, by ſuch means as may make to his glorie and their everlaſting conſolation. My deare heart, great cauſe have you to be of good comfort, for I ſee in you as lively a token of Gods everlaſting love and favour in Jeſus Chriſt, as ever I perceived in any man. In reſpect whereof, I do even with my heart, love, honour, and reverence you, beſeeching God for his glorious Names ſake, in the bowels and blood of our Lord and onely Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, to finiſh his good worke in you, as I doubt not but he will do, according to his infallible promiſes, yea I am well aſſured thereof, foraſmuch as you have ſo effectually received his holy ſpirit into your heart, as a pledge and a ſure ſeale of your eternall redemption, and a teſtimonie of your adoption in Chriſt Jeſus. For which cauſe Satan ſo ſore envieth you, that he hath now bent all his fierce Ordnance againſt you, thinking thereby utterly to deſtroy the invincible fort of your faith, founded moſt firmly upon the unmoveable Rock Chriſt, againſt the which neither the Devill, ſin, nor yet hell gates ſhall ever prevail, Selah.

It is the nature of Gods children to be tempted.
Math. 4.

Satans tempting tools.

2 Cor. 2.

Therefore mine own bowels in the Lord, be not diſcomforted for this your conflict, which doubtleſſe ſhall greatly increaſe your crown of glorie, triumph and victorie; but take a good heart unto you, and buckle boldly with Satan, both in himſelfe and his ſubtle members. It is the verie divine ordinance of GOD, that all his regenerate people ſhall be tempted, proved, and tried, as we ſee by the example of our Saviour Chriſt; who as ſoone as he was baptized, was ſtraightwayes led of the holy Ghoſt into the wilderneſſe, there to be tempted of the Devill. But there got he ſuch a glorious victorie of Satan, that he could never ſince finally prevail againſt any of his poore members, but in everie aſſault that he maketh either inwardly or outwardly, he getteth a foile, and taketh ſhame; ſo that now he rageth with all the ſpite poſſible, ſpecially becauſe he knoweth his time is but ſhort. Saint James teſtifieth that he is but a verie coward, that will ſoone flee if he be faithfully reſiſted. And as for his tempting tooles, the Lord hath made them manifeſt unto us, ſo that he cannot deceive us though he aſſault us; for as ſaint Paul ſaith; His verie thoughts are not unknown to us, as it doth in you largely appear, praiſed be the Lords Name therefore.

Two principall pellets at Satan whereby he aſſaulteth Gods ſervants.
1. Fear of ſin and death, and infidelity of Gods promiſes.

Remedy againſt fear and infidelitie.

You ſee (deare brother) that now to moleſt you and ſuch as you are, that be even paſſing from this vale of miſerie, he hath but two wayes, or two peeces of Ordnance to ſhoot at you, with the which he cannot hurt you, becauſe you have two Bulwarks to defend you. The firſt of theſe terrible Gunnes that Satan hath ſhot at you, is the verie ſame that he continually ſhooteth at me, that is to ſay, feare and infidelitie; for the uglesomeneſſe of death, and horror of my ſinnes, which be ſo many, grievous, and great. But this pellet is eaſily put away with the ſure ſhield of faith, in the moſt precious death and blood-ſhedding of our deare Lord and onely Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, whom the Father hath given unto us wholly to be ours for evermore, and with him hath given us all things, as Paul ſaith; ſo that though we be never ſo great ſinners, yet Chriſt is made unto us holineſſe, righteouſneſſe, and juſtification. He hath clothed us with all his merits, mercies, and moſt ſweet ſufferings, and hath taken unto him all our miſerie, wretchedneſſe, ſinne, and infirmitie, mitie. So that if any ſhould now be condemned for the ſame, it muſt needs be Jeſus Chriſt, which hath taken them upon him. But indeed he hath made ſatiſfaction for them to the uttermoſt jot; ſo that for his ſake they ſhall never be imputed to us, if they were a thouſand times ſo many moe as they be. This do you moſt effectuouſly feele and know (deare brother) a great deale better then I can tell you, bleſſed be GOD therefore.

And now Satan, ſeeing that he cannot prevail with his boyſterous batterie againſt this Bulwarke of faith, which doth ſo quench all his fierie darts, that they can do you no harme, but rather do you good ſervice to caſt you down, under the mightie hand of GOD, that he may take you up by his onely grace and power, and ſo you may render him all the glorie by Jeſus Chriſt (which thing the enemy can in no wiſe abide) therefore he ſhooteth off his other Peece moſt peſtilent, to provoke you to put ſome part of your truſt and confidence in your ſelf, and in your own holineſſe and righteouſneſſe, that you might that way rob GOD of his glorie, and Chriſt of the honour and dignitie of his death. But bleſſed be the Lord God, you have alſo a full ſtrong Bulwarke to beat back this peſtiferous pellet alſo, even the pure Law of GOD, which proveth the beſt of us all damnable ſinners in the ſight of GOD, if he would enter into judgement with us, according to the ſeveritie of the ſame, and that even our beſt works are polluted and defiled in ſuch ſort, as the Prophet deſcribeth them. With which manner of ſpeaking our free-will Phariſees are much offended; for it felleth all mans righteouſneſſe to the ground (I had like to have ſaid, to the bottome of hell) and extolleth onely the righteouſneſſe of Jeſus Chriſt, which is allowed before GOD, and is freely given to all thoſe that firmly beleeve, as bleſſed be GOD you do.

The ſecond pellet of Satan, is confidence and truſt in our good works.

Remedy againſt the ſecond pellet Iſa. 64.

Ah my good brother Tyms, Satan hath put his hand in a wrong box when he beginneth to tempt you, either to vaine-glorie or miſtruſt: for you are an old beaten ſouldier, and have had good experienre of theſe manner of temptations, both by your ſelfe and other, whom you know well were beloved of GOD. Be of good cheere therefore deare heart, be of good cheere, for now Satan hath wrought all his malice, he hath done all that he can, and hath ſhot off all his laſt Peeces, wherewith he had thought to have done moſt miſchiefe; but now he ſeeth he cannot prevaile (the ſtrong Tower of your faith being ſo invincible) he will pluck up all his tents, and get him to ſome other place to practiſe the like aſſaults, and then will the Angels of GOD come and miniſter unto you the moſt ſweet and heavenly conſolations of the holy Ghoſt. To him therefore who is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that ever we can deſire or think, I do moſt heartily commit you, with all the reſt of your godly priſon-fellows, who comfort, ſtrengthen, and defend you with his grace and mightie operation of his holy Spirit, as he hath hitherto done, that you having a moſt glorious victorie over the ſubtle Serpent, and all his wicked ſeed, may alſo receive the Crowne of glorie and immortalitie prepared for you before the foundations of the world were laid, and is ſo ſurely kept for you in the hands of him whoſe promiſe is unfallible, that the Devill, ſinne, death, or hell, ſhall never be able to deprive you of the ſame. The bleſſing of GOD be with you now and for evermore, Amen. Pray, pray, pray for me.

Satan overcome in Gods Saints.

Your own for ever,
Iohn Careles.

To my good ſiſter M. C.

Another letter of Io. Careles to Miſtreſſe Cotton, a faithfull ſiſter and favourer of the Goſpel.

The peace of God in Jeſus Chriſt, and the eternall comforts of his ſweet ſpirit, be with you my dear and faithfull ſiſter, to the full accompliſhment of that good work which he hath moſt graciouſly begun in you, that the ſame may be effectually to the ſetting forth of his glory, and to your everlaſting conſolation in him, Amen.

My loving and faithfull ſiſter in the Lord, I thank you for all your loving kindneſſe ſhewed unto me in your fervent and faithfull prayers, and for your moſt godly and comfortable letter, whereby you do not onely much increaſe my joy and comfort, but alſo put me in remembrance of my dutie towards you.

Bleſſed be the Lord God, which of his great mercie hath ſo beautified his Church in theſe our dayes, that even unto many godly women he hath given moſt excellent gifts of knowledge and underſtanding of his truth, ſo that they are not onely well able to informe their owne conſciences in all things neceſſarie to ſalvation, but alſo moſt ſweetly comfort their ſorrowfull brethren and ſiſters that ſuſtaine any trouble for the teſtimonie of Gods truth, yea and that which is more, even in the middeſt of their great conflicts of conſcience. Of which moſt happie number of godly and vertuous women (my deare heart) you are one, and that of the chiefeſt, being plentifully indued with the gifts of Gods moſt gracious Spirit, as it doth full well appeare in your daily doings. God onely have the praiſe therefore.

Gods great gifts in women.

Foraſmuch then as GOD hath given you the gift to write, I ſhall moſt heartily deſire you to let me hear from you ſometimes, be it never ſo little, for truly I take great comfort and courage thereby, ſpecially in my poore conſcience, which is ſore aſſaulted of ſubtle Satan, and in a manner oppreſſed of my ſinnes. Pray (deare ſiſter) that GOD may give me true, heartie, and earneſt repentance, and increaſe my faith, for they are both the good gifts of God onely, and far paſſe the reach of my power, to take at my pleaſure.

Note how God ſometime gives comfort by weaker veſſels.

Therefore (deare ſiſter) if you helpe me to beg the ſame of our deare loving Father, I am ſure that he both can and will give them in his good time. As for the fear of death, or terror of the fire, I moſt heartily thank my good God, I feel it not; onely it is mine own ſins and unthankfulneſſe which holdeth hard battell, and wageth ſtrong war againſt me, which onely goeth about to ſeparate me from my good Captain Chriſt, that I ſhould not enjoy his glorious victorie; but God being on my ſide (as I am ſure he is) that cannot continually prevail againſt me. Though GOD for a time permit Satan to take his pleaſure on me, as he did upon Job, yet I doubt not but in the end all ſhall turn to my profit, through the merits of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, to whoſe moſt mercifull defence I commit you (dear ſiſter) with all the reſt of the Lords elect. Farewell in Chriſt.

Jo. Careles nothing touched with fear of death, or of the fire, but onely of his ſins.

Yours unfainedly, Iohn Careles.
Pray, pray, pray, pray.

To my deare brother T. V.

Another letter of Jo Careles, wherein he comforteth the afflicted minde of a certain good brother, mourning for lack of Gods feeling.

The everlaſting peace of GOD in Jeſus Chriſt, the continuall comforts of his moſt pure and holy Spirit, be with you my moſt deare friend and faithfull brother W. to the increaſe of your faith, and comfort of your ſorrowfull ſpirit, which is to the Father a ſweet ſacrifice through

Chriſt,

Q. Marie. Anno 1556.

Chriſt, for whoſe ſake he will never deſpiſe your humble and contrite heart, but doth favourably accept the ſame, and will in moſt ample wiſe perform the deſire thereof to his glory, and your eternall comfort in him.

In the midſt of my manifold croſſes and troubles, wherein I am conſtrained to flee unto God for refuge and ſuccour by earneſt and faithfull prayer, I cannot forget you my deare heart in the Lord, but eſteeming your ſtate for mine owne, I do poure forth my complaint for you, as I do for my ſelfe, and rather more, as I thinke preſent need doth require, deſiring moſt heartily to heare the good ſucceſſe of the ſame in you. The Lord God for his great mercies ſake accompliſh my deſire, as I doubt not but he will, when he ſeeth it good and moſt to his glorie, and to your comfort and commoditie. Oh that I might once ſee you ſo merrie in Chriſt, as you have juſt cauſe to be, that you might ſay with David, Pſalme 57. Awake my glorie, awake Lute and Harpe, bring forth the Pſalter with the merrie Song, that I might ſing a new Song of praiſe and thankſgiving unto the Lord, for the light of his favourable countenance, his help and deliverance. Oh, that would refreſh me as a moſt precious oyle, and gladden my poore heart, which is aſſaulted with ſorrow moe wayes then one. I doubt not but the ſame ſhall by your meanes receive much comfort, though for a time it doth mourne with you, that we may be made both glad together, yea and that with ſuch gladneſſe as ſhall continue for ever. But in the meane ſpace (I ſay) moſt happie are you, that ſo heartily mourne for the abſence of the Bridegroome. If you were not a wedding childe, you could never do it. Onely Chriſts true Diſciples do mourne for his abſence: therefore ſhall they doubtleſſe rejoyce at his preſence, which will be ſo much more joyfull, by how much the abſence is more ſorrowfull.

Comfort for a ſick conſcience.

Therefore (my good brother) take a good heart unto you, and be of good cheere. Say with the Prophet David, Pſalme 42. O my ſoule, why art thou ſo heavie, and why art thou ſo diſquieted within me? O put thy truſt in GOD, for I will yet give him thanks for the helpe of his loving countenance, and becauſe he is my GOD. Reade Pſalme 41. and 42. for your comfort, and conſider that the holy King and Prophet, at the making and firſt ſaying of them, was even in the ſame caſe that you are now in; but he ſtill comforted himſelf with the ſweet promiſes of God: and ſo do you my deare heart, for to you they do as well pertaine as they did to him, and as ſurely ſhall they be performed upon you, as they were upon him; for he is one God and deare Father unto you both, and for his mercie, truth, and promiſe ſake, he muſt needs make good unto you all that he hath ſaid. If his love towards you ſtood in the reſpect of your owne merit and worthineſſe, you might well mourne, lament, and complaine; yea, you had good cauſe to doubt, feare, and miſtruſt. But ſeeing he loveth you onely for and in Ieſus Chriſt, who is your whole holineſſe, righteouſneſſe, and redemption; lay away all mourning, lamenting, and complaining; baniſh from you all feare, miſtruſt, and infidelitie, and know that as long as Chriſt doth continue Gods Sonne, ſo long muſt the love of the Father continue towards you immutable, and his good will unchangeable, and cannot be altered through any of your infirmities. For this is moſt true, that as long as the cauſe of any thing doth laſt, ſo long muſt the effect remaine: but Chriſt is the whole cauſe why the Father loveth you, and he alſo continueth for ever; then muſt I needs conclude, that the love of the Father continueth towards you for ever, and (as the Pſalmiſt moſt joyfully ſo often ſingeth) His mercie endureth for ever and ever.

Gods love goeth not by our deſervings, but by faith in Ieſus Chriſt.

Chriſt onely is the cauſe why his Father loveth us.

This is moſt true (mine own dear heart) although the Lord for a time hide it from your ſenſes, that you might be the more earneſt in prayer to him for the feeling of it, and alſo the more thankful for it when he doth give the lively taſte of it, as doubtleſſe he will do ere ever it be long; and then ſhall you be well able to comfort other in the ſame ſtate that you are now in, with the ſame comfort wherewith you are, and further ſhall be comforted of God.

Why God ſometime hideth himſelf from us.

Therefore lift up your hands that are now a little fallen down, and ſtretch forth the weake knees of your troubled minde, which now mourneth with a godly mourning, and therefore ſhall it be full well comforted with that ſweet peace of God which paſſeth all underſtanding: and you are ſure alreadie to enjoy the bleſſing that Chriſt gave unto the godly mourners of Sion upon the Mount, at the firſt Sermon that he made. Oh happie W. in whoſe mourning companie I had rather be, then in the houſe of mirth and banquetting of ſuch as ſee not what cauſe they have to mourne and be ſorrie. But yet (my good brother) uſe a meaſure in this your godly mourning, and make not your faithfull friends too much ſorrie for you. Let the perſwaſions of ſuch godly lovers as you do daily companie withall, or rather the perſwaſions of the holy Ghoſt by them, move you to ſome godly mirth and rejoycing. Conſider that you are commanded of God by the mouth of ſaint Paul thereto; Rejoyce in the Lord (ſaith he) and I ſay again rejoyce, Phil. 4. Mark how he doubleth the ſentence, that we may perceive it is a moſt earneſt and neceſſarie thing he requireth. Obey the commandement of GOD in this behalfe; wherein as you cannot but highly pleaſe him, ſo I aſſure you, you ſhall verie much rejoyce my poore heart, and the hearts of other which pray for you with mourning teares, and make that cruell enemie Satan and all your adverſaries ſorrie, which will rejoyce and laugh to ſee you mourne. Oh my good brother, let it manifeſtly appeare, that the Lord of his great mercie hath heard our faithfull and heartie requeſts for you. Oh how would that rejoyce me in the midſt of my troubles!

Heb. 12.

Eccleſ. 7.

Meaſure ought to be in mourning.

Example of chriſtian charity and compaſſion toward his afflicted brother.

Therefore now to conclude, becauſe the darkneſſe conſtraineth me to make an end for this time, I ſay, my dear and faithfull brother W. in reſpect of the great cauſe you have of your owne part through Chriſt, and for the glory and honour of Almightie God, the comfort, joy, and rejoycing of your dear brethren and ſiſters in Chriſt, alſo your own dutie to the commandement of God; and laſt of all to vex, moleſt, and grieve Satan withall, rejoyce in the Lord, and be moſt heartily glad in him, who is wholly yours, and you are his, and ſhall be for evermore, Selah.

Farewell mine own bowels in the Lord, and praiſe God with joyfull lips and a merrie heart, and pray for me his moſt unprofitable ſervant, which have more cauſe concerning my ſelf to lament, then any one man elſe living: but my good Bridegroome is preſent, and biddeth me caſt away my mourning garments, and therefore I muſt needs be merrie with him: and ſo he biddeth you to be, by my mouth, for he is preſent with you, although for ſorrow you cannot know him, as Magdalen could not in the garden, untill he ſpake unto her. The Lord GOD ſpeake theſe words of comfort in your heart, and open the eyes of your minde, that you may perfectly perceive and feele his bleſſed preſence, and ſo rejoyce in the ſame for evermore, Amen. Comfort your heart in Chriſt, and caſt your care upon him, for he careth for you.

Your brother in the Lord, abiding his good pleaſure, Iohn Careles.

To my deare and faithfull brother, Auguſtine Bernher.

Another letter of Io. Careles to faithfull Auguſtine Bernher, counſelling him to be circumſpect, in theſe dangerous dayes.

THe peace of God in Ieſus Chriſt, the help, comfort, and aſſiſtance of his eternall Spirit be with you, my deare and faithfull brother Auguſtine, and with all the reſt of my good brethren and ſiſters of the houſes of Barterley and Mancetter (which mourn for the miſerie of GODS people) to your everlaſting conſolation in him, Amen.

Right glad I am to hear (my dear and faithfull brother Auguſtine) that GOD of his great mercie and infinite goodneſſe hath yet ſo graciouſly delivered and preſerved you out of your enemies hands, beſeeching almightie GOD alſo from the bottome of my heart, to be your continuall defence unto the end, as hitherto he hath moſt graciouſly been, that you may live and die both to Gods glorie, the commoditie of his Church, and to the increaſe of your own everlaſting joy and comfort in him.

Know you (deare brother) that I have received your letter, for the which I heartily thank you. Indeed I think it verie ſhort, although it ſeemeth ſomething ſharply to rebuke me in the beginning, for the breach of my promiſe in not writing to you of this long time. Well brother, I am content to beare it with patience, conſidering that you are troubled otherwiſe (the Lord comfort you and all heavie hearts) neither will I ſpend inke and paper for my purgation in this point. God he knoweth whether I be ſo mindleſſe of my promiſe as it appeareth in your ſight I am. Your requeſt I will truly perform to the uttermoſt of my power, as gladly as any poore wretch ſhall do in the world, and I thank God I have done no leſſe of long time. And as my poore prayer ſhall be a handmaid to wait upon you which way ſoever you ride or go; ſo I beſeech you that my ſimple counſell may take ſome place in you, in this time of your pilgrimage, which you paſſe in no ſmall perill. God keep and preſerve you for his Names ſake.

He counſelleth Auguſtine to be circumſpect, and not raſhly to thruſt himſelf in danger.

I do not diſallow, but much praiſe and commend your heartie boldneſſe in putting your ſelfe in preaſe, when any one of Gods people needeth your help in any point. But yet I would not have you thruſt your ſelfe in danger, when you can do them no good, or at leaſt wiſe when they may well enough ſpare that good you would do them: For if you ſhould then chance to be taken, you ſhall not onely be no comfort unto them, but alſo a great diſcomfort, adding ſorrow unto their ſorrow.

I do not perſwade you to abſent your ſelf from any place where your preſence of neceſſitie is required; for in all ſuch places, I know, God will preſerve you as he hath hitherto wonderfully done, praiſed be his Name therefore: or if it ſhall pleaſe him to permit you in any ſuch place to be taken, I know he will moſt ſweetly comfort your conſcience with this conſideration, that it is the very providence and appointment of God, that you ſhould there and then be taken up for a witneſſe of his truth unto the world: but I cannot allow, nor be contented that you ſhould raſhly or negligently thruſt your ſelfe into that place where your wicked enemies do continually haunt, yea and lay wait for you, when no neceſſitie of your ſelf, nor of any other of Gods people doth require your companie. If they need any of your godly counſell, you may write unto them that thing that you think good; which (I dare ſay) will be ſufficient unto them. For (continuall thanks and praiſes be given unto the everlaſting God) there is none of thoſe that be cruelly condemned for Gods truth, that now be weaklings; for they have manfully paſſed through the pikes, and they have boldly abiden the brunt of the battell, and therefore I reckon the worſt is paſt with them alreadie. So that now and then a godly letter from you to them ſhall do as much good, as your companie ſhall do, and perchance more too; for writing ſticketh longer in the memorie then words do, yea though your letters were as ſhort to them, as your laſt was to me, ſo that the ſame be ſomething ſweeter, and not all thing ſo ſharp.

This (dear brother) is the ſimple counſel which I would gladly have you obſerve, partly for that I heartily pray for your preſervation to the commoditie of Chriſts Church, and partly for that I unfainedly wiſh the peace, comfort, and tranquillitie of your own conſcience, which I know will be quickly readie to accuſe you, if you do any thing wherein you have not the Word of GOD for your warrant. For as in a glaſſe that is cleer, a ſmall mote will ſoon appeare: even ſo the good conſcience of Gods choſen children, being more cleer then chryſtall, will quickly accuſe them at the leaſt fault they do commit; whereas the wicked worldlings have their conſcience ſo clogged, and corrupted through the cuſtome of ſin, that they cannot once ſee or perceive their ſhamefull deeds and wicked works, untill God ſet the ſame before them for their utter deſtruction, and then deſpaire they immediately. But ſeeing that God hath given you a cleer conſcience, and a pure, ſharp, quick, and lively ſight in your ſoul, I would wiſh you to beware that you do nothing unadviſedly, but upon a good ground. For an accuſing conſcience is a ſore thing when death doth approach, and then Satan will not ſtick to tell you that you have too much tempted GOD, when peradventure you have done nothing ſo at all. For this cauſe (I ſay) partly I have thought it good to admoniſh you (as I have done often) to be circumſpect, according to the counſell of Chriſt, which biddeth you beware of men. Other things I have not to write, for I know this bearer can certifie you of all things at large, better then I can declare it by writing.

A good conſcience is ſoone troubled.

Conſcience of ſin ſometime is taken where none is committed.

Matth. 10.

D. Storie.

I beſeech you, good Auguſtine, help me forwards with your heartie prayers, for I truſt I have but a ſmall time to tarrie in this troubleſome world. Doctor Storie told our Marſhall that we ſhould all be diſpatched ſo ſoone as he came from Oxford, whither he and other bloodie Butchers be gone to make ſlaughter of Chriſts ſheep that lie there appointed to be ſlain. God for Chriſts ſake put them and ſuch like beſides their cruell purpoſe, if it be his good will and pleaſure, Amen good Lord. I pray you do my moſt heartie commendations to my dear ſiſter and faithfull friend, good Miſtreſſe Marie Glover. I beſeech God be her comfort, as I doubt not but he is. I am verie glad to heare that ſhe doth ſo joyfully and ſo patiently beare this great croſſe that God hath laid upon her. I pray God ſtrengthen her, and all other his deare Saints unto the end, Amen. Commend me unto my deare and faithfull ſiſter Elizabeth B. I thank her moſt heartily for my napkin, and ſo I do your dear brother, for my ſhirt. Truly that day that we were appointed to come to our anſwer before the Commiſſioners (which had ſent word the ſame morning this they would come to the Kings Bench by eight of the clock, and the houſe and all things were trimmed and made readie for them) I got that ſhirt on my back, and that napkin in my hand, and me thought they did help to harneſſe me, and weapon me well to go fight againſt that bloodie beaſt of Babylon. And truſt me truly, if they had come, I would have ſtricken three ſtrokes the more for your two ſakes, as well as God would have abled me to have ſet them on, as by Gods grace I will not fail to do at the next ſkirmiſh that I come to. Wherefore I pray you pray for me, that I may be ſtrong and hardie to lay on good load. Oh that I might ſo ſtrike him downe, that he ſhould never be able to riſe againe. But that ſtroke belongeth onely unto the Lord, to ſtrike at his coming, the which I truſt will be ſhortly. Oh haſten it good Lord, and ſhorten theſe ſorrowfull and ſinfull dayes, for thy great mercies ſake.

The Chriſtian courage of Ioh. Careles.

Farewell my dear and faithfull loving brother. The Lord defend, keep, and preſerve you from the power of your enemies viſible and inviſible, and ſend us a moſt joyfull and merrie meeting here or elſewhere, as it ſhall pleaſe his goodneſſe to appoint us.

In the meane ſpace I ſhall moſt earneſtly deſire you to pray for me, for I never had more need in my life, and doubtleſſe you ſhall never want my poore prayer, if it ſhall pleaſe God to accept the prayer of ſo ſinfull a wretch as I am. The Lord impute not my ſins to me, for Ieſus Chriſts ſake; unto whoſe moſt merciful defence I do moſt heartily commit you. The bleſſing of God be with you now and ever, Amen. I pray you do my moſt heartie commendations unto maſter Iohn Glover. I do not forget him in my daily prayers, and I truſt he doth remember me.

Your poore brother alwayes mindfull of you in my prayer, Iohn Careles priſoner, abiding Gods pleaſure.

To my deare brother Henry Adlington, priſoner in the Lollards Tower.

Another letter of Io. Careles to Henry Adlington, after a Martyr, partly comforting, and partly counſelling him how to anſwer his adverſaries.

THe everlaſting peace of God in Ieſus Chriſt, the continuall aid, ſtrength, joy, and comfort of his moſt pure, holy, and mightie Spirit, with the increaſe of faith, and lively feeling of his mercies be moſt effectuouſly wrought in your heart, my dear and faithfull loving brother Adlington, and in the hearts of all your other godly priſon-fellows, to the full finiſhing of that good work, which the Lord hath moſt graciouſly begun in you; that the ſame may be to the advancing and ſetting forth of his glorie, the commoditie of his poore afflicted church, and to your own eternall joy and comfort in him, Amen.

My moſt deare and faithfull loving brother in the Lord, I with all the reſt of my loving brethren here with me, do moſt humbly and heartily commend us unto you, with all faithfull remembrance of you in our daily prayers, giving God earneſt thanks on your moſt happie behalfe, for that he hath given you ſuch heartie boldneſſe and Chriſtian conſtancie in the faithfull confeſſion of his everlaſting veritie. Bleſſed be God for thee my dearly beloved brother, which hath vouched thee worthie of ſo great dignitie, as to ſuffer for his ſake, and ſetting forth of his glorie. Oh glad in heart maieſt thou be, to whom it is given, not onely to beleeve in thy Lord and Chriſt moſt lively, but alſo to ſuffer for his ſake, as one of his ſeely ſheep appointed to the ſlaughter. Be of good comfort therefore my good brother; for your calling unto the Croſſe of Chriſt was after a marvellous ſort. Surely, it was onely the Lords appointment, and therefore he will well performe his own work in and upon you, to the great magnifying of his glorie, and comfort of your brethren, whoſe hearts are mightily refreſhed, to heare how heartily you have behaved your ſelfe hitherto.

This preſent day I received a letter from you, at the reading whereof my brethren and I were not a little comforted, to ſee your conſcience ſo quieted in Chriſt, and your continuance ſo ſtedfaſt in him; which things be the ſpeciall gifts of God, not given unto everie man, but to you his deare dearling, elect and choſen in Chriſt, and ſuch as you be. And whereas you do require to know my ſimple minde concerning your anſwer unto Doctor Storie and the Chancellour; truly I ſay you did anſwer them verie well: for there are but two ſacraments indeed, that is to ſay, the Sacrament of Baptiſme, and the Sacrament of the bodie and blood of Chriſt, as you have full well anſwered them, praiſed be God for his good gifts, who chuſeth the weak to confound the ſtrong, and the fooliſh to confound the worldly wiſe. If, when you come before them againe, they do aſke you what a Sacrament is, ſay you that a Sacrament, being miniſtred according to Chriſts inſtitution, is a viſible ſigne of an inviſible grace, and hath the promiſe of Gods mercie annexed unto it, available to all ſuch as do worthily receive it, and not unworthily worſhip it, as they would have us to do, contrarie to GODS commandement. And theſe properties, belonging to Chriſts true Sacraments, cannot be applied unto any one of thoſe five ſacraments which they have invented of their own braine, ſince Antichriſt began to reigne, to blinde the people withall.

What a ſacrament is.

I perceive (deare heart) that upon Friday they do intend to condemne you, and to give you your judgement. Therefore I thinke they will have no great reaſoning with you, but bid you anſwer them directly, either yea, or nay, to all ſuch things as they have to charge you withall, which they have gathered of you ſince you came into their cruell hands. But if they will needs make many words with you, becauſe you are but a ſimple man, and therefore perchance they will be the buſier with you to trouble you with many queſtions, to comber your knowledge, and then ſeeme to triumph over you and that truth that you do hold; if (I ſay) they do this (as perhaps for ſome evill purpoſe they will) then be you ſo plaine and as ſhort as you can, ſaying roundly unto them theſe or ſuch like words, as nigh as you can:

Be it knowne unto you, that I in all points do beleeve as it becometh a true Chriſtian, and as I have been truly taught in the dayes of that good King Edward, of ſuch godly Preachers and Prophets ſent of God, as have ſealed their doctrine with their blood, from whom I will diſſent in no point: for I am a poore man without learning, but am commanded of God to follow the counſell of his conſtant Preachers, and ſo do I intend to do, God giving me grace and aſſiſtance thereto.

He inſtructeth him how and what to anſwer to the adverſaries.

As for you, I know you to be none of Chriſts Shepherds, but ravening Wolves, which come to kill and ſcatter the flocke of Chriſt, as the Lord ſaid you ſhould; and doth will us to beware of you and your poyſoned doctrine, bidding us to judge you according to your fruits, whereby all men may ſee and know what ye be, that will not be wilfully blinde. But the good Shepherds have given their lives for the defence of Chriſts flocke; and I am commanded to follow their faithfull and godly example, and to confeſſe with them one truth, even to the fire, if God ſhall ſee it

We are bound to follow our true preachers.

good; and this as a true Chriſtian I have hitherto done, and henceforth by Gods grace intend to do.

God will require account of blood.

And if for the ſame God ſhall ſuffer you to take away my life, as you have done theirs, I am contented therewith; his will be done, for that onely is good. But of this be you ſure, the Lord will ſhortly call you to account for all the innocent blood that is ſhed within this Realme; which you have brought into a moſt wofull caſe, and made many a heavie heart in the ſame, and moe I perceive you will make, ſo long as the Lord for our ſins will ſuffer you to proſper, and untill the time that your iniquities ſhall be full ripe. But then be you ſure, the Lord will ſit in judgement upon you, as well as you do now upon his Saints, and will reward you according to your deſervings; to whom with my whole heart I commit my cauſe, and he will make anſwer for me, when the full time of my refreſhing cometh. In the meane ſpace, I will keep ſilence with this that I have ſaid, truſting that I have ſufficiently diſcharged my conſcience in confeſſing my faith and religion to you, declaring of what church I am, even of the Catholique Church of Ieſus Chriſt, which was well knowne to be here in England in our late good King Edwards dayes, by two ſpeciall tokens which cannot deceive me, nor yet ſuffer me to be deceived; that is to ſay, the pure preaching of his holy Word, and the due adminiſtration of his holy Sacraments, which is not to be ſeen in your Romiſh Church, and therefore it cannot juſtly be called the Church and Spouſe of Chriſt. I beleeve in the holy Trinitie, and all the other Articles of the Chriſtian faith contained in the three Creeds; and finally all the Canonicall Scripture to be true in everie ſentence. And I deteſt all ſects both of the Arrians and Anabaptiſts, or any other that divide themſelves from the true Church of Chriſt, which is his myſticall body, the ground and pillar of truth, and the very houſe of the living GOD. And if for theſe things you take away my life, and make your ſelves guiltie of my blood, you may; for I am in your hands as the ſheep brought to the ſhambles, abiding the grace of the Butcher. And be you ſure your judgement ſleepeth not, but when you crie peace, peace, and all is ſafe, then ſhall your plagues begin like the ſorrow of a woman travelling with childe, according to Chriſts infallible promiſe.

The catholique Church in king Edwards daies in England. Two ſpeciall marks to know the true church in England in king Edwards dayes.

This kinde of anſwer, my dear heart, it ſhall be beſt for you to make; and by Gods grace I do intend to take the ſame order my ſelf in time to come, when the Lord ſhall vouch me worthie of that great dignitie, whereunto he hath called you. And if they ſhall laugh you to ſcorn, as I know they will, ſaying thou art a Foole, and an unlearned Aſſe-head, and art able to make anſwer to nothing, &c. care you not for it, but ſtill commit your cauſe unto God, who will make anſwer for you, and tell them that they have been anſwered again and again of divers godly and learned men; but all will not help: for you have one ſolution of all manner of queſtions, even a faire fire and fagots, this will be the end of your diſputations. Therefore I pray you to trouble me no more, but do that which you are appointed, when God ſhall permit the time. I am no better then Chriſt, his Apoſtles, and other of my good brethren that are gone before me.

1 Theſſ. 5.
The Papiſts have one ſolution for all manner of queſtions

This kinde of anſwer will cut their combes moſt, and edifie the people that ſtand by, ſo that the ſame be done coldly, with ſobrietie, meekneſſe, and patience; as I heard ſay our ſweet brethren Thomas Harland and Iohn Oſwald did at Lewes in Suſſex, to the great rejoycing of the children of GOD that were in thoſe parts: and I hear ſay, that they were diſſolved from this earthly Tabernacle at Lewes on Saturday laſt, and were condemned but the Wedneſday before; ſo that we may perceive the Papiſts have quicke worke in hand, that they make ſuch haſte to have us home to our heavenly Father. Therefore let us make our ſelves readie to ride in the fierie chariot, leaving theſe ſorrie mantles and old cloaks behinde us for a time, which GOD ſhall reſtore unto us againe in a more glorious wiſe.

Of Thomas Harland and Iohn Oſwald reade in the ſecond impreſſion pag. 295.

4 Reg. 2.

My good brother Henrie, you ſhall underſtand that bragging Iohn T. hath beguiled his keepers (who truſted him too well) and is run away from them, and hath brought the poore men into great danger by the ſame. The one of them is caſt by the Councels commandement into the Gatehouſe at Weſtminſter, the other is fled forth of the countrey for fear.

Free-will.

Thus you may ſee the fruits of our free-will men, that made ſo much boaſt of their owne ſtrength. But that houſe which is not builded ſurely upon the unmoveable Rocke, will not long ſtand againſt the boyſterous windes and ſtormes, that blow ſo ſtrongly in theſe dayes of trouble.

But my dearly beloved brother, bleſſed be God for you and ſuch as you be, which have played the parts of wiſe builders. You have digged down paſt the ſand of your own naturall ſtrength, and beneath the earth of your own worldly wiſedome, and are now come to the hard ſtone and unmoveable Rock Chriſt, who is your onely Keeper; and upon him alone have you builded your faith moſt firmly, without doubting, miſtruſt, or wavering. Therefore neither the ſtormes nor tempeſts, windes nor weathers that Satan and all his wily workmen can bring againſt you, with the verie gates of hell to help them, ſhall ever be able once to move your houſe, much leſſe to overthrow it; for the Lord GOD himſelf, and no man is the builder thereof, and hath promiſed to preſerve and keep the ſame ſafe for ever. Unto his moſt mercifull defence therefore I do heartily commit you and all your good companie, deſiring him for his ſweet Son Ieſus Chriſts ſake, to confirm and ſtrengthen you all, that you may be conſtant unto the verie end; that after the finall victorie is once gotten, you may receive the immarceſſible crown of glorie, of Gods free gift, through his great mercie in Ieſus Chriſt our onely Saviour. To whom with the Father and the holy Ghoſt, be all honour, glorie, praiſe, thanks, power, rule, and dominion for ever and evermore, Amen. The bleſſing of God be with you all.

Iohn Careles.

To my moſt dear and faithfull brother, T. V.

A letter of Io. Careles written with heavenly power to comfort an afflicted brother oppreſſed with penſiveneſſe & mourning for his ſins.

THe everlaſting peace of God in Ieſus Chriſt, the continuall joy and comfort of his moſt pure, holy, and mightie Spirit, with the increaſe of faith, and lively feeling of his mercie, be with you my deare heart in the Lord, and faithfull loving brother T. V. to the full accompliſhing of that good work which he hath ſo graciouſly begun in you, that the ſame by all means may be to the ſetting forth of his glorie, to the commoditie of his poore afflicted congregation, and to the ſweet comfort and quietneſſe of your conſcience in him now and evermore, Amen.

With ſuch due honour, love, and reverence, as it becometh me to beare unto the ſweet Saints and dearly beloved children of God, I have me moſt heartily commended unto you my deare brother W. with all earneſt and faithfull remembrance of you in my daily prayers, thanking God right heartily that you doe likewiſe remember me in yours; aſſuring you that my poore heart doth daily feele great conſolation thereby, God onely have the praiſe for the ſame and all other his benefits. Ah my deare heart to the Lord, well is me that ever I was borne, that God of his great mercy & infinite goodneſſe hath uſed me (moſt miſerable wretch) at any time, as his inſtrument, to miniſter any thing unto you either by word or writing, that might be an occaſion of your joy and comfort in the Lord, and a provoking of you to praiſe and thankeſgiving unto God for the ſame, as your moſt loving and godly letter ſeemeth to import. Oh, happy am I that the Lord hath appointed me unto ſo good a ground to ſowe his ſeede upon; but much more happy are you, whoſe heart the Lord hath prepared and made ſo meete to receive the ſame ſo effectuouſly, giving thereto the ſweet ſhowers and heavenly dewes of his grace and holy Spirit, that it may bring forth fruite in due ſeaſon accordingly; the increaſe whereof we ſhall ſhortly reape together with perfect joy and gladneſſe, and that continually.

Therefore (my deare brother) I ſay unto you as good Elizabeth did to her deare couſin Marie, Luke 1. Happy are you, and happy ſhall you be for evermore, becauſe you have beleeved. The moſt ſweete and faithfull promiſes of your Redeemer Jeſus Chriſt you have ſurely laid up in the treaſurie of your heart. His comfortable dealings you have faithfully heard, his faithfull admonitions you have humbly obeyed; and therefore you ſhall never come into judgement: your ſins ſhall never be remembred; for your Saviour hath caſt them all into the bottome of the ſea, he hath removed them from you as farre as the Eaſt is from the Weſt, and hath given you for an everlaſting poſſeſſion, his juſtification and holineſſe, ſo that now no creature, neither in heaven nor in earth, ſhall be able to accuſe you before the throne of the heavenly King.

Remiſſion of ſinnes. Math. 7.

Pſal. 103.

Satan is now judged, he is now caſt out from you, he hath no part in you; you are wholly given unto Chriſt, which will not loſe you: your ſtedfaſt faith in him hath overcome that ſturdie and bragging Prince of the world; Chriſt hath given you the finall victory over him and all his army, that they ſhall never hurt you.

What would you have more? Oh my deare heart, how great treaſures are laid up in ſtore for you, and how glorious a Crowne is already made and prepared for you?

Teſtimony of Gods Spirit.

And albeit the Holy Ghoſt doth beare witneſſe of all theſe things in your heart, and maketh you more ſure and certaine thereof, then if you had all the outward Oracles in the world; yet I, being certainly perſwaded, and fully aſſured by the teſtimonie of Gods Spirit in my conſcience of your eternall and ſure ſalvation in our ſweet Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, have thought it good, yea and my bounden dutie, not onely at this time to write unto you, and to ſhew you my joyfull heart in that behalfe, but alſo by the word and commandement of Chriſt to pronounce and affirme in the Name and Word of the heavenly King Jehovah, and in the behalfe of his ſweet Sonne Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, to whom all knees ſhall bow, whom all creatures ſhall worſhip, and alſo by the impulſion of the Holy Ghoſt, by whoſe power and ſtrength all the faithfull be regenerate; I doe (I ſay) pronounce to thee my deare brother T. W. that thou art already a Citizen of heaven.

Practice of the true keyes of the Goſpel.

The Lord thy God in whom thou doeſt put all thy truſt, for his deare Sons ſake, in whom thou doeſt alſo undoubtedly beleeve, hath freely forgiven thee all thy ſinnes, clearely releaſed all thine iniquities, and fully pardoned all thy offences, be they never ſo many, ſo grievous, or ſo great, and will never remember them any more to condemnation. As truely as he liveth, he will not have thee die the death, but hath utterly determined, purpoſed, and eternally decreed, that thou ſhalt live with him for ever. Thy ſore ſhall be healed, and thy wounds bound up even of himſelfe for his owne names ſake. He doth not, nor will he looke upon thy ſinnes in thee; but he reſpecteth and beholdeth thee in Chriſt, into whom thou art lively graffed by faith in his bloud, and in whom thou art moſt aſſuredly elected and choſen to be a ſweete veſſell of his mercy and ſalvation, and waſt thereto predeſtinate into him before the foundation of the world was laid. In teſtimonie and earneſt whereof he hath given thee his good and holy Spirit, which worketh in thee faith, love, and unfained repentance, with other godly vertues, contrary to the corruption of thy nature.

Experience of Chriſt working in his Church.

Alſo he hath commanded me this day (although a moſt unworthy wretch) to be a witneſſe thereof by the miniſterie of his holy Word, grounded upon the truth of his moſt faithfull promiſes; the which thou beleeving, ſhalt live for ever. Beleeveſt thou this my deare heart? I know well thou doeſt beleeve. The Lord increaſe thy faith, and give thee a lively feeling of all his mercies, whereof thou art warranted and aſſured by the teſtimonie of the holy Ghoſt, who confirme in thy conſcience (to the utter overthrowing of Satan, & thoſe his moſt hurtfull dubitations, whereby he is accuſtomed to moleſt and vex the true children of God) all that I have ſaid; and by Gods grace I will, as a witneſſe thereof, confirme and ſeale the ſame with my bloud, for a moſt certaine truth.

Wherefore (my good brother) praiſe the Lord with a joyfull heart, and give his thankes for this his exceeding great mercie, caſting away all dubitation and wavering, yea all ſorrow of heart, and penſiveneſſe of minde: for this, the Lord your God, and moſt deare and loving Father commandeth you to doe by me, nay rather by his owne mouth and word pronounced by me. But now my deare brother, after that I have done my meſſage, or rather the Lords meſſage indeed, I could finde in my heart to write two or three ſheets of paper, declaring the joy I beare in my heart for you, mine owne bowels in the Lord: yet the time being ſo ſhort (as you do well know) I am here conſtrained to make an end, deſiring you to pardon my ſlackneſſe, and to forgive my great negligence towards you, promiſing you ſtill that ſo long as my poore life doth laſt, my prayer ſhall ſupply that my pen doth want, as knoweth the Almightie God, to whoſe moſt mercifull defence I doe heartily commit you and all other his deare children, as well as though I had rehearſed them by name, deſiring them moſt heartily to remember me in their hearty and daily prayers, as I know right well they do; for I feele the daily comfort and commoditie thereof, and therefore I neither will nor can forget them, nor you, or any ſuch like. The bleſſing of God be with you all, Amen.

Yours for ever unfainedly,
John Careles.

A letter of thankes to a faithfull friend of his, by whom he had received much comfort in his inward troubles.

Bleſſed be God the Father of all mercie, for the great comfort and Chriſtian conſolation which

A letter of Io. Careles to a faithfull friend of his, of thanksgiving.

he hath ſo mercifully miniſtred unto my poore afflicted heart by your meanes, my moſt deare and faithfull brother. Truly me thinketh your words, or rather Gods words by you uttered, have a wonderfull power and efficacie working in my heart at the hearing or reading of them. Rejoyce therefore my deare brother, and be thankfull unto God; for verily he both is and will be mightily magnified in you, and that divers and many waies, both to the ſtrengthening of them that ſtand in his truth, and alſo to the raiſing up of ſuch as are fallen from the ſame. God make me thankfull for you, and on your behalfe; for verily great is the goodneſſe of God towards me, in giving me acquaintance in faithfull love and amitie with you; Gods name for ever be praiſed therefore, and he performe all his mercifull promiſes upon you, as I doubt not but he will, for his ſake in whom you truſt.

He giveth him thankes.

I thanke my GOD moſt heartily, and alſo you my good brother, for that you are carefull for me in your faithfull prayers, remembring my juſt deſerved ſorrowes, as though they were your owne, and labouring ſo much to ſolace the ſame. Ah my gracious good God, what am I, for whom thou and thy deare children ſhould be ſo carefull? O ſweet Lord, forgive me my great ingratitude and ſinne, and grant that I never abuſe thy great benefits. O let the love of thine elect, which love me for thy ſake, be a ſure ſigne and token, yea a moſt firme teſtimonie and ſeale to my ſinfull conſcience of thine everlaſting love and mercy towards me in Chriſt; as verily it would and ought to be, if mine infidelitie did not let it. Oh circumciſe therefore the foreskin of my heart, that I may with lively faith behold thy great love towards me in all thine elect, that I may alwaies be thankfull for the ſame, and love thee and them againe moſt heartily and unfainedly.

What a treaſure a truſty friend is.

Ah my deare heart, how ſweetly and how truly, yea how godly and how comfortably have you rehearſed the ſweet ſaying of Solomon concerning proſperitie with true and godly friends? I will joyne with it the ſentence which goeth a little before, for doubtleſſe it may be well verified on you. A ſure friend (ſaith the wiſe man in Eccleſ. 6.) will be unto thee even as thine owne ſoule, and deale faithfully with thy houſhold folke. If thou ſuffer trouble and adverſitie, he is with thee, and hideth not his face from thee. A faithfull friend is a ſtrong defence: whoſo findeth ſuch a one, findeth a treaſure. A faithfull friend hath no peere: the weight of gold is not to be compared to the goodneſſe of his faith. A faithfull friend is a medicine of life, and they that feare the Lord ſhall finde him, &c. Loe (my deare heart in the Lord) here is a lively image or deſcription of you; for verily ſuch a one have I alwaies found you unto me, not onely ſorrowing for my great ſorrow, but alſo oftentimes making me merrie and joyfull, with ſuch joyes as the world cannot feele. Now let the world bragge of his fained friendſhip; but I will boaſt of this true friendſhip in GOD, and eſteeme it a more treaſure then all tranſitorie things. And as for my mourning, deare brother, God hath made you to turne it unto mirth; for God hath put you in ſtead of them to be my comfort, whom he hath in his great mercie taken away. I truſt henceforth to leave the mourning for my great loſſe, and to praiſe God for gaining unto himſelfe ſo great glorie by his choſen children. God make me a true mourner of Sion, both for mine owne ſinne and wickedneſſe, and alſo to ſee his honour defaced, that I may be made meete and apt to beare the ioyfull and comfortable meſſage that your beautifull feete ſhall bring me. God bleſſe thee my deare heart and faithfull loving brother, and increaſe his good gifts of grace in thee, as he hath moſt happily begun, that you may daily more effectually feele and lively perceive the certainty of Gods grace wherein you ſtand, and firmely teſtifie the ſame to the converſion or confounding of all gaine-ſayers, and to the comfort and confirmation of all Gods deare children, Amen. Farewell mine own ſweete brother, farewell as mine own heart.

There is no true friendſhip but amongſt godly perſons.

Such mourners ſhould we be continually with this and others Gods deare children, and bleſſed be they that ſo mourne.

Your own in Chriſt,
Iohn Careles.

Another letter of Iohn Careles, to a certaine godly faithfull ſiſter, by the name of E. K.

Another letter of Io. Careles to a godly chriſtian woman.

THe grace and free mercie of God in Jeſus Chriſt, the ſweet conſolations of the holy ghoſt, the guide of all Gods deare children, be with you, ſtrengthen and comfort you my dearely beloved ſweete ſiſter, E. K. now and ever, Amen.

Albeit (my dearely beloved ſiſter in Chriſt) as yet we did never ſee one another perſonally to any knowledge, yet by the vertuous report that I have heard of you, & alſo by the large loving token that I have received from you, me thinke that I doe even preſently ſee you, and behold your perſon faithfully walking in the feare and love of God, joying and rejoycing with you in the ſpirit, as though we were ſweetly talking together of Chriſts veritie. The Lord God do I humbly beſeech in the bowels and bloud of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, that he will ſtrengthen us both with his holy and mightie Spirit, that we may conſtantly continue in the confeſſion of his truth unto the end; that like as we now ſee one another preſently in ſpirit, we may alſo ſee one another perſonally in the glorious preſence of God and his holy Angels, where undoubtedly we ſhall know one anothers perſonage, to our great joy, felicitie, and endleſſe comfort.

Preparation to the croſſe.

And now therefore deare ſiſter K. be ſtrong in the Lord our God, for doubtleſſe the time of triall is at hand; a great perſecution, with cruell murthering of Gods deare Saints is like to be very ſhortly in this wofull wicked Realme of England. Therefore (deare ſiſter) for the love of God prepare you to the Croſſe with all diligence, and make your ſelfe ready to die with Chriſt, that you may alſo live with him for ever. There is no remedie, if you will be Chriſts Diſciple, you muſt needs take up your croſſe and follow him; for the Diſciple muſt not looke to be above his Maſter, nor the ſervant to be better intreated then his Lord. If we were of the world (good ſiſter) no doubt the world would love us. But foraſmuch as Chriſt hath choſen us out of the world to ſerve God in ſpirit and veritie, let us be well aſſured the world will hate us and perſecute us, as it hath done our Lord and Maſter Chriſt. But yet let us be of good cheere, for Chriſt hath overcome the world. The paine is but ſhort that we can feele here, but the pleaſure is perpetuall that we ſhall feele elſewhere.

Conſolation under the croſſe.

Let us ſet before us the example of Chriſt, which abode the Croſſe, and deſpiſed the ſhame, in reſpect of the joy that was ſet before him; even ſo let us conſider for whoſe ſake we ſuffer, whoſe cauſe we defend, & what glorious reward we ſhall have at the day of our victorie, and then doubtleſſe the conſolation of theſe things will make ſweete all our ſufferings, and ſoone ſwallow up all the ſorrowes that we are ſowſed in for Gods ſake. I could recite divers texts of the Scriptures to confirme this point. But I need not, for I am well aſſured that you doe know them moſt perfectly already. The Lord give you ſtrength, and aſſiſt you with his holy Spirit, that you may continually walke in all points according to your godly knowledge: And then ſhall you not do as the moſt part of our Goſpellers do now adaies, the more is the pitie.

Againſt maſſing Goſpellers.

There are a great many in England that doe perfectly know, that the Idolatrous Maſſe is abominable, devilliſh, and deteſtable in the ſight of GOD. And yet alas, they be not afraide to pollute and defile their bodies, which ought to be the temples of the holy Ghoſt, with being preſent at it, ſo ſinning againſt God and their owne conſcience.

Exhortation to flie from the Maſſe.

But deare ſiſter K. doe you flie from it both in bodie and ſoule, as you would flie from the verie Devill himſelfe. Drink not of the Whore of Babylons cup by any means; for it will infect the body, and poyſon the ſoule. Be not partakers of her ſins (ſaith the Angel) leſt ye be partakers of the plagues that ſhall ſhortly be poured upon her. O what an aray is this? that ſo many that know Gods truth will now turn again and defile themſelves in the filthy puddle of Antichriſts ſtinking religion? They goe about to ſave their lives with their double diſſimulation; but doubtleſſe, they ſhall loſe everlaſting life by it, if they doe not repent in time, and turne unto the Lord. But (deare ſiſter) my truſt is, that you doe utterly abhorre the coming to any ſuch thing. I hope that you will not by any means turn back into Egypt now, but that you will boldly venter through the wilderneſſe of trouble and perſecution, that you may come into the land that floweth with all kinde of heavenly pleaſures and joyfull delectations, and poſſeſſe the ſame for ever.

Let us conſider, how that every one of us doth owe unto God a death by nature, and how ſoone the Lord will require it of us we know not. O how happy are we then, if God of his goodneſſe appoint us to pay natures debt with ſuffering for his truth and Goſpels ſake, and ſo making us his faithfull witneſſes with the Prophets, Apoſtles, Martyrs, and Confeſſors, yea, with his dearely beloved Sonne Ieſus Chriſt, to whom he doth here begin to faſhion us like in ſuffering, that we might be like him alſo in glorie. Thus my dearely beloved ſiſter, I have beene bold to trouble you a little with my rude and ſimple letter, being made in haſte as it doth appeare. Yet I deſire you to take it in good worth, as a token of my poore zeale unto you, and to accept my good will. And if it pleaſe God to ſpare me life and libertie, I truſt hereafter to write unto you more largely. Fare ye well deare ſiſter, E. K. the Lord bleſſe you and all yours, and poure upon you the heavenly dewe of his grace. The Lord endue you with plentifull knowledge of his veritie, and fill you with his holy and mighty Spirit, that you may continually rejoyce in the comforts of the ſame now and ever, Amen. Pray, pray, pray with ſtedfaſt faith.

Your daily Oratour Iohn Careles, priſoner of the Lord.

In the letters of William Tyms, yee heard before much mention made of Agnes Glaſcock. This Agnes Glaſcock, through infirmitie, and her husbands perſwaſion, was allured to goe to Maſſe. For which cauſe ſhe falling into great ſorrow and repentance, was raiſed up againe by the comfortable Letters of William Tyms, and Iohn Careles, as before you may reade; and after that was conſtant in the ſincere profeſſion of the veritie, and in danger for the ſame of perſecution; unto whom Iohn Careles writeth therefore his Letter, as followeth.

A letter of I. Careles to Agnes Glaſcocke.

A letter of Io. Careleſſe to Miſtreſſe Agnes Glaſcocke.

THe everlaſting peace of God in Ieſus Chriſt, the continuall aide, ſtrength, and comforts of his moſt pure, holy, and mighty Spirit be with you my deare and faithfull ſiſter Glaſcocke, to the good performance of that good worke which GOD hath ſo graciouſly begunne in you, to his glory, the commoditie of his poore afflicted Church, and to your owne eternall comfort in him, Amen.

In our Lord I have my moſt humble and heartie commendations unto you, my deare ſiſter and moſt faithfull mother Glaſcocke, with all remembrance of you in my daily prayers, giving God moſt hearty laud, praiſe, and thankes for you, and on your behalfe, in that he of his great mercie hath hitherto ſo mightily ſtrengthened you, conſtantly to cleave unto your Captaine Chriſt, notwithſtanding the great aſſaults and manifold temptations that you have had to the contrary. Doubtleſſe (deare heart) it cannot be expreſſed what joy and comfort it is unto my very ſoule, to ſee how mightily the Lord hath magnified himſelfe in you, and other his deare elect dearelings, whom he will ſhortly glorifie with himſelfe, as he hath done other of his ſweete Saints, that are gone before you. Rejoyce therefore and be glad; for verily you have good cauſe, if you diligently conſider the great dignitie that God hath called you unto, even now in your old age, to be one of his worthy witneſſes unto the world, and I thinke you ſhall with me and other your brethren in bonds, ſeale the Lords veritie with the teſtimony of your blood. Surely (ſweete ſiſter) this is the greateſt promotion that GOD can bring you or any other unto in this life; and an honour that the higheſt Angel in heaven is not permitted to have.

What an high honour it is to ſuffer for Chriſt.

Therefore happy are you, O faithfull Daughter of Abraham, that the Lord will now preferre you before many other, yea or any other of your age, that I doe know in England. Oh faithfull and vertuous matron, which wilt not be moved from the ſure Rock Chriſt, upon whom you have ſo firmely built your houſe, that neither ſtormes nor tempeſts, neither yet hell gates, or any other temptations, ſhall ever be able to prevaile againſt it. Full well doth it appeare by your conſtant continuance, that you have played the part of a wiſe builder, in counting the coſt aforehand, belonging to the finiſhing up of your Tower. And I doubt not but (through Gods gift) you have ſufficient to the performance thereof, that the hypocrites of their part ſhall have no juſt cauſe to triumph againſt you, or to mocke you, ſaying; Loe, this woman began to build, but is not able to make an end. Therefore goe on boldly and feare not; for God is faithfull (as Saint Paul ſaith) which will not ſuffer you to be tempted above your ſtrength, but either he will give you grace and ſtrength to ſtand unto the death (which is the gate and entrance into life) or elſe he will make ſuch an outſcape for you, as ſhall be to the ſetting forth of his glorie; the which above all other things, we that are his choſen children ought to ſeeke, yea even with the loſſe of our owne lives, being yet well aſſured that the ſame ſhall not be ſhortened one minute of an houre before the time that God hath appointed.

Caſt therefore (deare ſiſter) all your care upon the Lord, which (as S. Peter ſaith) careth for you. Great is his providence for you, and mightie is his love and mercy towards you. With his grace he will defend you, and with his holy Spirit he will evermore guide you, wherewith he hath ſurely ſealed you unto the day of redemption;

He exhorteth her to be ſtrong.

he hath alſo given you the ſame in earneſt for the recoverie of the purchaſed poſſeſſion, which he hath prepared for you before the foundation of the world was laid. Be ſtrong therefore, and take a good heart, as I heare ſay you be. God for ever be bleſſed for you, which hath ſo graft his love in your good heart, that nothing is able to ſeparate you from the ſame, but will rather chuſe to ſuffer adverſitie with the people of God, then to enjoy the pleaſure of ſinne for a little ſeaſon. Oh happie woman that canſt finde in thine heart to eſteeme the rebukes of Chriſt to be greater riches then all the treaſures of the world, as good Moſes did. Doubtleſſe great is your reward in heaven; which you ſhall ſhortly receive of his free gift, and not of any deſerving.

The charitie of Miſtreſſe Glaſcocke to the priſoned Saints.

Thus (deare mother Glaſcocke) I have beene bold to trouble you with my rude and ſimple letters, deſiring you to take them in good worth, being done in great haſte, as it doth appeare, but yet proceeding from a poore heart which floweth over in love towards you, as my daily prayers for you can teſtifie; which I truſt ſhall ſupply that part of my dutie towards you, that my pen now wanteth. I thanke you deare heart for all your loving tokens, and for the great kindneſſe you have hitherto ſhewed unto my poore brother Tyms and his wife and children, with all other of Gods people, to whom you daily doe good: the Lord recompence the ſame ſeven fold into your boſome, as I doubt not but he will, according to his unfallible promiſes. I pray you have my hearty commendations unto your husband. I beſeech the Lord ſtrengthen him in the confeſſion of his truth (as my truſt is that he will) that we may all joyfully reſt with Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob in the Kingdome of God; unto the which he bring us, that with his moſt precions bloud hath bought us. The bleſſing of God be with you now and ever, Amen.

Your daily Oratour and unfained lover, Iohn Careles, priſoner of the Lord. Pray,pray,pray.

A briefe admonition written to Miſtreſſe Agnes Glaſcocke,in a book of hers, when ſhe came to the priſon to viſit him.

A note or poeſie written in Miſtreſſe Glaſcocks booke by Iohn Careles.

There is nothing that the holy Scripture throughout doth ſo much commend unto us, as true faith and ſtedfaſt truſt in the promiſes of Gods eternall mercies towards us in Jeſus Chriſt. For from the ſame, as forth of the chiefe fountaine and welſpring of life, doe flowe all kinde of vertues and godly fruits, ſpecially true love towards God, in the which we ought purely to ſerve him all the dayes of our life; and alſo chriſtian charitie towards our neighbours, as well to helpe them at all needs, as alſo not to hurt them by any means. Therefore pray earneſtly for the increaſe of faith and lively feeling of Gods mercie; for all things are poſſible unto him that can undoubtedly beleeve. Faith is that thing which aſſureth us of Gods mercie, and whereby wee vanquiſh all the fiery darts of the Devill; our victorie that overcometh the world; the knife that killeth and mortifieth the fleſh: and finally that which ſetteth us at peace with God, and quieteth our conſciences alwayes before him, and maketh us merrie and joyfull under the Croſſe, with many moe things then I can now expreſſe. Pray therefore for Faith, in faith. And for the Lords ſake beware of Poperie and Popiſh Idolatrie, the Idoll of the wicked Maſſe, and other Idolatrous ſervice. Make not your bodie, which is a member of Chriſt, a member of Antichriſt. Remember that we ſhall receive of God according to that we do in the body, be it good or evill. Therefore glorifie God in your body which is dearely bought. Betray not the truth, leſt the Lord deny you. If God be God, follow him. You cannot ſerve two maſters. I write not this as doubting you, but by the way of admonition. God keepe you from all evill.

The effects of faith.

My ſiſter deare, God give you grace,
With ſtedfaſt faith in Chriſts name,
His Goſpel ſtill for to embrace,
And live according to the ſame.
To die therefore thinke it no ſhame,
But hope in God with faithfull truſt;
And he will give you praiſe with fame,
When you ſhall riſe out of the duſt.
For which moſt ſweet and joyfull day,
To God with faith your prayer make:
And thinke on me I doe you pray,
The which did write this for your ſake.
And thus to God I you betake,
Who is your caſtle and ſtrong rocke;
He keepe you whether you ſleepe or wake,
Farewell deare Miſtreſſe A. Glaſcocke.

Another letter of Iohn Careles to Miſtreſſe A. G. to comfort her in her repentance, after ſhe had bin at Maſſe, fruitfull for all them to be read,which have fallen, and are to be raiſed up again.

Another comfortable letter of Io. Careleſſe to Miſtreſſe Agnes Glaſcocke being in great repentance for going to the Maſſe.

The peace of God in Jeſus Chriſt, the eternall comforts of his ſweet Spirit be with you, and ſtrengthen and comfort you my deare and faithfull ſiſter, Amen.

Although the perillous daies be come, whereof Chriſt propheſied, that if it were poſſible the very elect ſhould be deceived; yet let the true faithfull Chriſtians rejoyce and be glad, knowing that the Lord himſelfe is their Keeper, who will not ſuffer one haire of their heads to periſh without his almightie good will and pleaſure, neither will ſuffer them to be further tempted then he will give them ſtrength to beare; but will in the middeſt of their temptation make a way for them to eſcape out; ſo good and gracions a God is he to all his choſen children. And though ſometimes he doe let his elect ſtumble and fall, yet (no doubt) he will raiſe them up againe, to the further increaſe of their comfort, and to the ſetting forth of his glory and praiſe. Which thing (my deare and faithfull loving ſiſter) I truſt ſhall be well verified on you. For I doe heare ſay, that by the manifold allurements, inticements, procurements, yea and inforcements that you deare heart have had, your foot hath chanced to ſlip forth of the way, to the great diſcomfort of your ſoule, and the heavineſſe of your heart: But my good ſiſter be of good cheere, for the Lord will not ſo leave you, but he will raiſe you up againe, and make you ſtronger then ever you were; ſo that your fall ſhall turne to his glory and your profit. For if you had not by this proved the experience of your owne ſtrength, or rather your owne weakneſſe, you would have ſtood too much in your owne conceit, or perchance have gloried in your ſelfe, and have deſpiſed and condemned other weake perſons that have committed the like offence. Therefore now you may ſee what the beſt of us all can doe, if God leave us to our ſelves. Which thing ought to move you to be diligent to call earneſtly upon God for his grace and the ſtrength of his holy Spirit (without the which we are not able to ſtand one houre) and to be moſt thankfull for the ſame when you have it, and then to be more circumſpect in time to come.

Therefore (deare ſiſter) ſeeing that you have done otherwiſe then the Word of God and your owne conſcience would allow, yet deare heart, doe you not thinke that God therefore will caſt you cleane away, but know that he hath mercy enough in ſtore for all them that truly repent and beleeve in him, although the ſins of them were as many in number as the ſands in the ſea, and as great as the ſinnes of the whole world. It is a greater ſinne to miſtruſt the mercy and promiſes of God, then to commit the greateſt offence in the world. Therefore (good ſiſter) beware in any wiſe, that you doe not once miſtruſt the promiſes of Gods mercy towards you; but know for a very ſurety, that all your ſins be utterly forgiven you for Chriſts ſake, be they never ſo many, ſo grievous, or ſo great.

To truſt to Gods promiſes.

But now (deare heart) take heede and beware that you doe not cloake that ſinne, and increaſe the ſame daily, in communicating with the wicked in their Idolatry, and deviliſh doings at their denne of theeves. Doe not (I ſay) deare ſiſter, come at any of their Antichriſtian Service, leſt by little and little you utterly loſe a good conſcience, and at length eſteeme it for none offence; as alas, a great number do at this day, to the great perill of their ſoules. The Lord be mercifull to them, and give them grace to repent in time and turne to the Lord, and then they ſhall be ſure to finde mercy at the Lords hand, as doubtleſſe you have done, praiſed be his name therefore.

Cuſtome of ſin a perillous matter.

Ah my deare ſiſter, you may now ſee the words of Chriſt verified upon your ſelfe, that a mans greateſt foes ſhall be they of his own houſhold; for your huſband hath gotten you to do that, which all the Tyrants in the world could never have made you to do. Doubtleſſe he may be ſorrie for it. God give him grace to repent, or elſe, without doubt, it will be laid to his charge one day, when he would not by his will heare it for all the goods in the world. Well, I thinke my brother Tyms will write him a letter ſhortly that ſhall touch his conſcience, if he have any conſcience at all.

A. G. inticed by her huſband to go to the maſſe.

But now againe to you deare ſiſter. The thing that is done cannot be undone, and you are not the firſt that hath offended, neither are you ſo good and ſo holy, as hath at a time ſlipt forth of the way. Therefore I would not have you to be ſo much diſcomforted as I heare ſay you be, as thou God were not as able to forgive you your offence, as he was to forgive his deare Saints that offended him in times paſt; or as though God were not as mercifull now, as ever he was. Whereas in very deed, There is with the Lord (as the Prophet ſaith) mercy & plentifull redemption, and his mercie farre ſurmounteth all his workes; and he never faileth any that put their whole truſt and confidence in him, how great an offender or how wicked a treſpaſſer ſoever he be: No, he maketh their fals and backſlidings many times to turne to their profit and commoditie, and to the ſetting forth of his glory; as doubtleſſe, dear ſiſter, yours ſhall doe, if you put your whole faith, hope, and truſt onely in his infinite and eternall ſweete mercies.

The raiſing up of a troubled conſcience after his fall.

God turneth all things to the beſt, to them that be his.

Oh what a ſubtle, craftie, lying Serpent is that Satan our old enemie, that when he ſeeth that he cannot make us to continue in our wickedneſſe to do him ſervice, would then bring us into a doubting and miſtruſting of the mercy of God, which is the greateſt offence that can be; yea, infidelitie is the roote and originall of all other ſinnes. Therefore (my ſweet ſiſter) give no place to that cruell adverſarie of mankinde, who hath beene a liar and a murderer from the beginning, but ſtedfaſtly beleeve the Lord, who hath ſent you word by me his moſt unworthy ſervant, that all your ſinnes be pardoned, forgiven, and cleane releaſed for Ieſus Chriſts ſake our onely Lord and Saviour. To whom with the Father and the holy Ghoſt, be all honour, glory, praiſe, thankes, power, rule, and dominion for ever and for ever, Amen. Farewell, my deare ſiſter, and be of good cheere. Beleeve in the Lord and you ſhall live for ever. The Lord increaſe your faith, Amen, Amen.

Satan when he cannot bring a man to his ſervice, he preſſeth him with diſtruſt of Gods mercy.

Another letter of Iohn Careles to A. B. a faithfull Miniſter of the Lord, containing certaine fruitfull precepts of Matrimonie.

I Beſeech the ſame everlaſting Lord (my deare and faithfull brother) that bleſſed young Tobias with his wife Sarah, and brought them together in due time with reverence and feare, preſerve and bleſſe you both, and your ſeed after you, that they may increaſe the number of the faithfull by thouſands and thouſands. And as the Lord of his great mercy and fatherly providence hath beene alwaies carefull for you, and now hath for your comfort accompliſhed his good worke in coupling you with a faithfull mate; ſo ſee that you be thankfull for his providence towards you, that it may every way in you be an increaſe of love and godlineſſe, yea of chriſtian joy and gladneſſe in theſe ſorrowfull daies, but yet ſo, that you mourne with the true mourners of Sion, and be ſorry (yet in meaſure) for the hurt of the ſame. Pray alſo in faith for her proſperitie, that the Lord may build up the wals of Ieruſalem againe.

A letter of Io. Careles to A. B. a faithfull ſervant of Chriſt.

Oh that the Lord would turne Sions captivitie as the rivers into the South: Then ſhould our hearts be made glad, and our mouthes filled with laughter. Then would the heathen Hypocrites ſay; The Lord hath done much for them. Oh, the Lord hath done great things for us alreadie, whereof let us heartily rejoyce and praiſe his name therefore. For though we now ſowe with teares, yet ſhall we be ſure to reape with gladneſſe: and as we now go forth weeping, bearing forth good ſeede, ſo ſhall we come againe with joy, and bring our ſheaves full of corne. Yea the death of the Martyrs (which is moſt precious in his ſight) ſhall be the life of the Goſpel, ſpite of the Papiſts hearts.

Pſal. 145.

The death of the Martyrs is the life of the Goſpel.

Pray for me (deare heart) that I may be counted worthy to ſowe ſome ſeed amongſt the ſweete Saints of the Lord, that I may reape the ſame againe, without ceaſing, at the harveſt. It is now ſowing time of the yeere, men ſay in the countrey, and I thinke I ſhall make an end of ſowing before all March be paſt; for I heare ſay that I ſhall prove how my plough will enter into the ſtonie ground of the hard hearted Papiſts, within theſe foure daies. I hope to hold faſt, and not to looke back, neither for feare nor flatterie, untill I have made an end of ſowing, and then will I ſet me downe and reſt me, and aſke them all no leave, and looke for the lively fruit and increaſe thereof with joy and gladneſſe.

A ſowing time in Chriſts Church.

My deare brother, the time approacheth neere (I praiſe GOD therefore) that I muſt put off this ſinfull tabernacle, and goe home to my heavenly Father, where divers of my deare brethren are already looking and wiſhing for me. I beſeech you therefore that you will helpe me forward with your faithfull prayers, as I know you doe, for I doe feele the comfort and commoditie thereof.

That you have obſerved my ſimple counſell, I am right glad, and I truſt in the Lord God, you

This counſell was that he ſhould marry, notwithſtanding certaine lets whereby Satan ſought to hinder his marriage.

The root of bitterneſſe to be weeded out with the ſpade of patience.

ſhall find comfort in the ſame. And that you may ſo doe indeede, I have beene ſo bold to write theſe few words unto you, becauſe I ſhall ſee you no more in this corruptible life; therefore marke them well. Firſt and above all things you muſt be very circumſpect to keepe the band of love, and beware that there never ſpring up the roote of bitterneſſe betweene you. If at any time there happen to riſe any cauſe of unkindneſſe betweene you, (as it is unpoſſible alwaies to be free from it) ſee that you weed up the ſame with all lenitie, gentleneſſe, and patience, and never ſuffer your ſelfe, nor your wife to ſleepe in diſpleaſure.

How and when the husband ought to reprove.

Faults ſometime muſt be covered with love.

Not to take unkindneſſe for every trifle.

If you have cauſe to ſpeake ſharpely, and ſometimes to reprove, beware that you doe not the ſame in the preſence of other, but keepe your words untill a convenient time (which is the point of a wiſe man, ſaith Solomon) and then utter them in the ſpirit of meekeneſſe, and the groaning ſpirit of perfect love; which you muſt alſo let ſometimes to cover faults, and winke at them if they be not intollerable. Whatſoever loſſe and miſchance ſhall happen unto you, take it patiently, and beare it merrily; and though the ſame ſhould come partly through your wives negligence, yet let it rather be a loving warning to take heede in time to come, then a cauſe of ſorrow for that which is paſt and cannot be holpen. I know by mine own experience, that we are in this life ſubject to many inconveniences, and that of nature we are prone to diſpleaſure, and ready to thinke unkindneſſe for every little trifle, and ſpecially with our beſt friends, yea ſooneſt with our loving wives, which be moſt loth to diſpleaſe us.

But let us beware of this cankered corruption, and conſider that we ought moſt of all in love to beare with them, according to Chriſts example towards his congregation, for whom he gave himſelfe to cleanſe it, &c. I had thought to have treated this matter at large, but even now I am intermitted and otherwiſe letted. I doubt not but you know your dutie therein a great deale better then I can declare it unto you; and as you know it, ſo will doe it: but I love to be bold with you. I intend to write to your wife very ſhortly, and ſo take my laſt farewell of you for ever in this world. And thus in great haſte I am now conſtrained to make an end. The bleſſing of God be alwaies with you.

Your owne for ever, Iohn Careles.
Pray, pray, pray with faith.

Another letter of Iohn Careles to Elizabeth, wife of the ſaid A. B. containing certaine godly precepts of Matrimony pertaining to her duty.

Another letter of Io. Careles to the wife of the party above ſpecified.

The everlaſting peace of God in Ieſus Chriſt, the continuall aide, ſtrength, and comfort of his moſt holy and mighty Spirit, with increaſe of knowledge, faith, and perfect feeling of Gods eternall mercy, be with you my deare and faithfull loving ſiſter E. B. and with your godly loving husband my deare and faithfull brother, to the full performance of that good which he hath ſo graciouſly begun in you, that in all things you may be made rich and bleſſed in him, and your ſeede after you, now and ever, Amen.

As I have beene long deſirous to write unto you (my deare heart in the Lord) not onely being thereto bound of dutie, but alſo often provoked of him, to whom I owe my ſelfe and all that I am able to doe (I meane even that bleſſed of the Lords owne mouth, whom God hath joyned with you in that holy and chriſtian ſtate of matrimonie) even ſo at the laſt I have obtained time and occaſion in ſome part to performe that which I have long purpoſed. And forasmuch as the Lord of his great mercy and fatherly care and providence over you his deare childe, hath now graciouſly accompliſhed that good worke amongſt many others, which I (as a friend of the Bridegroome) have full heartily wiſhed and often prayed for; I thinke it good, yea and my bounden dutie, to treate of ſuch things as may be profitable to preſerve mutuall love and faithfull amitie betweeen you, which I know Satan will chiefly labour to diminiſh, if he cannot altogether deſtroy the ſame, leſt by many joyfull occaſions you ſhould be provoked continually to praiſe God for his good gift, which that enemy hath by all meanes ſought to hinder from you.

Satan an enemy to all godly affaires.

As for all other things I know you are ſufficiently inſtructed, & alſo have a moſt learned companion, who is well able further to teach you if need doe require: But in this thing I know my experience is more then his. Therefore (my good ſiſter) firſt and before all things ſee that you do diligently conſider, that as every good and perfect gift pertaining to ſoule and body, is given from above, and cometh from the Father of light: even ſo to whomſoever the Lord dealeth any of his benefits, of them he doth chiefly require alwaies a thankfull heart for the ſame; for elſe he will either take away his good gifts againe, or turne the ſame to their great diſcommoditie, and in the end to the increaſe of their damnation: ſo deteſtable in his ſight is the ſinne of ingratitude. But to ſuch as be thankfull for his benefits, he doth not onely to the old ever adde new, but alſo maketh the commoditie of his former gifts ever more and more to increaſe, untill by them they are fully perſwaded and throughly certified of his everlaſting love in Chriſt Ieſus, which is eternall life it ſelfe: ſo much doth he of his great mercy delight in a thankfull heart.

The ſigne of ingratitude.

God loveth a thankfull heart.

Therefore I doe yet once againe earneſtly require you, that above all things you be thankfull to God for his benefits; not onely for your election, creation, redemption, and preſervation; but alſo for his other temporall gifts, wherewith he hath indued you: amongſt the which the chiefe and moſt excellent is (as teſtifieth the holy Ghoſt) your good, godly, and faithfull loving husband. For (as the wiſe man ſaith) Goods and poſſeſſions may come to a man by the death of his friends, but a good wife is the gift of God, which the Lord will give for a good portion to ſuch as feare him.

A good wife is the gift of God.

And the like is of a good husband, as the Lord hath now given you, praiſed be his name therefore. He hath not given you an ignorant, froward, churliſh, brawling, waſtefull, rioting, drunken husband, wherewith he hath plagued may other (as he might alſo have done you) but he hath given you a moſt godly, learned, gentle, loving, quiet, patient, thrifty, diligent, and ſober husband, by whom he will nouriſh, cheriſh, keepe, and defend you, inſtruct and teach you, yea care and provide for you and your children (the which he will alſo by him give you) ſuch things as be neceſſary for you. He hath not dealt ſo with every body; and yet he hath done this much more for you my deare ſiſter, and will thereto increaſe joy and love betweene you. For as he delighteth in the love and godly agreement of man and wife together; ſo is it he onely that maketh them and all the whole houſhold to be of one minde. Unto the which his gracious worke he requireth your diligence, and will uſe you as his inſtrument and meane, the more effectuouſly to accompliſh the ſame. And therefore I now require you to obſerve this my ſimple counſell, the which I have here written as a teſtimoniall of my good will towards you, becauſe I think in this life I ſhall never more ſee you,

God delighteth in the agreement betweene man and wife.

The duty of wives toward their huſbands.

Now as I have ſhewed you how you ſhould be thankfull unto God for his good gifts, ſo I exhort you, and (as much as in me lieth) charge you to be evermore thankfull unto your dear loving huſband, who hath given himſelf unto you; which is a more precious jewel in the Church of God, then perchance you are yet aware of. Think your ſelf unworthy to be matched with ſuch an inſtrument of God; and alſo reverence evermore the gifts of God in him, and ſeek with true obedience and love to ſerve him, in recompence of his true and painfull heart towards you. Be loath in any wiſe to offend him, yea rather be carefull and diligent to pleaſe him, that his ſoul may bleſſe you. If at any time you ſhal chance to anger him, or to do or ſpeak any thing that ſhall grieve him, ſee that you never reſt untill you have pacified him and made him merrie again.

If at any time he ſhal chance to blame you without a cauſe, or for that you cannot do therewith (which thing hapneth ſometimes to the beſt men living) ſee that you bear it patiently, and give him no uncomely or unkinde word for it; but evermore look upon him with a loving and cheerfull countenance, and rather take the fault upon you, then ſeeme to be diſpleaſed.

A cheerfull countenance.

Be alwayes merrie and cheerfull in his companie, but not with too much lightneſſe. Beware in any wiſe of ſwelling, powting, or lowring, for that is a token of a cruell and unloving heart; except it be in reſpect of ſin, or in the time of ſickneſſe.

Temperance in apparell.

Be not ſorrowfull for any adverſitie that God ſendeth; but beware that nothing be ſpilt or go to waſte through your negligence. In any wiſe ſee that you be quicke and cleanly about his meat and drink, and prepare him the ſame according to his diet in due ſeaſon. Go cleanly and well favouredly in your apparell, but beware of pride in any wiſe.

Finally, in word and deed ſhew your ſelf wiſe, humble, merrie, and loving towards him, and alſo towards ſuch as he doth love, and then ſhall you lead a bleſſed life. I could ſpeak of many things, the which I have learned and proved true by experience: but I know that you will do in all things much better then I can teach you, becauſe you have that anointing that teacheth you all things, who hath alſo given you an heart to obey, and ſerve him. Yet I truſt you will not be offended for this, which I have written, but rather accept my good will towards you, whom I love in the Lord, as well as I do my daughter Iudith.

Thus as mine own ſoul I commend you both to God, deſiring him to bleſſe you with all manner of ſpirituall bleſſings in heavenly things, and alſo with the dew of heaven, and fatneſſe of the earth, that in all things you may be made rich in Ieſus Chriſt our Lord and onely Saviour. The Lord increaſe and bleſſe the fruit of your bodies, that your children may ſtand round about your table, thick, freſh, and luſtie, like the Olive branches. God give you both a long life, that you may ſee and bleſſe your childrens children, unto the third and fourth generation, and teach them the true fear and love of God, and that faith for the which they ſhall be accepted in his ſight.

Note that both theſe departed in quiet peace, the one 1565. the other 1568.

God let you ſee the proſperitie of Sion, for whoſe lying in the duſt let your hearts mourne. The Lord make perfect your love together in him, and alwayes increaſe the ſame, and bring you both in peace to your graves, at a good age. And now I bid you both moſt heartily farewell; and I think I ſhall now take my leave of you for ever in this life. I beſeech you both to aid me with your continuall prayers, (as I will not forget you in mine) that I may have a joyfull victorie through Ieſus Chriſt: To whoſe moſt mercifull defence I do moſt heartily for ever commend you to be kept unblameable untill his coming. The which I beſeech him to haſten for his mercies ſake.

Your own unfained, Iohn Careles,
priſoner of the Lord.

Here endeth the Letters of Iohn Careles.

¶ The Hiſtorie and Martyrdome of a learned and vertuous young man, called Iulius Palmer, ſometime Fellow of Magdalen Colledge in Oxford, with two other Martyrs, to wit, Iohn Gwin, and Thomas Askine, burned together in Newberie, at a place there called the Sand pits.

3. Martyrs ſuffering at Newbery, Iulius Palmer, Iohn Gwin, Tho. Askine, Martyrs. Iuly 16.

The ſame moneth of Iuly, in which Careles, as before is declared, was releaſed out of priſon by death, in ſhort time after, about the ſixteenth day of the ſame moneth of Iuly, ſuffered theſe three godly and conſtant Martyrs above mentioned, at Newberie, in which number was Iulius Palmer, ſometime ſtudent and Fellow of Magdalen Colledge in Oxford, and afterwards School-maſter in the towne of Reding. Concerning whoſe ſtorie and martyrdome here followeth, although not ſo much as he deſerveth to have ſaid, yet ſo much as ſufficiently may ſet forth the great working of God in this young man.

Iulius Palmer.

The ſtory of Palmer.

AS all Gods works are wondrous, in calling of all ſorts of men to confirm his truth, and to bear witneſſe unto his aſſured and infallible word, which the adverſaries have depraved, and corrupted with their falſe gloſſes, to eſtabliſh the fleſhly kingdome of Antichriſt, and to purchaſe ſecuritie in the world, which they ſeek to keep in their poſſeſſion by all means poſſible, rather curſing with the thunderbold of excommunication, burning, hanging, drowning, racking, ſcourging, and perſecuting by ſecret practice, and open violence, the ſimple ſheep of our Saviour Chriſt, then that their falſe forged packing ſhould be detected, their eſtimation appaired, their kitchen cooled, their rents, revenews, goods, lands and poſſeſſions abated: I ſay, as GODS works be wonderfull, which chuſeth ſome of all ſorts to confeſſe his Goſpel; ſo there is no one example, in the whole godly fellowſhip of Martyrs, more to be marked, yea more to be wondred at, then this, that one, which all King Edwards dayes was a Papiſt within the Univerſitie of Oxford, and ſo obſtinate, as that he did utterly abhor all godly prayer, and ſincere preaching, and almoſt of all them, with whom he lived, was therefore likewiſe abhorred, and (as I may ſay) pointed at with the finger, did yet after in Queene Maries time ſuffer moſt cruell death, at the Papiſts hands at Newberie in Barkſhire, for the moſt readie and zealous profeſſion of the bleſſed truth.

Iulius Palmer born in Coventrey.

Iulius Palmer ſcholler to M. Harley, ſchoolmaſter of Magdalen Colledge.

His name was Iulins Palmer, born in Coventrey, where alſo his parents dwelt. His Father had ſometime been Maior of that Citie, and occupied Merchandiſe, albeit he was an Upholſter by his myſterie. How he was brought up in his young and tender yeers, from his firſt entring, we know not, but as we have learned, he was ſometime ſcholler to maſter Harley, which taught the free ſchoole of Magdalen Colledge in Oxford, by whoſe diligence, and the goodneſſe of his own capaſity

capacitie, he became a toward young ſcholler in proſe and verſe. For he had a very prompt and readie memory, a wit ſharp and pregnant. He ſpake Latine with great facility of utterance, and wanted not competent knowledge in the Greek tongue; inſomuch that divers times he ſupplied the roome of the Greek Reader in his houſe. He was a ſubtle diſputer, both in the publike ſchools, and alſo at home. He uſed to ſay, that he was never ſo pleaſantly occupied, as when he came to the hard debating of profound queſtions in Philoſophie; ſo that he hath oftentimes watched and ſpent the whole night in the diſcuſſing and ſearching out the truth of deep and diffuſe queſtions, as De principiis, de infinito, de vacuo, de tempore, de caſu, & fortuna, &c. And this uſed he to do ſundrie times, with divers of his equals.

Julius Palmer addicted to philoſophy.

Julius Palmer beginneth to apply Divinity.

In familiar talk he greatly delighted, for the exerciſe of his learning, to defend the contrarie to that which was affirmed, yet with modeſtie, and without all oſtentation. For he greatly abhorred all overthwart cavelling, all frivolous talk, and unſaverie brabling. He was not captious, but would reaſon ſo ſoberly, and with ſuch probability, that even his adverſaries would no leſſe marvell at the dexteritie of his invention, then at his comely and decent behaviour in proſecuting the ſame.

And although he applied Divinitie verie lately, it appeareth that he recompenced the ſmall time of his ſtudy with the greatneſſe of his diligence beſtowed in the ſame, and his late coming to the truth, with his earneſt and zealous proceeding therein. For by the ſecret inſpiration of Gods holy ſpirit, inwardly working in his heart, he gave an apparant ſignification in his young yeers, that if God had ſpared his life to age, he would have growne to ſuch maturitie and ripeneſſe of judgement, as whereby he ſhould have been an ornament to Chriſts Church, and an honour to his countrey.

The civill behaviour of Julius Palmer.

And ſomewhat to ſpeak of his civill behaviour, he was of manners courteous without curioſitie, of countenance cheerfull, without high looks, of ſpeech pleaſant, without affectation, he was affable and lowly as any childe, and yet quicke ſpirited, and vehement in reaſoning. He practiſed no deceit toward any man, for he was of ſuch ſimplicitie, that he was apter to be deceived, then to deceive, and he was ſo great a contemner of all reproaches and injuries, that he would ſay, None were to be counted valiant, but ſuch as could deſpiſe injurie.

Palmers proverb.

In private ſtudie he was ſo infatigable, that he aroſe ordinarily every morning at foure of the clock, and went not lightly to bed before ten at night. Inſomuch that as he grew in yeers and underſtanding; ſo he came to be a Bachelor of Art, and at length, for the hope appearing in him, to the preferment of a fellowſhip in Magdalen Colledge, where alſo he was admitted to the office of a Reader in Logicke, Anno 1550. Now if he had at the firſt favoured ſincere Religion, ſo much as he followed his book, then had we had the leſſe matter to note in him. But indeed he was ſo much (as is aforeſaid) addicted to the Romiſh faith, that his companie and converſation in the ſame houſe was altogether with ſuch, as were utter enemies to the Goſpel of Chriſt. If he came to common prayer at any time, it was by violence and compulſion, for otherwiſe he came not. Sermons would he hear none himſelf, nor yet ſuffer his ſchollers to reſort unto them by his good will: for he was fully perſwaded, that they might be better occupied at home. The Preachers themſelves, he did both diſdain and deſpiſe, and all ſuch as were ſetters forth of ſound doctrine beſide. For the which contumacie and ſtubbornneſſe, he was ſo oft called before the Officers of the Colledge, and puniſhed ſometime by the purſe, ſometime by the lack of his commons, and otherwhile by certain taſkes, and exerciſes of learning, injoyned unto him, that divers ſuppoſed him to have endeavoured, of ſet purpoſe, continually to ſeek occaſion, whereby he might be counted a ſufferer for the fantaſied religion of the Romiſh Church.

Palmer fellow of Magdalen Colledge. Palmer Reader of Logick in his Colledge.

Palmer an utter enemie to ſound religion. Palmer impugner of true Preachers in King Edwards time.

In the end, not long before the death of King Edward that godly Prince, certaine ſlanderous libels, and railing verſes, were privily fixed to the walls and doores in ſundrie places of the Colledge againſt the Preſident, which was then Doctor Haddon, whereby was miniſtred further matter of trouble to Palmer. For whereas it was well known that he, and ſome of his companions, had a verie little while before ſpoken contumelious words againſt the Preſident; it could not be now avoided, but that thereby aroſe a vehement ſurmiſe and ſuſpicion, that he conſpiring with others, had contrived, made and ſcattered abroad the ſaid ſlanderous writings. Great inquiſition was made in the Colledge, to ſearch out the Author of ſo malicious and deſpitefull a deed, but nothing could be found and proved againſt Palmer, or any of his companions. Now Palmer, being hereupon examined by the Officers, did not onely with ſtout courage deny the fact to have been his, but alſo ſpake further many reproachfull words touching the ſaid Officers, and ſent the ſame to them in writing, whereby he was by them adjudged to be an unworthy member of that ſocietie. And ſo for this, and other Popiſh pranks (continuing obſtinate ſtill) he was expelled the houſe.

Libels ſet up in Oxford againſt D. Haddon Preſident.

Julius Palmer expelled the Colledge for Popery.

After he was thus diſpatched of his roome, he was faine for his owne maintenance to apply himſelf to be a teacher of children in the houſe of Sir Francis Knolles, in the which trade he continued untill the coming in of Queene Marie. And when her Viſitors were ſent to Magdalen Colledge, under a title of reformation (whereas all things were better afore) I meane to diſplace divers of the fellows that were learned, and to put right Catholiques (as they called them) in their rooms; then came this Julius Palmer, waiting to be reſtored to his living again, of which he had been deprived before, thinking by good right to be reſtored of them, whoſe faith and religion (as he ſaid) he did to the uttermoſt of his power defend and maintaine. And indeed at length he obtained the ſame. Then after he was reſtored again to his houſe in Queen Maries reign, God dealt ſo mercifully with him, that in the end he became of an obſtinate Papiſt, an earneſt and zealous Goſpeller.

Julius Palmer driven to teach children.

Palmer reſtored again to his Colledge.

Concerning whoſe converſion to the truth, for the more credit to be given to the ſame, we have here put down a letter written by one maſter Bullingham, fellow in ſome part of King Edwards time with the ſaid Palmer, then alſo of the ſame faction of religion with him, and toward the latter end of the ſaid Kings reign, a voluntary exile in France for Papiſtrie. In Queen Maries dayes, likewiſe a chaplain unto Stephen Gardiner, Biſhop of Winchester. And after the coming in of Queen Elizabeth ſuch a one, as for his obſtinacie was quite and clean diſpatched from all his livings by her Majeſties Commiſſioners. And yet now (God be praiſed therefore) a moſt conſtant Profeſſor, and earneſt teacher of the word of God. This man at the requeſt of a certain friend of his in London, being deſirous to know the certain truth thereof, wrote unto him concerning this Julius. The copie of which letter we thought good here to inſert, for that the parties being alive can teſtifie the ſame to be true and certain, if any man ſhall doubt thereof.

The letter of maſter Bullingham is this.

MAſter Bullingham, I wiſh you and all yours continuall health in the Lord. Hitherto have I not written any thing unto you concerning Iulius Palmer, that conſtant witneſſe of Gods truth, for that his doings and ſayings known unto me, were worne out of my remembrance; and to write an untruth it were rather to deface and blemiſh, then to adorn and beautifie him. After his converſion to the moſt holy Goſpel I never ſaw his face. Wherefore the leſſe have I to certifie you of. But ſo much as ſeemeth to me to ſerve moſt unto the purpoſe, here I commend unto you; and in witneſſe that my ſayings are true, I ſubſcribe my name, willing, praying, and beſeeching you to publiſh the ſame to the whole world, &c. At what time I Bullingham intended to forſake England, and to flie into France for the wicked Popes ſake (which came to paſſe indeed: for in Roan I was for a time) this Iulius Palmer, and Richard Duck, brought me outwards in my journey till we came to London: whereon a day Iulius Palmer and I walked to Saint Iames the Queenes place; and as we leaned at the great gate of that place, Palmer ſpake thus unto me. Bullingham, you know into what miſerie and calamities we are fallen for the Pope and his religion. We are young men, abhorred of all men now preſently, and like to be abhorred more and more. Let us conſider what hangeth over our heads. You are departing into a ſtrange countrey, both friendleſſe and monileſſe, where I feare me you ſhall taſte of ſowrer ſawces then hitherto you have done. And as for me, I am at my wits end. The face of hell it ſelfe is as amiable unto me, as the ſight of Magdalen Colledge. For there I am hated as a venemous toad. Would God I were raked under the earth. And as touching our religion, even our conſciences bear witneſſe that we taſte not ſuch an inward ſweetneſſe in the profeſſion thereof, as we underſtand the Goſpellers to taſte in their religion. Yea, to ſay the truth, we maintain we wot not what, rather of wil then of knowledge. But what then? Rather then I will yeeld unto them, I will beg my bread. So Palmer bequeathed himſelf to the wide world, and I paſſed over into Normandie. At my return into England again, my chance was to meet Palmer in Pauls, where a rood was ſet up. (This our meeting was in the beginning of Queene Maries reigne, and our miſerable departing not long before the end of King Edwards dayes.) Then after our greeting, thus ſaid Palmer. Bullingham, is this our god, for whom we have ſmarted? No Palmer, quoth I, it is an image of him. An image, quoth he? I tell thee plainly Bullingham, Iohn Calvin (whoſe Inſtitutions I have peruſed ſince our departure) telleth me plainly by GODS Word that it is an Idol, and that the Pope is Antichriſt, and his Clergie the filthie ſink-hole of hell: and now I beleeve it. For I feele it ſenſibly. Oh that God had revealed theſe matters unto me in times paſt. I would have bequeathed this Romiſh religion or rather irreligion to the devill of hell from whence it came. Beleeve them not Bullingham. I will rather have theſe knees pared off, then I will kneele to yonder Iacknapes (meaning the rood.) God help me, I am born to trouble and adverſitie in this world. Well Palmer, ſaid I, is the winde in that corner with you? I warrant you it will blow you to little eaſe at the end. I will never have to do with you againe. So I left Palmer walking in Pauls, who thorow the element of fire is exalted above the elements, where eternall reſt is prepared for perſecuted Martyrs. Thus much is true, and let it be knowne that I Bullingham affirm it to be true. More I have not to ſay. In theſe words and deeds it appeareth that GOD had elected him. From Bridgewater, April 26. Anno 1562.

Behold the obſtinacie of the Papiſts, which knowing the truth will not yeeld.

Behold his earneſtneſſe now he is turned to the truth.

By me Iohn Bullingham.

When he was by the Viſitors reſtored to his Colledge, although he began ſomething to ſavour and taſte of Gods truth, by conference and companie of certain godly and zealous men abroad, in time of his expulſion, ſpecially at the houſe of Sir Francis Knowls: yet was he not throughly perſwaded, but in moſt points continued for a while either blinde, or elſe doubtfull. Neither could he chuſe, but utter himſelf in private reaſoning from time to time, both in what points he was fully reſolved, and alſo of what points he doubted. For ſuch was his nature alway, both in Papiſtrie, and in the Goſpel, utterly to detect all diſſimulation, inſomuch that by the meanes of his plainneſſe, and for that he could not flatter, he ſuffered much woe, both in King Edwards, and alſo in Queene Maries time. Whereas he might at the firſt have lived in great quietneſſe, if he could have diſſembled, and both done and ſpoken againſt his conſcience, as many ſtirring Papiſts then did. And likewiſe he might have eſcaped burning in Queene Maries time, if he would either have ſpoken, or kept ſilence againſt his conſcience, as many weake Goſpellers did. But Palmer could in no wiſe diſſemble.

The converſion of Palmer after his reſtoring again into the Colledge.

Plain Palmer could never diſſemble with his conſcience.

Now within ſhort ſpace, God ſo wrought in his heart, that he became very inquiſitive, and carefull to hear and underſtand, how the Martyrs were apprehended, what articles they died for, how they were uſed, and after what ſort they took their death. Inſomuch that he ſpared not at his owne charges to ſend over one of his ſcholers, in the companie of a Bachelor of that houſe, to Gloceſter, to ſee and underſtand the whole order of Biſhop Hoopers death, and to bring him true report thereof. Which thing ſome think he the rather did, becauſe he was wont in King Edwards time to ſay; that none of them all would ſtand to death for their religion. Thus he learned with what great, extreme and horrible crueltie the Martyrs of God were tried, and how valiantly they overcame all kinde of torments to the end. Whereof he himſelf alſo did ſee more experience afterward, at the examination and death of thoſe holy confeſſors and Martyrs which were burned at Oxford before his eyes; inſomuch that the firſt hope, which the godly conceived of him, was at his return from the burning of Biſhop Ridley, and Biſhop Latimer. At what time, in the hearing of divers of his friends, he braſt out into theſe words and ſuch like; Oh raging crueltie, Oh tyrannie tragicall, and more then barbarous.

The firſt occaſion of Iulius Palmers converſion was by the conſtant death of the Martyrs.

Note how the blood of Martyrs worketh.

From that day forward he ſtudiouſly ſought to underſtand the truth, and therefore with all ſpeed he borrowed Peter Martyrs Commentaries upon the firſt to the Corinths, of one of Magdalens yet alive, and other good books of other men. And ſo through hearty prayer and diligent ſearch and conference of the Scriptures, at length he beleeved and imbraced the truth with great joy; and ſo profited in the ſame, that daily more and more, he declared it both in word and deed: In ſuch ſort, as he never hated the truth more ſtubbornly before, then afterward he willingly imbraced the ſame, when it pleaſed God to open his eyes, and to reveal unto him the light of his word. And now again when he ſhould come to Church, in thoſe dayes of Poperie, there to be occupied among the reſt, in ſinging of Reſponds, reading of legends, and ſuch like ſtuffe allotted unto him, he had as much pleaſure, he ſaid, to be at them, as a Bear to be baited, and worried with dogs. When he came, it was (as it appeared) more to avoid diſpleaſure and danger, then for any good will, and readie affection.

At length through Gods grace, he grew up to ſuch maturity and ripeneſſe in the truth, that he ſpared not to declare certain ſparks thereof in his outward behaviour and doings. For when he ſhould keep his bowing meaſures at * Confiteor, (as the cuſtome there was) in turning himſelf to and fro, ſometime Eaſtward, ſometime Weſtward, and afterward knock his breſt at the elevation time, againſt theſe idolatrous adorations his heart did ſo vehemently riſe, that ſometime he would abſent himſelf from them, and ſometime being there, he would even at the ſacring time (as they termed it) get him out of the Church, to avoid thoſe ungodly geſtures, and idolatrous adoration. To be ſhort, perceiving after a while, that he was greatly ſuſpected and abhorred of the Preſident then being, which was M. Cole, and of divers others which before were his friends, and therewithall feeling great conflict and torment of conſcience daily to grow, with his converſation with idolaters; ſeeing alſo that his new life and old living might not well nor quietly ſtand together, he addreſſed himſelf to depart the houſe. For he thought it not beſt to abide the danger of expulſion, as he did at the firſt; ſeeing the weather was now waxed warmer. And being demanded at that time of a ſpeciall friend (who would gladly have perſwaded him to ſtay there longer) whither he would go, or how he would live, he made this anſwer, Domini eſt terra, & plenitudo ejus, i. The earth is the Lords, and the fulneſſe thereof. Let the Lord work, I will commit my ſelf to God, and the wide world.

* By theſe meaſures he meaneth a certain ceremony of the colledge, which was this, That in the Confiteor time at evenſong, the whole company of the quire (which was there to the number of a C) ſtanding up, & turning their faces firſt to the high Altar, ſhould then turn them to the Preſident, and from the Preſident to the high Altar again, and ſo after turning and returning three times together, the Preſident ſhould ſay, Miſereatur, which done every man to place himſelf again in his ſtall.

Here I think it expedient, before I write of the painfull ſurges that he ſuffered after he came abroad into the perillous gulphes, and deep ſea of this wretched wide world, firſt, to rehearſe one or two examples of his outward behaviour, at ſuch times as he had recourſe to the Colledge, after his laſt departure, whereby the Reader may yet better underſtand of his ſimplicitie and plainneſſe, and how far wide he was from all cloked diſſimulation in Gods cauſe, which certain godleſſe perſons have ſought maliciouſly to charge him withall. Being at Oxford on a certain time in Magdalen Colledge, and having knowledge that the Spaniſh Frier John (who ſucceeded D. Peter Martyr, in the office of the Divinitie Lecture) would preach there that preſent Sunday, he would not at the firſt grant to be preſent at it. At length a friend of his, a Fellow of that houſe, perſwaded ſo much with him, that he was content to accompany his ſaid friend to the Church. But ſuddenly as the Frier vehemently inveyed againſt Gods truth, in defending certain Popiſh hereſies, Palmer, having many eyes bent and directed towards him, departed from amongſt the midſt of the auditorie, and was found in his friends chamber weeping bitterly. Afterward being demanded why he ſlipt away upon ſuch a ſudden, Oh ſaid he, if I had not openly departed, I ſhould have openly ſtopped mine eares. For the Friers blaſphemous talk, in diſproving, or rather depraving the veritie, made mine eares not to glow, but my heart worſe to ſmart, then if mine eares had been cut from my head.

Doct. John the Spaniſh Frier ſucceeded Doc. Peter Martyr in the Divinity Lecture.

Palmer could not abide the blaſphemous ſermon of Frier John.

It chanced another time, that the ſame friend of his, called maſter Shipper, being then Burſar of the houſe, bade him to dinner in his chamber. Palmer not knowing what gheſts were alſo thither invited and bidden, hapned there (contrary to his expectation) to meet with the foreſaid Frier, with whom were preſent D. Smith, D. Treſham, and divers other Papiſts, whoſe company Palmer could not well bear: and therefore whiſpering his friend in the eare, he ſaid he would be gone, for that was no place for him. I will, ſaith he, to the Burſars table in the great hall. The Burſar underſtanding his minde, deſired him of all friendſhip not ſo to depart, alledging that it were the next way to bewray himſelf, and as it were of purpoſe to caſt himſelf into the Briers, with many other perſwaſions, as the ſhortneſſe of time would permit. In the end he condeſcended to his requeſt and tarried. Now as he came to the fire ſide, the Frier ſaluted him cheerfully in Latine, for he could not ſpeak Engliſh. Palmer with an amiable countenance reſaluted him gently. But when the Frier offered him his hand, he caſting his eye aſide, as though he had not ſeen it, found matter of talk to another ſtanding by, and ſo avoided it; which thing was well marked of ſome, not without great grudge of ſtomack.

Palmer refuſeth to take Frier John by the hand.

After they were ſet and had well eaten, the Frier with a pleaſant look offering him the cup, ſaid, Propino tibi, juvenis erudite, i. I drink to you, learned young man. Palmer at that word bluſhing as red as ſcarlet, anſwered, Non agnoſco nomen, domine, i. I knowledge no ſuch name, O ſir. And therewith taking the cup at his hand, he ſet it down by him, as though he would have pledged him anon after, but in the end it was alſo well marked, that he did it not. When dinner was done, being ſharply rebuked of the ſaid Burſar his friend, for his ſo unwiſe, uncivill and unſeemly behaviour (as he termed it) he made anſwer for himſelf, and ſaid, Oleum eorum non demulcet, ſed frangit caput meum, i. The oyle of theſe men doth not ſupple, but breaketh my head.

Julius Palmer refuſeth to drink with Frier John.

Another time, which was alſo the laſt time of his being at Oxford, not long before his death, one Barwick an old acquaintance of his, being ſometime Clerk of Magdalens, and then Fellow of Trinitie Colledge, a rank Papiſt, began to reaſon with him in his friends chamber aforeſaid, and perceiving him to be zealous and earneſt in the defence of the veritie, he ſaid unto him in the hearing of maſter Thomas Parry, and others there preſent: Well Palmer, well, now thou art ſtout, and hardy in thine opinion, but if thou wert once brought to the ſtake, I beleeve thou wouldeſt tell me another tale. I adviſe thee beware of the fire, it is a ſhrewd matter to burn. Truly, ſaid Palmer, I have been in danger of burning once or twice, and hitherto (I thank God) I have eſcaped it. But I judge verily, it will be my end at the laſt, welcome be it, by the grace of God. Indeed it is a hard matter for them to burn, that have the minde and ſoul linked to the bodie, as a thiefs foot is tied in a pair of fetters: but if a man be once able, through the help of Gods ſpirit, to ſeparate and divide the ſoul from the body, for him it is no more Maſtery to burn, then for me to eat this peece of bread.

Barwicks words to Palmer.

Palmers godly anſwer to Barwick.

Thus much by the way concerning his plainneſſe, without diſſimulation, and how he feared not openly to ſhew himſelf more grieved in heart to hear the word of God blaſphemed, then to ſuffer any worldly pains. Now let us proceed in our ſtorie, and faithfully declare both the occaſion and manner of his death.

Within ſhort ſpace after he had yeelded up his Fellowſhip in Oxford, he was through Gods providence (who never faileth them that firſt ſeek his glorie) placed ſchool-maſter by Patent in the Gramar ſchoole of Reding, where he was well accepted ted of all thoſe that feared God, and favoured his word, as well for his good learning & knowledge, as alſo for his earneſt zeal, and profeſſion of the truth. But Satan the enemy of all godly attempts, envying his good proceedings and proſperous ſucceſſe in the ſame, would not ſuffer him there long to be in quiet. Wherefore he ſtirred up againſt him certain double faced hypocrites, which by diſſimulation and craftie inſinuation had crept in, to underſtand his ſecrets, under a pretenſe of a zeal to the Goſpel. Which men he (ſuſpecting no deceit) right joyfully imbraced, making them privie of all his doings. For as he himſelf was then fervently inflamed with the love of heavenly doctrine; ſo had he an incredible deſire by all means poſſible to allure and incourage others to the profeſſion of the ſame.

Julius Palmer placed by Patent to be ſchoolmaſter at Reding.

Palmer circumvented by falſe Iudaſſes.

These faithfull and truſtie brethren, ſo ſoon as they had found good opportunity, ſpared not in his abſence to rifle his ſtudie of certain godly books and writings; amongſt the which was his replication to Morwines verſes, touching Wincheſters Epitaph, and other arguments both in Latine and Engliſh, written by him againſt the Popiſh proceedings, and ſpecially againſt their unnaturall and brutiſh tyrannie, executed toward the Martyrs of God. When they had thus done, they were not aſhamed to threaten him that they would exhibite the ſame to the Councell, unleſſe he would without delay depart out of their coaſts, and give over the Schoole to a friend of theirs. The truth of this ſtory appeareth in part by a letter written with his own hand, out of priſon, eight dayes before he was burned; which becauſe it is of certaine credit, and came to our hands, therefore we are the bolder to avouch it for a truth.

Palmers ſtudy ſearched for books.

Thus then was this ſilly young man, for the ſafegard of his life, forced to depart upon the ſudden from Reding, leaving behinde him in the hands of his enemies his ſtuffe, and one quarters ſtipend, and ſo he took his journey toward Euſham, where his mother then dwelt, hoping to obtain at her hands certain Legacies due to him by his fathers laſt Will, which he ſhould have received certain yeers before; and taking his journey by Oxford, he requeſted certain of his friends to accompanie him thither. His mother underſtanding his ſtate and errand by maſter Shipper and his brother (whom he had ſent before to intreat for him) as ſoon as ſhe beheld him on his knees, aſking her bleſſing as he had been accuſtomed to do: thou ſhalt, ſaid ſhe, have Chriſts curſe and mine wheresoever thou go. He pauſing a little, as one amazed at ſo heavie a greeting, at length ſaid, Oh mother, your own curſe you may give me, which God knoweth I never deſerved, but Gods curſe you cannot give me, for he hath alreadie bleſſed me. Nay, ſaith ſhe, thou wenteſt from Gods bleſſing into the warm Sun, when thou was baniſhed for an heretique out of that worſhipfull houſe in Oxford, and now for the like knaverie, art driven out of Reding too. Alas mother, ſaith he, you have been miſ-informed. I was not expelled nor driven away, but freely reſigned of mine own accord. And heretique I am none, for I ſtand not ſtubbornly againſt any true doctrine, but defend it to my power. And you may be ſure, they uſe not to expell nor baniſh, but to burn heretiques (as they terme them.) Well, quoth ſhe, I am ſure thou doeſt not beleeve as thy father and I, and all our forefathers have done; but as we were taught by the new law in King Edwards dayes, which is damnable hereſie.

Iulius Palmer forced to depart the town of Reding.

Unnaturall words of a mother.

Mothers may give their own curſe, but Gods curſe they cannot give, much leſſe can the Pope.

Indeed I confeſſe, ſaid he, that I beleeve that doctrine which was taught in King Edwards time, which is not hereſie but truth, neither is it new, but as old as Chriſt and his Apoſtles. If thou be at that point, ſaith ſhe, I require thee to depart from my houſe, and out of my ſight, and never take me more for thy mother hereafter. As for money and goods I have none of thine, thy father bequeathed nought for heretiques. Fagots I have to burn thee, more thou getteſt not at my hands. Mother, ſaith he, whereas you have curſed me. I again pray God to bleſſe you, and proſper you all your life long, and with like ſoft talk, ſweet words and abundance of teares trickling downe his cheeks, he departed from her, wherewith he ſo mollified her hard heart, that ſhe hurled an old Angel after him, and ſaid, take that to keep thee a true man.

The father ſhall be divided againſt the ſon, the mother againſt, &c. Luke 12.

Palmer driven from his mother.

Thus poore Palmer being deſtitute of worldly friendſhip, and cruelly repelled of her, whom he took to have been his ſureſt friend, wiſt not which way to turn his face. Soon after, when he had bethought himſelf, it came to his minde to return ſecretly to Magdalen Colledge, upon the aſſured truſt and affiance, that he had a privie friend or two in that houſe. At what time, by the ſute of one Alane Cope, then fellow of the houſe, he obtained letters commendatorie, from maſter Cole Preſident there, for his preferment to a Schoole in Gloceſter ſhire. So he getteth him away, committed by his friends to Gods divine protection, of whom ſome accompanied him as far as Euſam Ferrie, and ſome to Burford.

Alane Cope an helper and ſupporter of Iulius Palmer.

Afterward as he went alone, muſing and pondering of matters, it came in his head (as he writeth in an Epiſtle to one of his friends) to leave his appointed journey, and to return cloſely to Reding, truſting there by the help of friends, to receive his quarters ſtipend, and convey his ſtuffs to the cuſtody of ſome truſty bodie. To Reding he cometh, and taketh up his lodging at the Cardinal Hat, deſiring his hoſteſſe inſtantly to aſſigne him a cloſe chamber, where he might be alone from all reſort of companie. He came not ſo cloſely, but that this viperous generation had knowledge thereof. Wherefore without delay they laid their heads together, and conſulted what way they might moſt ſafely proceed againſt him, to bring their old cankered malice to paſſe. And ſoon it was concluded, that one maſter Hampton (which then bare two faces in one hood, and under the colour of a brother played the part of a diſſembling hypocrite) ſhould reſort to him under the pretence of friendſhip, to feele and fiſh out the cauſe of his repair to Reding.

Hampton of Reding, a diſſembling hypocrite, and a falſe witneſſe.

Palmer as he was a ſimple man, and without all wrinkles of cloked colluſion, opened to him his whole intent. But Hampton earneſtly perſwaded him to the contrary, declaring what danger might enſue if this were attempted. Againſt his counſell Palmer replied verie much, and as they waxed hot in talk, Hampton flang away in a furie, and ſaid; as he had fiſhed, ſo ſhould he fowl for him. Palmer not yet ſuſpecting ſuch pretenſed and deviſed miſchief, as by this crooked and peſtiferous generation was now in brewing againſt him, called for his ſupper, and went quietly to bed: But quietly he could not long reſt there. For within ſhort ſpace after, the Officers and their retinue came ruſhing in with lanterns and bills, requiring him in the King and Queens name to make ready himſelf and quietly to depart with them. So this ſilly young man perceiving that he was thus Iudaſly betrayed (without opening his lips) was led away as a lambe to the ſlaughter, and was committed to ward, whom the Keeper, as a ravening Wolfe greedy of his prey, brought down into a vile, ſtinking, and blinde dungeon, prepared for theeves and murderers, and there he left him for a time, hanging by the hands and feet in a pair of ſtocks, ſo high, that well-neer no part of his bodie toucht the ground.

Palmer betrayed and apprehended.

Palmer miſerably uſed in priſon.

In this cave or dungeon he remained about ten dayes, under the tyranny of this unmercifull Keeper.

¶ Here by the way, gentle Reader, I have by a little digreſſion to give thee to underſtand, concerning one Thomas Thackham, for that the ſaid Thomas Thackham in the ſtorie of this Iulius Palmer, was noted and named in our former booke, to be a doer and a worker againſt the ſaid bleſſed Martyr: he therefore being not a little grieved, made his reply again in writing, for purgation and defence of himſelf againſt the falſe information of his ſlanderer. Albeit for his confutation in writing I paſſe not much upon, either what he hath written or can write. Onely the thing that moveth me moſt is this; For that the ſaid Thomas Thackham not long ſince, coming to me himſelf, hath ſo atteſted and depoſed againſt the information, with ſuch ſwearing and deep adjuration, taking the name of the Lord God to witneſſe, and appealing to his judgement to the utter perdition of his ſoul, if it were not falſe which by information was reported of him, and he faultleſſe in the matter. Which being ſo, I could not otherwiſe refuſe, but to give credit to his oath, and upon the ſame to alter and correct ſo much as appertaineth to the defamation (as he calleth it) of his name, referring the truth of the matter to his own conſcience, and the judgement of the Lord God, to whom either he ſtandeth if it be true, or falleth if it be falſe.

And now to our ſtorie again, concerning the proceſſe and accuſation of Iulius Palmer, omitting by the way the names of Thomas Thackham, and Downer.

Here followeth the firſt examination and accuſation of Iulius Palmer at Reding.

The firſt examination of Iulius Palmer.

AFter this he was brought before the Maior, and there by the procurement of certain falſe brethren (the Lord knoweth what they were) who had been converſant with Palmer, and robbed his ſtudy, divers grievous and enormous crimes were laid to his charge, as treaſon, ſedition, ſurmiſed murther, and adulterie.

To whom Palmer anſwered, that if ſuch horrible and hainous crimes might be proved againſt him, he would patiently ſubmit himſelf to all kinde of torments that could be deviſed. But O ye cruell blood-ſucklers (ſaith he) ye follow the old practices of your progenitors, the Viperous and Woolviſh generation of Phariſees and Papiſts: but be ye well aſſured, that God alreadie ſeeth your ſubtle devices and craftie packing, and will not ſuffer the outragious furie of your venemous tongues and fierie hearts to eſcape unpuniſhed. All this while no mention was made of hereſie or hereticall writings.

Their greateſt proofs againſt him were theſe.

Evidence put up againſt Palmer.

FIrſt, that Palmer ſaid, the Queens ſword was not put in her hand to execute tyrannie, and to kill and murder the true ſervants of God.

Item, that her ſword was too blunt toward the Papiſts, but toward the true Chriſtians it was too ſharp.

Note the worſhipfull proceſſe of the quarrelling Papiſts.

Item, that certain ſervants of Sir Francis Knowls and others, reſorting to his lectures, had fallen out among themſelves, and were like to have committed murther, and therefore he was a ſower of ſedition, and a procurer of unlawfull aſſemblies.

Item, that his hoſteſſe had written a letter unto him (which they had intercepted) wherein ſhe required him to return to Reding, and ſent him her commendations, by the token that the knife lay hid under the beam, whereby they gathered that ſhe had conſpired with him to murder her husband.

Item, that they found him alone with his hoſteſſe by the fire ſide in the hal, the doore being ſhut to them forſooth. When this evidence was given up, the Maior diſmiſſed them and went to dinner, commanding Palmer to the Cage, to make him an open ſpectacle of ignominie to the eyes of the world. And Thackham, the better to cover his own ſhame, cauſed it to be bruted, that he was ſo puniſhed for his evill life and wickedneſſe already proved againſt him.

Palmer cleareth himſelf.

Note here the fruit of Romiſh religion.

In the afternoon Palmer came to his anſwer, and did ſo mightily and cleerly deface their evidence, and defend his own innocencie, proving alſo that the ſaid letters were by themſelves forged, that the Maior himſelf was much aſhamed that he had given ſuch credit unto them, and ſo much born with them, ſo that he ſought meanes how they might convey him out of the countrey privily.

John Galant, a zealous profeſſor.

But here among other things this is not with ſilence to be paſſed over, that one John Galant, a zealous profeſſor of the Goſpel, a little after this came to the priſon and found him ſomewhat better intreated then before. When he beheld him, O Palmer, ſaith he, thou haſt deceived divers mens expectation: for we heare that you ſuffer not for righteouſneſſe ſake, but for your owne demerits.

Oh brother Galant, ſaith he, theſe be the old practices of that Satanicall brood. But be you well aſſured, and GOD be praiſed for it, I have ſo purged my ſelf, and detected their falſhood, that from henceforth I ſhall be no more moleſted therewith. And there having pen and inke, he did write ſomewhat whereby part of his ſtorie here rehearſed, is well confirmed. But now to theſe bloodie adverſaries.

New policie deviſed againſt Julius Palmer.

After this, when they ſaw the matter frame ſo ill-favouredly, fearing that if he ſhould eſcape ſecretly, their doing would tend no leſſe to their ſhame and danger, then to the Maiors diſhoneſtie; they deviſed a new policie to bring to paſſe their long hidden and feſtered malice againſt him, which was by this extreme refuge. For, whereas before they were partly aſhamed to accuſe him of hereſie, ſeeing they had been counted earneſt brethren themſelves; and partly afraid, becauſe they had broken up his ſtudie, and committed theft: yet now leſt their iniquitie ſhould have been revealed to the world, they put both fear and ſhame aſide, and began to refricate and rip up the old ſore, the ſcar whereof had been but ſuperficially cured, as you have heard; and ſo to colour their former practices with the pretence of his reformation in religion, they charged him with the writings that they had ſtollen out of his ſtudie.

Palmer called before the Maior of Reding, Bird the Officiall, and two Juſtices.

D. Jeffery the Biſhops Chancellor of Sarum.

Thus Palmer was once again called out of the priſon to appeare before the Maior, and Bird the Officiall, and two other Juſtices, to render an account of his faith before them; to anſwer to ſuch articles and informations, as were laid againſt him. And when they had gathered of his own mouth ſufficient matter to intrap him, they deviſed a certificate, or bill of inſtructions againſt him, to be directed to Doctor Jeffery, who had determined to hold his Viſitation the next Tueſday at Newberie, which was the ſixteenth of July. And thus were the falſe witneſſes and bloodie accuſers winked at, and the innocent delivered to the Lyon to be devoured. When it was therefore concluded that Palmer ſhould be ſent over to Newberie, the ſaid letters teſtimoniall were conveyed over together with him; the contents whereof ſhall partly appeare hereafter. In the mean time I think it good here to rehearſe one example among other, both of charitable affection toward him, and of his modeſtie correſpondent to the ſame.

M. Rider of Reding a faithfull favourer of Gods Goſpel.

Maſter Rider of Reding, a faithfull witneſſe of Gods truth, hearing how cruelly Palmer had beene dealt withall in the priſon, and pined away for lacke of neceſſaries, and how evidently he had proved himſelfe innocent before the Officers, of ſuch crimes as were objected againſt him, he ſent to him his ſervant ſecretly the night before his departure to Newberie, with a bowed grote in token of his good heart toward him, requiring him to let him underſtand if he lacked neceſſaries, and he would provide for him. Palmer anſwered, the Lord reward your M. for his benevolence toward me, a miſerable abject in this world, and tell him that (God be praiſed) I lack nothing.

Thom. Aſkine or Roberts, fellow priſoner with Iulius Palmer.

In the morning before they took their journey, Thomas Aſkine, alias Roberts, being fellow priſoner with him in Chriſts cauſe, ſitting at breakfaſt, and beholding Palmer very ſad, leaning to a window in the corner of the houſe, asked why he came not to breakfaſt. Becauſe I lack money (ſaith Palmer) to diſcharge the ſhot. Come on man (quoth he) God be praiſed for it, I have enough for us both. Which thing when M. Rider heard of, it cannot be expreſſed, how much it grieved him that Palmer had deceived him with ſo modeſt an anſwer.

Iulius Palmer brought to Newbery.

Thus to Newbery they came on Munday night, and forthwith they were committed to the comfortable hoſtrie of the blinde houſe, where they found Iohn Guin, their faithfull brother in the Lord. Now how they came before the Conſiſtorie of D. Ieffery, and how Palmer was examined, it doth in part appeare by this examination hereunto annexed, which although it be not perfectly and orderly penned, as the report goeth it was ſpoken, nor perchance altogether in ſuch forme of words, yet as exactly as we are able to compact and diſpoſe it, being gathered out of ſeverall notes of Richard Shipper, Iohn Hunt, Iohn Kirry of Newberie, Richard White of Marleborough, which were oculati teſtes, and preſent at the hearing thereof.

Witneſſes to the ſecond part of this ſtory.

The ſecond examination and accuſation of Iulius Palmer at Newbery, in the hearing of moe then three hundred perſons.

The examination of Iulius Palmer before D. Ieffrey at Newbery.

D. Ieffrey, Sir Rich. Abridges Knight, M. Io. Winchcomb, the Parſon of Inglefield, judge againſt Iulius Palmer.

IN the yeer 1556. the xvj. of Iuly, foure or five ſeats were prepared in the Quire of the Pariſh Church of Newberie for the Viſitors, whoſe names here enſue; Doctor Ieffrey for the Biſhop of Sarum, ſir Richard Abridges Knight, and then high Sheriffe of the Shire, Sir William Ramsford Knight, M. Iohn Winchcomb Eſquire, and the Parſon of Inglefield. After the priſoners were preſented, the Commiſſion read, and other things done in order accordingly, Doct. Ieffrey called to Palmer, and ſaid; Art thou that jolly writer of three halfepenny bookes that we heare of?

Palm. I know not what you meane.

Ieff. Have you taught Latine ſo long, that now you underſtand not Engliſh?

To this he anſwered nothing.

Then D. Ieffrey ſtanding up ſaid, We have received certaine writings and articles againſt you, from the right worſhipfull the Maior of Reding, and other Iuſtices, whereby we underſtand; that being convented afore them, you were convict of certaine hereſies.

Firſt, that you deny the Popes holineſſe ſupremacie.

Next that there are but two Sacraments.

Thirdly, that the Prieſt ſheweth up an Idoll at Maſſe; and therefore you went to no Maſſe, ſince your firſt coming to Reding.

Fourthly, that there is no Purgatorie.

Laſt of all, that you be a ſower of ſedition, and have ſought to divide the unitie of the Queenes ſubjects.

The Sheriffe. You were beſt ſee firſt what he will ſay to his owne handy work.

Ieff. Ye ſay truth. Tell me Palmer, art thou he that wrote this faire volume? Look upon it.

Palm. I wrote it indeed, and gathered it out of the Scripture.

Ieff. Is this doggiſh rime yours alſo? Look.

Palm. I wrote this, I deny not.

Ieff. And what ſay you to theſe Latine verſes, entituled Epicedion, &c. Are they yours too?

Palm. Yea Sir.

Ieff. Art thou not aſhamed to affirme it? It came of no good ſpirit that thou didſt both raile at the dead, and ſlander a learned and catholike man yet alive.

Palm. If it be a ſlander, he hath ſlandered himſelfe: for I doe but report his owne writing, and open the folly therein declared. And I reckon it no railing to inveigh againſt Annas and Caiphas being dead.

Ieft. Saiſt thou ſo? I will make thee recant it, and wring peccavi out of your lying lips, ere I have done with thee.

Palm. But I know, that although of my ſelfe I be able to doe nothing, yet if you and all mine enemies both bodily and ghoſtly, ſhould doe your worſt, you ſhall not be able to bring that to paſſe, neither ſhall ye prevaile againſt Gods mighty ſpirit, by whom we underſtand the truth, and ſpeak it ſo boldly.

Ieff. Ah, are you full of the ſpirit? are you inſpired with the holy Ghoſt?

Palm. Sir, no man can beleeve, but by the inſpiration of the holy Ghoſt. Therefore if I were not a ſpirituall man, and inſpired with Gods holy ſpirit, I were not a true Chriſtian. Qui ſpiritum Chriſti non habet, hic non eſt ejus, i. He that hath not the ſpirit of Chriſt, is none of his.

Ieff. I perceive you lack no words.

Palm. Chriſt hath promiſed not onely to give us ſtore of words neceſſarie, but with them, ſuch force of matter, as the gates of hell ſhall not be able to confound, or prevaile againſt it.

Ieff. Chriſt made ſuch a promiſe to his Apoſtles, I trow you will not compare with them.

The holy Ghoſt ſhall teach you in that houre what you ſhall anſwer. Luke 12.

Palm. With the holy Apoſtles I may not compare, neither have I any affiance in mine owne wit or learning, which I know is but ſmall: yet this promiſe I am certaine pertaineth to all ſuch as are appointed to defend Gods truth againſt his enemies, in the time of their perſecution for the ſame.

Ieft. Then it pertaineth not to thee.

Palm. Yes, I am right wel aſſured, that through his grace it appertaineth at this preſent to me, as it ſhall (I doubt not) appeare, if you give me leave to diſpute with you before this audience, in the defence of all that I have there written.

Ieff. Thou art but a beardleſſe boy, ſtart up yeſterday out of the Schooles, and dareſt thou preſume to offer diſputation, or to encounter with a Doctor.

A marvel to the Papiſts, that young men ſhould have the gift of the holy Ghoſt.

Palm. Remember Maſter Doctor, Spiritus ubi vult ſpirat. And againe, Ex ore infantium, &c. And in another place, Abſcondiſti hæc a ſapientibus, &c. i. The ſpirit breatheth where it pleaſeth him, &c. Out of the mouth of infants, &c. And thou haſt hidden theſe things from the wiſe, &c. God is not tied to time, wit, learning, place, nor perſon. And although your wit and learning be greater then mine; yet your beleefe in the truth, and zeale to defend the ſame, is no greater then mine.

Gods ſpirit not bound to place or perſon.

Regiſt. Sir, if you ſuffer him thus impudently to trifle with you, he will never have done.

Note how theſe men dare not abide diſputation

Ieffrey. Well, ye ſhall underſtand, that I have it not in Commiſſion at this preſent to diſpute with you, neither were it meet that we ſhould call againe into queſtion ſuch articles as are already diſcuſſed, and perfectly defined by our mother the holy Church, whom we ought to beleeve without why, or wherefore, as the Creed telleth us. But the cauſe why ye be now called hither, is that ye might be examined upon ſuch articles as are miniſtred againſt you, and ſuch matter as is here contained in your hand-writing, that it may be ſeene whether you will ſtand to it, or nay. How ſay you to this?

The Church of Rome is but a particular Church.
The Church is not to be beleeved for her ſelfe.

Palmer. By your holy Church you meane the Synagogue of Rome, which is not univerſall, but a particular Church of ſhavelings. The Catholike Church I beleeve, yet not for her owne ſake, but becauſe ſhe is holy, that is to ſay, a Church that grounded her beliefe upon the word of her Spouſe Chriſt.

Ieffrey. Leave railing, and anſwer me directly to my queſtion. Will you ſtand to your writing, or will you not?

Palmer. If ye prove any ſentence therein comprized, not to ſtand with Gods word, I will preſently recant it.

Ieffrey. Thou impudent fellow, have I not told thee, that I came not to diſpute with thee, but to examine thee?

Here the Parſon of Ingleſield pointing to the pix, ſaid, What ſeeſt thou yonder?

Palm. A canopie of ſilke broidered with gold.

Parſon. Yea, but what is within it?

Palmer. A peece of bread, in a clout, I trow.

Parſon. Thou art as froward an heretike as ever I talked withall. Here was much ſpoken of Confiteor, and other parts of the Maſſe.

Parſon. Doe you not beleeve that they which receive the holy Sacrament of the altar, doe truely eate Chriſts naturall body?

The ſacrament of the Lords Supper.

Palmer. If the Sacrament of the Lords Supper be miniſtred, as Chriſt did ordaine it, the faithfull receivers do indeed ſpiritually and truely eate and drinke in it Chriſts very naturall bodie and bloud.

Parſon. The faithfull receivers? Ye cannot bleare our eies with ſuch ſophiſtrie. Doe not all maner of receivers, good and bad, faithfull and unfaithfull receive the very naturall body in forme of bread?

Palmer. No Sir.

Parſon. How prove you that?

The wicked receive not the Lords body.

Palm. By this place, Qui manducat me, vivet propter me. i. He that eateth me, ſhall live for me.

Parſon. See that fond fellow, whiles he taketh himſelfe to be a Doctor of the law, you ſhall ſee me prove him a ſtarke fooliſh dawe. Doe you not reade likewiſe, Quicunque invocaverit nomen domini, ſalvus erit? id eſt, Whoſoever invocateth the name of the Lord, ſhall be ſaved? Ergo, Doe none but the godly call upon him? Therefore you muſt marke how Saint Paul anſwereth you. He ſaith, that the wicked doe eat the true body to their condemnation.

As Palmer was bent to anſwer him at the full, the Parſon interrupted him, crying ſtil, what ſaiſt thou to S. Paul?

Palm. I ſay that S. Paul hath no ſuch words.

Parſon. See, the imputent fellow denieth the plaine Text. Qui edit & bibit corpus Domini indigne, reus erit iudicii. i. He that eateth and drinketh the body of the Lord unworthily, is guilty of iudgement.

Palmer. I beſeech you lend me your book.

Parſon. Not ſo.

The Sheriffe. I pray you lend him your book. So the book was given over to him.

Palmer. Your owne book hath, Qui manducat hunc panem, &c. i. He that eateth this bread.

Parſon. But Saint Hieromes tranſlation hath Corpus.

The Parſon confounded with his owne booke.
The Parſons mouth ſtopped.

Palmer. Not ſo M. Parſon, and God be praiſed that I have in the meane ſeaſon, ſhut up your lips with your own book.

Ieffrey. It ſkilleth no matter whether ye write bread or body, for we be able to prove that he meant the body. And whereas you ſay, they eate it ſpiritually, that is but a blinde ſhift of deſcant.

Palmer. What ſhould I ſay elſe?

Ieffrey. As holy Church ſaith, really, carnally, ſubſtantially.

More of his examination in that time and place is not yet come to our hands: whenſoever God ſendeth it, I will impart and communicate the ſame to the Reader. In the meane ſeaſon we are credibly informed of this, that Sir Richard Abridges, the ſame day after dinner, ſent for him to his lodging, and there, in the preſence of divers perſons yet alive in Newberie and elſewhere, friendly exhorted him to revoke his opinion, to ſpare his young yeers, wit, and learning. If thou wilt be conformable, and ſhew thy ſelfe corrigible and repentant, in good faith (ſaid he) I promiſe thee before this companie, I will give thee meate and drinke, and bookes, and ten pound yeerely, ſo long as thou wilt dwell with me. And if thou wilt ſet thy mind to marriage, I will procure thee a wife and a farme, and helpe to ſtuffe and fit thy farme for thee.

Sir Richard Abridges gentle offer to Palmer.

How ſayſt thou?

Palmer thanked him very courteouſly, and made him further anſwer concerning his religion ſomewhat at large, but very modeſtly and reverently, concluding in the end, that as he had already in two placed renounced his living for Chriſts ſake, ſo he would with Gods grace be ready to ſurrender and yeeld up his life alſo for the ſame, when God ſhould ſend time.

Palmer refuſed worldly offers to keepe his conſcience.

When Sir Richard perceived that he would by no meanes relent: Well Palmer (ſaith he) then I perceive one of us twaine ſhall be damned. For we be of two faiths, and certane I am that there is but one faith that leadeth to life and ſalvation.

Palm. O ſir, I hope that we both ſhall be ſaved.

Sir Richard. How may that be.

Palm. Right well ſir. For as it hath pleaſed our mercifull Saviour, according to the Goſpels Parable, to call me at the third houre of the day, even in my flowers, at the age of foure and twenty yeers, even ſo I truſt he hath called, and will call you at the eleventh houre of this your old age, and give you everlaſting life for your portion.

Sir Rich. Sayeſt thou ſo? Well Palmer well, I would I might have thee but one moneth in my houſe, I doubt not but I would convert thee, or thou ſhouldeſt convert me.

Then ſaid M. Winchcome, take pitie on thy golden yéers, and pleaſant flowers of luſty youth, before it be too late.

Palm. Sir, I long for thoſe ſpringing flowers, that ſhall never vade away.

Winchcom. If thou be at that point, I have done with thée.

John Guin, Thomas Askin, Martyrs, condemned. Sir Richard Abridges, Sheriffe.

Then was Palmer commanded againe to the blinde houſe, but the other two ſilly men were led againe the ſame afternoone to the Conſiſtorie, and there were condemned, and delivered to the ſecular power of the Sheriffe there preſent, by name Sir Richard Abridges.

It is reported alſo, that Doctor Jeffrey offered Palmer a good living if he would outwardly ſhew himſelfe conformable, kéeping his conſcience ſecret to himſelfe, or at leaſt declare that he doubted which was the trueſt doctrine. But I cannot affirme it for a ſuretie.

Palmer required to ſet his hand to his articles.

The next morning the 16. of July, Palmer was required to ſubſcribe to certaine articles, which they had drawn out, touching the cauſe of his condemnation: In the Front whereof, were heapt together many heinous termes, as horrible, hereticall, damnable, divelliſh, and execrable doctrine. To theſe words Palmer refuſed to ſubſcribe, affirming that the doctrine which he profeſſed, was not ſuch, but good and ſound doctrine.

Ieffrey. Ye may ſée good people what ſhifts theſe heretikes ſéek, to eſcape burning, when they ſee juſtice miniſtred unto them. But I tell thee, this ſtyle is agréeable to the law, and therefore I cannot alter it.

Palm. Then I cannot ſubſcribe to it.

Ieffrey. Wilt thou then crave mercie, if thou like not juſtice, and revoke thy hereſie?

Palmer. I forſake the Pope, and his Popelings, with all Popiſh hereſie.

Ieffrey. Then ſubſcribe to the articles.

Palmer. Alter the Epithetons, and I will ſubſcribe.

Ieffrey. Subſcribe, and qualifie the matter with thine owne Pen. So he ſubſcribed. Whereupon Doctor Jeffrey procéeded to reade the Popiſh ſentence of his cruell condemnation, and ſo was he delivered to the charge of the ſecular power, and was burned the ſame day in the afternoone, about five of the clock.

The Popiſh ſentence read againſt Palmer.

Palmer comforteth his two fellow martyrs going to their death.

Within one houre before they went to the place of execution, Palmer in the preſence of many people, comforted his fellowes with theſe words. Brethren (ſaith he) be of good cheere in the Lord, and faint not. Remember the words of our Saviour Chriſt, where he ſaith, Happy are you when men revile you and perſecute you for righteouſneſſe ſake. Rejoyce and be glad, for great is your reward in heaven. Feare not them that can the body, and bee not able to touch the ſoule. God is faithfull, and will not ſuffer us to be tempted further then we ſhall be able to beare it. We ſhall not end our lives in the fire, but make a change for a better life. Yea for coales, we ſhall receive pearles. For Gods holy ſpirit certifieth our ſpirit, that he hath even now prepared for us a ſweete ſupper in heaven for his ſake which ſuffered firſt for us.

Palmer, Guin, Askine, brought to the place of ſlaughter.

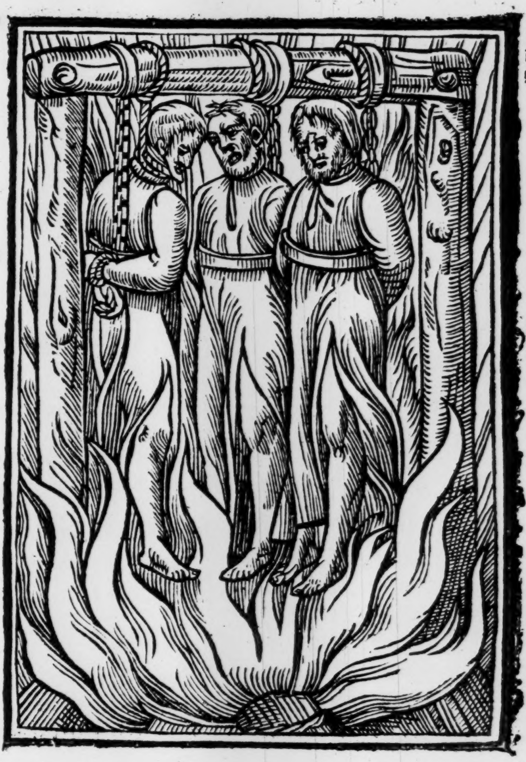
With theſe and ſuch like words, he did not only comfort the hearts of his ſilly brethren that were with him appointed as ſhéepe to be ſlaine, but alſo wreſted out plentifull teares from the eies of many that heard him. And as they were ſinging a Pſalme, came the Sheriffe Sir Richard Abridges and the Bayliffes of the towne, with a great company of harneſſed and weaponed men to conduct them to the fire. When they were come to the place where they ſhould ſuffer, they fell all thrée to the ground, and Palmer with an audible voyce pronounced the 31. Pſalme, but the other two made their prayers ſecretly to Almightie God.

The words of Palmer to the popiſh prieſts.

And as Palmer began to ariſe, there came behinde him two Popiſh Prieſts, exhorting him yet to recant and ſave his ſoule. Palmer anſwered and ſaid, Away, away, tempt me no longer. Away I ſay from me all ye that worke iniquitie: for the Lord hath heard the voyce of my teares. And ſo forthwith they put off their raiment, and went to the ſtake, and kiſſed it. And when they were bound to the poſt, Palmer ſaid, Good people pray for us, that we may perſevere to the end. And for Chriſts ſake beware of Popiſh teachers, for they deceive you.

The words of theſe martyrs at their death.

As he ſpake this, a ſervant of one of the Bayliffes, threw a fagot at his face, that the blood guſhed out in divers places. For the which fact the Sheriffe reviled him, calling him cruell tormentor, and with his walking ſtaffe brake his head, that the bloud likewiſe ranne about his eares. When the fire was kindled, and began to take hold upon their bodies, they lifted up their hands towards heaven, and quietly and chéerfully, as though they had felt no ſmart, they cried; Lord Jeſus ſtrengthen us, Lord Jeſus aſſiſt us, Lord Jeſus receive our ſoules. And ſo they continued without any ſtrugling, holding up their hands, and knocking their hearts, and calling upon Jeſus untill they had ended their mortall lives.



The martyrdome of the 3. godly Saints.

A notable ſpectacle in the martyrdome of Julius Palmer.

Among other things this is alſo to be noted, that after their thrée heads by force of the raging and devouring flames of fire, were fallen together in a plumpe or cluſter, which was marvellous to behold, and that they all were judged already to have given up the Ghoſt, ſuddenly Palmer, as a man waked out of ſleepe, moved his tongue and jawes, & was heard to pronounce this word Ieſus. So, being reſolved into aſhes, he yeelded to God as joyfull a ſoule (confirmed with the ſweet promiſes of Chriſt) as any one that ever was called beſide to ſuffer for his bleſſed name. God grant us all to be moved with the like ſpirit, working in our hearts conſtantly to ſtand in defence and confeſſion of Chriſts holy Goſpel, to the end, Amen.

A memorable ſtory of one Agnes Wardall in the towne of Ipſwich, purſued for the true faith of Chriſts Goſpel.

A notable ſtory of Agnes Wardall of Ipſwich.

D. Argentine ſchoole-maſter. Mat. Butler Conſtable. Philip Ulmes, Edm. Leach. Iohn Steward perſecutors.

ABout the ſaid moneth of Iuly, in this preſent yeer, 1556. there was one Rich. Argentine, Doctor of Phyſick, otherwiſe called Richard Sexten, with certain other dwelling in the town of Ipſwich, not many in number, but in heart and purpoſe mightily bent to impugne and impeach the growing of Chriſts Goſpel and the favourers of the ſame. In the number of whom were Philip Ulmes, Edmund Leach, Iohn Steward, and Mathew Butler Apothecarie, a curious ſinging man, a fine player of the Organs, a perfect Papiſt, and a diligent promoter of good men. This Butler being then Conſtable in the town of Ipſwich, as he was in the watch by night upon Cornhill, cometh to him Doctor Argentine in great haſte, giving him intelligence of one Agnes Wardall, being then lately come home to her houſe in Ipſwich. Whereupon immediately, ſuch a way was contrived betweene them, that the ſaid Agnes Wardall forthwith ſhould be apprehended: but God, in whoſe providence the direction of all things conſiſteth, by whoſe diſpoſition they have their operation, ſo graciouſly provided for his ſervant, and ſo prevented their malignant devices, that they came to no great effect in working, although on the contrarie part there wanted no good will, as here conſequently you ſhall further underſtand.

This Agnes Wardall was a woman that lived in Gods fear, and was at defiance with their Romiſh traſh, deſiring rather with hard fare and evill lodging to be abroad, then to be at home in her houſe, and among the tents of the ungodly: her huſband alſo being a man living in the fear of God, and for the teſtimonie of his conſcience being alſo hunted, by force of the law was conſtrained to avoid his houſe, and got into a craire with an honeſt man, ſerving as a Saylor, a facultie not of him before frequented, nor he a man nimble for that trade, becauſe God had given him an impediment by reaſon of a ſtumped foot, unfit to climbe to top and yard; yet ſo it pleaſed God to inable him with his ſtrength, that he was ſtrong and luſtie to do good ſervice, as they can well witneſſe that were of his company.

Rob. Wardall driven by perſecution to ſerve in a ſhip.

Agnes Wardall perſecuted by D. Argentine and his mates.

The ſaid Agnes Wardall chanced on a day to come home to ſee her poore houſe and children, which was under the guiding of a young maid, and being eſpied, news was borne to Doctor Argentine: who having knowledge thereof, as is aforeſaid, went ſpeedily unto the Apothecarie the Conſtable aforeſaid, and informed him what a notable cure was to be wrought on Wardals wife in the apprehending of her. Which was more like to ſpeed then miſſe, had not the mighty providence of God wrought contrary to their expectation.

This being known to the Conſtable, the watch was charged ſpeedily, and each company ſent to his place. And Argentine and Butler took unto them a good number, and forth they goe unto the houſe of this poore woman to lay hands upon her, and beſet the houſe on the foreſide and backſide, lying open in the fields, and otherſome were ſent to the houſe of his mother, which was not farre from his houſe. This done one knockt at the ſtreet doore where Argentine and Butler was, with one of their weapons, and no anſwer was made; the ſecond time ſomewhat harder, but had no anſwer. In the meane time they fearing that ſome conveyance was made, knocked the third time more hard then before.

Unmercifull ſeekers of a poore womans blood.

There was not farre from the doore where they knocked, a certaine bay window, where one might looke out and ſpeake: And ſo at the third knocking, a woman who at that time was tenant to R. Wardals mother, and had but two nights before lyen in the houſe, ſpeaking out hard by their eares, asked who was there?

Ah ſirrah, quoth Argentine, are you ſo nigh and will not ſpeake? How fortuned it that ye ſpake not at the firſt, being ſo nigh? How fortuned it, quoth the woman? Marie I ſhall tell you; I am but a ſtranger here, and I have heard ſay, that there be ſpirits walking here about, which if a man do anſwer at the firſt call or ſecond, he ſtands in great danger, and I was never ſo affraid of my life. At this her anſwer they laughed, and commanded her to open the doore in the Queenes name, for they were the Queenes watch.

The Lord bleſſe every good man and woman from ſuch wicked ſpirits.

Agnes Wardall being at that time in bed in an inner chamber, having her maide with her, and her two children, ſhe being at that time very heavy aſleepe, heard not the knocking. Her maide hearing at the ſecond knock, called and ſhogged her dame, and with much adoe awaked her, and ſaid, The watch is at the doore. What? thou lyeſt, ſaid ſhe. Yes truly ſaid the maide, and hath knockt twice. With that ſhe aroſe with all ſpeed, and put on her clothes very ſlightly, and tooke with her a buckeram apron, which afterward ſhe caſt on her head, when ſhe was faine to creep in a ditch with nettles, and ſo paſſed down into a parlour, wherein ſtood a cupbord with a faire preſſe, into the which the maide did locke her.

He ſleepeth not nor ſlumbreth not that keepeth Iſrael. Pſal. 121.

Agnes Wardall hideth her ſelfe in a preſſe from the hands of her perſecutors.

And immediately went up to a chamber which was hard by the ſtreet, where ſhe might ſee & ſpeak to the Watch, & ſaid, Who is there? Then they bade her open the doore. And ſhe ſaid, We have no candle. And they ſaid, Open the doore, or we will lay it on the floore. With that ſhe came downe and opened the doore. Then asked they the maide, who is within? And ſhe ſaid, none but a woman that dwelleth within us, & two childrē. Then ſaid they, where is thy dame? Truly ſaid ſhe I cannot tell, ſhe is not within. She was here in the evening, ſaid they. Yea, ſaid the maide, but ſhe went forth I know not whither. Notwithſtanding they charged her that ſhe knew where ſhe was, which ſhe denied. Thē got they a candle light at one of the neighbors houſes, and came in, and in the entry met the woman which had anſwered them at the window, and ſaid ſhe was affraid of ſprites. Argentine looking upon her, clapt her on the back, and ſaid, Thou art not the woman whom we ſeeke for.

Example of a faithfull maide to her miſtres.

The houſe ſearched for Agnes Wardall.

So entred they the houſe, and ſearched a Parlour next the ſtreete where the woman lay which was his mothers tenant, and a young childe that ſucked on her breaſt, and not onely in the bed, turning it downe paſt all honeſt humanitie, but alſo under the bed behinde the painted clothes, and in the chimney, and up into the chimney, and finding the bed hot, ſaid, Who lay here in the bed? The woman ſaid, I and the childe. And none elſe, quoth they? No ſaid the woman. When they could finde nothing there for their purpoſe, from thence they went into an inner parlour, in the which ſtood the cupbord wherein ſhe was, and ſearched the parlour which was but a little one. And one of the company, laying his hand on the cupbord, ſaid, This is a faire cupbord, ſhe may be here for any thing that is done. That is true ſaith another of them. Notwithſtanding, they looked no further, but went from that into the chamber aloft, wherein the ſaid Agnes had lyen with her mayde and children, with all other roomes and chambers.

Gods marvellous protection working for his ſervant.

At length they came downe into the yard, where they found a horſe tied at a pale eating of ſhorne graſſe. Then aſked they the maid, whoſe horſe is this? She anſwered, it is her horſe indeed, and ſhe came in before night, & went abroad again, but I know not whither. Then were they in good hope to finde their prey, and beſtirred them with ſpeed, and went into an out chamber that was in the yard, in which was a boy in bed of 13. or 14. yeeres old. And being in his dead ſleepe, they ſuddenly awaked him, and examined him for his dame. Who anſwered, he knew not where ſhe was, and unto that ſtood firmely, although their threats were vehement, not only to the poore ſilly boy, but alſo to the good ſimple plain maide. Then cauſed they him to ariſe and dreſſe him, and ſent both maide and boy up to the cage, where they put the maide, but kept the boy among their truſtie ſouldiers, ſo that one of them ſhould not ſpeake with another.

Agnes Wardall in danger to be ſmothered.

Now while ſome were on the Cornehill, and other ſome ſearching the neighbours houſes and backſides, the wife of Wardall being in the preſſe faſt locked up, and almoſt ſmoothered for want of breath, deſired the woman her mothers tenant, when ſhe heard her in the Parlour, to let her out. She asked her where the keyes were, who anſwered they were in a hamper, which ſhe found, and aſſayed to unlock the preſſe, and of a long time could not. Then deſired ſhe her to break it open; for (ſaid ſhe) I had rather fall into their hands, then to kill my ſelfe. Then went her mothers tenant and ſought for her husbands hammer and chiſell, to breake it open, but could not finde it, nor any thing elſe to breake it open withall, and came again and told her ſhe could finde nothing to break it open with.

Gods mercifull helpe in the time of need.

Then ſaid ſhe, aſſay againe to open it, for I truſt God will give you power to open it. And being within in much extremitie, ſhe heartily prayed unto God, who heard her prayer and helped her: for at the firſt aſſay and turne of the key, it opened eaſily. When ſhe came out, ſhe looked as pale and as bleak, as one that were laid out dead by the wals, and as ſhe her ſelfe looked afterward when ſhe was dead, as the ſame woman reported, which then let her out, and was alſo at her death long after in the Queenes Maieſties reigne that now is, and all on a vehement ſweat was ſhe like drops of raine.

Then went ſhe out into the backſide, where was a pale toward the fields for the defence of the garden, wherein was one or two looſe pales, by the which both ſhe and her huſband had divers times uſed to come and goe in and out, ſo went ſhe out into the fields. And paſſing one little field, and over a ſtyle, ſhrouded her ſelfe in a low ditch with nettles, and covered her head with the buckeram apron afore mentioned, & ſo crept low, and lay in the ditch. After long ſearch when they could not finde her in the towne, certaine of the watch returned again into the fields ſide; among whom was one George Manning, with John Bate the Crier of the ſame town coming together. This Manning was a ſimple honeſt plaine man, but Bate a very enemy, and one that in Queene Maries time would have been a Prieſt as it was reported, but that he was married.

Manning eſpying where ſhe lay, gave a hemme, and made a noiſe with his bill, he being before Bate; at the which ſhe lay ſtill, and at the laſt they departed to the ſtreet ſide to the Conſtable. Al this time the maide was in the Cage, and the boy with the other of the watch untill perfect daylight. Then went they up, and let out the maide, and ſent her home, and the boy alſo; but they made the maide beleeve they had found her dame. Who anſwered, if ye have her, keep her faſt.

Another eſcape of Agnes Wardall, by Gods good providence.

On the morrow, Manning ſent her word to beware that ſhe ſhould hide her ſelfe no more ſo neer.

George Manning an honeſt man.

Thus by the might and power of God was his faithfull ſervant delivered from their cruelty, and they knowne to be his adverſaries, not onely at that time, but divers times after and before. Notwithſtanding, the ſaid Argentine, at his firſt coming to Ipſwich, came in a ſervingmans coat. And then being in the daies of K. Henrie the Eighth, he would accuſtomably uſe the reading of Lectures himſelfe, in the which he was well commended at that time. After obtained the office of Uſher of the free Grammer ſchoole, and the Maſter being dead, got to be Maſter himſelfe. And being married to a very honeſt woman, remained there the daies of King Edward. And when God tooke him from us for our juſt deſerved plague, and Queene Marie came to her reigne, none more hote in all Papiſtrie and ſuperſtition then he, painting the poſtes of the towne with Vivat Regina Maria, and in every corner.

The doings and conditions of Argentine deſcribed.

D. Argentine in K. Edwards time a Proteſtant.

D. Argentine in Q. Maries time a foule Papiſt and a perſecutor.

Furthermore, after the death of his wife (which was an honeſt woman) he was made a Prieſt; taking upon him divers times to preach (but never without his white minerver hoode) ſuch doctrine as was ſhamefull to heare, ſaying Maſſe, and carrying about the pixe in high poſſeſſions. Furthermore, leading the boy S. Nicholas with his minerver hood about the ſtreets for apples and belly cheer. And who ſo would not receive him, he made them heretikes, and ſuch alſo as would not give his fagot to the Bonfire for Queen Maries child. And thus continued he at Ipſwich the moſt part of Queene Maries daies, moleſting their good men, ſome for not going to the Church, ſome for not being confeſſed, ſome for not receiving, &c. till at length, toward the end of Queen Mary he came to London, and in this Queens time began to ſhew himſelfe againe a perfect Proteſtant. And thus much of Argentine. Ex teſtimon. Petri Moonæi.

The trouble of Peter Moone and his wife, and of other godly Proteſtants at Biſhop Hoptons viſitation in Ipſwich.

In the yeere of our Lord God, 1556. the ſceans or viſitation being kept before Whitſontide in the towne of Ipſwich in Suffolke, by D. Hopton being then Biſhop of Norwich, and Myles Dunnings, being then his Chancellor, divers and ſundry godly Proteſtants, through the accuſation of evill men, were ſore troubled and preſented before him: among whom were accuſed one Peter Moone a Taylor, and Anne his wife, for their diſobedience to the Law, in not ſhewing their readineſſe to come to the Church, and to be partakers of ſuch Romiſh obſervances as at that time were uſed.

Peter Moone accuſed to B. Hopton.

And firſt the ſaid Peter Moon was commanded to come before the biſhop, where he was examined

3. Articles obiected to Peter Moone.

of thrée ſundrie articles, to wit: 1. Whether the Pope were ſupreme head: 2. Whether King Philip and Queene Marie were right inheritors to the crowne: 3. And whether in the ſacrament of the altar was the very body of Chriſt ſubſtantially and really there preſent.

Peter Moone granteth to the biſhops articles through infirmitie.

Unto the which the ſaid Peter being timorous and weake, fearing more the face of man then the heavie wrath of God, affirmed, and in manner granted unto their demands. Whereupon the Biſhop being in good hope, that although he had not come to the Church, nor received the ſacrament of the altar, nor beene ready to doe his dutie as the law had commanded; yet there ſhewing his minde, ſaid, that he liked well the man: for ſuch as have been (ſaid he) earneſt in evill things, will alſo be earneſt in that that is good and godly, if once they be wonne.

Thus as this ſpirituall father was commending his carnall childe, and rather preferring him to hell fire, then unto the ſincere word and commandements of God, it chanced amongſt many others in the chamber, was one of the Portmen of the ſame towne, named Smart, and earneſt member of their Romiſh Law, doing of a very conſcience that he did, who after the death of Quéene Marie lived not many yeers, but rendred his life, in godly repentance, proteſting, that if God ſhould ſuffer him to live, he would never be the man he had beene before, what lawes ſoever ſhould come againe: ſo that before the time of his ſickneſſe he frequenting earneſtly the Sermons in the ſame town, made by divers godly learned men, would weepe as it had beene a childe, being notwithſtanding of courage as ſtout a man as any was in Ipſwich. Such is the marvellous mercie of God, in calling to his kingdome, whom, and when he pleaſeth.

Commendation of Smart of Ipſwich. Richard Smart of Ipſwich repenteth his popery at his death.

This Portman aforeſaid, perceiving the Biſhop thus, as it were, at an end with the ſaid Moone, and ſo he like to be diſcharged, ſaid unto the Biſhop; My Lord, indéed I have a good hope in the man, and that he will be conformable: but my Lord, he hath a perillous woman to his wife. For I will tell you my Lord, ſhe never came to Church yet, ſince the Queenes reigne, except it were at Evenſong, or when ſhe was churched. And not then untill Maſſe were done. Wherefore your good Lordſhip might doe a good deed to cauſe her to come before you, and to ſee if you could doe any good. And therefore I beſeech your good Lordſhip to command him to pray her to come before your Lordſhip.

Smart accuſeth Moones wife.

At which words Moone was ſomewhat ſtirred, in that he ſaid command him to pray her to come before your Lordſhip. And he ſaid unto him, under my Lords correction I ſpeake, I am as able to command her to come before my Lord, as ye are to command the worſt boy in your houſe. Yea my Lord, ſaid the other, I cry your Lordſhip mercie; I have informed your Lordſhip with an untruth, if this be ſo. But if he be ſo able as he ſaith, he might have commanded her to have come to Church in all this time, if it had pleaſed him. Wel ſaid the Biſhop, look you come before me at afternoone, and bring your wife with you; I will talke with her.

Peter Moone commanded to bring his wife before the Biſhop.

As my Lords dinner at that time was ſerving up, Moone departed and tarried not to take part thereof, having ſuch an hard breakfaſt given him before to digeſt. At afternoone Moone delayed and waited his time, bethinking when he might moſt coveniently come, eſpecially when his accuſer and his wives ſhould not have beene there. And according to the commandement came with his wife; which was not ſo ſecretly done, but his accuſer had knowledge thereof, and came with all expedition in ſuch poſt ſpeede, that in manner he was windeleſſe entering into the Biſhops chamber.

Moone and his wife brought before the Biſhop.

The Biſhop hearing that Moone and his wife were come, called for them, and ſaid to Moone; Is this your wife, Moone? Yea, my Lord, ſaid he. O good Lord (ſaid the Biſhop) how a man may be deceived in a woman. I promiſe you a man would take her for as honeſt a woman, by all outward appearance, as can be. Why, my Lord, ſaid Moons wife, I truſt there is none that can charge me with any diſhoneſty, as concerning my body; I defie all the world in that reſpect.

B. Hopton preferreth 20. men committing adultery, before one woman tranſgreſſing the Popes ordinances.

Nay (quoth the Biſhop) I meant not as concerning the diſhoneſtie of thy body: but thou hadſt been better to have given the uſe of thy body unto twentie ſundry men, then to do as thou haſt done. For thou haſt done as much as in thee lyeth, to pluck the King and the Queenes Majeſties out of their royall ſeates through thy diſobedience, in ſhewing thy ſelfe an open enemy unto Gods laws, and their proceedings.

Then began the Biſhop to examine the ſaid Moone againe, with the aforeſaid articles, and his wife alſo. And ſhe hearing her husband relent, did alſo affirme the ſame, which turned unto either of them to no ſmall trouble of minde afterward, but yet neither were they like thus to eſcape, but that in the mean time Dunning the Biſhops chancellor came up in great haſte, and brought newes to the Biſhop, that there were ſuch a number of heretikes come, of which ſome came from Boxford, ſome from Lanham, and about from the cloth countrey, that it would make a man out of his wits to heare them: and there are among them both heretikes, and Anabaptiſts, ſaid he. And thus Doctor Dunning with his bluſtering words interrupting Moones examination, went down againe as the Devill had driven him, to kéep his ſtirre among them, and to take order what ſhould be done with them.

The Biſhop beginning to bewaile the ſtate of the countrey, in that it was ſo infected with ſuch a number of heretikes, and rehearſing partly their opinions to theſe that were at that time in the chamber, Moones wife had a young childe, which ſhe her ſelfe nurſed, and the childe being brought into the yard under the Biſhops chamber, cried, ſo that ſhe heard it, and then ſaid; My Lord, I truſt ye have done with me. My childe crieth beneath, I muſt goe give my childe ſuck, with ſuch like words. And the Biſhop being (as it were) out of minde to talke with them any more, ſaid; Goe your way, I will talke with you in the morning; look ye be here againe in the morning: with this they both departed.

Moones childe a part of Gods providence in their deliverance from further trouble.

And beneath in the ſtone Hall of the ſame houſe, the Chancellor Dunning being very buſie about his bloudie buſineſſe, eſpyed Moone and his wife coming, and muſt néeds paſſe by the place where he ſtood, and ſaid: Nay ſoft, I muſt talke with you both; for ye are as evill as any that are here to day. To whom Moones wife anſwered; My Lord hath had us in examination, and therefore ye ſhall have nought to doe with us. Nay, quoth he, ye ſhall not ſo eſcape, I muſt talke with you alſo. Unto whom Moone anſwered; In the preſence of the more, the leſſe hath no power: My Lord hath taken order with us, and therefore we are as his Lordſhip hath appointed, and muſt repaire before him againe to morrow. At the which he let them goe, although he was earneſtly procured by the partie above ſpecified to have ſhewed his qualitie, which was nothing elſe but tyrannie.

Moons anſwer to the Biſhops Chancellor.

Moone and his wife eſcaped from the biſhop and his Chancellor.

Moone and his wife confounded in conſcience for their deniall.

So departed Moone and his wife without hurt of bodie: but afterward when they with Peter the Apoſtle beheld the face of Chriſt, they were ſore wounded in their conſciences, aſhamed of their doings, and alſo at the doore of deſperation. Inſomuch, that when the ſaid Moone came home to his houſe, and entering into a parlour alone by himſelf, conſidering his eſtate, and ſeeing where a ſword of his did hang againſt a wall, he was earneſtly allured by the enemie Satan to have taken it down, and therewith to have ſlain himſelf: but God, who caſteth not away the penitent ſinner repenting his fall with heart, defended his unworthie ſervant from that temptation, and hath (I truſt) left him to the amendment of life by the aſſiſtance of his holy Spirit, and to make him one among the elect that ſhall be ſaved.

Moone ſeeketh to kill himſelf, but by Gods mercifull providence was preſerved.

The morrow they both remained and kept houſe with no ſmall griefe of conſcience, waiting and looking with feare, when to be ſent for to the Biſhop, rather then offering their diligence to keep the Biſhops appointment: but GOD ſo wrought, that when the time drew neer that they feared calling forth, the bels rung for the Biſhops departure out of the towne. For the which they were not onely glad, but alſo many a good heart in Ipſwich rejoyced and gave thanks to GOD. God for his mercie grant, that our ſin never deſerve to provoke Gods ire, that the like dayes come again. And if it ſo do, GOD make them, with all other weaklings, ſtrong and worthy ſouldiers to encounter with the ghoſtly enemies, the world, the fleſh, and the devill; and boldly to ſtand to the confeſſion of Chriſt, and of his Goſpel, ſaying with the Apoſtles; Whether it be right in the ſight of God, that we ſhould obey you more then God, judge ye.

Gods providence in ſending away the biſhop.

Teſtified and recorded by Peter Moone.

¶ A tragicall, lamentable, and pitifull hiſtorie, full of moſt cruell and tyrannicall murther, done by the pretenſed Catholiques, upon three women and an Infant; to wit, the mother, her two daughters, and the childe, in the Iſle of Garnſey, for Chriſts true religion, the yeer of our Lord, 1556. July 18.

The martyrdome of three women with a young infant, burned in the Iſle of Garnſey. July 18.

AMongſt all and ſingular Hiſtories touched in this book before, as there be many pitiful, divers lamentable, ſome horrible and tragicall; ſo is there none almoſt either in crueltie to be compared, or ſo far off from all compaſſion and ſenſe of humanitie, as this mercileſſe fact of the Papiſts, done in the Iſle of Garnſey, upon three women and an Infant, whoſe names be theſe as follow:

Katherine Cawches, the mother.
Guillemine Gilbert, the daughter.
Perotine Maſſey, the other daughter.
An Infant, the ſon of Perotine.

But before I come to the purpoſe of this ſtorie, it ſhall be neceſſarie, for the better explaining of the matter, to begin firſt with the circumſtances, whereupon the firſt originall and occaſion did riſe of this tragicall crueltie, the caſe was this:

The 17. day of May, Anno 1556. in the Iſle of Garnſey, which is a member of England, in a town there called S. Peters Port, was a naughty woman named Vincent Goſſet, who being evill diſpoſed, (went the day aforeſaid) to the houſe of one Nicholas le Conronney, dwelling in the town of the ſaid St. Peters Port, about ten of the clock at night, and there taking the key of the houſe (lying under the doore) entred into a chamber toward the ſtreet, where ſhe eſpying a cup of ſilver within a cubboord, took it away, and ſo conveighed her ſelf out of the houſe again. Who immediately after this fact done (whether by counſell or by what occaſion elſe I have not to ſay) brought the ſaid cup to one Perotine Maſſey, an honeſt woman dwelling in the ſaid town, deſiring her to lend her 6. d. upon the ſame.

The firſt occaſion of the trouble of theſe women.

Perotine ſeeing the cup or goblet, and ſuſpecting (as truth was) the ſame to be ſtollen, anſwered, that ſhe would not take it: yet nevertheleſſe having knowledge of the owner thereof, took it to reſtore it again to whom it did appertain; and to the end ſhe ſhould not carry it to another, gave her then preſently 6. d. Where moreover is to be noted, that Thomas Effart ſaith and teſtifieth, that knowledge was given by the ſaid Perotine to Conronney touching the ſtealing of this peece, who eftſoons upon the miſliking thereof attached the ſaid Vincent Goſſet of the treſpaſſe. Who being apprehended and examined upon the ſame, immediately confeſſed the fact, deſiring to have one ſent with her (which was Collas de Lontre) with 6. d. to fetch again the goblet, where it was; and ſo did.

The next day following, the Kings Officers being informed of the premiſſes by one Nicholas Cary, of the ſaid town, Conſtable, aſſembled the Juſtices there to inquire and examine further, as wel upon the fact of Vincent Goſſet, as upon other griefs and things there amiſſe. So that after declaration made by the Officers and Conſtable before the Juſtice, for that the ſaid Conſtable did report to have found a certain veſſell of Pewter in the houſe of the foreſaid Perotine Maſſey (who then dwelt with her mother Katherine Cawches, and her ſiſter Guillemine Gilbert) the which veſſell did bear no mark, and eſpecially for that there was a Pewter diſh, whereof the name was ſcraped out, their bodies upon the ſame were attached, and put in priſon, and their moveable goods taken by inventorie. Within a few dayes after theſe things thus done and paſt, theſe three ſilly women, abiding thus in durance in the Caſtle, made their ſupplication to the Juſtices to have juſtice miniſtred unto them, viz. If they had offended the law, then to let them have the law; if not, beſeeching to grant them the benefit of ſubjects, &c. Which ſupplication put up, thereupon they were appointed to come to their anſwer the fifth day of June, in the yeer aforeſaid. Upon which day, after ſtrait examining of the matter, and the honeſt anſwering of the cauſe by the ſaid good woman, at the laſt they ſubmitted them to the report of their neighbours, that they were no theeves, nor evill diſpoſed perſons, but lived truly and honeſtly, as became chriſtian women to do, the falſe and untrue report of their accuſers notwithſtanding.

Nicholas Cary Conſtable, accuſer.

Katherine with her two daughters impriſoned in the Caſtle.

Katherine with her two daughters ſtand to the judgement of their neighbours.

So the cauſe being thus debated, after the inquirie made by the Kings Officers, they were found by the ſaid neighbours not guiltie of that they were charged with, but had lived allwayes as honeſt women among them; ſaving onely that to the commandements of holy Church they had not been obedient, &c. Upon this triall and verdict of their neighbors, it was in fine adjudged, firſt that the ſaid Vincent Goſſet, being attainted of Felonie, and condemned for the ſame, ſhould be whipped, add after her eare being nailed to the pillorie, ſhould ſo be baniſhed out of the Iſle without further puniſhment. And as touching the other three women, the mother with her two daughters, for their not coming to the Church, they were returned priſoners again into the Caſtle the firſt of July. And thus far concerning the true diſcourſe of this matter, with all the circumſtances and appurtenance of the ſame in everie point as the caſe ſtood, according to the faithfull tenor and teſtimonie of the Garnſey men, written with their own hands both in the French and Engliſh tongue. Wherein you ſee what falſe ſurmiſed matter was pretended againſt theſe women, and nothing proved, and how by the atteſtation of their neighbours they were fully cleered of the fact, and ſhould by the temporall Court have been diſmiſſed, had not the ſpirituall Clergie men, picked matter of religion againſt them, exerciſed ſuch extremitie in perſecuting theſe miſerable priſoners, that in no caſe they ſhould eſcape their bloodie hands, till at length they had brought them (as you ſhall hear) to their finall end. For after the time of this declaration above mentioned made by the neighbours, whereby they were purged of all other things, and being then known of their not coming to the Church, the Bayliffes Lieutenant and the Juſtice thinking the matter not to pertain to them, but to the Clergie, forthwith wrote their letters or Mandate under their ſignets to the Deane, whoſe name was Jaques Amy, and Curates of the ſaid Iſle: The contents whereof here followeth.

Jaques Amy Dean of Garnſey, perſecutor.

A letter ſent from the Bayliffes Lieutenant, and Iurates of St. Peters Port, to the Deane and Curates of the Iſle of Garnſey.

A letter of the Bayliffe to the Deane of Garnſey.

MAſter Deane and Iuſtices in your Court and juriſdiction, after all amiable recommendations, pleaſeth you to know that we are informed by the diſpoſition of certain honeſt men, paſt before us in manner of an inquiry; in the which inquirie Katherine Cawches and her two daughters have ſubmitted themſelves in a certain matter criminall: Wherein we be informed that they have been diſobedient to the commandements and ordinances of the Church, in contemning and forſaking the Maſſe, and the ordinances of the ſame, againſt the will and commandement of our Soveraigne Lord the King and the Queene. Whereof we ſend you the ſaid matter, foraſmuch as the matter is ſpirituall, to the end you may proceed therein after your good diſcretions, and as briefly as you can poſſible, and alſo that it pertained to your office, recommending you to God, the which give you grace to do that which pertaineth to right and juſtice. Written the firſt day of the moneth of Iuly, the yeer of our Lord, 1556.

¶ After theſe letters, and information thus addreſſed to Jaques Amy Dean, and to other of the Clergie, the ſaid women were again convented before the Juſtice aforeſaid with his aſſiſtants. In the preſence of whom they being examined of their faith, concerning the ordinances of the Romiſh Church, made their anſwer that they would obey and keep the ordinances of the King and Queene, and the commandements of the Church; notwithſtanding that they had ſaid and done the contrarie in the time of King Edward the ſixth, in ſhewing obedience to his ordinances and commandments before. After which anſwer take͂, they were returned again to priſon, untill the other had an anſwer of their letter from the Deane and his complices. During which time, the Deane and Curate gave their information touching the ſaid women, and delivered the ſame to the Bayliffe and Jurates, condemning and reputing them for heretiques, the women neither hearing of any information, neither yet being ever examined at any time before of their faith and religion. Whereupon when the ſaid Bayliffe and Jurates underſtood that the ſaid Deane and Curates had not examined the women of their faith, they would not ſit in judgement on that day, but ordained the women to come firſt before the Deane and Curates to be examined of their faith. And ſo the Officers, at the commandement of the Juſtices, did fetch and preſent them before the ſaid Deane and Curates. The which being accompliſhed and done, they were examined apart ſeverally one from another: After which examination, they incontinently were returned again into priſon.

Raſh information given, before the cauſe was heard.

Katherine Cawches, Perotine Maſſey, Guillemine Gilbert, examined before the Dean and his fellows.

Then the fourteenth day of the ſaid moneth of July, in the yeer aforeſaid, after the examination above ſpecified before Elyer Goſſelin Bayliffe, in the preſence of Thomas Devick, Pierres Martine, Nicholas Cary, John Blondel, Nicholas de Liſle, John Laverchaunt, John le Fever, Pierres Bonnamy, Nicholas Martine, John de la March, Jurates; Sir Jaques Amy Deane, and the Curates, did deliver before the Juſtice under the ſeale of the Deane, and under the ſignes of the Curates, a certain act and ſentence, the ſumme whereof was, that Katherine Cawches and her two daughters were found heretiques, and ſuch they reputed them, and have delivered them to Juſtice, to do execution according to the ſentence; of the which the tenor followeth.

The names of the perſecutors which ſat upon the death of the three women.

When this was done, commandement was given to the Kings Officers, to go to the Caſtle to fetch the ſaid women, to heare the ſentence againſt them in the preſence aforeſaid. And they appearing before them, ſaid in the eares of all the auditorie, that they would ſee their accuſers, and know them that have depoſed againſt them, becauſe they might make anſwers to their ſayings and perſonages, and to have their libell accordingly; for they knew not that they had offended the Majeſties of the King and Queene, nor of the Church, but intirely would obey, ſerve, and keep the ordinances of the King and Queen, and of the Church, as all good and true Subjects are bound to do. And for any breach of the King and Queens laws that they had done, they required juſtice. All which their reaſons and allegations notwithſtanding, the ſaid poore women were condemned, and adjudged to be burnt, untill they were conſumed unto aſhes, according to a ſentence given by Elyer Goſſelin Bayliffe: of the which ſentence the tenor hereafter followeth.

Q. MA-RIE.
Anno 1556.

The wilfull ſentence and murther of Elier Goſſelin Bailiffe, againſt the 3. innocent women in Garnſey.

¶ The effect of the ſentence in Engliſh.

THe 17. (or ſome other think the 27.) day of the moneth of Iuly, 1556. Elier Goſſelin Bayliffe in the preſence of Thomas Devick, Pierres Martine, Nicholas Cary, Iohn Bloundel, Nicholas Deviſe, Iohn le Marchaunt, Iohn le Feaver, Pierres Bonamy, Nicholas Martine, and Iohn de la March Iurates, Katherine Cawches, Perotine Maſſey, Guillemine Gilbert, the ſaid Perotine and Guillemine daughters to the ſaid Katherine, are all condemned and judged this day to be burned, untill they be conſumed to aſhes in the place accuſtomed, with the confiſcation of all their goods, moveables, and heritages, to be in the hands of the King and Queens Majeſties, according and after the effect of a ſentence delivered in juſtice by maſter Deane and the Curates, the 13. day of the moneth of Iuly, in the yeer aforeſaid, in the which they have been approved Heretiques.

The mother & two daughters made their appeal to the King and Queen, but could not be heard.

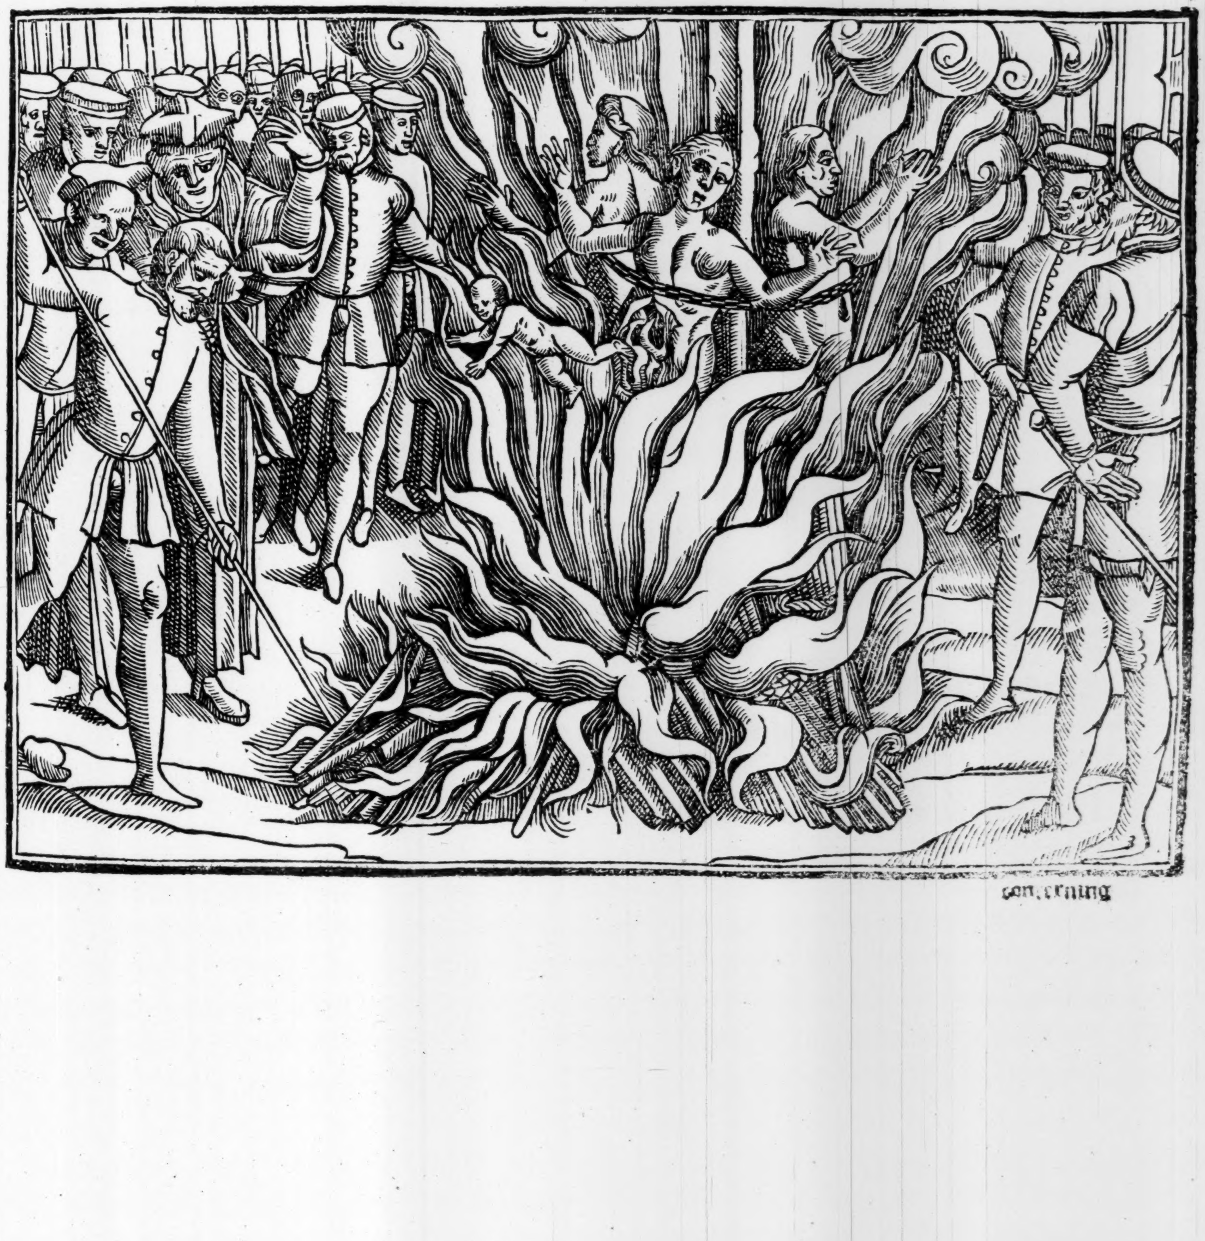
After which ſentence pronounced, the ſaid women did appeal unto the King and the Queen, and their honourable Councell, ſaying, that againſt reaſon and right they were condemned, and for that cauſe they made their appeal; notwithſtanding they could not be heard, but were delivered by the ſaid bayliffe to the King and Queens officers, to ſee the execution done on them according to the ſaid ſentence.

The time then being come, when theſe three good ſervants and holy Saints of God, the innocent mother with her two daughters ſhould ſuffer, in the place where they ſhould conſummate their martyrdome were three ſtakes ſet up. At the middle poſt was the mother, the eldeſt daughter on the right hand, the youngeſt on the other. They were firſt ſtrangled, but the Rope brake before they were dead, and ſo the poore women fell in the fire. Perotine, who was then great with child, did fall on her ſide, where happened a ruefull ſight, not onely to the eyes of all that there ſtood, but alſo to the eares of all true-hearted Chriſtians that ſhall read this hiſtorie. For as the belly of the woman braſt aſunder by the vehemencie of the flame, the Infant being a faire man-childe, fell into the fire, and eftſoones being taken out of the fire by one W. Houſe, was laid upon the graſſe.

Then was the childe had to the Provoſt, and from him to the Bayliffe, who gave cenſure that it ſhould be carried backe againe and caſt into the fire. And ſo the Infant baptized in his own blood, to fill up the number of Gods innocent Saints, was both born and died a Martyr, leaving behinde to the world, which it never ſaw, a ſpectacle wherein the whole world may ſee the Herodian crueltie of this graceleſſe generation of Catholique tormentors, Ad perpetuam rei infamiam.

Now forſomuch as this ſtorie percaſe, for the horrible ſtrangeneſſe of the fact, will be hardly beleeved of ſome, but rather thought to be forged, or elſe more amplified of me then truth will beare me out, therefore to diſcharge my credit herein, I have not onely foretold thee a little before, how I received this ſtorie by the faithfull relation both of the French and Engliſh, of them which were there preſent witneſſes, and lookers upon; but alſo have hereto annexed the true ſupplication of the ſaid inhabitants of Garnſey, and of the brother of the ſaid two ſiſters, complaining to the Queene and her Commiſſioners,

A lamentable ſpectacle of three women, with a ſilly Infant braſting out of the mothers wombe, being firſt taken out of the fire, and caſt in again, and ſo all burned together, in the Iſle of Garnſey, 1556. Iuly 18.



concerning the horribleneſſe of the act; which ſupplication, for the more evidence, here under followeth to be ſeen.

To the right honourable, and the Queens Highneſſe moſt gracious Commiſſioners, for the hearing and determining of matters of Religion and cauſes Eccleſiaſticall.

A ſupplication.

MOſt lamentably and wofully complaining, ſheweth unto your gracious and honourable Lordſhips, your poore and humble Orator Mathew Cawches, of the Iſle of Garnſey, that where Jaques Amy Clerk, Dean of the Iſle aforeſaid, aſſiſted by the Curates there, againſt all order, law, and reaſon, by colour of a ſentence of hereſie, pronounced againſt Katherine Cawches, the ſiſter of your Honours ſaid ſuppliant, and Perotine and Guillemine her two daughters, did cauſe the ſaid Katherine, being a poore widow, and her ſaid two daughters moſt cruelly to be burned, although the ſaid perſons, ne any of them, did hold, maintain, or defend any thing directly againſt the Eccleſiaſticall laws then in place, under the reign of the late Queen Marie, but in all things ſubmitted themſelves obediently to the laws then in force: and yet the crueltie of the ſaid Dean and his accomplices, in perpetrating ſuch murther as aforeſaid, raged ſo far, that whereas, whileſt the ſaid perſons did conſume with violent fire, the wombe of the ſaid Perotine being burned, there did iſſue from her a goodly man-childe, which by the Officers was taken up and handled, and after in a moſt deſpitefull manner thrown into the fire, and there alſo with the ſilly mother moſt cruelly burnt: In tender conſideration whereof, and forſomuch as this bloodie murther was not in due order of any law, or in any manner according to juſtice, but of meere malicious hatred, as the true copie of the whole proceedings in this matter, by the ſaid Dean and his accomplices, here readie to be ſhewed to your Honours, will make verie plain and manifeſt: It may therefore pleaſe your good and gracious Lordſhips, of the zeal that you bear to juſtice, and for our Lord Jeſus Chriſts ſake, to have due conſideration in juſtice of ſuch horrible murther, ſo cruelly committed as aforeſaid, according to the right demerit thereof. And that it may pleaſe your honourable Lordſhips to order and decree alſo, that all the goods of all the ſaid parties, by pretence aforeſaid wrongfully taken as confiſcate, may be delivered to your ſaid poore beſeecher, to whom of right they do belong. And your Honors ſaid Suppliant will daily pray to God for your long preſervation, to his glorie, and your everlaſting health.

This ſupplication being preſented in manner aforeſaid to the Queens honourable Commiſſioners, in the yeer 1562. ſuch order therein was taken, that the matter being returned again down to the ſaid countrey, further to be examined, the Dean thereupon was committed to priſon, and diſpoſſeſſed of all his livings. So that in concluſion, both he, and all other partakers of that bloody murther, whether of conſcience, or for fear of the law, were driven not long after to acknowledge their treſpaſſe, and to ſubmit themſelves to the Queens pardon. The tenor of whoſe ſeverall ſubmiſſions, as they are left in the Rolls, I thought here to publiſh to the world, for a memoriall of more truth of this ſtorie.

HElyer Goſſeline, of the Pariſh of St. Peter le port in Garnſey, Merchant, Nicholas Cary the elder, John Marchant, Peter Bonamy, of the Pariſh of Saint Martin, and Nicholas Martin, ſon of John, having humbly ſubmitted themſelves to the Queens moſt excellent Majeſtie, acknowledging their erroneous judgements, as well againſt Katherine Cawches, and Guillemine, and Perotine, her two daughters, and the Infant of the ſaid Perotine, executed by fire for ſuppoſed hereſie, as alſo for the acquitting of Nicholas Norman, a wilfull murtherer, and other matters contained in their ſeverall ſubmiſſions; pray the Queens Majeſties pardon for the ſaid crimes and others committed in their ſeverall ſubmiſſions.

John Blundel the elder, of the Pariſh of Saint Saviour, within the Iſle of Garnſey, upon like ſubmiſſion and acknowledging of his offence, prayeth like grace and pardon for his conſent given to the execution of the ſaid three women.

Richard Devicke, of the Pariſh of ſaint Peter le port, Merchant, prayeth like grace and pardon for his conſent and judgement given for the acquitting of the ſaid Norman, according to his ſupplication and ſubmiſſion late preſented by Peter Bonamy, the ſame Devicke, and Peter Pelley, of the Pariſh of Saint Peter le port, Merchants.

The ſaid Peter Pelley prayeth the benefit of the ſaid pardon to be extended unto him, according to his ſubmiſſion in the ſaid ſupplication.

Jaques Amy Clerk, prayeth the benefit of the ſaid pardon for his ſentence with the Clergies againſt the ſaid women, according to his ſubmiſſion.

Thomas Effart, of the Pariſh of Saint Peter le port, humbly prayeth, as procurour lawfully conſtituted by the Chapiter, Bayliffe and Jurates, that the ſame pardon may extend to acquite all the inhabitants of the ſaid Iſle, of the arrerages, &c.

¶ A defence of this Garnſey ſtory againſt M. Harding.

Defence of this Garnſey ſtorie againſt M. Harding.

AND thus have you the true narration of this hiſtorie, diſcourſed without corrupting or falſifying any part or ſentence thereof, no leſſe faithfully of my part reported, then I received of them, who dwelling in the ſame Iſle, and being preſent the ſame time, were beſt acquainted with the matter, and have given ſufficient evidence, not onely to me, but alſo to the Quæenes Highneſſe Commiſſioners, concerning the ſame, as both by the letter of the Bayliffe, by the ſentence of the Dean, by the ſupplication of the Plaintife, and ſubmiſſion of the parties, and likewiſe by the Quæenes pardon granted unto them, may well appeare.

By all which proofes and circumſtances thus debated, it remaineth manifeſt for all men to perceive, what crueltie and wrong was wrought againſt theſe poore women above ſpecified, and no leſſe matter offered, in a caſe ſo unjuſt, juſtly to expoſtulate, or rather to wonder at the hard hearts of theſe men, but eſpecially of the Catholique Clergie of Garnſey, who profeſſing the Goſpel of peace and charitie, ſhould after the example of Chriſt walk in the ſteps of mækneſſe and mercie, and yet contrarie, not onely to all chriſtian charitie and manſuetude, but alſo againſt all order of equitie or humanitie, were ſo extreme and rigorous, to condemne them to the burning fire, under the pretenſed colour of hereſie. Who if they had bæn heretiques indæd, yet mercie would have corrected the errour, and ſaved life; equitie would have conſidered mans weake fragilitie, at leaſt true juſtice would have heard both the parties adviſedly, and alſo ſubſtantially have ſurvaied the cauſe, and not have raſhed out the ſentence of death ſo haſtily as they did: yea, and though they had bæn heretiques indæd, yet true Chriſtian charitie would have ſtretched farther, and at leaſt have given them leaſure and reſpite of time to reclaime themſelves. But now what is here to be ſaid? they being no heretiques at all, as neither it could then, nor yet can be proved. For if King Edwards religion (which was objected to them) were hereſie, yet were they then no heretiques, when they revoked the ſame; and if Queen Maries religion were hereſie, then were they much more heretiques themſelves, which condemned them of hereſie.

The cruell dealing of the Garnſey men againſt theſe three women.

M. Harding in his Rejoynder againſt M. Jewel, pag. 184.

But moſt of all we have herein to wonder at maſter Harding, who in his late Rejoynder, written againſt the Biſhop of Saliſburie, notwithſtanding all theſe evidences and demonſtrations ſo certaine and manifeſtly appearing, yet goeth about firſt to denie the ſtorie, terming it to be a fable; and afterward being forced to flie à ſtatu inficiali, to admit the ſtorie, he removeth ad tranſlationem criminis; and there ſeeking by all means to cleere the Clergie from the ſpot of crueltie, transferreth the whole blame onely upon the women that ſuffered; but principally upon poore Perotine, whom he ſpecially charged with two capitall crimes: to wit, whoredome and murder.

Two crimes objected againſt Perotine Maſſey.

M. Harding in his Rejoynder, fol. 184. pag. 2.

And firſt, touching his accuſation of whoredome, let us heare how he proveth this matter. Becauſe (ſaith he) by ſtorie it is granted, that ſhe was with childe: and yet the Hiſtoriographer doth not declare (neither durſt for ſhame) who was her husband, or father to the childe, &c. As though that Hiſtoriographers, being occupied in ſetting forth the perſecution of Gods people, ſuffering death for religion and doctrine of Chriſt, were bound, or had nothing elſe to do but to play the Sumner, and to bring forth who were huſbands to the wives, and fathers to their children; which new found law of hiſtorie being never required before, nor obſerved of any ſtorie writers. If maſter Harding now ſhall exact of me, firſt let him begin with himſelf, and ſhew us (as wiſe as he is) who was his own father, if he can. And yet I thinke not contrarie, but his mother was an honeſt woman. And no leſſe alſo do I thinke of this of Perotine aforeſaid; whereof more ſhall be ſaid (God willing) hereafter.

Perotine untruly accuſed of whoredome.

But in the meane time here cometh in the cavilling objection of maſter Harding, who beareth the Reader in hand, as though for ſhame I durſt not, or of purpoſe would not expreſſe it, &c. My anſwer whereunto is this: Firſt, to expreſſe everie minute of matter in everie ſtorie occurrent, what ſtorie writer in all the world is able to performe it? Secondly, although it might be done, what reaſonable Reader would require it? Thirdly, albeit ſome curious Readers would ſo require, yet I ſuppoſe it neither requiſite, nor convenient to be obſerved. And fourthly, what if it were not remembred of the Author? What if it were to him not known? what if it were of purpoſe omitted, as a matter not materiall to the purpoſe? Many other cauſes beſides might incur, which the Reader knoweth not of. And ſhall it then by and by be imputed to ſhame and blame, whatſoever in everie narration is not expreſſed? or doth maſter Harding himſelfe in all his Sermons never pretermit any thing, that conveniently might be inferred? Who was the huſband of this Perotine the Hiſtoriographer hath not expreſſed; I grant: and what thereof? Ergo, thereupon concludeth he, that for ſhame I durſt not. Nay, I may marvell rather, that he durſt for ſhame utter ſuch untidie Arguments, or ſo aſſeverantly pronounce of another mans minde and purpoſe, which is as privie to him, as then it was to me unknowne what was her huſbands name. And though it had been knowne, what was that materiall in the ſtorie to be uttered? or what had it relieved the cruell parts of them, which burned both the mother and infant together, though the infants father had been expreſſed? And how then did I for ſhame conceale that which was not in my knowledge at that time (if I would) to expreſſe, nor in my ſuſpicion to miſdeeme?

Neverthelesse, if he be ſo greatly deſirous (as he pretendeth) to know of me, who was this infants father, I will not ſtick with maſter Harding, although I cannot ſweare for the matter, yet to take ſo much pain for his pleaſure, to go as neer as I may. For preciſely and determinately to point out the right father either of this, or any childe; I trow, neither will maſter Harding require it of me, neither is he able peradventure himſelf being aſked, to demonſtrate his own. And yet as much as I may, to ſatiſfie his daintie deſire herein, and partly to help the innocencie of the woman, touching this demand, who ſhould be the infants father: Who, ſay I, but his own mothers huſband? the name of which huſband was David Jores, a Miniſter, and married to the ſaid Perotine in King Edwards time, in the Church of our Ladies Caſtle Pariſh at Garnſey; the partie which married them being called maſter Noel Regnet a Frenchman, and yet alive, witneſſe hereunto, and now dwelling in London in ſaint Martins Le grande.

M. Harding requireth of others to do that, which he is not able to do himſelf.

David Jores husband to Perotine Maſſey.

Perotine married, where, and by whom.

Thus then, after my knowledge, I have ſhewed forth, for maſter Hardings pleaſure, the right huſband of this Perotine, and what was his name, who was alſo alive, his wife being great with childe, and partaker of the perſecution of the ſame time, and a Schoolmaſter afterward in Normandie, &c. Now if maſter Harding can take any ſuch advantage hereof to diſprove that I have ſaid; or be ſo privie to the begetting of this childe, that he can prove the ſaid David Jores, which was the right huſband to this wife, not to be the right father to this infant, let him ſhew herein his cunning by what mightie demonſtrations he can induce us to deeme the contrarie; and as I ſhall ſee his reaſon, I ſhall ſhape him an anſwer, in ſuch ſort (I truſt) that he will perceive, that whoredome, whereſoever I may know it, ſhall finde no bolſtering by me; I wiſh it might finde as little amongſt the chaſte Catholiques of maſter Hardings Church.

From this I proceed now to the ſecond part of his infamous accuſation, wherein he chargeth her of murther. A ſtrange caſe, that ſhe which was murthered her ſelf, with her childe, and died before him, ſhould yet be accuſed to murther the childe. Murther doubtleſſe is an horrible iniquitie in any perſon; but the mother to be murderer of her own infant, it is a double abomination, and more then a monſter, ſo far diſagreeing from all nature, that it is not lightly to be ſurmiſed of any, without vehement cauſes of manifeſt probation.

Perotine falſly accuſed of murther.

Wherefore, to trie out this matter more thorowly touching this murthering mother, let us ſee: Firſt, what hand did ſhe lay upon the childe? None. What weapon had ſhe? None. Did ſhe then drowne it, or caſt it in ſome pond, as we reade of the ſtrumpets at Rome, whoſe childrens heads were taken up in Pope Gregories Mote by hundreds, what time Prieſts began firſt to be reſtrained of a lawfull wedlock: witneſſe the Epiſtle of Voluſianus? or elſe did ſhe throw it by the walls into ſome privie corner, as I am credibly certified, that in the eighth yeer of Queene Elizabeth, certaine ſcalps and other young infants bones were found and taken out with a ſtick in the hole of a ſtone wall in Lenton Abbey, by certain Gentlemen within the countrey of Nottingham, James Baruſſe, Richard Loveit, and W. Lovelace walking in the Prior chamber; witneſſe the ſaid W. Lovelace, Vide ſupra.

A ſtory of young infants murthered in Lenton Abbey, & found in the eighth yeer of Q. Elizabeth.

with other which ſaw the bones aforeſaid? Or otherwiſe did ſhe take any hurtfull drinke to impotionate the childe within her, as commonly it is reported few Nunneries to have beene in England, wherein ſuch a tree hath not beene growing within their ground, meet for practiſing of ſuch a purpoſe? Neither ſo, nor ſo. What then? did ſhe purpoſely and wittingly thruſt her ſelfe in jeopardie, to the deſtruction of her childe, when ſhe needed not, as Pope Joane, when ſhe might have kept her bed, would needs adventure forth proceſſion, where both ſhe her ſelfe, and her infant periſhed in the open ſtreet?

Pope Joane murderer of her childe.

Well then, thus much by this hitherto alledged and granted, we have gotten this woman here to be accuſed of murdering her childe, which neither laid hand upon it, nor uſed weapon againſt it; neither uſed any other practiſe in drowning, hanging, breaking, burying, poyſoning, or any other wilfull meanes, whereby to deſtroy it. And how then? by what manner of way was this woman a murderer of her young babe? Forſooth (ſaith M. Harding) when ſhe was accuſed and condemned to be burned, ſhe did not claime the benefit of her belly, whereby the life both of her ſelfe for the time might have beene delayed, and the childe preſerved.

How and by what reaſon M. Harding proveth Perotine to be a murderer.

Whether ſhe did or no, I have not perfectly to ſay; no more, I weene, hath Maſter Harding. Howbeit this is certaine, and by witneſſe known, that ſhe uttered no leſſe to her ghoſtly father in confeſſion. And what if ſhe had opened the ſame to the Judges? They would (ſaith he) have ſpared her life for the time, and ſo the Innocent had been preſeaved. And how is M. Harding ſure of this, more then was the life ſpared of the young Ladie, and Miſtreſſe ſometime of M. Harding, who ſuffered, notwithſtanding ſhe was reported of ſome to be with childe? becauſe the law (ſaith he) is beneficiall to women in her caſe, claiming the benefit thereof.

Lady Jane thought to be with childe at her death.

The law beneficiall to women claiming the benefit of their belly.

The law ſo giveth I grant. But it followeth not therefore, whatſoever the law giveth or preſcribeth, the ſame to be put by and by in execution. But many times the law goeth as it pleaſeth them which have the handling of the law. As for example, the law willeth none to be condemned by ſentence of death for hereſie, which the firſt time revoke their opinion, and yet contrarie to this law they condemned her unlawfully. Againe, the like law, none to be executed for hereſie, before the Writ be ſent downe de comburendo, and yet contrarie to this law, without any ſuch Writ (as farre as I yet underſtand) they burned her moſt cruelly. And what law then was here to be looked for of theſe men, who in their doings herein ſeemed neither to obſerve law, nor to regard honeſtie, nor much to paſſe for charitie? And albeit ſhe had claimed never ſo much the priviledge of the law, what had that availed with thoſe men, whoſe hunting altogether (as by their own proceedings may appeare) ſeemeth to be for the houſhold goods of theſe women, which after their death immediately they incroached into their owne hands.

Unlawfull proceeding in the death of Perotine.

But be it admitted, that neither ſhe demanded this benefit of the law, nor that the Judges would ever have denied her, if ſhe had ſo done; yet it had beene the part of a grave accuſer, before he had beene deſcended into ſuch a railing action of murder againſt a poore woman now dead and gone, firſt to have adviſed wiſely with himſelfe, whether it might be, that ſhe had no ſuch intelligence what benefit the law would have given, in caſe it had beene required. For not unlike it is, and well may be thought, rather yea, then no, that the ſimple woman, brought up all her life long in her mothers houſe in an obſcure Iland, and in ſuch an out-corner of the Realme, farre off from the Court, and practiſe of Engliſh lawes, never heard before of any ſuch benefit of the law; and therefore upon meere ſimplicitie, and for lacke of skill required it not, becauſe ſhe knew not what to require. Peradventure alſo her ſenſes might be ſo aſtonied with the greatneſſe and ſuddenneſſe of the feare, that it was out of her remembrance. Certes, it had beene the dutie of the Judges, which knew the law, and having the woman before them, could not be ignorant of her caſe, to have queſtioned with her thereof, and to have holpen her ſimplicitie in that behalfe. Or at leaſt, if they had diſdained, yet it had beene the Prieſts part, who was her ghoſtly Father, and made privie thereunto, either to have inſtructed her, or to have ſtayed the execution of her death for ſafeguard of the childe.

Perotine defended by ſimple ignorance.

Lacke in the Judges.

The Prieſt to blame.

But all this denieth Maſter Harding, and to aggravate the matter, inferreth, that the note of any ſimple unskilfulneſſe of the law, but onely of meere wilfulneſſe, for avoiding of worldly ſhame, concealed her owne turpitude, and ſo became a murderer of her babe, &c. Theſe be the words of Maſter Harding, written by him not of any ſure ground, but onely upon his Catholike conjecture; for other demonſtration certainly to prove this true, he bringeth none. Wherefore to anſwer conjecture by conjecture, thus I reply to him againe, that in caſe he had beene asked the queſtion of the Judges and Inquiſitors, whether ſhe had beene with childe, and then had denied the ſame; or elſe if ſhe, by any other colourable means, had cloaked her being with childe, whereby it ſhould not appeare, this accuſer might have ſpoken probable advantage againſt the woman. Now, as ſhe was never demanded of their parts any ſuch queſtion, nor did ever deny any ſuch matter; ſo to anſwer this man with as good probabilitie, I hold, that in caſe they had required that matter of her, ſhe would never have denied it. And therfore whereas ſhe is accuſed for her not uttering of her childe; why may ſhe not, by as good reaſon againe be defended for not denying the ſame?

Reſpond. fol. 185. pag. 1.

M. Hardings ground onely upon conjectures.

Perotine as ſhe did not open her being with childe; ſo neither did ſhe ever deny it.

But ſhe ſhould have uttered it, ſaith he. It had been well done, ſay I; and I would ſhe had: but yet that is not the queſtion between him and me, what ſhe ſhould have done, but why ſhe did it not. M. Harding wandring in his blinde ſurmiſes, phantaſieth the cauſe onely to be, for hiding her diſhoneſtie, and for that ſhe would not ſhame the Goſpel. So that in Summa, to this effect tendeth all his accuſation.

The ſtate of M. Hardings accuſation.

> Perotine being big with childe, at her condemnation did not ſhew it to the Judges:
> Ergo, ſhe did it to conceale her turpitude, and becauſe ſhe would not ſhame the Goſpel.

M. Hardings argument.

But here this accuſer muſt underſtand, if he have not forgot his Logick, that ſuch arguments which do truely hold, à ſignis, doe alwaies preſuppoſe, that the ſignes which goe before the things ſignified, muſt be neceſſarie, perpetuall and firme, as is between cauſes naturall and their effects. Otherwiſe, if the ſignes be doubtfull, voluntarie, or accidentall, there is no firme conſequent can proceed thereof.

The argument anſwered.

Now, if the ſaid accuſer ſhould be put to his proofe, how to juſtifie this his ſequele to be true by evident demonſtration, that ſhe did it onely for covering her diſhoneſtie; I ſuppoſe verily he ſhould be found to ſay more then he is able to make good, and in concluſion ſhould be brought into the like caſe, as where the Phariſees, who coming to accuſe the adultereſſe before Chriſt, went away mute, with as much ſhame out of the temple, as the woman her ſelfe came in, having Arguments of ſignes and conjectures how they hold.

not one worde to anſwer. For, a man to pronounce aſſuredly upon the ſecret cogitation and intent either of man or woman, farther then by utterance of ſpeech is to him ſignified, paſſeth his capacitie, and is to be left onely to him, which is ſcrutans corda & renes Deus.

But forſomuch as Maſter Harding worketh (as I ſaid) by ſurmiſes, confirming every thing to the worſt, let us ſee what may be ſurmiſed as much againe to the contrary, concerning the qualitie of this ſurmiſed murder: wherein divers things are to be conſidered, as hereunder followeth.

The firſt conjecture.

The firſt conjecture is this, that ſuch manner of women, which for worldly ſhame are diſpoſed to murder their children, have other waies to compaſſe that wickedneſſe, then by ſilence keeping. Now, as touching this Perotine going to be burned, neither could this ſilence ſave her, if ſhe would, from worldly ſhame, neither is it to be thought any ſuch intent ever to be in her, to murder her childe; as might well appeare in her mothers houſe, where if ſhe might have continued her whole time out, ſhe intended no leſſe but honeſtly to be brought to bed, and to nurſe up her childe, neither caring for ſhame of the world, nor fearing any ſlander to the Goſpel. Whereby may be argued, that no ſuch intent of murder was ever in her thought.

For how is it like that ſhe, which had gone ſo long with childe, almoſt to the full time of her deliverance, and never thought, nor wrought any hurt to the infant all that while, ſhould now, going to her owne death, minde more hurt to her childe, then ſhe did before, hoping her ſelfe to live?

The ſecond conjecture.

Secondly, how knoweth Maſter Harding to the contrarie, but that ſhe was knowne in the towne to be with childe, and went boldly abroad without note of any ſhame, before the time ſhe came in trouble? Which being true, ſhame then could be no cauſe, why ſhe ſhould conceale her childe more now after her condemnation, then ſhe did before ſhe was condemned.

The third conjecture.

Thirdly, admit the caſe it was not knowne before, what advantage thereby ſhould riſe to her being now appointed to die, by concealing her being with childe. She ſhould have eſchewed (ſaith Maſter Harding) the publike ſhame and obloquie of the world, in that none ſhould have knowne her to be with childe. Firſt, what ſhame was it for a married wife to be noted to be with childe? Againe, what gaine had that beene to her, to avoide the ſhame and fame of the world, which had not to live in the world, being now condemned to die?

The fourth conjecture.

Fourthly, how is it like, that for ſhame ſhe meant to conceale that from the world, which both knew ſhe ſhould not live in the world, and alſo ſuffer that kinde of death whereby her childe could not be hidden from the ſight of the world, though ſhe had gone about her ſelfe never ſo much to conceale it?

The fifth conjecture.

Fifthly, how is it to be thought that any woman, going to ſuch a ſharpe puniſhment of fire to be conſumed, would let for any worldly ſhame to reſcue her owne life from ſo bitter torment, at leaſt ſo long as ſhe might, beſide the ſafeguard alſo of her childe, if by any meanes ſhe had knowne any remedie.

The ſixth conjecture.

Sixthly, forſomuch as Maſter Harding doth ſo hainouſly charge her with the wilfull murdering of her owne naturall childe, let all indifferent conſciences this conſider with themſelves, what was the cauſe that moved her ſo willingly to recant as ſhe did, but partly to ſave her owne life, and eſpecially the poore innocent? Whereby it is manifeſt to be underſtood, what a motherly affection ſhe had to ſave her infant, if the fathers of the ſpiritualtie had not beene ſo cruell, againſt all order of law to caſt both her and her childe away, all this her ſaid recantation notwithſtanding.

The ſeventh conjecture.

Seventhly and laſtly, when Maſter Harding hath enveighed all that ever he can againſt this poore Perotine, yet is all the ſame but a by-matter from this principall purpoſe pretended, ſuppoſing thereby, through his depraving of her, to juſtifie and excuſe the Popes holy Clergie, which wrought her death. Which will not be: For whatſoever her life was beſides, yet forſomuch as the cauſe of her death and condemnation was neither for theft, whoredome, nor murder, but onely and meerely for religion, which deſerved no death; I therefore having in my ſtorie no further to deale, as I ſaid before, ſo doe I ſay againe, that the cauſe of her condemning was wrongfull, her death was cruell, the ſight of the babe was ruefull, the proceeding of the Judges was unlawfull, the whole ſtorie is pittifull, and of all this the Prieſts and Clergie were the authors principall. All which being conſidered, and well expended, Maſter Harding, I truſt, may ſtand ſufficiently contented. Or if he thinke murder to be a thing, which ought not (as it ought not indeede) lightly to be paſſed over, let him then finde out murder where it is, and tell us truely without affection of partialitie, where the true murder lyeth; whether in the poore woman, which together with her child was murdered, or in them, which without all law and conſcience brought them both to death.

The concluſion of this defence.

Briefly and finally to conclude with this man, whatſoever the woman was, ſhe is now gone. To bite ſo bitterly againſt the dead is little honeſtie. And though the accuſation had in it ſome truth, yet this accuſation here needed not. Now the ſame being falſe, it is too much unmercifull. At leaſt being doubtfull and to him unknowne, charitie would have judged the beſt. Humanitie would have ſpared the dead. And if he could not afford her his good word; yet he might have left her cauſe unto the Lord, which ſhall judge both her and him. To pray for the dead he findeth in his Maſſe; but to backbite the dead, he neither findeth in his Maſſe, Mattens, nor Evenſong. And no doubt but in his Diridge and commendations he commendeth many a one, leſſe deſerving to be commended then this woman, let Catholike affection be ſet aſide. And though the merits of her cauſe deſerved not his commendations, yet did ſhe never deſerve at Maſter Hardings hand to give her ſuch a Kyrieleſon (as they ſay) after her departure. Crueltie ſhe ſuffered enough alive, though Maſter Harding had not added this cruell invective to her former afflictions: wherein notwithſtanding he hurteth not her, but hurteth peradventure himſelfe, neither ſo much diſtaineth her honeſtie, as he blemiſheth his owne. It hath beene the manner of learned men in time paſt, with their defending Oration ever to be more ready, then to accuſe. And if they did at any time accuſe, yet never but inforced; neither did they accuſe any but ſuch onely as were alive, and that neither but in ſuch matters, wherein either the Common-wealth or themſelves were vehemently touched.

Now if this grieve him ſo greatly, that in my ſtory I have termed her to be a Martyr; let him conſider the cauſe wherefore ſhe ſuffered, which was neither for felony, murder, nor whoredome, but onely for the religion in King Edwards time received, and when he hath confuted that religion, I ſhall croſſe her out of the booke and fellowſhip of Martyrs. In the meane time my exhortation ſhall be this to Maſter Harding.

Firſt, that if he will needs become a writer in theſe

Exhortation to M. Harding.

Q. MARIE. Anno. 1556.

theſe ſo furious and outragious daies of ours, he will ſeaſon his veine of writing with more mildeneſſe and charitie, and not give ſuch example of railing to others.

Secondly, that he will moderate his judging and condemning of other with more equitie and indifferencie, and not be ſo raſh and partiall. For if ſhe be to be accounted a murderer, which ſo carefully went about by recantation to ſave both her ſelf and her childe from the fire; what is to be ſaid of them which condemned her ſo cruelly, & cauſed both her and the infant to be burned, notwithſtanding that ſhe for ſafeguard of their lives had (as I ſaid) recanted. And yet ſo partiall is he, that in all this invective, crying out ſo intemperately againſt the woman and the child that were burned, he ſpeaketh never a word of their condemners and true murderers indeed.

Murder in the ſpirituall Clergie noted.

Thirdly, forſomuch as Maſter Harding is here in hand with infanticide, and with a caſting away young childrens lives, I would wiſh, that as he hath ſifted the doings of this woman to the uttermoſt, who was rather murdered then a murderer; ſo he would with an indifferent eye looke on the other ſide a little upon them of his owne Clergie, and ſee what he could finde there amongſt thoſe wilfull contemners of immaculate marriage. Not that I doe accuſe any of incontinencie, whoſe lives I know not, but there is one above, that well knoweth and ſeeth all things, be they never ſo ſecret to man, and moſt certainly will pay home at length with fire and brimſtone when he ſeeth his time.

God knoweth what ſpilling and murdering of infants there is in the world.

I ſay no more, and not ſo much as I might, following herein the Painters, which when their colours will not ſerve to expreſſe a thing that they meane, they ſhadow it with a vaile. But howſoever the matter goeth with them, whether they may or may not be ſuſpected touching this crime aforeſaid of infanticide; moſt ſure and maniſeſt it is that they are more then worthily to be accuſed of homicide in murdering the children and ſervants of God, both men and women, wives and maydes, old and young, blinde and lame, mad and unmad, diſcreet and ſimple innocents, learned with the unlearned, and that of all degrees, from the high Archbiſhop to the Clerke and Sexton of the Church, and that moſt wrongfully and wilfully, with ſuch effuſion of innocent Chriſtian bloud, as crieth up daily to God for vengeance.

And therefore Maſter Harding, in my minde ſhould doe well, to ſpare a little time from theſe his invectives, wherewith he appeacheth the poore proteſtants of murder, whom they have murdered themſelves, and exerciſe his pen with ſome more fruitfull matter, to exhort theſe ſpirituall fathers firſt to ceaſe from murdering of their owne children, to ſpare the bloud of Innocents, and not to perſecute Chriſt ſo cruelly in his members as they doe: And furthermore, to exhort in like manner theſe Agamiſts, and wilfull rejecters of matrimonie, to take themſelves to lawfull wives, and not to reſiſt Gods holy Ordinance, nor incounter his inſtitution with another contrarie inſtitution of their own deviſing, leſt perhaps they prevented by fragilitie, may fall into danger of ſuch inconveniences above touched: which if they be not in them, I ſhall be glad; but if they be, it is neither their railing againſt the poore Proteſtants, nor yet their ſecret auricular confeſſion, that ſhall cover their iniqnties from the face of the Lord, when he ſhall come to reveale abſcondita tenebrarum, & judicare, ſæculum per ignem.

Agamiſta, of ἄγαμος, which ſignifieth men unmarried, or againſt marriage.

And thus, for lack of further leaſure, I end with Maſter Harding; having no more at this time to ſay unto him, but wiſh him to feare God, to embrace his truth, to remember himſelfe, and to ſurceaſe from this uncharitable railing and brawling, eſpecially againſt the dead, which cannot anſwer him; or if he will needs continue ſtill to be ſuch a vehement accuſer of other, yet that he will remember what belongeth to the part of a right accuſer: Firſt, that his accuſation be true; ſecondly, that no blinde affection of partiality be mixt withall: thirdly, whoſoever taketh upon him to carpe and appeach the crimes of other, ought themſelves to be ſincere and upright, and to ſee what may be written in their owne foreheads.

The parts of a true accuſer.

Whoredome and murder be grievous offences, and worthy to be accuſed. But to accuſe of murder the parties that were murdered, and to leave the other perſons untouched which were the true murderers, it is the part of an accuſer, which deſerveth himſelfe to be accuſed of partialitie.

As verily I thinke by this woman, that if ſhe had been a Catholike Papiſt, and a devout follower of their Church, as ſhe was a Proteſtant, ſhe had neither been condemned then alive of them, nor now accuſed, being dead, of M. Harding. But God forgive him, and make him a good man, if it be his will.

Three Martyrs burned at Greenſtead in Suſſex.

July 18. The martyrdome of two men and one woman at Greeneſtead in Suſſex.

NEere about the ſame time that theſe three women with the infant were burned at Garnſey, ſuffered other three likewiſe at Greenſtead in Suſſex, two men and one woman; the names of whom were Thomas Dungate, John Foreman, and mother Tree, who for righteouſneſſe ſake gave themſelves to death and torments of the fire, patiently abiding what the furious rage of man could ſay or worke againſt them, at the ſaid Towne of Greenſtead ending their lives, the 18. of the ſaid moneth of July, and in the yeere aforeſaid.

The burning and Martyrdome of Thomas Moore in the towne of Leiceſter, June 26. the yeere, 1556.

July 26.

AS the bloudie rage of this perſecution ſpared neither man, woman, nor childe, wife, nor maide, lame, blinde, nor cripple, and ſo through all men and women, as there was no difference either of age or ſex conſidered; ſo neither was there any condition or qualitie reſpected of any perſon: but whoſoever he were, that held not as they did on the Pope, and ſacrament of the Altar, were he learned or unlearned, wiſe, or ſimple innocent, all went to the fire; as may appeare by this ſimple poore creature and innocent ſoule, named Thomas Moore, retaining as a ſervant to a mans houſe in the Towne of Leiceſter, about the age of 24. and after manner of an huſbandman, who for ſpeaking certaine words, that his Maker was in heaven, and not in the Pixe, was thereupon apprehended in the countrey, being with his friends. Who coming before his Ordinarie, firſt was asked, whether he did not beleeve his Maker there to be, pointing to the high Altar. Which he denied.

The burning of Tho. More a ſimple innocent, at Leiceſter.

Then asked the Biſhop, how then, ſaid he, doeſt thou bleeve?

Tho. More examined before the Biſhop.

The young man anſwered againe; as his Creede did teach him.

To whom the Biſhop ſaid; And what is yonder that thou ſeeſt above the Altar? He anſwering, ſaid; Forſooth I cannot tell what you would have me to ſee. I ſee there fine clothes, with golden taſſels, and other gay geere hanging about the Pixe, what is within I cannot ſee.

Why? Doeſt thou not beleeve, ſaid the Biſhop, Chriſt to be there, fleſh, bloud, and bone? No, that I doe not, ſaid he.

The condemnation and martyrdome of Tho. More. Ex Regiſt. Epiſc. Lincol.

Whereupon the Ordinarie making ſhort with him, read the ſentence, and ſo condemned the true and faithfull ſervant of Chriſt to death, in Saint Margarets Church in Leiceſter; who was burnt, and ſuffered a joyfull and glorious martyrdome, for the teſtimonie of righteouſneſſe, in the ſame Towne of Leiceſter, the yeer of our Lord above mentioned, 1556. about the 26. of June.

To this Thomas More, we have alſo annexed the anſwers and examination of one John Jackſon, before Doctor Cooke, one of the Commiſſioners, for that it belongeth much unto the ſame time.

The examination of Iohn Iackſon, had before Doctor Cook, the 11. day of March, Anno 1556.

Examination of Jo. Jackſon before Doctor Cooke.

First, when I came before him, he railed on me, and called me heretike. I anſwered and ſaid, I am no heretike.

Cooke. Yes, quoth he. For M. Read told me, that thou waſt the rankeſt heretike of all them in the Kings Bench.

Iackſon. I ſaid, I knew him not.

Cook. No, quoth he? Yes, he examined thee at the Kings Bench.

Iack. I anſwered him, and ſaid, he examined five other, but not me.

Cook. Then anſwer me: what ſayeſt thou to the bleſſed ſacrament of the altar? tell me.

Iack. I anſwered, it is a diffuſe queſtion, to aſke me at the firſt daſh, you promiſing to deliver me.

Cook. What heretike is this, quoth he?

Iack. I ſaid, it is eaſier to call a man heretike, then to prove him one.

Cooke. Then he ſaid, What Church art thou of?

The Church.

Iack. What Church, quoth I? I am of the ſame Church that is builded on the foundation of the Prophets and the Apoſtles, Jeſus Chriſt being the head corner ſtone.

Cook. Thou art an heretike, quoth he.

Iackſon. Yea, quoth I? how can that be, ſeeing that I am of that Church? I am ſure that you will not ſay that the Prophets and Apoſtles were heretikes.

The ſacrament of the altar.

Cook. No, quoth he. But what ſayeſt thou to the bleſſed ſacrament of the altar againe? Tell me.

Iackſon. I anſwered him and ſaid, I finde it not written.

Cook. No, quoth he? Keeper away with him.

Iack. Yet I tarried there long, and did talke with him, and I ſaid; Sir, I can be content to be tractable, and obedient to the Word of God.

Cook. He anſwered and ſaid to me, that I knew not what the Word of God meant, nor yet whether it were true or not.

Iackſon. I anſwered, and ſaid to him, yea that I doe.

Cook. Whereby, quoth he?

Iackſon. Hereby, ſaid I. Our Saviour Chriſt ſaith; Search the Scriptures; for in them you thinke to have eternall life. For they be they that teſtifie of me.

Cook. This is a wiſe proofe, quoth he.

Iack. Is it ſo, quoth I? What ſay you then to theſe words that the Prophet David ſaid? Whatſoever he be that feareth the Lord, he will ſhew him the way that he hath choſen: his ſoule ſhall dwell at eaſe, and his ſeed ſhall poſſeſſe the land. The ſecrets of the Lord are among them that feare him, and he ſheweth them his covenant.

Cook. Well, quoth he, you ſhall be rid ſhortly one way or other.

Iack. Then I ſaid to him, my life lieth not in mans hands; therefore no man ſhall do more unto me then God will ſuffer him.

Cook. No, quoth he? Thou art a ſtubborne and naughtie fellow.

Iack. You cannot ſo judge of me, quoth I, except you did ſee ſome evill by me.

Although they call you Papiſts, yet they judge you not to death.

Cook. No, quoth he? Why may not I judge thee, as well as thou and thy fellowes judge us, and call us Papiſts?

Iack. Why, quoth I? that is no judgement: but Chriſt ſaith; If you refuſe me, and receive not my word, you have one that judgeth you. The word that I have ſpoken unto you now, ſhall judge you in the laſt day.

Head of the Church.

Cook. I pray thee tell me, who is the head of the Congregation?

Iack. I anſwered, and ſaid, Chriſt is the head.

Cook. But who is head in earth?

Iack. I ſaid, Chriſt hath members here in earth.

Cook. Who are they, quoth he?

Iack. They, quoth I, that are ruled by the word of God.

Cook. You are a good fellow, quoth he.

Iack. I am that I am, quoth I.

Cook. Then he ſaid to my Keeper, Have him to priſon againe.

Iack. I am contented with that, quoth I; and ſo we departed. I anſwered no further in this matter, becauſe I thought he ſhould not have my bloud in a corner. But I hope in the living God, that when the time ſhall come, before the Congregation I ſhall ſhake their building after another manner of faſhion. For they build but upon the ſand, and their wals be dawbed with untempered mortar, and therefore they cannot ſtand long.

The buildings of the Papiſts be but dawbed wals.

Therefore (good brothers and ſiſters) be of good cheere: for I truſt in my God, I and my other priſon-fellowes ſhall go joyfully before you, praiſing God moſt heartily, that we are counted worthy to be witneſſes of his truth. I pray you accept my ſimple anſwer, at this time, committing you unto God.

Of this John Jackſon, beſides theſe his foreſaid anſwers and examination before D. Cooke one of the Commiſſioners, no more as yet came unto our hands:

The examination of Iohn Newman, Martyr, which is to be referred to his ſtory before.

John Newman was firſt apprehended in Kent, dwelling in the towne of Maidſtone, and there was examined before D. Thornton Suffragan and others, at Tenterden. From thence he was brought to Boner, and there condemned with Maſter Denley and Packingham, and burned at Saffron Walden, as is before ſtoried. But becauſe his examinations and anſwers before the Suffragan came not then to my hands, I thought here in this place to beſtow them, rather then they ſhould utterly be ſuppreſſed. And firſt what his anſwers was by writing to the ſaid Suffragan after his apprehenſion, you ſhall heare by the tenor of his owne words, as follow.

The copy of John Newmans words in writing to D. Thornton.

IT may pleaſe you to underſtand, that for the ſpace of all the time of King Edwards reigne, we were diligently inſtructed with continuall ſermons, made by ſuch men, whoſe faith, wiſdome, learning,

Q. MA-RIE.
Anno. 1556.

learning, and vertuous living was commended unto all men, under the Kings hand and ſeale, and under the hands of the whole Councell. Theſe men taught diligently a long time, perſwading us by the allegations of Gods Word, that there was no Tranſubſtantiation, nor corporall preſence in the Sacrament. Their doctrine was not beleeved of us ſuddenly, but by their continuall preaching, and alſo by our continual prayer unto God, that we might never be deceived, but if it were true that God would incline our hearts unto it; and if it were not true, that we might never beleeve it.

We weighed that they laboured with Gods Word, and we asked the advice of our friends; neither could we finde that they preached falſe doctrine. We conſidered alſo, as we did learne, that the Kings Grace and his Councell, and the moſt part of all the whole Realme, beleeved as they taught, becauſe no man preached the contrary. Alſo we know, that the Preachers were commanded by the King, and the Lawes of the Realme, to preach unto us ſuch doctrine, as was to the authoritie of Gods Word agreeable, and none other. And by their diligent ſetting forth of it, by the Kings commandement, and the conſent of the whole Councell, and by the authoritie of the Parliament, we embraced it, and received it, as a very infallible truth taught unto us, for the ſpace of ſeven yeers. Wherefore untill ſuch time as our conſciences are otherwiſe taught and inſtructed by Gods Word, we cannot with ſafeguard of our conſciences take it, as many ſuppoſe at this time. And we truſt in God, that the Queenes mercifull Highneſſe, neither yet her moſt honourable Councell, will in a matter of faith uſe compulſion or violence, becauſe faith is the gift of God, and cometh not of man, neither of mans lawes, neither at ſuch time as men require it, but at ſuch time as God giveth it.

The examination and anſwers of Iohn Newman Martyr, before Doctor Thornton, and others.

The examination & anſwers of Iohn Newman.

First, one of the Doctors, or one of the Bench, either the Archdeacon, or Fauced, or ſome other, whoſe name Iohn Newman doth not expreſſe, beginneth, asking in this wiſe.

Doctor. How ſay you to this? This is my body, which is given for you.

Newman. It is a figurative ſpeech, one thing ſpoken, and another meant, as Chriſt ſaith, I am a vine, I am a doore, I am a ſtone, &c. Is he therefore a materiall ſtone, a vine, or a doore?

Doct. This is no figurative ſpeech. For he ſaith; This is my body, which is given for you. And ſo ſaith he not of the ſtone, vine, or doore; but that is a figurative ſpeech.

This cup is the New Teſtament, is a figurative ſpeech.

New. Chriſt ſaith, This cup is the New Teſtament in my bloud. If ye will have it ſo meant, then let them take and eate the cup.

Doctor. Nay, that is not ſo meant; ſo it is a common phraſe of ſpeech among our ſelves: We ſay to our friend, Drinke a cup of drinke, and yet we meane he ſhould drinke the drinke in the cup.

New. Why, if ye will have the one ſo underſtood, ye muſt ſo underſtand the other.

Doct. Nay, it is a common uſe of ſpeech, to ſay drinke a cup of ale or beere: and therefore it is no figurative ſpeech.

What is a figurative ſpeech.

New. The often uſing of a thing, doth not make that thing otherwiſe then it is: but whereſoever one thing is ſpoken, and another meant, it is a figurative ſpeech.

Doct. Well, we will not ſtand here about. How ſay ye by the reall preſence? is not Chriſts naturall body there that was borne of the Virgin Mary?

New. No, I doe not ſo beleeve, neither can I ſo beleeve; for the ſoule of man doth not feed upon naturall things, as the body doth.

Doct. Why, how then doth it feed?

New. I think the ſoule of man doth feed as the Angels in heaven, whoſe feeding is onely the pleaſure, joy, felicitie, and delectation that they have of God; and ſo the ſoule of man doth feed and eate, through faith, the body of Chriſt.

Collins reaſoneth with Newman.

Collins. Yea, but if the bodie doe not feede upon naturall things, the ſoule cannot continue with the bodie: therefore the bodie muſt needs feede upon naturall things, that both may live together.

New. I grant it to be true: but yet the ſoule doth live otherwiſe then the body, which doth periſh; therefore naturall things doe but feed the body onely. I pray you what did Iudas receive at the Supper?

Collins. Marie, Iudas did receive the very body of Chriſt, but it was to his damnation.

Whether Iudas received the body of Chriſt, or no?

New. Why? was the Devill entred into him before? Then he had both the Devill and Chriſt in him at one time.

Collins. Nay, the Devill did enter into him afterward.

New. Yea, and before too: what do you think? had he but one Devill? Nay, I thinke he had rather a legion of Devils at the latter end.

Collins. Well, put caſe it be ſo, what ſay you to that?

New. Marie, if Chriſt and the Devill were both in Iudas at once, I pray you how did they two agree together?

Collins. We grant they were both in Iudas at that time; for Chriſt may be where the Devill is, if he will: but the Devill cannot be where Chriſt is, except it pleaſe Chriſt.

New. Chriſt will not be in an uncleane perſon that hath the Devill.

D. Thornton reaſoneth with Io. Newman.

Thornton. Why, will ye not beleeve that Chriſt was in hell? yet ye will grant that the Devill is there; and ſo might he be in Iudas if it pleaſed him.

New. Chriſt would not ſuffer Mary Magdalene to touch him, which ſought him at his grave, and did love him intirely; much leſſe he will ſuffer an ungodly man to receive him into his uncleane body.

Thornton. Yes, ſeeing God may doe all things, he may doe what he liſt, and be where he will: And doth not the Pſalme ſay, he is in hell, and in all places? Why ſhould we then doubt of his being there?

New. Though his Godhead be in in all places, yet that is not ſufficient to prove that his humanitie is in all places.

Thorn. No? do you not beleeve that God is omnipotent, and may doe all things?

New. I doe beleeve that God is almightie, and may doe all that he will doe.

The omnipotency of Chriſt doth not prove him to be really in the ſacrament.

Thorn. Nay, but if he be omnipotent, he may doe all things, and there is nothing unpoſſible for him to doe.

New. I know God is almighty, and can doe all that he will; but he cannot make his Son a lyar, he cannot deny himſelfe, nor can he reſtore virginitie once violated and defiled.

Thorn. What is that to your purpoſe? God doth not defile virginitie; we ſpeake but of things that God doth.

New. Why? will ye have the humanity of Chriſt in all places, as the deitie is?

Absurditie in the Popes doctrine.

Thorn. Yea, he is in all places, as the deitie is, if it pleaſe him.

New. I will promiſe you that ſeemeth to me a very great hereſie; for heaven and earth are not able to containe the divine power of God: for it is in all places, as here and in every place; and yet ye will ſay, that whereſoever the deitie is, there is alſo the humanitie; and ſo ye will make him no body, but a phantaſticall body, and not a body indeed.

Thorn. Nay, we doe not ſay he is in all places, as the deitie is; but if it pleaſe him, he may be in all places with the deitie.

The humanity of Chriſt may not be in all places.

New. I promiſe you that ſeemeth to me as great an hereſie as ever I heard of in my life, and I dare not grant it, leſt I ſhould denie Chriſt to be a very man, and that were againſt all the Scriptures.

Thorn. Tuſh, what ſhall we ſtand reaſoning with him? I dare ſay he doth not beleeve that Chriſt came out of his mother, not opening the matrice. Doe you beleeve that Chriſt roſe from death, and came thorow the ſtone?

New. I doe beleeve that Chriſt roſe from death, but I doe not beleeve that he came thorow the ſtone, neither doth the Scripture ſo ſay.

Thorn. Loe, how ſay you? he doth not beleeve that Chriſt came thorow the ſtone: And if he doth not beleeve this, how ſhall he beleeve the other? If he could beleeve this, it were eaſie for him to beleeve the other.

Note the groſſe ignorance of this Suffragan.

New. The Scripture doth not ſay he went thorow the ſtone, but it ſaith the Angels of God came downe, and rolled away the ſtone, and for feare of him the Keepers became even as dead men.

Thorn. Ah foole, ah foole, that was becauſe the women ſhould ſee that he was riſen againe from death.

New. Well, the Scripture maketh as much for me, as it doth for you, and more too.

Thorn. Well, let us not ſtand any longer about him. Back again to the reall preſence. How ſay ye? is the body of Chriſt really in the ſacrament, or no?

New. I have anſwered you already.

Thorn. Well, do ye not beleeve that he is there really?

New. No, I beleeve it not.

Thorn. Well, will ye ſtand to it?

New. I muſt needs ſtand to it, till I be perſwaded to a further truth.

Thorn. Nay, ye will not be perſwaded, but ſtand to your owne opinion.

New. Nay, I ſtand not to mine owne opinion, God I take to witneſſe, but onely to the Scriptures of God, and that can all thoſe that ſtand here witneſſe with me, and nothing but the Scriptures: and I take God to witneſſe, that I doe nothing of preſumption, but that which I doe is onely in regard of my conſcience; and if there be a further truth then I ſee, except it appeare a truth to me, I cannot receive it as a truth. And ſeeing faith is the gift of God, and cometh not of man (for it is not you that can give me faith, nor any man elſe) therefore I truſt ye will beare the more with me, ſeeing it muſt be wrought by God; and when it ſhall pleaſe God to open a further truth to me, I ſhall receive it with all my heart, and embrace it.

Thornton had many other queſtions, which I did not beare away; but as I doe underſtand, theſe are the chiefeſt: as for taunts, fooliſh and unlearned, he lacked none. Praiſe God for his gifts, and God increaſe in us ſtrength.

The Argument of Iohn Newman.

Argument in the 2. figure.

If the body of Chriſt were really and bodily in the Sacrament, then whoſoever received the Sacrament, received alſo the body.
The wicked, receiving the ſacrament, receive not the body of Chriſt:
Ergo, the body of Chriſt is not really in the ſacrament.

Argument.

Ca- They which eat the fleſh, and drink the bloud of Chriſt, dwell in him, and he in them.
meſ- The wicked dwell not in Chriſt, nor he in them:
tres. Ergo, the wicked eate not the fleſh, nor drinke the bloud of Chriſt.

Argument.

Ca- They that have Chriſt dwelling in them, bring forth much fruit. Iohn 15. He that dwelleth in me, and I in him, bringeth forth much fruite, &c.
meſ- The wicked bringeth forth no fruite of goodneſſe:
tres. Ergo, they have not Chriſts body dwelling in them.

Argument.

Argument in the 3. figure.

Da- Where remembrance is of a thing, there is imported the abſence thereof.
ti- Remembrance of Chriſts bodie is in the ſacrament; Doe this in remembrance of me, &c.
ſi. Ergo, Chriſts body there is imported to be abſent.

Marie they will ſay, we ſee him not with our outward eies; but he is commended under the formes of bread and wine: and that that we ſee, is nothing but a qualitie or an accident. But let them ſhew me a qualitie or an accident without a ſubſtance, and I will beleeve them. And thus much concerning Newmans examinations and arguments, whoſe martyrdome is before expreſſed.

The martyrdome of Ioane Waſte, a blinde woman, in the towne of Darby.

Auguſt. 1. Ioane Waſte a blind woman and Martyr.

THe firſt day of Auguſt, in the yeere above ſpecified, ſuffered likewiſe at the towne of Darby a certaine poore honeſt godly woman, being blinde from her birth, and unmarried, about the age of 22. named Ioane Waſte, of the Pariſh of Alhallowes. Of them that ſate upon this innocent womans bloud, the chiefeſt was Raſe Baine Biſhop of the Dioceſſe, Doctor Draicot his Chancellor, ſir Iohn Port Knight, Henrie Vernon Eſquire, Peter Finch Officiall of Darby, with the aſſiſtance alſo of divers other, Richard Warde, and William Bembridge the ſame time being Bayliffes of the towne of Darby, &c. Friſt, after the above named Biſhop and Doctor Draicot had cauſed the ſaid Ioane Waſte to be apprehended in the towne of Darby, ſuſpecting her to be guiltie of certains hereſies, ſhe was divers times privily examined, as well in priſon as out of priſon, by Finch the Officiall aforeſaid: After that, brought to publike examination before the Biſhop; at laſt, was there burnt in Darby, as is abovesaid. Touching whoſe life, bringing up, and converſation, ſomewhat more amply we minde to diſcourſe, as by faithfull relation hath come to my hands.

The life and converſation of Ioane Waſte.

Firſt, this Ioane Waſte was the daughter of one William Waſte, an honeſt poore man, and by his ſcience a Barber, who ſometimes alſo uſed to make ropes. His wife had the ſame Ioane and one other at one birth, and ſhe was borne blinde. And when ſhe was about 12. or 14. yeeres old, ſhe learned to knit hoſen and ſleeves, and other things, which in time ſhe could doe verie well. Furthermore, as time ſerved, ſhe would helpe her Father to turne ropes, and do ſuch other things as ſhe was able, and in no caſe would be idle. Thus continued ſhe with her father and mother, during their lives. After whoſe departure, Joan Waſte drawn by the ſpirit of God, to the love of religion.

ture, then kept ſhe with one Roger Waſte her brother, who in the time of King Edward the ſixth, of bleſſed memorie, gave her ſelf daily to go to the Church to heare divine ſervice read in the vulgar tongue. And thus by hearing Homilies and ſermons, ſhe became marvellouſly well affected to the religion then taught. So at length having by her labour gotten and ſaved ſo much money as would buy her a New Teſtament, ſhe cauſed one to be provided for her. And though ſhe was of her ſelfe unlearned, and by reaſon of her blindneſſe unable to read, yet for the great deſire ſhe had to underſtand, and have printed in her memorie the ſayings of the holy Scriptures contained in the New Teſtament, ſhe acquainted her ſelfe chiefly with one John Hurt, then priſoner in the Common Hall of Darbie for debts.

The earneſt deſire of Joan Waſte to learn the ſcriptures.

John Hurt and John Pemerton, readers to Joan Waſte.

The ſame John Hurt being a ſober grave man, of the age of threeſcore and ten yeeres, by her earneſt entreatie, and being priſoner, and many times idle and without companie, did for his exerciſe daily read unto her ſome one Chapter of the New Teſtament. And if at any time he were otherwiſe occupied or letted through ſickneſſe, ſhe would repair unto one John Pemerton Clerke of the Pariſh Church of All-ſaints in the ſame Towne of Darbie, or to ſome other perſon which could read, and ſometime ſhe would give a penny or two (as ſhe might ſpare) to ſuch perſons as would not freely read unto her, appointing unto them aforehand how many Chapters of the New Teſtament they ſhould read, or how often they ſhould repeat one Chapter upon a price.

A notable gift of God in a blinde woman.

Joan Waſte both blinde and unlearned, yet was perfect in the ſcriptures.

Moreover, in the ſaid Joan Waſte this was notorious, that ſhe being utterly blinde, could notwithſtanding, without a guide, go to any Church within the ſaid towne of Darbie, or to any other place or perſon, with whom ſhe had any ſuch exerciſe. By the which exerciſe ſhe ſo profited, that ſhe was able not onely to recite many Chapters of the New Teſtament without book, but alſo could aptly impugne, by divers places of Scriptures, as well ſin, as ſuch abuſes in religion, as then were too much in uſe in divers and ſundrie perſons.

As this godly woman thus daily increaſed in the knowledge of Gods holy word, and no leſſe in her life expreſſed the vertuous fruits and exerciſe of the ſame: Not long after, through the fatall death of bleſſed King Edward, followed the wofull ruin of religion, in the reign of Queen Marie his ſiſter. In which alteration, notwithſtanding the general backſliding of the greateſt part and multitude of the whole Realme into the old Papiſme again, yet this poore blinde woman, continuing in a conſtant conſcience, proceeded ſtill in her former exerciſe, both being zealous in that ſhe had learned, and alſo refuſing to communicate in religion with thoſe which taught contrarie doctrine to that ſhe before had learned in King Edwards time, as it is above declared.

For the which ſhe was called and convented before the foreſaid Biſhop and Doctor Draicot, with divers other called in to bear witneſſe.

Articles miniſtred unto her.

The articles objected againſt Joan Waſte.

THe Articles miniſtred unto her, and wherewith ſhe was charged, were theſe: Firſt, that ſhe did hold the ſacrament of the altar to be but onely a memorie or repreſentation of Chriſts bodie, and materiall bread and wine, but not his naturall bodie, unleſſe it were received. And that it ought not to be reſerved from time to time over the altar, but immediately to be received, &c.

Item, that ſhe did hold, in receiving of the Sacrament of the Altar, ſhe did not receive the ſame bodie that was born of the Virgin Marie, and ſuffered upon the croſſe for our redemption, &c.

Item, ſhe did hold, that Chriſt at his laſt Supper did not bleſſe the bread that he had then in his hands, but was bleſſed himſelf, and by the vertue of the words of conſecration, the ſubſtance of the bread and wine is not converted and turned into the ſubſtance of the bodie and blood of Chriſt.

Item, that ſhe did grant that ſhe was of the Pariſh of All-hallows in Darbie, &c.

Item, that all and ſingular the premiſſes are true and notorious by publike report and fame, &c.

The anſwer of Joan Waſte to the articles.

Whereunto ſhe anſwered, that ſhe beleeved therein ſo much as the holy Scripture taught her, and according to that ſhe had heard preached unto her by divers learned men. Whereof ſome ſuffered impriſonment, and other ſome ſuffered death for the ſame doctrine. Amongſt whom ſhe named, beſide other, Doctor Taylor, who ſhe ſaid, took it of his conſcience, that that doctrine which he taught was true, and aſked of them, if they would do ſo in like caſe for their doctrine: which if they would not, ſhe deſired them for Gods ſake not to trouble her, being a blinde, poore, and unlearned woman, with any further talk, ſaying (by Gods aſſiſtance) that ſhe was ready to yeeld up her life in that faith, in ſuch ſort as they ſhould appoint.

Well argued. Becauſe Chriſt is omnipotent, ergo, there is no bread in the ſacrament.

And yet notwithſtanding being preſt by the ſaid Biſhop and Doctor Draicot, with many arguments of Chriſts omnipotencie, as, why was not Chriſt able as well to make the bread his bodie, as to turn water into wine, raiſe Lazarus from the dead, and ſuch other like arguments; and many times being threatned with grievous impriſonments, torments, and death: The poore woman thus being, as it were, halfe aſtonied through their terrors and threats, and deſirous (as it ſeemed) to prolong her life, offered unto the Biſhop then preſent, that if he would before that companie, take it upon his conſcience, that that doctrine which he would have her to beleeve concerning the ſacrament, was true, and that he would at the dreadfull day of judgement anſwer for her therein (as the ſaid Doctor Taylor in divers of his ſermons did offer) ſhe would then further anſwer them.

The Biſhop and his Chancellor durſt not take upon their conſcience to anſwer before God for their doctrine.

Whereunto the Biſhop anſwered, he would. But Doctor Draicot his Chancellor, hearing that, ſaid, My Lord, you know not what you do, you may in no caſe anſwer for an heretique. And immediately he aſked the poore woman whether ſhe would recant or no, and ſaid ſhe ſhould anſwer for her ſelf. Unto whoſe ſayings the Biſhop alſo reformed himſelf.

Sentence pronounced againſt Joan Waſte.

The Writ brought down for the burning of Joan Waſte.

The poore woman perceiving this, anſwered again, that if they refuſed to take of their conſcience that it was true they would have her to beleeve, ſhe would anſwer no further, but deſired them to do their pleaſure, and ſo after certain circumſtances, they pronounced ſentence againſt her, and delivered her unto the Bailiffes of the ſaid Towne of Darbie aforenamed. Who after they had kept her about a moneth or five weeks, at length there came unto them a writ De hæretico comburendo; by vertue whereof they were appointed by the ſaid Biſhop to bring her to the Pariſh Church of All-Saints at a day appointed, where Doctor Draicot ſhould make a Sermon.

When the day and time was come that this innocent Martyr ſhould ſuffer, firſt cometh to the Church Doctor Draicot, accompanied with divers Gentlemen, as M. Thomas Powthread, Bleſſed are you when men ſhall revile you, and ſay all evil againſt you for my names ſake. Matth. 5.

maſter Henry Vernon, maſter Dethick of Newall, and divers others. This done, and all things now in a readineſſe, at laſt the poore blinde creature and ſervant of God was brought and ſet before the Pulpit, where the ſaid Doctor being entred into his ſermon, and there inveighing againſt many matters, which he called hereſies, declared unto the people that that woman was condemned for denying the ſacrament of the altar to be the verie bodie and blood of Chriſt really and ſubſtantially, and was thereby cut off from the bodie of the Catholique Church; and ſaid, that ſhe was not onely blinde of her bodily eyes, but alſo blinde in the eyes of her ſoul. And he ſaid, that as her bodie ſhould be preſently conſumed with materiall fire, ſo her ſoul ſhould be burned in hell with everlaſting fire, as ſoon as it ſhall be ſeparated from the bodie, and there remain world without end, and ſaid, it was not lawfull for the people to pray for her: and ſo with many terrible threats he made an end of his ſermon, and commanded the Bayliffes and thoſe Gentlemen to ſee her executed. And the ſermon thus ended, eftſoons the bleſſed ſervant of God was carried away from the ſaid Church, to a place called the Windmill pit, neer unto the ſaid town, and holding the foreſaid Roger Waſte her brother by the hand ſhe prepared her ſelf, and deſired the people to pray with her, and ſaid ſuch prayers as ſhe before had learned, and cried upon Chriſt to have mercie upon her, as long as life ſerved. In this mean ſeaſon, the ſaid Doctor Draicot went to his Inne, for great ſorrow of her death, and there laid him down, and ſlept, during all the time of her execution. And thus much of Joan Waſte.

Joan Waſte brought to the place of execution.

The martyrdom of Joan Waſte.

Now, foraſmuch as I am not ignorant (faithfull Reader) that this, and other ſtories more, ſet forth of the Martyrs, ſhall not lack carpers and markers enow, readie to ſeek all holes and corners how to defame the memorie of Gods good Saints, and to condemne theſe hiſtories, of lies and untruths, eſpecially hiſtories wherein they ſee their ſhamefull acts and unchriſtian crueltie detected and brought to light, therefore for better confirmation of this hiſtorie above written, and to ſtop the mouthes of ſuch Momes, this ſhall be to admoniſh all and ſingular readers hereof, that the diſcourſe of this poore blinde womans life and death, in ſuch ſort as is above prefixed, hath been confeſſed to be verie true, by divers perſons of worthy credit, and yet living; and alſo hath been ſpecially peruſed and examined by W. Bainbridge, before mentioned, Bayliffe then of Darby; who as well of his own knowledge, as by ſpeciall inquirie and conference by him made, with divers others, hath certified us the ſame to be undoubted; beſide the teſtimoniall of John Cadman, Curate of the ſaid Town, and of other alſo, upon whoſe honeſty well known, and their report herein nothing differing from ſuch as were beſt acquainted with that matter, I have been here the more bold to commit this ſtorie to poſteritie, for all good men to conſider, and judge upon.

Edward Sharp.

September 8.

The martyrdom of Edw. Sharp at Briſtow.

ABout the beginning of the next moneth following, which was September, a certain godly, aged, devout perſon, and zealous of the Lords glory, born in Wiltſhire, named Edward Sharp, of the age of fourtie yeers or thereabout, was condemned at Briſtow to the like Martyrdome, where he conſtantly and manfully perſiſting in the juſt quarrell of Chriſts Goſpel, for miſliking and renouncing the ordinances of the Romiſh Church, was tried as pure gold, and made a lively ſacrifice in the fire: in whoſe death, as in the death of all his other Saints, the Lord be glorified and thanked for his great grace of conſtancie; to whom be praiſe for ever, Amen.

Foure ſuffered at Mayfield.

September 24. The Martyrdome of 4. at Mayfield in Suſſex.

NExt after the martyrdome of Edward Sharp, above ſaid, followed foure, which ſuffered at Mayfield, in Suſſex, the 24. day of September, Ann. 1556. of whoſe names, two we finde recorded, and the other two we yet know not, and therefore according to our regiſter, hereunder they be ſpecified, as we finde them.

John Hart.
Thomas Ravenſdale.
A Shoemaker.
And a Currier.

Which ſaid foure, being at the place where they ſhould ſuffer, after they had made their prayer, and were at the ſtake ready to abide the force of the fire, they conſtantly and joyfully yeelded their lives for the teſtimonie of the glorious Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, unto whom be praiſe for ever and ever, Amen.

September 25. The Martyrdome of a Carpenter at Briſtow.

The day after the Martyrdome of theſe foreſaid at Mayfield, which was the 25. of September, Ann. 1556. was a young man (which by ſcience was a Carpenter, whoſe name we have not) put to death, for the like teſtimonie of Jeſus Chriſt, at Briſtow, where he yeelding himſelf to the torments of the fire, gave up his life into the hands of the Lord, with ſuch joyfull conſtancy and triumph, as all the church of Chriſt have juſt cauſe to praiſe God for him.

The martyrdome of Iohn Horn and a woman.

September 27. The martyrdome of John Horn, and a woman at Wotton Underhedge in Gloceſterſhire.

NOw not long after the death of the ſaid young man at Briſtow, in the ſame moneth were two moe godly Martyrs conſumed by fire at Wotton Underhedge in Gloceſterſhire, whoſe names are above ſpecified, which died very gloriouſly in a conſtant faith, to the terror of the wicked, and comfort of the godly. So graciouſly did the Lord work in them, that death unto them was life, and life with a blotted conſcience was death.

A pitifull ſtory concerning the unmercifull handling of William Dangerfield, and Ioan his wife being in child-bed, taken out of her houſe, with her ſucking Infant of fourteen dayes old, and laid in the common jayle amongſt theeves and murtherers.

The cruell handling of W. Dangerfield and Joan his wife.

VVHen I had written and finiſhed the ſtorie of the Garnſey women, with the young Infant there with them burned, and alſo had paſſed the burning of the poore blinde woman Joan Waſte at Darbie, I well hoped I ſhould have found no more ſuch ſtories of unmercifull crueltie ſhewed upon ſilly women with their children and young infants: but now coming to the perſecution of Gloceſterſhire about the parts of Briſtow, I finde another ſtory of ſuch unmercifulneſſe ſhewed againſt a woman in child-bed, as far from all charitie and humanitie, as hath been any other ſtory yet hitherto rehearſed, as by the ſequell hereof may appear.

In the Pariſh of Wotton Underhedge, not far from Briſtow, was dwelling one W. Dangerfield, a right honeſt and godly poore man, who by Joan Dangerfield his wife had nine children, and ſhe now lying in child-bed of the tenth. This William after he had been abroad from his houſe a certaine ſpace, for feare of perſecution, hearing that his wife was brought to bed, repaired home to viſit her, as naturall duty required, and to ſee his children, ſhe being now delivered foure dayes before.

The returne of this man was not ſo ſoone knowne to ſome of his unkinde and uncharitable neighbours, but they, incenſed with the ſpirit of Papiſtrie, eftſoones beſet the houſe about, and there tooke the ſame William Dangerfield, and carried him to priſon, and ſo at length he was brought to the Biſhop, being then Brookes, in whoſe cruel handling he remained a certain ſpace, ſo long, till his legs almoſt were fretted off with irons.

W. Dangerfield apprehended in his own houſe.

After the apprehenſion of the huſband, the wife likewiſe was taken, with her young born childe, being but fourteene dayes old (as is ſaid) out of her child-bed, and carried into the common Jayle, and there placed amongſt theeves and murtherers, where both ſhe & her poore innocent found ſo ſmall charitie amongſt the Catholique men, that ſhe never could come to any fire, but was driven to warm the clothes that ſhe ſhould put about the childe in her boſome.

No charity in Popery to be noted.

Joan the wife of W. Dangerfield taken with her young infant out of child-bed, and had to priſon.

In the meane ſeaſon while they lay thus incloſed in ſeverall priſons, the huſband and the wife, the Biſhop beginneth to practiſe not with the woman firſt, as the Serpent did with Eve, but with the man, craftily deceiving his ſimplicitie with faire glozing words, falſly perſwading him that his wife had recanted, and aſking him, wherefore he ſhould more ſtand in his owne conceit, then ſhe being as well learned as he, and ſo ſubtlely drew out a forme of recantation, wherewith he deceived the ſimple ſoul. Whereunto after that he had once granted that he would conſent, although he had not yet recanted, they ſuffered him to go to his wife, where ſhe lay in the Common Jayle.

Dangerfield made to beleeve falſly, that his wife had recanted.

Dangerfield upon hope of his wives recantation, conſented to the Biſhop.

Then they with melting hearts opening their mindes one to another, when he ſaw his wife not releaſed, and perceiving that he had not done well, he declared unto her the whole matter, how falſly he was circumvented by the ſubtle flatterings of the Biſhop, bearing him in hand, that certainly ſhe had recanted: and thus deceiving me (ſaid he) brought this unto me, and ſo plucked out of his boſome the copie of the recantation, wherunto he had granted his promiſe. At the ſight whereof the wife hearing what her huſband had done, her heart clave aſunder, ſaying, Alack, thus long have we continued one, and hath Satan ſo prevailed, to cauſe you to break your firſt vow made to Chriſt in baptiſme? And ſo departed the ſaid William and Joan his wife, with what hearts the Lord knoweth. Then began he not a little to bewail his promiſe made to the Biſhop, and to make his prayer to Almighty God, deſiring him that he might not live ſo long as to call evill good, and good evill; or light darkneſſe, or darkneſſe light; and ſo departed he home toward his his houſe: where, by the way homeward (as it is affirmed) he tooke his death, and ſhortly after departed, according to his prayer, after he had endured in priſon 12. weekes.

The prayer of Dangerfield to God.

The death of the huſband.

After this, Joan his wife continued ſtill in priſon with her tender infant, till at laſt ſhe was brought before that Biſhop to be examined. Whereunto what her anſwer were, it is not certainly known. Howbeit moſt like it is whatſoever they were, they pleaſed not the Biſhop, as appeared by his ire increaſed againſt the poore woman, and her long continuance in the priſon, together with her tender babe, which alſo remained with her in the Jayle, partaker of her Martyrdome, ſo long as her milk would ſerve to give it ſuck, till at length the childe, being ſtarved for cold and famine, was ſent away when it was paſt all remedie, and ſo ſhortly after died. And not long after the mother alſo followed. Beſides the old woman which was mother of the huſband, of the age of eightie yeers and upward, who being left in the houſe after their apprehenſion, for lack of comfort there periſhed alſo.

The young infant famiſhed in priſon.

The martyrdome of the mother.

The death of the old woman.

And thus have ye in one ſtorie the death of foure together; firſt of the old woman, then of the huſband, after that of the innocent childe, and laſtly of the mother. What became of the other nine children, I am not perfectly ſure, but that I partly underſtand, that they were all undone by the ſame.

This ſtorie is reported and teſtified as well by other, as namely by Miſtreſſe Bridges, dwelling in the ſame Towne, and partaker then of the like afflictions, and hardly eſcaped with her life.

A Shoo-maker ſuffering in Northhampton.

In the moneth of October following, was burned at the town of Northhampton a Shoo-maker, a true witneſſe and diſciple of the Lord, who according to the grace of God given unto him, cleaving faſt to the ſound doctrine and preaching of Gods word, renounced the untrue and falſe coloured religion of the Romiſh See, wherein many a good man hath been drowned.

October 11. The martyrdom of a ſhoo-maker of Northhampton.

After whom, not long after in the ſame moneth of October, died alſo in the Caſtle of Chicheſter three godly Confeſſors, being there in bonds for the like cauſe of Chriſts Goſpel, who alſo ſhould have ſuffered the like martyrdome, had not their naturall death, or rather (as it is to be ſuſpected) the cruell handling of the Papiſts, made them away before, and afterward buried them in the field.

October 18. Three died in the Caſtle of Chicheſter, Confeſſors.

I read moreover that in this preſent yeer, to wit, Anno 1556, was burnt one called Hooke, a true witneſſe of the Lords truth at Cheſter.

John Hooke Martyr.

Five famiſhed in Canterbury Caſtle, by the unmercifull tyranny of the Papiſts, about the beginning of November.

As among all the Biſhops, Boner Biſhop of London, principally excelled in perſecuting the poore members and ſaints of Chriſt; ſo of all Archdeacons Nicholas Harpsfield Archdeacon of Canterburie (as may by mans ſight appeare) was the ſoreſt, and of leaſt compaſſion (onely Dunning of Norwich excepted by whoſe unmercifull nature and agreſt diſpoſition, very many were put to death in that Dioceſſe of Canterbury, not onely in the bloody time of that Queen, but ſome alſo in the bleſſed beginning of this our moſt renowmed Queen that now is, as by the grace of Chriſt hereafter ſhall appear.

B. Boner, Nicholas Harpsfield, D. Dunning, three ſore perſecutors.

Of thoſe that ſuffered in Queen Maries time within the aforeſaid Dioceſſe of Canterburie, ſome be recited already, with the order and forme ſet down of ſuch articles as then were moſt commonly miniſtred to the examinates by Thornton, Suffragan of Dover, and the ſaid Nicholas Harpsfield, and other, as before in the volume of this hiſtorie may appear.

Perſecution in Kent.

Now to proceed in order and courſe of time where we left, next followeth the moneth of November.

In the beginning whereof were together in the Caſtle of Canterburie fifteene godly and innocent Martyrs, of which number not one eſcaped with their life, but either were burned, or elſe famiſhed in priſon. Of the which two ſorts, which is the eaſier death, God knoweth, it is hard to judge.

15. Martyrs & Confeſſors together priſoners in Canterbury.

Notwithſtanding, the truth is, that of theſe fifteen, ten were burned and ſuffered in the fire, of whom in the next book more ſhall follow hereafter the Lord willing. The other five were pined and famiſhed moſt unmercifully in the ſtrait priſon, of whom we have here preſently to intreat. Whoſe names were theſe.

Five Confeſſors and Martyrs famiſhed in priſon.

1 Iohn Clark. | Which two were yet
2 Dunſton Chittenden. | uncondemned.
3 William Foſter of Stone.
4 Alice, Potkins wife, of Stapleherſt.
5 Iohn Archer of Cranbroke, Weaver.
These were condemned to be burnt.

W. Foſter, Alice Potkins, John Archer, died after their condemnation.

Of theſe five priſoners, the firſt two were uncondemned, the other three laſt were condemned, and ſhould have been burned, but ſuffered no leſſe torments then if they had abid the fire, being macerate and pined to death by famine. What their articles and anſwers were, I need not here to recite, ſeeing all they, in that time of Queen Marie, commonly ſuffered for one manner and ſort of cauſe, that is, for holding againſt the ſeven ſacraments, againſt the realitie of Chriſts being in his ſupper, for ſpeaking againſt the Church of Rome, and determinations of the ſame, againſt images ſet up and worſhipped in the Church, for not coming to Church, and other like, &c.

W. Foſter, Martyr. His anſwer to the articles.

Carrying about the croſſe. Neceſſity alwayes excuſed in matters indifferent.

Firſt, William Foſter, anſwering to theſe and like articles, ſaid, that he beleeved well in all the articles of the Creed: but to beleeve that there be mo ſacraments then two, and to pray to ſaints either to profit us, or to pray for ſouls in Purgatory to profit them, that faith and works do juſtifie, or to allow the Popiſh ceremonies in the Church, that he denied. Moreover he ſaid, to carry candles upon Candlemas day, were as good for him, as to carry a dung forke, and that it is as neceſſarie to carry the gallows about, if his father were hanged, as the croſſe. To come to the Church he cannot, ſaid he, with a ſafe conſcience. Concerning fiſh dayes and fleſh dayes, he granted it good to put difference therein, except where neceſſitie required the contrarie.

W. Foſter apprehended by ſir Tho. Moyle.

This William Foſter was a labouring man, of the age of fourty years. He was apprehended and impriſoned by ſir Thomas Moyle, Knight.

Mother Potkins Martyr, troubled by M. Roberts.

Alice Potkins for the like confeſſion, was condemned to be burned, for that ſhe was not, neither would be confeſſed to the Prieſt, for that ſhe received not the ſacrament of the altar, becauſe ſhe would not pray to ſaints, nor creep to the croſſe, &c. Being demanded of her age, ſhe ſaid that ſhe was 49. years old, according to her old age; and according to her young age, ſince ſhe learned Chriſt, ſhe was of one years age, and was committed by M. Roberts to priſon.

Alice Potkins in Chriſt but one yeer old.

The anſwer of John Archer Martyr.

The anſwer and confeſſion of John Archer of Cranbroke was much in like ſort. And although certain of theſe upon ignorant ſimplicitie ſwerved a little in the number of ſacraments, ſome granting one ſacrament, that is, the body of Chriſt hanging upon the croſſe, ſome moe, ſome leſſe, &c. yet in the principall matter touching the doctrine of ſalvation for faith to ſtay upon, and in diſagreeing from the dreaming determinations of the Popiſh Church, they moſt agreed. Concerning the not praying to ſaints, and for the dead in Purgatorie, for not creeping to the croſſe, for faith onely to juſtifie, for taking of an oath, and other ſuch like, he granted as the other had done. This father Archer, by his occupation a Weaver of the town of Cambroke, of the age of fiftie years, was attached and impriſoned by ſir John Gilford Knight. And thus have ye the cauſe and impriſonment of theſe five godly priſoners. Now as touching the crueltie of their death, that ye ſhall not ſurmiſe the ſuſpicion or relation thereof to proceed of my ſelf, ye ſhall hear their own teſtimonie and certification by their own letter thrown out of the priſon concerning the unmercifull dealing of the Catholique tyrants in famiſhing them, as is aforeſaid. The words and copie of their letter is this.

Sir John Gilford committed Father Archer to priſon.

The copie of a letter written and caſt out of the Caſtle of Canterbury by the priſoners there in bonds for Gods word, declaring how the Papiſts went about to famiſh them to death; of the which company five were famiſhed among them already.

The priſoners letter, declaring how they were handled and famiſhed in priſon.

BE it known to all men that ſhall read, or hear read theſe our letters, that we the poore priſoners of the Caſtle of Canterbury for Gods truth, are kept and lie in cold irons, and our keepers will not ſuffer any meat to be brought to us to comfort us. And if any man do bring any thing, as bread, butter, cheeſe, or any other food, the ſaid keeper will charge them that ſo bring us any thing, except money or rayment, to carry it them again; or elſe if he do receive any food of any for us, he doth keep it for himſelf, and he and his ſervants do ſpend it, ſo that we have nothing thereof; and thus the Keeper keepeth away our victuals from us. Inſomuch that there are foure of us priſoners there for Gods truth, famiſhed alreadie, and thus is it his minde to famiſh us all: and we think he is appointed thereunto by the Biſhops and Prieſts, and alſo of the Juſtices, ſo to famiſh us, and not onely us of the ſaid Caſtle, but alſo all other priſoners in other priſons for the like cauſe to be alſo famiſhed: notwithſtanding we write not theſe our letters, to that intent we might not afford to be famiſhed for the Lord Jeſus ſake, but for this cauſe and intent, that they, having no law ſo to famiſh us in priſon, ſhould not do it privily, but that the murtherers hearts ſhould be openly known to all the world, that all men may know of what Church they are, and who is their father. Out of the caſtle of Canterbury.

The trouble and vexation of good people in the Dioceſſe of Lichfield.

Doctor Bane, D. Draicot, his Chancellor in Liechfield cruell perſecutors.

THeſe foreſaid moneths of September, November, and December, as they were troubleſome to divers other places, and eſpecially to the Dioceſſe of Canterburie, by reaſon of the Archdeacon above named; ſo likewiſe they brought no little buſineſſe in the countrey of Lichfield and Coventrie, by a cruell Biſhop there called Ralfe Bane, and a more cruell Chancellor named Doctor Draicot, through the fierce inquiſition of whom great ſtir was there among the people, being called to examination of their faith, and many cauſed to beare fagots. Who, although they were not put to the torment of death, yet becauſe it may appeare what a number there is in the countreys of England abroad, which in their hearts have a miſliking of the Popes Romiſh laws and religion, if for fear they durſt utter their mindes, I thought to make a rehearſal of their names, which in the foreſaid Dioceſſe of Coventrie and Liechfield, were taken in ſuſpition and examined for their religion.

The names of them that bare fagots in the Dioceſſe of Liechfield and Coventrey.

And firſt amongſt them that were detected and enjoyned to the Popiſh penance, that is, to beare a fagot, candle, and beads about in proceſſion, were Agnes Forman, detected, examined, and by witneſſe convicted, and bare a fagot the 12. of September. Likewiſe Margery Kirry, Thomas Norris, Tho. Stiffe, Will. Raime, Robert Ratrenes, Tho. Smith, John Borſley the younger. Item, John Waterhouſe, againſt whom came in witneſſe witneſſe and accuſers Richard Caterbanke, I. Edge, William Smith, Robert Cooke, laying againſt him for ſeldome coming to the church, for giving no reverence at the elevation of the ſacrament, but looking upon his booke, for not kiſſing the Pare, &c. Robert Biſſel, Leonard Weſt, Richard Baily of the Pariſh of Whiteacre.

Q. MARIE. Anno 1556.

These were deprived.

Nicholas Cartwright, Doctor.
Richard Iurdian, Prieſt.
Edmund Crokel, Prieſt.
Thomas Witehead, Prieſt.
William Taylor, Prieſt.
Anſelme Sele, Prieſt.
Richard Slavy, Prieſt married.
Edward Haukes, Prieſt married.
Robert Aſton, Prieſt deprived.
Henry Tecka, Prieſt deprived.
Robert Moſſey, Prieſt, married and deprived.

The names of them which were troubled there, and bare no fagots.

Beſide theſe were divers other, which in like ſort were detected, accuſed and examined although they bare no fagot, but were diſmiſſed, as Richard Kempe, John Frankling, William Marler, Jelius Dudley, Euſtache Byſacre, William Shene, Antonie Afterwhittle, Thomas Steilbe, Henrie Birdlim, William Moſſey, John Leach, John Richardſon, Antonie Jones, alias Pulton, Thomas Wilſon, Thomas Lynacres, and Hugh Lynacres his ſon, Iſabell Parker, Martin Newman, William Enderby, Cicely Preſton, Tho. Saulter, John Stamford Shoomaker, Richard Woodburne, Thomas Arnal Shoomaker, John Robinſon, Hugh More Shoomaker, John Adale, Thomas Arch, Frances Ward, John Avines, Richard Foxall, Thomas Underdonne, Richard Weaver.

Joyce Lewes Martyr, read hereafter.

The next moneth following, being October, came under examination Joyce Lewes Gentlewoman, of whom we deferre to ſpeake untill the next yeere, at what time ſhe was burned.

Theſe forenamed perſons with many moe following in the next yeere after, although they did ſubſcribe and relent through feare of death; yet for this cauſe I doe here recite them, that by them it might appeare, what a number there were, not only in the Countrey of Liechfield, but alſo in other parts, in heart ſet againſt the Popes proceedings, if that feare rather then conſcience had not compelled them to the contrary.

The concluſion of this eleventh Booke, with a briefe ſtorie of Sir Iohn Cheeke, &c.

The concluſion of the xi. book.

AND thus have ye the whole perſecution of this yeere declared, which was the yeere of our Lord 1556. and the fourth of Queene Maries reigne, with the name and cauſes of all them which ſuffered martyrdome within the compaſſe of the ſaid yeere: the number of all which, ſlaine and matyred in divers places of England at ſundrie times this yeere, came to above 84. Perſons, whereof many were women, wives, widowes, and maidens; beſides them which otherwiſe by ſecret practiſe were made away, or driven out of goods and houſes, or out of the realme, or elſe within the realme were put to penance and coacted by forcible violence to recant, ſave onely that I have omitted the ſtory of ſir Jo. Cheek, Knight, and Schoolemaſter ſometime of K. Edward. The worthines of which man deſerveth much to be ſaid of him; but his fall would rather be covered in ſilence and oblivion. Onely to note a word or two of a few things to the preſent ſtorie moſt principally appertaining, it ſhall ſuffice.

84. Martyrs and above in this yeer 1556. put to death in this realm.

A brief declaration of M. Cheekes recantation.

Firſt Maſter Cheeke being in the Countrey of Germany, out of all danger of perſecution, with many moe of his owne countrimen and acquaintance, was not onely in ſafetie, but alſo with reputation accordingly eſteemed among the Germans, and alſo well placed in the City of Strauſbourge. Where if he had contented himſelfe to have remained, rather giving place to time, then to preſume upon adventures, peradventure it had been better with him. But what fatall inſtigation wrought in his minde I know not. In the end ſo it fell, that he would needs take his journey with Sir Peter Carew, from high Germanie unto Bruxels, and that (as I have credibly heard of them which knew ſomewhat) not without the forecaſting of his adventured journey by the conſtellation of the ſtars, and diſpoſition of the heavens above. For as he was a man famouſly expert, and travelled in the knowledge of ſundrie arts and ſciences; ſo was he a little too much addicted to the curious practiſing of this Star Divinitie, which we call Aſtrologie. But howſoever it was, or whatſoever it was that the ſtars did promiſe him, truth was, that men here in earth kept little promiſe with him. For having (as it is ſaid) King Philips ſafe conduct to paſſe and repaſſe, and that by the means (as I finde) of the Lord Paget, and ſir John Maſ. pledging for his ſafeguard King Philips fidelitie, he came to Bruxels to ſee the Queens Ambaſſadors: and having brought the Lord Paget on his way toward England, in the return betweene Bruxels and Antwerp he was taken with ſir Peter Carew by the Provoſt Marſhall, ſpoiled of their horſes, and clapped into a cart, their legs, armes, and bodies tied with halters to the body of the cart, and ſo ſhipped being blindfold under the hatches, and ſo brought to the Tower of London.

Aſtrologie.

M. Cheek and ſir Peter Carew apprehended in their journey to Antwerp.

Thus the good man being intrapped, and in the hands now of his enemies, had but one of theſe two wayes to take, either to change his religion, or to change his life, other remedie with thoſe holy Catholiques there was none. Neither could his conſcience excuſe him, nor truth defend him, nor learning help him.

M. Fecknam ſpeaketh for M. Cheeke.

Albeit maſter Fecknam, whether by the Queen ſuborned, or upon his owne devotion or friendſhip toward his old acquaintance, took upon him the defence and commendation of Maſter Cheek, ſpeaking in his behalfe: yet no mercie could be had with the Queen, but he muſt needs recant, and ſo did he. The copie of whoſe recantation preſcribed unto him, becauſe it is known and in the hands of divers, it needeth not here to be expreſſed.

The death and repentance of ſir John Cheek.

Then after his recantation, he was through the craftie handling of the Catholiques, allured firſt to dine and companie with them, at length drawne unawares to ſit in place, whereas the poore Martyrs were brought before Boner and other biſhops to be condemned; the remorſe whereof ſo mightily wrought in his heart, that not long after he left this mortall life. Whoſe fall although it was full of infirmity, yet his riſing again by repentance was great, and his end comfortable, the Lord be praiſed.

The ordet and manner of the Cardinals viſitation in Cambridge, with the condemning, taking up, and burning the bones and books of Bucer and Paulus Phagius.

Anno 1557. Ianuary 9.

Viſitation of Cambridge, with the burning of Martin Bucer and Paulus Phagius bones.

Cardinall Poole, thrée yéers after his return into England, having ſomewhat withdrawn his minde from other affairs of the realm, and having in all points eſtabliſhed the Romiſh religion, began to have an eye to the Univerſitie of Cambridge, which place among other, ſpecially ſéemed to have néed of reformation out of hand. To perform this charge were choſen Cutbert Scot, not long before conſecrated Biſhop of Cheſter, Nicholas Ormanet an Italian, Archprieſt of the people of Bodolon, in the Dioceſſe of Veron, profeſſed in both the laws, and bearing the name of the Popes Datarie, Thomas Watſon, elected biſhop of Lincoln, John Chriſtopherſon, elected Biſhop of Chicheſter, and Henrie Cole Provoſt of the Colledge of Eaton. There was good cauſe why the matter was eſpecially committed to theſe perſons. For as touching Ormanet, it is well known that he was a man of much eſtimation with Julius the third, at that time Biſhop of Rome, and was appointed to come into England with Cardinall Poole, becauſe without his knowledge (as in whom he put his chiefe truſt and confidence) the Biſhop would have nothing done that was of any importance or weight.

The inquiſitors.

These perſons thus appointed (in the meane while as the viſitors were addreſſing themſelves to their journey) ſent their letters with the Cardinals citation before to Doctor Andrew Pern, Vicechancellor then of Cambridge with the other Commiſſioners aſſociate, commanding him to warne all the Graduats of the Univerſitie, in their name, to be in a readineſſe againſt the 11. day of January, betwixt eight and ten of the clock, in the Church of St. Marie the Virgin: willing him eſpecially to be there himſelf in preſence, and alſo to ſet forward all the reſidue, to whoſe charge it belonged, that they ſhould ſearch out all Statutes, Books, Priviledges, and Monuments appertaining to the Univerſity, or to any of the Colledges, or finally to any of themſelves, and theſe to preſent the ſame before them at the day appointed, and every man to appeare there perſonally: for they would not fail, but be there at the ſame time, to lay before them ſuch things as ſhould ſéeme neceſſarie to this charge of reforming the Univerſitie, and further to give charge of all ſuch things as ſhould ſéeme moſt for the profit and behoofe of the ſame, together with ſuch things as were to be done on their part, according as ſhould ſéeme moſt agréeable to the Decrées of the Canon Law.

A citation ſent before to D. Andrew Pern, Vicechancellor.

This citation of the Cardinall, being brought to Cambridge by maſter Bullock, was firſt exhibited in the Convocation houſe of regents, and there openly read by the Orator of the Univerſity the 11. of December.

After this, upon the 24. of December, which was Chriſtmaſſe even, the Vicechancellor with the heads of the houſes méeting together in the ſchools, it was there concluded, that the Viſitors charges ſhould be born by the Univerſity and Colledges (which then coſt the Univerſitie an hundred pound thick) and alſo that no Maſter of any Colledge ſhould ſuffer any of the Fellows, Schollers, or Miniſters to go forth of the town, but to return before the viſitation.

Preparation in Cambridge toward the Viſitation.

On Friday the eighth of Januarie, the Quéens Commiſſioners, videlicet, Doctor Perne Vicechancellor, Doctor Segewicke, Doctor Harvie, maſter Franck, Ruſt, and another who is here nameleſſe, and alſo Sir James Dier, the Recorder, Maſter Chapman, Evered ſitting together in the Hall, certain were there called by the appointment of L. Hawes, and charge given what ſhould be done. And firſt the Commiſſion was read. Then were all the high Conſtables called to bring in their precepts, and ſworn. Alſo two of every Pariſh of ten or twelve hundreds, were ſworn to inquire of hereſie, lollardie, conſpiracie, ſeditious words, tales, and rumours againſt the King and Quéene. Item, for hereticall and ſeditious books, for negligences and miſdemeanor in the Church, for obſervation of ceremonies, for Ornaments, and ſtocke of the Church.

We ſaid at the firſt, that the Cardinall thought the Univerſitie to have néed of reformation. The reaſon why he ſhould think ſo, was this; either becauſe the ſame of long continuance ſince any man could remember, had caſt off the yoke of the Biſhop of Rome, and cleaved to the wholſome doctrine of the Goſpel; or elſe by reaſon that both for the late ſchiſme, not yet worne out of memorie, and for the doctrine of Martine Bucer, who not long before openly in the ſaid Univerſitie interpreted holy Scripture, they ſaw many ſo ſore corrupted and ſpotted with this infection, that (even as when fire is ſpread in a town) unleſſe a ſpéedie remedie were adhibited out of hand, it were not poſſible to their thinking, to quench it many yéers after. Who alſo feared (if it were not looked to in time) leſt this miſchiefe ſhould take root, and by little and little infect all the members next unto it, which yet were whole and ſound.

The cauſe why the reformation was taken in hand.

This was the yéer of our Lord, 1556. To the intent therefore to make a ſalve for this ſore, the inquiſitors, of whom we ſpake before, came unto Cambridge the ninth day of Januarie. And as they were yet in their iourney, not farre from the towne, divers of the Maſters and Preſidents of the Colledges met them, and brought them courteouſly, firſt into the town, and after to their lodgings. They were entertained in Trinity Colledge by Maſter John Chriſtopherſon Maſter of the ſame houſe, and lately before elected biſhop of Chicheſter. Notwithſtanding they were deſired, ſome to one place, and ſome to another, as occaſion ſerved, either to do their duties, or to ſhew their good wils: Cole to the Kings Colledge, and Doctor Watſon to Saint Johns. But whether it were for the acquaintance of Chriſtopherſon, or for the largeneſſe of the houſe, which ſeemed moſt convenient for their purpoſe, they all took up their lodgings in the ſaid colledge with M. Chriſtopherſon.

An Oration gratulatory at their coming thither.

At their coming thither an Oration was made by a fellow of the houſe, who in the name of all the reſt, with long proteſtation declared that they were moſt heartily welcome thither, and that he and his fellowes gave them great thanks, that it had pleaſed their Lordſhips to have ſo good opinion of them, as to chuſe their houſe eſpecially to lodge in, whereby they had both incouraged them to ſtand in hope of ſome further benevolence towards them, and alſo done great worſhip to their Colledge by their being there: wherefore they ſhould look at their hand againe foraſmuch dutie and reverence, as lay in their power to performe.

Watſon anſwereth to the Oration.

To this Oration Watſon made anſwer, that this forward and earneſt good wils and mindes of theirs, in doing ſuch courteſie, was right thankfully taken, both of him, and his, exhorting them to continue ſtedfaſtly in the ſame, and to proceed alſo when need ſhould require: for it was ſo far from any of their thoughts, to ſtop them in this their race, that they would rather haſte them forward to run through more ſpeedily, being not without good cauſe perſwaded to conceive good hope of their benevolence towards them, in as much as they would do for them, whatſoever might turne to their profit and commoditie.

January 9. January 10. S. Maries and S. Michaels interdicted becauſe of Martin Bucer & Paulus Phagius buriall.

This day, forſomuch as it was toward Evening ere they came, and the Sun was going downe, was nothing elſe done. The next day, being the tenth of Januarie, they beſtowed in recreating themſelves after their iourney, and in ſetting other things at a ſtay. Neverthele ſſe, to the intent the ſame ſhould not eſcape altogether without doing ſomewhat, they interdicted the two Churches, namely St. Maries, where M. Bucer, and Saint Michaels, where Paulus Phagius lay buried.

Commendation of Martin Bucer.

Theſe men were dead a good while before Paulus Phagius had ſcarce yet ſhewed the proofe of his wit and learning, when he departed to God, 1549. Bucer lived but a little after. During which time ſomewhat by writing, but chiefly by reading and preaching openly (wherein the old man, being painfull in the word of God, never ſpared himſelf, nor regarded his health) he brought all men into ſuch admiration of him, that neither his friends could ſufficiently praiſe him, neither his enemies in any point finde fault with his ſingular life and ſincere doctrine. A moſt certaine token whereof may be his ſumptuous buriall, ſolemnized with ſo great aſſiſtance and gladneſſe of all the degrees of the Univerſitie, that it was not poſſible to deviſe more to the ſetting out and amplifying of the ſame. The whole manner and order of the doing whereof being written by Maſter Nicholas Carre, a learned man, in a little treatiſe to Sir John Cheeke Knight, with an Epiſtle full of conſolation, as concerning his departure added thereunto, was ſent afterward unto Peter Martyr, then abiding at Oxford.

From the buriall of Bucer and Phagius, unto the coming of theſe Viſitors, were paſſed about three or foure yeers more or leſſe. And from the time that that bleſſed King, Edward the Sixth deceaſed, unto that day, the Prieſts never ceaſed to celebrate their maſſes, and other kinde of ceremonies in thoſe places, and that without ſcruple of conſcience, as far as men could perceive. But after the time that theſe Commiſſioners came thither, thoſe things that before were accounted for ſacred and holy, began to be denounced for prophane and unholy. For they commanded that all thoſe aſſemblies that ſhould hereafter be made for the executing of holy ceremonies, ſhould be removed to the Kings Chappell, which is a place far more ſtately then all the other.

January 11.

Now was come the 11. day, in the which the Vicechancellor of the Univerſitie, with the Maſters and Preſidents of Colledges, and all the other Graduates of every houſe, were commanded to appeare before the ſaid Commiſſioners in their Habits. It was commanded that the ſchollers alſo ſhould come in their ſurplices, but that was not done. They aſſembled in great number to Trinity Colledge, having the Univerſitie croſſe borne before them, and in the gatehouſe a fourme was ſet and covered, with cuſhions and carpet on the ground for the Viſitors. Where the Vicechancellor, having on a Tiſhew cope, ſprinkled holy water on them, and purpoſed to cenſe them, but they refuſed it there, which notwithſtanding afterward in the Queens Colledge and elſewhere they refuſed not.

There Maſter John Stokes, common Orator of the Univerſitie, made an Oration in the name of all the reſt. The Copie whereof I thought good here to exemplificate in Latine, as it was pronounced.

Maſter Stokes Oration to Queene Maries Viſitors at Cambridge, An. 1557. Ianuarie 11.

The Oration of M. Stokes publike Orator of the Univerſitie.

ACademia, Reverendi Patres, in expectatione adventus veſtri ſollicita aliquandiu fuit; nunc præſentiæ dominationum veſtrarum valde recreata libentiſſime vultus veſtros intuetur, & ad apertam voluntatis ſuæ teſtificationem ecce univerſa ſe ſuaſq; opes effudit. Convenit in hunc locum tota Cantabrigiæ frequentia, adſunt omnes ordines, de quorum certa mihi & explorata ad hanc rem voluntate illud publica fide apud dominationes veſtras affirmo, eos, & ſeparatim ſingulos, & conjuctim omnes, optatiſſimum hunc adventum mirificis ſtudiis, & conſentientibus animis gratulari. Illud enim omnium animis habemus perſuaſum, & negotium hoc quod hodierno die, favente Deo, excellentia veſtra auſpicatur, ad academiæ rationes fore accommodum, neque in re ad communem ſalutem tam neceſſaria operam aliquando veſtram nobis defuturam. Permulta ſunt ad hanc opinionem confirmandam, ſed cætera non perſequor: ea tantum oratione attingam, quæ ita intime cum præſenti negotio cohærent, ut divelli ab eo diſjungique nulla ratione poſſint. Atque ſunt illa quidem numero certa & finita; verum re & virtute ita immenſa, ut nulla dicendi facultate mea plenè comprehendi poſſint: quoniam tamen ut antea ſum profeſſus ſummam eſſe academiæ lætitiam, eamque juſtis de cauſis in adventu veſtro ſuſceptam, quæſo à vobis ut dum eas breviter recenſeo faciles mihi aures præbeatis.

Cardinal Polus.

Reverendiſ. in Chriſto Pater Cardinalis Polus, Legatus, qui religionem oppreſſam reſtituit, patriæ ruinas ſuffulſit, leges & decreta quaſi poſtliminio reduxit, iſte inquam, iſte Polus Anglus & vere noſter Moſes, legationis veſtræ autor eſt, a cujus excellenti vertute in omnes ſuæ patriæ partes plurima commoda dimanarunt. Quo vinculo neceſſitudinis, etſi omnibus temporibus optima ab illo ſperare liceret, quod ex corpore ſinus ipſius Reipub. arctior eſt tamen & interior cauſa, quæ nobis cum dominatione illius ſeparatim intercedit. Superiore anno academiæ procurationem in ſe humaniſ. recepit, quam liberari cuſtodia ita cœptam tenere ſe velle literis ſignificavit, ut non ſolum incommoda dimoveret, quibus ſtudia noſtra affligerentur, ſed ut ornamenta adjiceret ea, quorum ſplendore augeri dignitas Academiæ aut maxime illuſtrari poſſet. Quæ res & ſpem antea noſtram confirmavit, & nunc in eam cogitationem nos adducit, ut omnem illius humanitatem in hanc unam viſitationem eſſe collectam putemus, in qua quidem ea à vobis expectamus omnia, quæ ſummi Cancellarii noſtri inſignis amor, præter communem charitatem Academiæ, quaſi pupillæ ſuæ propriæ pollicetur. Atque utinam quidem ipſe ſine Reipublicæ detrimento hoc tempore adeſſe poſſet, & Academiam ſuam è tenebris & profunda nocte emerſam ipſe ſuis radiis veræ religionis ſplendore illuſtraret: verum optioni noſtræ publica utilitas repugnat, qua valde impeditus ſanctiſſimæ ſedis Apoſtolicæ legatus vos vicarios ſubſtituit; quorum naturas propter providentiam, perſonas propter dignitatem, voluntates propter educationem aptiſſimas ad hanc rem eſſe judicavit. Itaque illud verè & ex animis iſtorum omnium affirmare poſſum, vos eos eſſe viros quorum religionem amamus, virtutem colimus, voluntatem, fidem, & conſilium ad publicam ſalutem impendimus. Poſtquam enim ſingulari & præſtantiſſima virtute Cardinalis Poli, Legati, è ſuperiorum temporum caligine, & tenebris, lucem in republica reſpicere cœpimus, una certè graviſſima etiam ſuperioris ætatis mala ſenſimus, qubus profecto infinitis & miſerrimis etſi antea præmeremur, tamen ad calamitatis noſtræ magnitudinem acceſſit ejuſdem ignoratio, ut (mea quidem opinione) eo magis ſimus miſerabiles judicandi, quòd tam turbulenta tempeſtate jactati ne moveri quidem nos, tam gravi & periculoſa hæreſis morbo oppreſſi, aut ægrotare mentes noſtras intelleximus. Valde enim periculoſa eſt ægrotatio illa, quæcunque ſine doloris ſenſu naturam conficit, & affectos ſæpe prius extinguit, quam ægrotare ſe fateantur. Ejuſmodi morbo Academia laborabat, quæ ad alias fortaſſe res ſatis ingenioſa & ſolers, in hac Religionis cauſa, propter caput Eccleſiæ læſum, unde omnis ſentiendi vis eſt, omnino hæbes, ſtupida, & ſine mente fuit, quoad tertio ante hunc anno divina ſanctiſſimi Patris Iulii Clementia Angliæ fere emortuæ miſerata, iterum nos Eccleſiæ inſerit, corpus ſenſuſque recreat, cujus ope convaleſcens Britannia, quam certa gehennæ pericula effugerit quivis facile intelligit. Idem Academia cernit acutius, neque quicquam mali uſpiam accidiſſe putat, quo noſtra regio in hac religionis vaſtitate & ſchiſmate miſerius fuerit afflicta. Non eſt opus recenſere in hoc loco everſa Monaſteria, ſpoliata Templa, ſtrages ſacerdotum, cædes nobilium, motus & tumultus populi, totius regni egeſtatem, quæ etſi aliunde accidere poſſunt, tamen cum tam gravia ſint ut opprimant, ultionis & vindictæ potius quam probandi cauſa in malos & nocentes infligi putamus. Sed ſunt iſta fortunæ ludibria, graviora ſumus paſſi religionis & conſcientiæ detrimenta: pietas in Deum omnis evanuerat, virginalis ſacerdotum profeſſio ad libidinem ſoluta eſt, animus quaſi conſopitus jacebat, quem nullæ Ceremoniæ excitabant, ipſa mens opinionum varietate ita diſtricta, ita ſibi ipſi diſſentiens, ut infinitis erroribus implicaretur. In his erant duo præcipue fontes, ex quorum rivulis & hauſiſſe Academiam paulo liberalius, & illa potione ferme inebriatam confitemur.

Prior ortum habebat ex illa noſtri violenta divulſione à Catholicæ Eccleſiæ unitate, re non diſſimili illius pugnæ, quam olim Menenius Agrippa, in inteſtina civium diſcordia, de corpore humano memorabat. Poſterior ex immenſa palude & cœno Wicleviano emanavit: quem celebris apud nos imo miſerabilis de Sacramento altaris patefecit. De cujus rei veritate plerique ſuo ſenſu abundantes pro arbitrio quiſque ſuo ſtatuerat. Nos Philoſophos, nec illos quidem optimos, imitati ex Epicureorum ſchola ad ſcripturæ lumen aliquid attulimus. Quod enim Chriſtus omnino, præciſe, & ſine exceptione, de vera & perpetua ſui corporis præſentia affirmarat (in cujus verbi veritate fundamentum fidei noſtræ collocatur) id nos ita ſumus interpretati, ut mancam & alienam Chriſti vocem judicaremus, niſi illa Epicuri propria particula (quaſi) adderetur, & quod Chriſtiani corpus & ſanguinem, id nos quaſi corpus & ſanguinem diceremus. Sed non eſt iſtius temporis præterita nimium meminiſſe, quæ utinam æterna oblivione obrui poſſent, neque ulla tantæ labis memoria ad poſteros noſtros propagetur; tamen fuerunt attingenda generatim quidem, quòd erranti confeſſio ſalutaris ſit: membratim vero, quod Academia his vulneribus à Cenſoria poteſtate confecta, à Cenſoria medicina ad ſalutem reduci poſtulat. Ipſa vero pro ſe & ſuis ſpondet omnes in authoritate veſtra futuros, quos aſſiduis concionibus adeo ad pœnitentiam edocuit, ut et eos ad ſanam religionem fidiſſime tranſiſſe, & in eadem diligenti præſentis vitæ uſu ſuperioris ætatis damna ſarcituros putetis. Nam qui primi in hoc curſu ſunt, acerrimè contendunt in eo, quod tam voluntariè ſuſceperunt: & qui pigrius egreſſi quaſi pomeridianis horis ad hoc certamen acceſſerunt, ea certè præbent jam immutatæ voluntatis indicia, ut quomodo temere & juveniliter à ſana religione defecerunt, ita non niſi maturi & cum judicio ab hæreſi deſciviſſe videantur. Vniverſis vero ſimul reſtituta & deſiderata religio magis placere videtur, quam ſi aſſidue præcepta, neque ad tempus obſcurata fuiſſet.

Quapropter Academia ſupplex & proſtrata primum à Deo immortali pacem & veniam petit, precaturque ab eo, ut hodiernum diem ad ſuorum ſalutem conſervandam, & Rempubl. hanc conſtituendam illuxiſſe patiatur. Deinde pro ſe, pro ſuis, pro univerſis, pro ſingulis, hanc petitionem ad celſitudines veſtras affert, ut ſuperiorum temporum offenſas ex errore & injuſtitia profectas præſenti hominum induſtriæ condonetis. De reliquis vero pro ſumma prudentia veſtra, & ſingulari in nos amore, eam ſententiam feratis, ut ſuorum cauſas vel juſtitia veſtra bonas inveniat, vel clementia bonas eſſe faciat. In utroque par erit beneficium, ſive Academiam pro cauſarum æquitate judicaveritis, ſive pro amoris veſtri abundantia innocentem eam eſſe volueritis. Nos pro referenda gratia ſummam in ſacris modeſtiam, aſſiduam in litteris operam, perpetuum veræ religionis amorem, ſempiternam veſtri beneficii memoriam repromittimus.

When he had made an end of ſpeaking, the Biſhop of Cheſter anſwered thereunto, that they tooke in right good part, that the mother the Vniverſitie had made ſo open a declaration of her good will toward them: for the which he gave moſt hearty thankes, deſiring her to performe in deed, and in her workes, the things that ſhe had ſo largely promiſed of her ſelfe in words and communication.

The anſwer of M. Scot, B. of Cheſter, to the Oration of John Stokes.

AS concerning their good wils, there was no cauſe to miſtruſt. For their coming thither was not to deale any thing roughly with ſuch as fell to the amendment: but both the Cardinall himſelfe, and they alſo, were fully minded to ſhew favour, deviſing how to bring all things to peace and tranquilitie, deſiring nothing more earneſtly, then that they which have erred and gone aſtray, ſhould returne into the right path againe. The right reverend father, the Lord Cardinall whom he wiſhed to have beene preſent, wiſhed the ſelfe ſame thing alſo, deſiring nothing ſo much as he with his owne hands to ſuſtaine and hold up, now ready to fall, or rather to raiſe up already fallen to the ground, the Univerſitie his Ward: for he gladly taketh upon him the name and dutie of her Guardian, whom it greatly grieved, that the infections of the times paſt had ſpread abroad ſo grievous diſeaſes, that even the Univerſitie it ſelfe was touched with the contagious ayre thereof. For he would gladlier have come hither to viſit and ſalute it, then to correct it, if the weightie affaires of the realme would have permitted it. But now ſeeing he could not ſo doe, he had appointed this Commiſſion, in the which he had aſſigned them to be his Deputies, which (becauſe they knew him to ſet ſo much ſtore by the Univerſitie) ſhould extend the more favour to it, and (becauſe they themſelves had been there brought up) would the more earneſtly imbrace it. The chiefe matter that they came for, tended to this end, that ſuch as had erred ſhould confeſſe their faults, and returne into the right way againe. For they were in good forwardneſſe of healing, that acknowledged themſelves to have offended. And therefore it was wiſely propounded on his part, that he would not altogether excuſe the faults of the Univerſitie, nor of other men, but confeſſe and acknowledge the crime, as that there were many things had need to be corrected and amended.

The Commiſſion ſigned by the Cardinall, and why.

The cauſes declared.

The cauſe why they were ſent thither, was to raiſe up them that were fallen, and to receive into favour ſuch as were ſory and would amend, wherein, if (contrary to their expectation) they ſhould not be able to do ſo much with ſome men as they would: yet notwithſtanding according to their dutie they would ſhew themſelves ſo diligent for their part, as that no lacke might be found in them. For it was more openly knowne, then that it could be denied, that many men did divers things of a froward wilfulneſſe, and tooke ſtoutly upon them: wherewith as they were greatly moved and grieved (as reaſon was) ſo they coveted to remedie the miſchiefe. Againſt whom, if any thing ſhould ſeeme hereafter to be ſtraitly determined, it was to be imputed to their owne deſerts, and not to the wils of them. Neither ought ſuch as are whole and ſound to be moved at the chaſtiſement of others, for ſo much as it pertained not onely to the wiping out of the foule blot which now ſticked in the Univerſitie, but alſo to the health of many others which had taken much hurt by the infection of them. For their own parts they more inclined unto mercie then rigor. Howbeit, conſidering that ſo great diſeaſes could not by gentle medicines be healed, yet were driven of neceſſitie no uſe ſtronger. And yet if they would be contented to be brought againe to their right mindes, which thing they chiefely coveted (for they wiſhed that all ſhould amend and be led by wholeſome counſell) and would yet at length waxe wearie of their errors, and in ſtead of them frequent againe the ancient cuſtomes of themſelves, and of their forefathers, they might boldly looke for all kinde of humanitie and gentleneſſe at their hands, in all this their buſineſſe of reformation, which they had now entred and begun, requeſting no more of the Univerſitie, but to doe as became them: which being performed, he promiſed that their benevolence, neither in any publike nor in any private perſons caſe, ſhould in any wiſe be behinde hand.

Mercy more commended of all men, but rigor moſt commonly in acts of moſt men expreſſed.

These things being finiſhed, they were brought proceſſionaliter to the Kings Colledge, by all the Graduates of the Univerſitie, where was ſung a Maſſe of the holy Ghoſt with great ſolemnitie, nothing wanting in that behalfe that might make to the ſetting forth of the ſame. In this place it was marked that Nicholas Ormanet, commonly ſurnamed Datarie, (who albeit he were inferior in eſtate unto Cheſter being a Biſhop, yet was ſuperior to them all in authoritie) while the maſſe was celebrating, eft ſtanding, eft ſitting, and ſometime kneeling on his knees, obſerved certaine ceremonies, which afterward were required of all others to be obſerved, as in proceſſe hereof was to be ſeene.

A Maſſe at the Kings colledge.

Ormanet Datary.

From thence they attended all upon the Legates to Saint Maries Church, which we declared before to have been interdicted. In the which place, for ſo much as it was ſuſpended, although no Maſſe might be ſung, yet there was a Sermon made in open audience by Maſter Peacock in the Latine tongue, preaching againſt hereſies and heretikes, as Bilney, Cranmer, Latimer, Ridley, &c. The which being ended, they proceeded eftſoones to the viſitation. Where, firſt Doctor Harvy did in the Cardinals name exhibit the Commiſſion to the B. of Cheſter with a few words in Latine. Which being accepted, and by Maſter Clerke openly read to the end, then the Vicechancellor with an Oration did exhibite the certificate under his ſeale of Office with the Cardinals citation annexed, containing every mans name in the Univerſitie and Colledges, with the officers and all the Maſters of houſes. Among whom was alſo Robert Braſſey Maſter of Kings Colledge, a worthy old man, both for his wiſdome and his hoare haires. Who hearing his owne name recited next after the Vicechancellors, ſaid; he was there preſent as all the other were: nevertheleſſe, for ſo much as the reformation of his houſe was wholly reſerved to the diſcretion of the Biſhop of Lincolne, not onely by the Kings letters Pattents, but alſo by grant of confirmation from the Biſhop of Rome himſelfe, under a penaltie, if he ſhould ſuffer any ſtrangers to intermeddle, he openly proteſted in diſcharge of his dutie, that unleſſe their commiſſion gave them authoritie and juriſdiction upon the Colledge, either by expreſſe words or manifeſt ſenſe, he utterly exempted himſelf from being preſent. This his exception they tooke all in great diſpleaſure; alleaging that they were fully authoriſed for the order of the matter by the Cardinall, out of whoſe juriſdiction, no place nor perſons was exempted: wherefore he had done evill to call into queſtion their authority, ſo well knowen to all men. Cheſter ſeemed to be more moved with the matter then all the other; and that was becauſe Braſſey had a little before obtained the worſhip of that roome, even utterly againſt his will, and manger his head, he doing the worſt he could againſt him.

Alteration betwixt Doctor Braſſey and D. Scot.

After the formall ſolemnitie of theſe things thus accompliſhed, the commiſſion being read, and the citation exhibited, all the Maſters of houſes being openly cited, every man for a while departed home to his owne houſe, with commandement to be at the common Schooles of the ſaid Univerſitie at one of the clocke the ſame day. When the degrees of the Univerſitie, commonly called Regents and non Regents, were aſſembled thither, they ſpent the reſt of the day in reading over of Charters, granted to the Univerſitie by Kings an Princes, in ſearching out of Buls and Pardons from the Pope, and in peruſing of other Monuments pertaining to the Univerſitie.

Inquiſition at the common Schooles.

The next day following, being the 12. of Januarie, they reſorted to the Kings Colledge to make Inquiſition, either becauſe the ſame for the worthineſſe thereof was chiefe and soveraigne of all the reſidue, or elſe becauſe that that houſe ſpecially before all others had beene counted, time out of minde, never to be without an heretike (as they termed them) or twain. And at that preſent time, albeit that many now a late had withdrawn themſelves from thence, yet they judged there were ſome remaining ſtill. The order and manner how they would be entertained of every Colledge, when they ſhould come to make inquiſition, they themſelves appointed, which was in this ſort.

The manner of receiving the Inquiſitors when they went to make Inquiſition.

They commanded the Maſter of every houſe together with the reſidue, as well fellowes as ſchollers, apparelled in Prieſtlike garments (which they call habits) to meet them at the uttermoſt gate of their houſe towards the towne. The Maſter himſelfe to be dreſſed in like apparell as the Prieſt when he harneſſeth himſelfe to Maſſe, ſaving that he ſhould put on uppermoſt his habite, as the reſt did. The order of their going they appointed to be in this wiſe, The Maſter of the houſe to go foremoſt. Next unto him, every man in his order as he was of degree, ſeignioritie, or of peers. Before the Maſter ſhould be carried a croſſe and holy water to ſprinkle the Commiſſioners withall, and then after that the ſaid Commiſſioners to be cenſed. And ſo after this meeting, and mumbling of a few devotions, they determined with this pompe and ſolemnitie to be brought to the Chappell.

Note the ambitious pomp of theſe Papiſts.

The Commiſſioners repreſent the Pope.

Many thought they tooke more honour upon them then belonged to the ſtate of man. Otherſome (foraſmuch as at that time they not onely pretended the juriſdiction of the Cardinall; but alſo repreſented the power and authoritie of the Biſhop of Rome himſelfe, who was accounted to be more then a mortall man) ſaid; it was farre leſſe then of dutie appertained to his holineſſe, in that the honour that was done to his Legates, was not done to them but to his Holineſſe. Now was the houre come, at which they appointed to meete: and being entered the Kings Colledge gate, where they looked for the Maſter and fellows of the houſe, ſeeing no man came to meete them, they proceeded forth to the Church doore, where they ſtayed. There perceiving how the Maſter and the reſt of the houſe were dreſſing themſelves as faſt as they could, in ſuch order as was appointed before, they came in ſuddenly upon them, before they had ſet out any foote out of their places.

Here was a foule fault committed, that theſe men came in without Proceſſion.

D. Braſſey excuſeth himſelf for the ſlackneſſe of his Proceſſion.

Then the Maſter firſt excuſed himſelfe, that he was ready no ſooner, acknowledging that it had beene his dutie to have been in a readineſſe. Secondly, he ſaid he was very glad of their comming, promiſing firſt in his owne name, and after in the name of all the reſt, as much reverence as might be, in all matters concerning their common utilitie, the which he doubted not but ſhould be performed at their hands, according to his expectation. But like as he had done the other day in S. Maries Church, the ſame exception he made to them now alſo; the which his doing he beſought them not to be offended withall. For ſeeing he did it onely for the diſcharge of his dutie, he had juſter cauſe to be held excuſed.

M. Braſſey maketh exception again.

D. Scots anſwer to M. Braſſey.

He had ſcarcely yet finiſhed his tale, but the Biſhop of Cheſter with a frowning looke and an angrie countenance interrupting him of his talke, ſaid, he needed not to repeat the things he had proteſted be fore, nor they to make anſwer any more to thoſe things wherein they had ſufficiently informed him before. He rather feared that their quarrell was not good, that they made ſuch adoe about it, and ſought ſuch ſtarting holes. For ſo were diſeaſed perſons oftentimes wont to doe, when for the paine and griefe they are not able to abids a ſtrong medicine. As though that any man were able to grant ſo ſtrong a priviledge, as to withſtand the Popes authoritie. As for the Popes letters, he ſaid, muſt needs make on his ſide, and with ſuch as were with him, and could not in any wiſe be alledged againſt him. Therefore he admoniſhed him to deſiſt from his unprofitable alteration, and to conforme himſelfe and his to ſuch things as then were in doing.

The Popes authoritie ſwalloweth up all other priviledges.

The Legates ſaluting firſt their god.

After this they went to Maſſe. Which finiſhed, with great ſolemnitie, firſt they went to the high altar of the Church, and having there ſaluted their god, and ſearching whether all were well about him or no, they walked thorow all the inner Chappels of the Church. The Church goods, the croſſes, the challices, the Maſſe bookes, the veſtments, and whatſoever ornaments were beſides, were commanded to be brought out unto them. When they had ſufficiently viewed all things, and had called forth by name every fellow and ſcholler of the houſe, they went to the Maſters lodging, where firſt and formoſt ſwearing them upon a booke to anſwer to all ſuch interrogatories as ſhould be propounded unto them (as farre as they knew) they examined firſt the Maſter himſelfe, and afterward all the reſidue, every man in his turne. But there were ſome that refuſed to take this oath, becauſe they had given their faith to the Colledge before, and alſo becauſe they thought it againſt all right and reaſon to ſweare againſt themſelves: for it was contrarie to all law, that a man ſhould be compelled to bewray himſelfe, and not to be ſuffered to keepe his conſcience free, when there is no manifeſt proofe to be laid to his charge: but much more unjuſt it is, that a man ſhould be conſtrained perforce to accuſe himſelfe. Nevertheleſſe theſe perſons alſo, after much altercation, at length (conditionally, that their faith given before to the Colledge, were not impeached thereby) were contented to be ſworne.

The oath refuſed of ſome in the Kings Colledge, and why?

The conſultation of Maſters upon the taking up of M. Bucer.

Three dayes long laſted the Inquiſition there. This was now the third day of their coming, and it was thought that the caſe of Bucer and Phagius was delayed longer then needed. For they looked to have had much altercation and buſineſſe about the matter. Now, foraſmuch as the preſent ſtate of the caſe required good deliberation and adviſement, the Vicechancellor and the Maſters of the Colledges aſſembled at the common Schooles, where every man gave his verdict what hee thought meete to be done in this matter of Bucer. After much debating, they agreed all together in this determination; that foraſmuch as Martin Bucer, whiles he lived, had not onely ſowed pernicious and erroneous doctrine among them, but alſo had himſelfe beene a ſectarie and famous heretike, erring from the Catholike Church, and giving others occaſion to fall from the ſame likewiſe: a ſupplication ſhould be made to the Lord Commiſſioners, in the name of the whole Univerſitie, that his dead carkaſſe might forthwith be digged up (for ſo it was needfull to be done) to the intent that Inquiſition might be made as touching his doctrine, the which being brought in examination, if it were not found to be good and wholeſome, the law might proceede againſt him: for it was againſt the rule of the holy Canons, that his body ſhould be buried in Chriſtian buriall. Yea, and beſides that it was to the open derogation of Gods honor, and the violating of his holy lawes, with the great perill of many mens ſoules, and the offence of the faithfull, eſpecially in ſo difficult and contagious a time as that was. Wherefore it was not to be ſuffered, that they, which utterly diſſented from all other men in the trade of their living, lawes, and cuſtomes, ſhould have any part with them in the honor of buriall. And therefore the glorie of GOD firſt and before all things ought to be defended, the infamy (which through this thing riſeth on them) with all ſpeed put away, no roome at all left unto thoſe perſons to reſt in, who even in the ſame places where they lay, were injurious and noyſome to the very elements, but the place ought to be purged, and all things ſo ordered as might be to the ſatisfying of the conſciences of the weake. In executing whereof, ſo notable an example ought to be given to all men, that no man hereafter ſhould be ſo bold to attempt the like.

They gave the ſame verdict by common aſſent upon Phagius alſo. Unto this writing they annexed another, by the which they lawfully authoriſed Andrew Perne the Vicechancellor, to be the common factor for the Univerſitie. He was a man meeteſt for the purpoſe, both for the office that he bare, and alſo becauſe that by the teſtimonie of Chriſtopherſon he was deemed to be the moſt Catholike of all others. This ſupplication, confirmed by the conſent of all the Degrees of the Univerſitie, and ſigned with their common Seale, the next day, which was the 13. of Januarie, the Vicechancellor put up to the Commiſſioners. Note here, good Reader, what a feat of conveyance this was, to ſuborne the Univerſitie under a colourable pretence to deſire this thing of them by way of petition. As who ſhould ſay, if they had not done ſo, the other would never have gone about it of themſelves.

Andrew Perne Vicechancellor, made factor for the Univerſitie in the caſe of M. Bucer and Phagius.

M. Chriſtopherſons teſtimony of Perne.

A ſupplication put up to the Inquiſitors by the Univerſitie.

Note this feate of conveyance.

But this gloſe was ſoone found out. For the Commiſſioners had given the Vicechancellor inſtructions in writing before. But peradventure they thought by this meanes to remove the envie of this act from themſelves.

Thus the Vicechancellor came unto the Commiſſioners, according to appointment made the day before, about ſeven of the clock in the morning. He had ſcarce declared the cauſe of his coming, but that he had not onely obtained his ſute, but alſo even at the very ſame time received the ſentence of condemnation, for taking up Bucer and Phagius, faire copied out by Ormanet Datarie himſelfe. This was to be confirmed by the conſent of the Degrees of the Univerſitie. Whereupon a ſolemne Convocation, called Congregatio regentium & non regentium, for the ſame purpoſe was appointed to be at nine of the clocke; where the graduates being aſſembled together, the demand was propounded concerning the condemnation of Bucer and Phagius, and the grace asked, which was this: Pleaſeth it you that Martin Bucer, for the hereſies now recited, and many other by him written, preached, and taught, wherein he died without repentance, and was buried in Chriſtian buriall, may be exhumate and taken up againe, &c. After this grace eftſoons being granted, then was the ſentence of condemnation, drawn by the Datarie, openly read, and immediately another grace asked, that the ſame might be Signed with the common Seale. The which requeſt was very lightly and eaſily obtained. And it was no marvell.

The ſentence of condemnation againſt Martin Bucer and Paulus Phagius, copied out by the Datary.

Grace asked in the congregation for the taking up of M. Bucer.

For now after the death of King Edward, ſince the time that the government of the Realme came to the hand of Queene Marie, all ſuch perſons being driven away as had rejected the Romiſh Religion (in whom well nigh alone reſted whatſoever wit and learning was in the whole Univerſitie beſides) ſuch a ſort of Raſcals were put in their roome, that all places now ſwarmed with unlearned and unnurtured Chaplaines: To whom nothing was greater pleaſure, then to cauſe all men to ſpeake ſlander and reproach of Bucer. There were divers yet left among them that ſpake againſt their demands. But they (becauſe, as it commonly cometh to paſſe, that Might overcometh Right) could nothing availe. For this is a common cuſtome in all ſuch matters and ordinances, that look what the greater number decreeth, is publiſhed in the name of all: and that which the better part diſallowed, ſeemeth as though no man at all diſallowed it.

The next day being the 14. of Januarie, all the Viſitors (only Chriſtopherſon elect of Chicheſter, excepted) came to the Kings Colledge. Where, firſt going into the Church, and there making their prayers at the greeſings, they ſo proceeded into the ſtalls, there ſitting all the Maſſe time, the companie ſtanding in their Copes, and ſinging a ſolemne Reſpond in honor of the Viſitors. After the Reſpond done, the Provoſt in the beſt Cope made to them his proteſtation, unto whom the Biſhop of Cheſter made anſwer alſo in Latine, declaring that he could not perceive to what purpoſe his proteſtation was, notwithſtanding they would accept it and beare with him. Then went they to Maſſe, which ended, the Catholike Viſitors approached up to the Altar, and tooke downe the Sacrament, and ſearched the Pixe, but firſt the two Biſhops cenſed the Sacrament.

January 14.

Then they went unto the Reveſtry, and opened the Chalices, Corporas caſes, and Chriſmatorie, and viewed all thoſe things. And ſo returning into the Provoſts chamber, divided themſelves in examination of the Provoſt, Viceprovoſt, and the reſt of the companie. The ſame day Doctor Bacon, Maſter of Gonwell hall, bade the Vicechancellor, D. Young, D. Harvy, Swineborne, Maptide, with others, home to dinner. Theſe men immediately after dinner, cauſed the common Seale of the Univerſitie to be put to the foreſaid inſtrument of condemnation, according as was determined the day before by the generall conſent of the Graduates of the Univerſitie. And by and by after, they carried the ſame to the Commiſſioners to their lodging. The which when they had received, foraſmuch as after more diligent peruſing thereof, it liked them not in all points, ſome things they raſed out, ſome they enterlined, otherſome they changed; ſo that in fine, they were faine to take the paine to ingroſſe it new againe.

The ſentence is ſigned with the common Seale of the Univerſitie.

The ſentence engroſſed new againe.

To the ſigning whereof, a Congregation was eftſoones called of all the Graduates of the Univerſitie againſt the next day, which there being read over, a new grace againe was asked and granted for ſetting to the Seale. Then were the Graduates diſmiſſed, with commandement to reſort forthwith to S. Maries Church, whither the Commiſſioners alſo repaired. When they had taken their places, Doctor Harvy preſented to them before all the company, a new Commiſſion to make inqueſt upon hereſie then newly ſent from the Cardinall, which was read immediately by Vincent of Noally, Ormanets Clerke. This done, Doctor Perne, who, as ye heard, was factor for the Univerſitie, exhibited to the Commiſſioners in the name of the Univerſitie the ſentence of the foreſaid condemnation. The copie and tenour whereof, hereafter (God willing) ſhall follow. This condemnation, being openly read, then Doctor Perne aforeſaid deſired to ſend out proceſſe to cite Bucer and Phagius to appeare, or any other that would take upon them to plead their cauſe, and to ſtand to the order of the court againſt the next Munday: to the intent that when they had exhibited themſelves, the Court might the better determine what ought to be done to them by order of Law.

their common Notarie, having firſt read it over before certaine witneſſes appointed for the ſame purpoſe, cauſed to be fixed up in places convenient, to wit, upon S. Maries Church doore, the doore of the common Schooles, and the croſſe in the market ſtead of the ſame towne. In this was ſpecified, that whoſoever would maintain Bucer and Phagius, or ſtand in defence of their doctrine, ſhould at the eighth day of the ſame moneth, ſtand forth before the L. Commiſſioners in Saint Maries Church, which was appointed the place of judgement, and there every man ſhould be ſufficiently heard what he could ſay. This commandement was ſet out with many words.

January 17. Witneſſes ſworn againſt M. Bucer.

Shortly after, the matter drew toward judgement. Therefore the next day before the day limited, which was the xvij. of Januarie, the Vicechancellor called to him to Peterhouſe (whereof he was maſter) D. Young, D. Segiſwike, and with them Bullock, Taylor, Parker, and Redman, Whitlocke, Mitch, and certaine others. Theſe men caſt their heads together how they might bear witneſſe againſt Bucer and Phagius, to convince them of hereſie. For ſeeing the matter was brought in face of open court, and becauſe it might ſo come to paſſe, that ſome Patrones of their cauſe would come out, they thought it needfull to have witneſſes to depoſe of their doctrine. What came of this their conſultation, it is not perfectly knowne.

January 18.

The eighteenth day, the Vicechancellor, going to the Inquiſitors ſitting at the Kings Colledge, did put them in remembrance, that the ſame was the day, in the which, by their Proceſſe ſent forth the xvj. day before, they had commanded to appeare in Saint Maries Church, ſuch as would take upon them to defend Bucer and Phagius by the Law. He deſired therefore that they would vouchſafe to ſit there, if perchance any man would try the adventure of the Law. They lightly condeſcended thereunto. When the Vicechancellor had brought them thither, he exhibited unto them the Proceſſe of the Citation which he had received of them to publiſh a little before, ſaying, that he had diligently executed whatſoever the contents of the ſame required. After that they had taken their places, and that no man put forth himſelfe to anſwer for the offenders, the Judges called aſide Doctor Young, Doctor Segiſwike, Bullocke, Taylor, Maptide, Hunter, Parker, Redman, above mentioned. Alſo Browne, Gogman, Rud, Johnſon, Mitch, Raven, and Carre, who had before written out the buriall of Bucer, with a ſingular commendation of him, and ſent it to Sir John Cheek Knight. Theſe men taking firſt their oath upon a booke, were commanded to beare witneſſe againſt the hereſies and doctrine of Bucer and Phagius. The 22. day of the ſame moneth was limited to this Jurie to bring in their verdict.

Other witneſſes ſworne againſt M. Bucer.

In the meane while, Ormanet and Doctor Watſon abode at home in their lodging to take the depoſition of them whom we ſhewed you before to have beene called to Peterhouſe and to have communicated with the Vicechancellor as concerning that matter, whoſe depoſitions (as I told you) never came to light. The Biſhop of Cheſter, and Doctor Cole this day viſited them of Katherine Hall, where, as farre as could be learned, nothing was done worthy of rehearſall.

A relique given by Ormanet to Trinitie Colledge.

As Ormanet the Popes Datarie was ſitting at Trinitie Colledge, John Dale one of the Queenes Colledge came to him, whom he had commanded before to bring with him the Pixe, wherein the Biſhop of Romes god of bread is wont to be encloſed. For Ormanet told them he had a precious jewel; the ſame was a linnen clout that the Pope had conſecrated with his owne hands, which he promiſed to beſtow upon them for a gift. But Dale miſunderſtanding Ormanet, in ſtead of the Pixe brought a Chalice and a ſinging cake called the hoſte, the which he had wrapped up and put in his boſome. When he was come, Ormanet demanded if he had brought him the thing he ſent him for. To whom he anſwered, he had brought it. Then give it me, qnoth he. Dale pulled out the Chalice, and the ſinging cake. When Ormanet ſaw that, he ſtepped ſomewhat backe as it had beene in a wonder, calling him block-head, and little better then a mad man, demanding what he meant by thoſe things, ſaying; he willed him to bring none of that geare, and that he was unworthy to enjoy ſo high a benefit: yet notwithſtanding, foraſmuch as he had promiſed before to give it them, he would performe his promiſe. Whereupon with great reverence and ceremonie, hee pulled out the linnen cloth and laid it in the Chalice, and the bread with it, commanding them both for the holineſſe of the thing, and alſo for the authour of it, to keepe in among them with ſuch due reverence as belonged to ſo holy a relique.

Ormanet in a pelting chafe with M. Dale.

A commandement for bringing in of hereticall books.

About the ſame time, the Commiſſioners had given commandement to the Maſters of the Colledges, that every man ſhould put in writing what bookes he had, with the authors names. And to the intent that every man ſhould execute it without deceit, they tooke a corporall oath of them. This commandement ſome executed exactly and diligently; otherſome, foraſmuch as they deemed it wrongfull, executed it ſlack enough.

Graciouſly conſidered.

We declared before that the xviij. day was limited for the day of judgement. When the day came, and that neither Bucer nor Phagius would appeare at their call in the court, nor that any put forth himſelfe to defend them; yet the courteous Commiſſioners would not proceede to judgement, which nevertheleſſe, for their contumacie, in abſenting themſelves, they might have done, conſidering how that day was peremptorie. But theſe men, being bent altogether to equitie and mercie, had rather ſhew ſome favour, then to doe the uttermoſt they might by the Law. Whereupon Vincent publiſhed the ſecond Proceſſe, and ſet it up in the ſame places, as in manner before. The meaning thereof varied not much from the firſt, but that it put off the judgement day unto the 26. of the ſame moneth. Upon the which day the Vicechancellor was ſent for to their lodging, with whom they agreed concerning the order of publiſhing the ſentence. And becauſe there ſhould want no ſolemnitie in the matter, they commanded him further to warne the Maior of the Towne to be there at the day appointed with all his Burgeſſes, which the Vicechancellor did ſpeed with all readineſſe.

January 26.

An high matter in a low houſe.

This day (as I ſaid) was the twentie ſixth of Januarie, which being now come, firſt all degrees of the mother Univerſitie were aſſembled. And to fill up this Pageant, thither came alſo the Maior and his Townſmen, and all met together in Saint Maries Church, to behold what there ſhould be determined upon theſe men. After long attendance, at length the Commiſſioners came forth, and went up to a ſcaffold that was ſomewhat higher then the reſidue, prepared for the ſame purpoſe. When they had taken their places, Doctor Perne the Vicechancellor, the Player of this Enterlude, faſhioning his countenance with great gravitie, reached to them the proceſſe that was lately publiſhed, to cite them, ſaying theſe words; I bring forth againe (quoth he) to you right reverend father, and Commiſſioners of the moſt reverend my Lord Cardinall Pool (painting out the reſt of his ſtile) this Citation executed according to the purport and effect of the ſame; omitting nothing for his part that might make to the commendation of this matter. When he had thus finiſhed his tale, by and by the Biſhop of Cheſter, after he had a little viewed the people, began in manner as followeth.

The Oration of Doctor Scot Biſhop of Cheſter, before the condemnation of Bucer and Phagius.

YE ſee (quoth he) how ſore the Univerſitie preſſeth upon us, how earneſt interceſſion it maketh unto us, not onely to denounce Bucer and Phagius, which theſe certain yeers paſt have ſpread moſt pernicious doctrine among you, to be Heretiques (as they be indeed) but alſo that we will command their dead carkaſſes, which unto this day have obtained honourable buriall among you, to be digged up, and as it is excellently ordained by the Canon law, to be caſt into fire, or whatſoever is more grievous then fire, if any can be. For the degrees of the Univerſitie deale not ſleightly nor ſlackly with us in this caſe, but do ſo preſſe upon us, and follow the ſute ſo earneſtly, that they ſcarce give us any reſpite of delay. And I aſſure you, albeit this caſe of it ſelfe be ſuch, as that even the unworthineſſe of thoſe perſons, though there were no further cauſe, ought to induce us to the doing thereof, much the rather moved with theſe ſo wholeſome petitions; it is meet and convenient we ſhould grant it. For howſoever we of our ſelves are enclined to mercie in our hearts (then the which we proteſt there is nothing under the Sunne to us more deare and acceptable) yet notwithſtanding the verie law riſeth up to revengement; ſo that the common ſalvation of you all, which the law provideth for, muſt be preferred before the private charitie of our mindes. Neither ought any ſuch negligence to overtake us for our parts, that we, being ſcarce yet eſcaped out of the ſhipwrack of our former calamitie, ſhould now ſuffer this unexpiable miſchiefe, to diſquiet any longer the conſciences of the weake.

The Oration of D. Scot biſhop of Cheſter, before the pronouncing of the ſentence of condemnation.

What diſſembling is here in theſe Pope holy Catholiques.

Tyranny covered with the viſor of mercy.

Satan transforming himſelf into an angel of light.

Moreover, it is but reaſon that we ſhould do ſomewhat at ſo earneſt intreatance and ſute of the Univerſitie. I need not to ſpeak much of our ſelves. For if we had been deſirous to enterpriſe this matter, it had been lawfull after the firſt Citation, to have proceeded to judgement: but becauſe we were willing that their defendours ſhould be heard, and that the matter ſhould be denounced and tried by law, we ſent out the ſecond proceſſe.

O Lord God, as though this were the doing of the Univerſity, and not your own.

If we had deſired revengement, we might have ſhewed crueltie upon them that are alive: of the which (alas the more pitie) there are too many that embrace this doctrine. If we thirſted for blood, it was not ſo to be ſought in withered carcaſſes and drie bones. Therefore ye may well perceive, it was no part of our wils that we now came hither; but partly induced at the intreatie of the Univerſitie, partly moved with the unworthineſſe of the caſe it ſelfe: but eſpecially for the care and regard we have of your health and ſalvation, which we covet by all meanes to preſerve.

The Wolfe pretendeth to be a Lambe.

As though the Cardinall ſent you not down, before you came to the Univer-ty.

For you your ſelves are the cauſe of this buſineſſe: you gave occaſion of this confeſſion, among whom this day ought to be a notable example, to remaine as a memoriall to them that ſhall come after, as in that which ye may learn not onely to ſhake off the filth which ye have taken of theſe perſons; but alſo to beware hereafter that ye fall no more ſo ſhamefully as ye have done. But I truſt, God will defend you, and give you mindes to keep your ſelves from it.

As concerning the parties themſelves, whoſe caſe now hangeth in law, they bare about the name of the Goſpel, whereas indeed they wrought nothing elſe then theeverie and deceit. And ſo much the wickeder were they, in that they ſought to cover ſo ſhamefull acts, with the cloak of ſo faire and holy a name. Wherefore it is not to be doubted, but that God will puniſh this deſpite, of it ſelf wicked, to you pernicious, by the authors thereof ſhamefull and abominable.

Bucer & Phagius falſly accuſed of hypocriſie by falſe hypocrites.

But if G O D, as he is ſlow to wrath and vengeance, will winke at it for a time, yet notwithſtanding if we, upon whom the charge of the Lords flocke leaneth, ſhould permit ſo execrable crimes to eſcape unpuniſhed, we ſhould not live in quiet one houre.

When he had thus ſpoken, he recited the ſentence out of a ſcroll, and condemned Bucer and Phagius of hereſie; the form and tenor of which ſentence, framed after the barbarous rude ſtile of that Church, thus followeth.

Againſt Paulus Phagius.

Paulus Phagius for commending Oecolampadius, Bucer, Melancton, and Brentine, condemned.

Paulum verò Phagium, qui præter alia, quæ hæreſim ſapiunt, ab eo in ſuis ſcriptis prolata, impiæ memoriæ Iohannem Oecolampadium, ac Martinum Bucerum prædictum, nec non Philippum Melancthonem, & Iohannem Brentium, notorios & inſignes hæreſiarchas, & eorum doctrinam, & in ejus ſcriptis impreſſis & vulgo æditis, non ſolum probando, ſed ſummis laudibus attollendo, ſe non ſolum hæreticis favere, ſed eorum falſis dogmatibus aſſentire, & ea credere, & probare : ad ea quæ credenda alios inducere, niti manifeſtè ſe oſtendit, & hic pro hæretico communiter & notoriè habitus & reputatus in hujuſmodi errore impœnitens deceſſit, non ſolum hæreticorum fautorem, ſed hæreticum fuiſſe, nec non eoſdem Martinum Bucerum, & Paulum Phagium excommunicationis & anathematis, ac alias quaſcunque contra hujuſmodi perſonas, tam de jure communi, quàm per literas, proceſſum, prædictorum ſtatutas ſententias, cenſuras et pœnas damnabiliter incidiſſe et incurriſſe; et eorum memoriam condemnandum eſſe, et condemnamus, ac eorum corpora et oſſa quæ hoc tempore pernicioſiſſimi ſchiſmatis, et aliarum hæreſium, in hoc regno vigentium, Eccleſiaſticæ fuerunt temere tradita ſepulturæ, quatenus ab aliis fidelium corporibus, et oſſibus diſcerni poſſunt juxta canonicas ſanctiones, exhumanda, et procul ab Eccleſia projicienda, et exhumari et projici mandamus, et eorum libros ac Scripturas, ſi quæ hic reperiantur, publicè comburend. et comburi præcipimus : ac eoſdem libros et Scripturas quibuſcunque, tam hujus Vniverſitatis, quam oppidi, et locorum eis adjacentium perſonis, ſub pœnis, tam ex jure communi, quàm literis proceſſuum prædictorum, ſeu quomodolibet alias contra habend. et legend. libros hæreticos ſtatutis, interdicimus.

After the ſentence thus read, the Biſhop commanded their bodies to be digged out of their graves, and being degraded from holy orders, delivered them into the hands of the ſecular power. For it was not lawfull for ſuch innocent perſons as they were, abhorring from all blood-ſhed, and deteſting all deſire of murther, to put any man to death.

The effect of Doctor Pernes Sermon againſt Martin Bucer.

Perns ſermon againſt Bucer.

Over and beſides this oration and ſentence of Doctor Scot, came in alſo Doctor Perne Vicechancellor, with his Sermon tending to the ſame effect, to the depraving of maſter Bucer, taking for his theame the place of the 132. Pſalme, Behold how good and pleaſant a thing it is, &c.

Where beginning firſt with the commendation of concord, and of the mutuall knitting together of the mindes, he alledged, that it was not poſſible to hold together, unleſſe the concord were derived out of the head, the which he made to be the Biſhop of Rome, and that it alſo reſted in the ſame.

After he had made a long proteſtation hereof, he paſſed forth to Bucer, upon whom he made a ſhamefull railing, ſaying, that his doctrine gave occaſion of diviſion in the Common-wealth, and that there was not ſo grievous a miſchiefe, which by his meanes had not been brought into the Realme.

Although all men might perceive by the books he had compiled, what manner of doctrine it was; yet notwithſtanding (he ſaid) he knew it more perfectly himſelfe, then any did, and that he had learned it apart at the Authors hand himſelfe.

D. Perns accuſation againſt Martin Bucer.

For at ſuch time as they had communication ſecretly among themſelves, Bucer (ſaid he) would oftentimes wiſh he might be called by ſome other name, then by the name he had; for this purpoſe, as though knowing himſelf guiltie of ſo grievous a crime, he might by this means eſcape unknown to the world, and avoid the talk that went among men of him.

A ſore hereſie noted of Do. Perne.

Moreover, among other things he told how Bucer held opinion (which thing he ſhould confeſſe to him his own ſelf) that God was the author and wellſpring, not onely of good, but alſo of evill; and that whatſoever was of that ſort flowed from him, as from the head-ſpring and maker thereof. The which doctrine he upheld to be ſincere; howbeit, for offending divers mens conſciences, he durſt not put it into mens heads.

Shamefull railing of D. Pern againſt Martin Bucer.

Many other things he patched together of like purport and effect, as of the ſupremacie of the Biſhop of Rome, of the marriage of Prieſts, of divorcements, and of ſhamefull uſurie alſo, as though he had deemed the ſame lawfull to be uſed among Chriſtian people, with divers other of the like ſort.

In all which his allegations, conſidering how lewdly, without all ſhame, he lied upon Bucer (as his writings evidently declare) he did not ſo much hinder his name with railing upon him, as win unto himſelf an inexpiable infamy, by forging ſo ſhamefull leaſings upon ſo worthy a man.

But what needeth witneſſe to prove him a lyar? his own conſcience ſhall make as much againſt him, as a number of men.

D. Pern ſpeaketh againſt his own conſcience in railing againſt M. Bucer.

It was reported for a truth, and that by his own familiar friends teſtified, that the ſaid Doctor Perne himſelf, either immediately after his Sermon, or elſe ſomewhat before he went to it, ſtriking himſelfe on the breaſt, and in manner weeping, wiſhed at home at his houſe with all his heart, that GOD would grant his ſoule might even then preſently depart and remaine with Bucers. For he knew well enough that his life was ſuch, that if any mans ſouls were worthie of heaven, he thought his in eſpeciall to be moſt worthie.

Verſes againſt M. Bucer and Phagius.

Whiles he was thus talking to the people, in the meane time the leaves of the Church doores were covered over with Verſes, in the which the young men to ſhew their folly, which ſcarce knew him by ſight, blazed Bucers name with moſt reproachfull Poetrie.

These things being diſpatched, Perne (as though he had ſped his matter marvellouſly well) was for his labour, of curteſie bidden to dinner to Trinitie Colledge by the Commiſſioners. Where, after the table was taken up, they cauſed the ſentence of condemnation to be copied out with all ſpeed: which being ſigned with the Biſhop of Cheſters ſeal, the next day following was for a triumph ſent to London, with divers of thoſe Verſes and ſlanderous Libels.

Anno 1557.

The ſentence of condemnation ſent to London with the Commiſſioners letters.

Beſides this, they ſent alſo their own letters, wherein they both advertiſed the Cardinall how far they had proceeded in that matter, and alſo deſired his Grace, that he would cauſe to be ſent out of hand to Smith the Maior of the town, the Commandement, commonly called a Writ, for the burning of Heretiques. For unleſſe he had the Queens Warrant to ſave him harmles, he would not have to do in the matter: and that which remained to be done in that caſe, could not be diſpatched till that Warrant came.

A Writ for burning of heretiques.

Whiles this Purſivant went on his journey, they willed to be brought unto them the books that they commanded before to be ſearched out. For they determined to throw them into the fire with Bucer and Phagius.

About the ſame time Doctor Watſon taking occaſion upon the day, becauſe it was a high feaſt, in the which was wont to be celebrated the memoriall of the Purification of the bleſſed Virgin, made a Sermon to the people upon that Pſalm, We have received thy mercy (O Lord) in the midſt of thy Temple, &c, In the which Sermon he ſpake much reproach of Bucer and Phagius, and of their doctrine.

Watſons Sermon upon Candlemas day.

He ſaid, that theſe men, and all the Heretiques of our time that were of the ſame opinion (the which for the moſt part, he ſaid, were budded out of Germanie) among other things which they had perniciouſly put into mens heads, taught to caſt away all ceremonies. Whereas notwithſtanding the Apoſtle himſelf commanded all things to be done in due order.

And upon that deed of the bleſſed Virgin and Joſeph, which was done by them as upon that day, it was manifeſtly apparant, that they with our Saviour, being then a little Babe, obſerved theſe rites and ceremonies for Catholique men to teach. For he ſaid, that they came to the Temple the ſame time with wax candles in their hands, after the manner of Proceſſion (as they terme it) in good order with much reverence and devotion, and yet we were not aſhamed to laugh and mock at theſe things with the Heretiques and Schiſmatiques.

Mary and Joſeph went a proceſſion with wax candles, or elſe D. Watſon ſaith falſe.

As he was telling his tale of Chriſt, Marie, and Joſeph, one of them that heard him, a pleaſant and merrie conceited fellow, turning himſelf to him that ſtood next him; And if it be true (quoth he) that this man preacheth, which of them I pray you (if a man might ſpur him a queſtion) bare the Croſſe before them? for that might not be miſſing in ſuch ſolemne Ceremonies. Not onely this man jeſted at the Preachers folly, but divers other alſo laughed at his manifeſt unſhamefaſtneſſe, in preaching theſe ſo vaine and fooliſh ſuperſtitions.

A queſtion to be ſpurred to D. Watſon.

While he was thus talking to his audience, John Chriſtopherſon elected biſhop of Chicheſter, being ſtricken with a ſudden ſickneſſe, fell down in a ſowne among the preaſe: and with much ado, being ſcarce able a good while to come to himſelf again, in the meane time babbled many things unadviſedly, and as though he had been out of his wits. Some thought it came upon this occaſion, becauſe he had been greatly accuſed before the Commiſſioners for miſ-ſpending and miſ-ordering the goods of the Colledge; and therefore was grieved with the matter, knowing that they had been offended with him, by that that Ormanet had cancelled before his face a Leaſe of his, by the which he had let to farme to his brother-in-law a certain Manor of that Colledge, becauſe the covenants ſeemed unreaſonable.

The ſudden ſowne of Chriſtopherſon.

By this time was returned again the Purſivant, who (as we before told) was ſent to London with the Commiſſioners letters, and brought with him a Warrant for the burning of theſe men.

Upon the receit whereof, they appointed the ſixth day of February for the accompliſhment of the matter. For it had hanged alreadie a great while in hand.

The day aſſigned for burning M. Bucer, and Paulus Phagius bones.

Therefore when the ſaid day was come, the Commiſſioners ſent for the Vicechancellor, demanding of him in what caſe things ſtood; whether all things were in a readineſſe for the accompliſhment of this buſineſſe, or no. Underſtanding by him that all things were ready, they commanded the matter to be broached out of hand.

The Vicechancellor therefore taking with him Marſhall the common Notarie, went firſt to St. Michaels Church where Phagius was buried. There he called forth Andrew Smith, Henrie Sawyer, and Henrie Adams, men of the ſame Pariſh, and bound them with an oath, to dig up Phagius bones, and to bring them to the place of execution. Marſhall took their oaths, receiving the like of Roger Smith and William Haſell the Town Sergeants, and of J. Caper, Warden of the ſame Church, for doing the like with Bucer. Smith the Maior of the Town, which ſhould be their executioner (for it was not lawfull for them to intermeddle in caſes of blood) commanded certain of his Townſ-men to wait upon him in harneſſe, by whom the dead bodies were guarded; and being bound with ropes, and laid upon mens ſhoulders (for they were encloſed in Cheſts, Bucer in the ſame that he was buried, and Phagius in a new) they were born into the midſt of the Market ſtead, with a great train of people following them.

The taking of M. Bucer and Paulus Phagius.

This place was prepared before, and a great poſt was ſet faſt in the ground to binde the carkaſes to, and a great heap of wood was laid ready to burn them withall.

The burning of M. Bucer and Paulus Phagius.

When they came thither, the Cheſts were ſet up on end with the dead bodies in them, and faſtned on both ſides with ſtakes, and bound to the poſt with a long iron chain, as if they had been alive. Fire being forthwith put to, as ſoon as it began to flame round about, a great ſort of books that were condemned with them, were caſt into the ſame.

There was that day gathered into the Town a great multitude of countrey folke (for it was Market day) who ſeeing men born to execution, and learning by inquirie that they were dead before, partly deteſted and abhorred the extreme crueltie of the Commiſſioners toward the rotten carkaſſes, and partly laughed at their folly in making ſuch preparative. For what needeth any weapon, ſaid they? As though they were afraid that the dead bodies, which felt them not, would do them ſome harme: Or to what purpoſe ſerveth that Chaine wherewith they are tyed, ſince they might be burnt looſe without perill? for it was not to be feared that they would run away.

The talk of the countrey folk of the burning of M. Bucer and Paulus Phagius.

Thus, everie bodie that ſtood by found fault with the cruelneſſe of the deed, either ſharply or elſe lightly, as everie mans minde gave him. There were very few that liked their doing therein.

The purpoſe of D. Watſons Sermon againſt Martin Bucer.

Watſons Sermon at the burning of Bucer and Phagius.

As though in theſe dayes of Queen Mary had been raiſed no Subſidies at all.

IN the meane time that they were a roſting in the fire, Watſon went into the Pulpit in Saint Maries Church, and there before his audience railed upon their doctrine, as wicked and erroneous, ſaying, that it was the ground of all miſchiefe that had happened of a long time in the common-weale. For behold (ſaid he) as well the proſperitie as the adverſitie of theſe yeers that have enſued, and ye ſhall finde that all things have chanced unluckily to them that have followed this new found faith; as contrarily all things have happened fortunately to them that have eſchewed it. What robbing and polling (quoth he) have we ſeene in this Realme, as long as Religion was defaced with Sects, the common treaſure (gathered for the maintenance of the whole publike weal) and the goods of the Realme ſhamefully ſpent in waſte for the maintenance of a few folks luſts, all good order broken, all diſcipline caſt aſide, Holidayes appointed to the ſolemnizing of ceremonies neglected; and that more is, the places themſelves beaten down, fleſh and other kinde of prohibited ſuſtenance eaten every where upon dayes forbidden, without remorſe of conſcience, the Prieſts had in deriſion, the Maſſe rayled upon, no honour done to the Sacraments of the Church; all eſtates and degrees given to ſuch a licentious libertie, without checke, that all things may ſeeme to draw to their utter ruine and decay.

Watſon ſlanderouſly depraveth the doctrine of the Proteſtants.

And yet in the meane time, the name of the Goſpel was pretended outwardly, as though that for it men ought of dutie to give credit to their erroneous opinions; whereas indeed there is nothing more diſcrepant, or more to the ſlander of GODS word then the ſame. For what other thing taught they to remain in that moſt bleſſed and myſticall Sacrament of the bodie of our Lord, than bare unleavened bread? And what elſe do the remnant of them teach unto this day? whereas Chriſt by expreſſe words doth aſſure it to be his verie bodie. How perillous a doctrine is that which concerneth the fatall and abſolute neceſſitie of Predeſtination? And yet they ſet it out in ſuch wiſe, that they have left no choiſe at all in things. As who ſhould ſay, it ſkilled not what a man purpoſed of any matter, ſince he had not the power to determine otherwiſe then the matter ſhould come to paſſe. The which was the peculiar opinion of them, that made God the author of evill, bringing men through this perſwaſion into ſuch a careleſſe ſecuritie of the everlaſting eternitie, that in the meane ſeaſon it made no matter either toward ſalvation, or toward damnation, what a man did in this life. Theſe errours (which were not even among the Heathen men) were defended by them with great ſtoutneſſe.

Watſon and Scot had both ſubſcribed to the doctrine of the Goſpel in the reign of king Edward the ſixth.

Theſe and many ſuch other things he ſlanderouſly and falſly alledged againſt Bucer, whoſe doctrine (in ſuch ſort as he himſelfe taught it) either he would not underſtand, or elſe he was minded to ſlander. And yet he was not ignorant, that Bucer taught none other things then the very ſame whereunto both he and Scot, in the reign of King Edward the ſixth, had willingly aſſented, by ſubſcribing thereto with their owne hands. While he talked in this wiſe before the people, many of them that had written Verſes before, did ſet up other new, in the which, like a ſort of water Frogs, they ſpued out their venemous malice againſt Bucer and Phagius. This was the laſt act of this Enterlude, and yet there remained a few things to be done, among the which was the reconciling of two Churches, of our Ladie, and of St. Michael, which we declared to have been interdicted before.

The reconciling of the Churches that were interdicted.

A ſolemne Proceſſion of the Univerſity and of the towns-men.

This was done the next day following, by the aforeſaid Biſhop of Cheſter, with as much ceremoniall ſolemnitie as the law required. But that impanate God, whom Bucers carkaſſe had chaſed from thence, was not yet returned thither again; neither was it lawfull for him to come there any more, unleſſe he were brought thither with great ſolemnitie: As I ſuppoſe, during all the time of his abſence, he was entertained by the Commiſſioners at Trinitie Colledge, and there continued as a ſojourner. For thither came all the Graduates of the Univerſitie, the 8. of February, of gentleneſſe and curteſie, to bring him home again. Amongſt the which number, the Biſhop of Cheſter (worthy for his eſtate to come neereſt to him, becauſe he was a Biſhop) took and carried him clad in a long Rochet, and a large Tippet of Sarcenet about his neck, wherein he wrapped his Idoll alſo. Ormanet Datarie had given the ſame a little before to the Univerſitie, for that and ſuch like purpoſes.

The order of Proceſſion in Cambridge.

When this Idoll ſhould return home, he went out the ſtraiteſt and neereſt way as other folks are wont to go, but he fetched a compaſſe about the moſt part of the Town, and romed through ſo many of the ſtreets, that it was a large houre and more, ere he could finde the way into his Church again. I beleeve the ancient Romanes obſerved a cuſtome not much unlike this in their Proceſſion, when they made ſupplications at the ſhrines of all their gods. The order of which Proceſſion was this; The Maſters Regents went before, ſinging with a loud voice; Salve feſta dies, &c. Next them followed the Biſhop of Cheſter, about him went Ormanet and his fellow Commiſſioners, with the Maſters of the Colledges, bearing every man a long Taper light in his hand. After whom, a little ſpace off, followed other degrees of the Univerſitie. Laſt behinde came the Maior and his Townſ-men. Before them all went the Bedles, crying to ſuch as they met, that they ſhould bowe themſelves humbly before the hoſte. If any refuſed ſo to do, they threatned to ſend them forthwith to the Tolboth. Their God being led with this pomp, and pacified with great ſacrificed hoſtes of Bucer and Phagius, at length ſetled himſelf again in his accuſtomed roome.

Certain of the Univerſity amerced and puniſhed.

Scot of Cheſter prayed with many words, that that day might be luckie and fortunate to himſelfe, and to all that were preſent, and that from that day forward (now that Gods wrath was appeaſed, and all other things ſet in good order) all men ſhould make themſelves conformable to peace and quietneſſe, namely, in matters appertaining to religion. After this, they beſtowed a few dayes in puniſhing and amercing ſuch as they thought had deſerved it. Some they ſuſpended from giving voices either to their own preferment, or to the preferment of any other. Some they forbade to have the charge of pupils, leſt they ſhould infect the tender youth (being pliable, to take what print ſoever ſhould be laid upon them) with corrupt doctrine and hereſie, others they chaſtiſed wrongfully without any deſert, and many a one they puniſhed, contrarie to all right and reaſon.

The decrees of the Inquiſitors.

Laſt of all they ſet forth certain Statutes, by the which they would have the Univerſitie hereafter ordered. Wherein they enacted many things as concerning the election of their Officers of the Univerſitie, of keeping and adminiſtring the goods of the Univerſitie, and of many other things. But eſpecially they handled the matter very circumſpectly for religion. In the which they were ſo ſcrupulous, that they repleniſhed all things either with open blaſphemy, or with ridiculous ſuperſtition. For they preſcribed at how many Maſſes every man ſhould be day by day, and how many Pater noſters and Avies everie man ſhould ſay when he ſhould enter into the Church, and in his entrance, after what ſort he ſhould bowe himſelf to the Altar; and how to the Maſter of the houſe, what he ſhould do there, and how long he ſhould tarrie, how many, and what prayers he ſhould ſay, what, and how he ſhould ſing, what meditations others ſhould uſe while the Prieſt is in his Memento, mumbling ſecretly to himſelf, what time of the Maſſe a man ſhould ſtand, and when he ſhould ſit down, when he ſhould make curteſie, when excluſively, when incluſively, and many other ſuperſtitious toyes they decreed, that it was a ſport then to behold their ſuperſtitions, and were tedious now to recite them.

Moreover theſe Maſters of good order, for faſhions ſake, ordained that everie man ſhould put on a Surpleſſe, not torn nor worn, but clean, forbidding them in any wiſe to wipe their noſes thereon.

Ormanet and Cole proceeded Doctors.

Theſe things thus ſet at a ſtay, when the Commiſſioners were now readie to go their wayes, the Univerſitie for ſo great benefits (which ſhe ſhould not ſuffer to fall out of remembrance many yeers after) coveting to ſhew ſome token of curteſie towards them again, dignified Ormanet and Cole with the degree of Doctorſhip for all the reſidue, ſaving Chriſtopherſon, who now, by reaſon he was elected Biſhop, preventing that degree, had received that order before. Thus at length were ſent away theſe peace-makers, that came to pacifie ſtrifes and quarrels, who through provoking every man to accuſe one another, left ſuch gaps and breaches in mens hearts at their departure, that to this day they could never be cloſed nor joyned together again.

The departing of the Inquiſitors.

Swinborns ſaying as concerning the decrees of the Inquiſitors.

Theſe Commiſſioners, before they departed out of the Univerſitie, gave commandement, that the Maſters of everie houſe ſhould copie out their Statutes, the which beſide common Ordinances, contained in them certain rules of private order, for every houſe particularly. Swinborn (who as I ſaid, was Maſter of Clarehall) being demanded whether he would have thoſe things ingroſſed in parchment or in paper, anſwered, that it made no matter wherein they were written: For the paper, or a ſleighter thing that were of leſſe continuance then paper, would ſerve the turn well enough: For he ſaid, a ſlenderer thing then that would laſt a great deale longer then thoſe decrees ſhould ſtand in force. Neither was the man deceived in his conjecture; for within two yeers after, God beholding us with mercie, called Queen Mary out of this life the 17. of November, Anno 1558. After whom her ſiſter ELIZABETH ſucceeding in the Kingdome, raiſed to life again the true Religion. Whereupon, as the Church of Chriſt began by little and little to flouriſh; ſo the memorie of Bucer and Phagius (although their bones were burnt by Cardinall Poole) was reſtored again by this godly Queen ELIZABETH, who gave then in Commiſſion to Matthew Parker then Archbiſhop of Canterburie, and to Edmund Grindall then Biſhop of London, to Maſter Gualter Haddon and others: For the performance of which Commiſſion, the ſaid reverend Biſhops addreſſed their Letters to the Vicechancellour, &c.

¶ The Oration of Maſter Acworth, Oratour of the Vniverſity, at the reſtitution of Martin Bucer, and Paulus Phagius.

The Oration of M. Acworth.

I Am in doubt, whether I may intreat of the praiſe and commendation of ſo great a Clerke (for the celebrating whereof, this aſſembly and concourſe of yours is made this day) or of the vices and calamities, out of the which we be newly delivered, or of them both, conſidering the one cannot be mentioned without the other. In the which times ye felt ſo much anguiſh and ſorrow (my right dear brethren) that if I ſhould repeat them, and bring them to remembrance again, I fear me, I ſhould not ſo much work a juſt hatred in us towards them, for the injuries received in them, and renew our old ſorrow and heavineſſe. Again, men muſt needs account me unadviſed and fooliſh in my doing, if I ſhould think my ſelf able to make him which hath lived before our eyes in praiſe and eſtimation, more famous and notable by my Oration, which he by his living and converſation hath oftentimes poliſhed. But the wickedneſſe of the times, which endeavoured to wipe cleane out of remembrance of men the name that was ſo famous and renowned in everie mans mouth, did much profit him. Inſomuch, that both in his life time all things redounded to his continuall renown, and in eſpeciall, after his deceaſe, nothing could be deviſed more honorable, then with ſo ſolemne furniture and ceremonies, to have gone about to have hurt the memoriall of ſuch a worthy man, and yet could not bring to paſſe the thing that was ſo ſore coveted; but rather brought that thing to paſſe, which was chiefly ſought to be avoided. For the deſire that men have of the dead, hath purchaſed to many men everlaſting fame, and hath not taken away immortalitie, but rather amplified and increaſed the ſame. By meanes whereof it cometh to paſſe, that he that will intreat of thoſe things that pertain to the praiſe of Bucer after his death, cannot chuſe but ſpeak of the crabbedneſſe of the times paſt, upon the which riſeth a great increaſe and augmentation of his praiſe. But his life ſo excellently ſet forth, not onely by the writings of the Clerks, Cheeke and Carre, and by the lively voice of the right famous Doctor Haddon, uttered in this place to the great admiration of all the hearers, when his bodie ſhould be laid into his grave to be buried; and after his buriall, by the godly and moſt holy preachings of the right reverend father in Chriſt the Archbiſhop of Canterbury that now is, and of Doctor Redman, the which for the worthineſſe and excellencie of them, ought to ſtick longer in our minds unwritten, then many things that are penned and put in print; but alſo by the great aſſembly of all the degrees of the Univerſitie the ſame day, in bringing him to his grave, and the next day after by the induſtrie of everie man that was endued with any knowledge in the Greek or Latine tongues; of the which, there was no man but ſet up ſome Verſes, as witneſſes of his juſt and unfained ſorrow, upon the wals of the Church: that neither at that time any reverence or dutie which is due to the dead departing out of this life, was then overſlipped, or now remaineth undone, that may ſeem to pertaine either to the celebrating of the memoriall of ſo holy or famous a perſon, or to the conſecrating of him to everlaſting memorie. We at that time ſaw with our eyes this Univerſitie flouriſhing by his inſtitutions, the love of ſincere religion not onely ingendred, but alſo confirmed and ſtrengthened through his continuall and daily preaching. Inſomuch, that at ſuch time as he was ſuddenly taken from us, there was ſcarce any man that for ſorrow could finde in his heart to rear,

bear with the preſent ſtate of this life, but that either he wiſhed with all his heart to depart out of this life with Bucer into another, and by dying to follow him into immortalitie, or elſe endeavoured himſelf with weeping and ſighing to call him again, being diſpatched of all troubles, into the priſon of this bodie, out of the which he is eſcaped, leſt he ſhould leave us as it were ſtanding in battell ray without a Captain, and he himſelf as one caſhed, depart with his wages, or as one diſcharged out of the Camp, withdraw himſelf to the everlaſting quietneſſe and tranquillitie of the ſoul. Therefore all men evidently declared at that time, both how ſore they took his death to heart, and alſo how hardly they could away with the miſture of ſuch a man. As long as the ardent love of his religion (wherewith we were inflamed) flouriſhed, it wrought in our hearts an incredible deſire of his preſence among us. But after the time that the godly man ceaſed to be any more in our ſight, and in our eyes, that ardent and burning love of religion by little and little waxed cold in our minds, and according to the times that came after (which were both miſerable, and to our utter undoing) it began not by little and little to be darkened, but it altogether vaniſhed away, and turned into nothing. For we fell again into the troubleſomeneſſe of the popiſh doctrine; the old rites and cuſtomes of the Romiſh Church were reſtored again, not to the garniſhment and beautifying of the Chriſtian Religion (as they ſurmiſed) but to the utter defacing, violating, and defiling of the ſame. Death was ſet before the eyes of ſuch as perſevered in the Chriſtian doctrine that they had learned before. They were baniſhed the Realme that would not apply themſelves to the time, and do as other men did: ſuch as remained, were enforced either to diſſemble, or to hide themſelves, and creep into corners, or elſe as it were by drinking of the charmed cup of Cerces, to be turned and altered, not onely from the nature of man, into the nature of brute beaſts, but (that far worſe and much more monſtrous is) from the likeneſſe of God and his Angels, into the likeneſſe of Devils. And all England was infected with this maladie. But I would to God the corruption of thoſe times, which overwhelmed all the whole Realme, had not at leaſt wiſe yet pierced every part and member thereof. Of the which there was not one, but that (beſides the griefe that it felt, with the reſidue of the bodie, by reaſon of the ſickneſſe and contagion ſpread into the whole) had ſome ſorrow and calamitie peculiarly by it ſelf. And to omit the reſt (of the which to intreat, this place is not appointed, nor the time requireth ought to be ſpoken) this dwelling place of the Muſes (which we call the Univerſitie) may be a ſufficient witneſſe what we may judge of all the reſt of the bodie. For certes, my brethren, the thing is not to be diſſembled, that cannot be hidden. We, applying our ſelves to thoſe moſt filthy times, have moſt ſhamefully yeelded, like faint-hearted cowards, which had not the ſtomacks to ſuſtain the adverſities of povertie, baniſhment, and death. Which in our living and converſation kept neither the conſtancie taught us by Philoſophie, nor yet the patience taught us by holy Scripture, which have done all things at the commandement of others. And therefore that which the Poet (although in another ſenſe) hath trimly ſpoken, may well be thought to have been truly propheſied upon us:

The times and ſeaſons changed be :
And changed in the ſame are we.

Divers of them that were of a pure and ſincere judgement as concerning religion, being driven from hence and diſtroubled, the reſt that remained taſted and felt of the inhumanitie of them in whoſe hands the authoritie of doing things here conſiſted; although to ſay the truth, I have uſed a gentler terme then behooved. For it is not to be accounted inhumanitie, but rather immanitie and beaſtly crueltie: the which, when they had ſpent all kindes of torments and puniſhments upon the quicke, when they had cruelly taken from ſuch as conſtantly perſevered, life, from others riches, honours, and all hope of promotion, yet they could not be ſo ſatisfied, but that incenſed and ſtirred with a greater furie, it began to outrage even againſt the dead. Therefore whereas in every ſingular place was executed a ſingular kinde of crueltie, inſomuch, that there was no kinde of cruelneſſe that could be deviſed, but it was put in ure in one place or other, this was propper or peculiar to Cambridge, to exerciſe the crueltie upon the dead, which in other places was extended but to the quicke. Oxford burnt up the right reverend fathers, Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, the noble witneſſes of the cleere light of the Goſpel. Moreover, at London periſhed theſe two lanternes of light, Rogers and Bradford: In whom it is hard to ſay, whether there were more force of eloquence and utterance in preaching, or more holineſſe of life and converſation. Many other without number, both here and in other places were conſumed to aſhes for bearing record to the truth. For what Citie is there that hath not flamed, I ſay not with burning of houſes and buildings, but with burning of holy bodies? But Cambridge, after there were no more left alive upon whom they might ſpue out their bitter poyſon, played the mad Bedlem againſt the dead. The dead men, whoſe living no man was able to finde fault with, whoſe doctrine no man was able to reprove, were by falſe ſlanderous accuſers indited, contrary to the laws of God and man, ſued in the law, condemned, their ſepulchres violated and broken up, their carkaſſes pulled out and burnt with fire. A thing ſurely incredible, if we had not ſeen it with our eyes, and a thing that hath not lightly been heard of. But the hainouſneſſe of this wicked act was ſpread abroad as a common talk in every mans mouth, and was blown and diſperſed through all Chriſtendome. Bucer by the excellency of his wit and doctrine known to all men, of our countreymen in manner craved, of many others intreated and ſent for, to the intent he might inſtruct our Cambridge men in the ſincere doctrine of the Chriſtian religion, being ſpent with age, and his ſtrength utterly decayed, forſook his own countrey, refuſed not the tediouſneſſe of that long journey, was not afraid to adventure himſelf upon the ſea, but had more regard of the dilating and amplifying of the Church of Chriſt, then of all other things. So in concluſion he came, every man received and welcomed him: afterward he lived in ſuch wiſe, as it might appeare he came not hither for his own ſake, but for ours. For he ſought not to drive away the ſickneſſe that he had taken by the troubleſome travell of his long journey: and albeit his ſtrength were weakened and appalled, yet he regarded not the recoverie of his health, but put himſelf to immoderate labour and intolerable paine, onely to teach and inſtruct us. And yet toward this ſo noble and worthie a perſon, while he lived, were ſhewed all the tokens of humanitie and gentleneſſe, reverence and courteſie that could be; and when he was dead, the moſt horrible crueltie and ſpight that might be imagined. For what can be ſo commendable, as to grant unto the living, houſe and abiding place, and to the dead, buriall? Or what is he that will finde in his heart to give entertainment, and to cheriſh that perſon in his houſe with all kinde of gentleneſſe that he can deviſe, upon whom he could not vouchſafe to beſtow buriall when he is dead? Againe, what an inconſtancie is it, with great ſolemnitie, and with much advancement and commendation of his vertues to burie a man honourably, and anon after to breake up his Tombe, and pull him out ſpitefully, and wrongfully to ſlander him being dead, who during his life time alway deſerved praiſe? All theſe things have happened unto Bucer, who whilſt he lived had free acceſſe into the moſt gorgeous buildings and ſtately palaces of the greateſt Princes, and when he was dead, could not be ſuffered to enjoy ſo much as his poore grave. Who being laid in the ground nobly to his eternall fame, was afterward, to his utter defacing, ſpitefully taken up and burned. The which things albeit they did no harme to the dead (for the dead carkaſſes feele no paine, neither doth the fame of godly perſons depend upon the report of vulgar people, and the light rumours of men, but upon the rightfull cenſure and juſt judgement of God) yet it reproveth an extreme cruelneſſe and unſatiable deſire of revengement in them which offer ſuch utter wrong to the dead. Theſe perſons therefore whom they have pulled out of their graves and burned, I beleeve (if they had beene alive) they would have caſt out of houſe and home, they would have driven out of all mens companie, and in the end with moſt cruell torments have torne them in peeces, being nevertheleſſe Aliens, being ſtrangers, and being alſo fetched hither by us out of ſuch a countrey, where they not onely needed not to feare any puniſhment, but contrariwiſe were alwaies had in much reputation, as well among the noble and honourable, as alſo among the vulgar and common people. But yet how much more gentle then theſe men was Biſhop Gardiner, otherwiſe an earneſt defender of the Popiſh doctrine? who againſt his owne Countreymen, let paſſe no crueltie whereby he might extinguiſh with fire and ſword the light of the Goſpel: and yet he ſpared forraigners, becauſe the right of them is ſo holy, that there was never Nation ſo barbarous, that would violate the ſame. For when he had in his power the renowned Clerke Peter Martyr, then teaching at Oxford, he would not keepe him to puniſh him, but (as I have heard reported) when he ſhould goe his way, he gave him wherewith to beare his charges. So that the thing which he thought he might of right doe to his Countriemen, he judged unlawfull to doe to ſtrangers. And whom the law of God could not withhold from the wicked murdering of his owne Countriemen, him did the law of man bridle from killing of ſtrangers, the which hath ever appeaſed all barbarous beaſtlineſſe, and mittigated all crueltie. For it is a point of humanitie for man and man to meete together, and one to come to another, though they be never ſo farre ſeparated and ſet aſunder, both by ſea and by land, without the which acceſſe there can be no intercourſe of merchandiſe, there can be no conference of wits, which firſt of all ingendred learning, nor any commoditie of ſocietie long to continue. To repulſe them that come to us, and to prohibite them our countries, is a point of inhumanitie. Now to entertaine them evill, that by our ſufferance dwell among us, and have increaſe of houſhold and houſhold ſtuffe, it is a point of wickedneſſe. Wherefore this cruelty hath far ſurmounted the crueltie of all others, the which, to ſatisfie the unſatiable greedines thereof, drew to execution not onely ſtrangers, brought hither at our intreatance and ſending for, but even the withered and rotten carkaſſes digged out of their graves; to the intent that the immeaſurable thirſt which could not be quenched with ſhedding the bloud of them that were alive, might at the leaſt be ſatisfied in burning of dead mens bones. Theſe (my brethren) theſe I ſay, are the juſt cauſes which have ſo ſore provoked the wrath of God againſt us, becauſe that in doing extreme injurie to the dead we have been prone and ready; but in putting the ſame away we have beene ſlow and ſlack. For verily I beleeve (if I may have libertie to ſay freely what I thinke) (ye ſhall beare with me, if I chance to caſt forth any thing unadviſedly in the heate and haſtie diſcourſe of my Oration) that even this place, in the which we have ſo oftentimes aſſembled, being defiled with that new kind of wickedneſſe, ſuch as man never heard of before, is a let and hinderance unto us, when we call for the helpe of God, by meanes whereof our prayers are not accepted, which we make to appeaſe the Godhead, and to win him to be favourable unto us againe.

Q. MARIE. Anno 1557.

The bloud of Abel ſhed by Cain, calleth and crieth from the earth that ſucked it up: likewiſe, the undeſerved burning of theſe bodies, calleth upon Almightie God to puniſh us, and crieth, that not onely the Authors of ſo great a wickedneſſe, but alſo the miniſters thereof are unpure, the places defiled, in which theſe things were perpetrated, the ayre infected which we take into our bodies, to the intent that by ſundry diſeaſes and ſickneſſes we may receive puniſhment for ſo execrable wickedneſſe. Looke well about ye (my deare brethren) and conſider with your ſelves the evils that are paſt; and ye ſhall ſee how they tooke their beginning at Bucers death, following one in anothers necke even unto this day. Firſt and formoſt, when we were even in the chiefeſt of our mourning, and ſcarcely yet recomforted of our ſorrow for his death, the ſweating ſickneſſe lighted upon us, the which paſſed ſwiftly thorow all England, and as it were in haſte diſpatched an innumerable company of men. Secondly, the untimely death of our moſt noble King Edward the ſixth (whoſe life in vertue ſurmounted the opinion of all men, and ſeemed worthy of immortalitie) hapned contrarie to mens expectation in that age, in which unleſſe violence be uſed, few doe die. The converſion of religion, or rather the everſion and turning thereof into Papacie. The incurſion and domination of ſtrangers, under whoſe yoke our necks were almoſt ſubdued. The importunate crueltie of the Biſhops againſt the Chriſtians, which executed that wickedneſſe, for making ſatiſfaction whereof we are gathered together this day. Theſe are the things that enſued after his death; but after his burning enſued yet grievouſer things: Namely, new kindes of plagues, and contagious diſeaſes, unknowne to the very Phyſicians, whereby either every mans health was impaired, or elſe they were brought to their graves, or elſe very hardly recovered; bloudy battels without victorie, whereof the profit redounded to the enemie, and to us the ſlaughter with great loſſe. The which things doe evidently declare, that God is turned from us, and angry with us, and that he giveth no eare to our prayers, and that he is not moved with our cries and ſighes, but that he looketh that this our meeting and aſſembly ſhould be to this end, that foraſmuch as we have violated their coarſes, we ſhould doe them right againe; ſo that the memoriall of theſe moſt holy men may be commended unto poſteritie unhurted and undefamed. Wherefore amend yet at length (my brethren) which hitherto, by reaſon of the variableneſſe and unconſtancie of the times, have beene wavering and unſtedfaſt in your hearts; ſhew your ſelves cheerefull and forward in making ſatisfaction for the injurie you have done to the dead, whom with ſo great wickedneſſe of late ye indammaged and defiled; not cenſing them with the perfumes of thoſe odours and ſpices now worne out of ure, and put to flight, but with a true and unfained repentance of the heart, and with prayer, to the intent that the heavenly Godhead, provoked by our doings to be our enemy, may by our humble ſubmiſſion be intreated to be favourable and agreeable to all our other requeſts.

When Acworth had made an end of his Oration, Maſter James Pilkinton the Queenes Reader of the Divinitie Lecture, going up into the Pulpit made a Sermon upon the 112. Pſal. the beginning whereof is, Bleſſed is the man that feareth the Lord.

The ſermon of Doctor James Pilkinton.

Where intending to prove, that the remembrance of the juſt man ſhall not periſh, and that Bucer is bleſſed, and that the ungodly ſhall fret at the ſight thereof, but yet that all their attempts ſhall be to no purpoſe, to the intent this ſaying may be verified; I will curſe your bleſſings, and bleſſe your curſings, he tooke his beginning of his owne perſon, that albeit he were both ready and willing to take that matter in hand, partly for the worthineſſe of the matter it ſelfe, and eſpecially for certain ſingular vertues of thoſe perſons, for whom that congregation was called, yet notwithſtanding he ſaid he was nothing meet to take that charge upon him.

This kinde of crueltie unheard of before the Popes awhile exerciſed one againſt another. But now, ere ever they had ſufficiently felt the ſmart thereof themſelves, they had turned the ſame upon their necks. Wherefore it was to be wiſhed, that ſeeing it began among them, it might have remained ſtill with the authors thereof, and not have been ſpread over thence unto us. But ſuch is the nature of all evill, that it quickly paſſeth into example, for others to do the like. For about the yéer of our Lord 1400. John Wickliffe was in like manner digged up, and burnt into aſhes, and throwne into a brꝏk that runneth by the towne where he was buried. Of the which ſelfe ſame ſawce taſted alſo William Tracie of Gloceſter, a man of a worſhipfull houſe, becauſe he had written in his laſt will, that he ſhould be ſaved onely by faith in Jeſus Chriſt, and that there needed not the helpe of any man thereto, whether he were in heaven or in earth; and therefore bequeathed no legacie to that purpoſe, as all other men were accuſtomed to do. This déed was done ſince we may remember, about the 22. yéere of the reigne of King Henry the eighth, in the yéer of our Lord, 1530.

Now ſéeing they extended ſuch crueltie to the dead, he ſaid it was an eaſie matter to conjecture what they would do to the living. Whereof we have had ſufficient triall by the examples of our owne men, theſe few yéeres paſt. And if we would take the paines to peruſe things done ſomewhat longer agoe, we might finde notable matters out of our owne Chronicles. Howbeit, it was ſufficient for the manifeſt demonſtration of that matter, to declare the beaſtly butchery of of the French King, executed upon the Waldenſes at Cabrier, and the places néere thereabout, by his Captaine Miner, about the yeere of our Lord, 1545. than the which there was never thing read of more crueltie done, no not even of the barbarous Pagans. And yet for all that, when divers had ſhewed their uttermoſt crueltie both againſt theſe and many others, they were ſo far from their purpoſe, in extinguiſhing the light of the Goſpel, which they endeavoured to ſuppreſſe, that it increaſed daily more and more. The which thing Charles the fifth (then whom all Chriſtendome had not a more prudent Prince, nor the Church of Chriſt almoſt a ſorer enemy) eaſily perceived; and therfore when he had in his hand Luther dead, and Melancthon and Pomeran with certain other Preachers of the Goſpel alive, he not onely determined not any thing extremely againſt them, nor violated their graves, but alſo intreating them gently, ſent them away, not ſo much as once forbidding them to publiſh openly the doctrine that they profeſſed. For it is the nature of Chriſts Church, that the more that Tyrants ſpurne againſt it, the more it increaſeth and flouriſheth. A notable prꝏfe aſſuredly of the providence and pleaſure of GOD in ſowing the Goſpel, was that coming of the Bohemians unto us, to the intent to heare Wickliffe, of whom we ſpake before, who at that time read openly at Oxford; and alſo the going of our men to the ſaid Bohemians, when perſecution was raiſed againſt us. But much more notable was it, that we had ſeene come to paſſe in theſe our dayes; that the Spaniards, ſent for into this Realme of purpoſe to ſuppreſſe the Goſpel as ſoone as they were returned home repleniſhed many parts of their countrey with the ſame truth of religion, to the which before they were utter enemies. By the which examples it might evidently be perceived, that the Princes of this World labour in vaine to overthrow it, conſidering how the mercie of GOD hath ſowne it abroad, not onely in thoſe countries that we ſpake of, but alſo in France, Pole, Scotland, and almoſt all the reſt of Europe. For it is ſaid, that ſome parts of Italy (although it be under the Popes noſe) yet doe they of late incline to the knowledge of the heavenly truth: Wherefore ſufficient argument and proofe might be taken by the ſucceſſe and increaſement thereof, to make us beleeve that this doctrine is ſent us from heaven, unleſſe we will wilfully be blinded. And if there were any that deſired to be perſwaded more at large in the matter, he might adviſedly conſider the voyage that the Emperour and the Pope with both their powers together, made joyntly againſt the Bohemians. In the which the Emperour tooke ſuch an unworthy repulſe of ſo ſmall a handfull of his enemies, that he never almoſt in all his life tooke the like diſhonour in any place. Hereof alſo might be an eſpeciall example of that death of Henrie, King of France, who the ſame day that he had purpoſed to perſecute the Church of Chriſt, and to have burned certaine of his Guard whom he had in priſon for religion, at whoſe execution he had promiſed to have beene himſelfe in proper perſon; in the middeſt of his triumph at a tourney, was wounded ſo ſore in the head with a Speare by one of his owne Subjects, that ere it was long after he died. In the which behalfe, the dreadfull judgements of GOD were no leſſe approved in our owne Countriemen. For one that was a notable ſlaughter-man of Chriſt Saints rotted alive, and ere ever he died, ſuch a ranke ſavour ſteamed from all his body, that none of his friends were able to come at him, but they were ready to vomit. Another, being in utter deſpaire welnigh of all health, howled out miſerably. The third ranne out of his wits. And divers other that were enemies to the Church periſhed miſerably in the end. All the which things were moſt certain tokens of the favor and defence of the divine Majeſtie towards his Church, and of his wrath and vengeance towards the Tyrants. And foraſmuch as he had made mention of the Bohemians, he ſaid it was a moſt apt example that was reported of their Captaine Ziſca;. who, when he ſhould die, willed his body to be ſlaine, and of his ſkin to make a parchment to cover the head of a Drumme. For it ſhould come to paſſe, that when his enemies heard the ſound of it, they ſhould not be able to ſtand againſt them. The like counſell (he ſaid) he himſelfe now gave them as concerning Bucer. That like as the Bohemians did with the skinne of Ziſca, the ſame ſhould they doe with the Arguments and doctrine of Bucer. For as ſoone as the Papiſts ſhould heare the noiſe of him, their gew-gawes would forthwith decay. For ſaving that they uſed violence to ſuch as withſtood them, their doctrine contained nothing that might ſeeme to any man (having but meane underſtanding in holy Scripture) to be grounded upon any reaſon. As for thoſe things that were done by them againſt ſuch as could not play the madmen as well as they, ſome of them ſavoured of open force, and ſome of ridiculous fooliſhneſſe. For what was this firſt of all? was it not frivolous, that by the ſpace of three yeeres together, Maſſe ſhould be ſung in thoſe places where Bucer and Phagius reſted in the Lord, without any offence at all? and as ſoone as they tooke it to be an offence, ſtraightway to be an offence if any were heard there? or that it ſhould not be as good then as it was before? as if that then upon the ſudden it had been a hainous matter to celebrate it in that place, and that the fault that was paſt ſhould be counted the grievouſer, becauſe it was done of longer time before. Moreover, this was a matter of none effect, that Bucer and Phagius onely ſhould be digged up, as who ſhould ſay, that he onely had embraced the religion which they call Hereſie. It was well known how one of the Burgeſſes of the Town had been minded toward the Popiſh religion. Who when he ſhould die, willed neither ringing of Bels, Diriges, nor any other ſuch kinde of trifles to be done for him in his anniverſarie, as they terme it, but rather that they ſhould go with inſtruments of muſicke before the Maior and Councell of the Citie, to celebrate his memoriall, and alſo that yeerly a Sermon ſhould be made to the people, bequeathing a peece of money to the Preacher for his labour. Neither might he omit in that place to ſpeake of Warde the Painter, who albeit he were a man of no reputation, yet was he not to be diſpiſed for the religion ſake which he diligently followed. Neither were divers other moe to be paſſed over with ſilence, who were knowne of a certaintie to have continued in the ſame ſect, and to reſt in other Church-yards in Cambridge, and rather through the whole Realme, and yet defiled not their Maſſes at all. All the which perſons (foraſmuch as they were all of one opinion) ought all to have been taken up, or elſe all to have been let lie with the ſame religion; unleſſe a man would grant, that it lyeth in their power to make what they liſt lawfull and unlawfull at their own pleaſure. In the condemnation of Bucer and Phagius to ſay the truth they uſed too much crueltie, and too much violence. For howſoever it went with the doctrine of Bucer, certainely they could finde nothing whereof to accuſe Phagius, inaſmuch as he wrote nothing that came abroad, ſaving a few things that he had tranſlated out of the Hebrew and Caldæ tongues into Latine; after his coming into the Realme he never read, he never diſputed, he never preached, he never taught. For he deceaſed ſo ſoone after, that he could in that time give no occaſion for his adverſaries to take hold on, whereby to accuſe him, whom they never heard ſpeake. In that they hated Bucer ſo deadly, for the allowable marriage of the Clergie, it was their owne malice conceived againſt him, and a very ſlander raiſed by themſelves. For he had for his defence in that matter (over and beſides other helpes) the teſtimonie of Pope Pius the ſecond, who in a certaine place ſaith, that upon weightie conſiderations Prieſts wives were taken from them, but for more weighty cauſes were to be reſtored againe. And alſo the ſtatute of the Emperour, they call it the Interim, by the which it is enacted, that ſuch of the Clergie as were married, ſhould not be divorced from their wives.

Steven Gardiner of Wincheſter.

Fande ſometime Maior of the towne.

Thus turning his ſtyle from this matter to the Univerſitie, he reproved in few words their unfaithfulneſſe towards theſe men. For if the Lord ſuffered not the bones of the King of Edome, being a wicked man, to be taken up and burnt without revengement (as ſaith Amos) let us aſſure our ſelves he will not ſuffer ſo notable a wrong done to his godly Preachers unrevenged. Afterward, when he came to the condemnation (which we told you in the former action was pronounced by Perne the Vicechancellor, in the name of them all) being ſomewhat more moved at the matter, he admoniſhed them how much it ſtood them in hand, to uſe great circumſpectneſſe, what they decreed upon any man by their voyces, in admitting or rejecting any man to the promotions and degrées of the Univerſitie. For that which ſhould take his authoritie from them, ſhould be a great prejudice to all the other multitude, which (for the opinion that he had of their doctrine, judgement, allowance, and knowledge) did thinke nothing but well of them. For it would come to paſſe, that if they would beſtow their promotions upon none but méete perſons, and let the unméete go as they come, both the Common-wealth ſhould receive much commoditie and profit by them, and beſides that they ſhould highly pleaſe God. But if they perſiſted to be negligent in doing thereof, they ſhould grievouſly endamage the Common-weale, and worthily worke their owne ſhame and reproach. Over and beſides that, they ſhould greatly offend the Maieſtie of God, whoſe commandement (not to beare falſe witneſſe) they ſhould in ſo doing breake and violate. In the meane while that he was ſpeaking theſe and many other things before his audience, many of the Univerſitie, to ſet out and defend Bucer withall, beſet the wals of the Church and Church porch on both ſides with Verſes; ſome in Latine, ſome in Gréeke, and ſome in Engliſh, in the which they made a manifeſt declaration how they were minded both toward Bucer, and Phagius. Finally, when his Sermon was ended, they made common ſupplication and prayers. After thanks rendred to God for many other things, but in eſpeciall for reſtoring of the true and ſincere Religion, every man departed his way.

Foraſmuch as mention hath been made of the death of the worthy and famous Clerke, Martin Bucer, and of the burning of his bones after his death, it ſhall not be unfruitfull, as the place here ſerveth, to induce the teſtimonie or Epitaph of Doctor Redman, which came not yet in print, upon the deceaſe of that man.

The Epitaph or funerall Verſe of D. Redman, upon the death of Maſter Bucer.

The deſpightfull handling and madneſſe of the Papiſts toward Peter Martyrs wife at Oxford, taken up from her grave at the commandment of Cardinall Poole, and after buried in a dunghill.

The taking up of Peter Martyrs wives bones.

AND because the one Univerſitie ſhould not mocke the other, like crueltie was alſo declared upon the dead body of Peter Martyrs wife at Oxford, an honeſt, grave, and ſober Matron, while ſhe lived, and of poore people alwaies a great helper, as many that be dwelling there can right well teſtifie. In the yéere of our Lord, 1552. ſhe departed this life, with great ſorrow of all thoſe néedie perſons, whoſe neceſſities many times and often ſhe had liberally eaſed and relieved. Now, when Brookes Biſhop of Gloceſter, Nicholas Ormanet Datary, Robert Morwen Preſident of Corpus Chriſti Colledge, Cole and Wright Doctors of the Civill law, came thither as the Cardinals viſitours, they among other things had in Commiſſion to take up this good woman againe out of her grave, and to conſume her carkaſſe with fire, not doubting but that ſhe was of the ſame religion that her husband had profeſſed before, when he read the Kings Lecture there. And to make a ſhew that they would doe nothing diſorderly, they called all thoſe before them that had any acquaintance with her or her husband. They miniſtred an oath unto them that they ſhould not conceale whatſoever was demanded. In fine, their anſwer was, that they knew not what religion ſhe was of, by reaſon they underſtood not her language.

Commendation of Peter Martyrs wife.

Iurers ſworne against Peter Martyrs wife.

To be ſhort, after theſe Viſitours had ſped their buſineſſe they came for, they gate them to the Cardinall again, certifying him that upon due inquiſition made, they could learne nothing, upon which by the law they might burne her. Notwithſtanding the Cardinall did not leave the matter ſo, but wrote down his letters a good while after to Marſhall, then Deane of Frideſwides, that he ſhould digge her up, and lay her out of Chriſtian buriall, becauſe ſhe was interred nigh unto Saint Frideſwides reliques, ſometime had in great reverence in that Colledge. Doctor Marſhall like a prettie man, calling his ſpades and mattocks together in the evening, when he was well whitled cauſed her to be taken up, and buried in a dunghill.

Cardinall Poole earnest in burning dead mens bodies.

D. Marſhall Deane of Frideſwides.

Howbeit, when it pleaſed GOD under good Quéen Elizabeth to give quietnes to his Church, long time perſecuted with priſon and death, then Doctor Parker, Archbiſhop of Canterburie, Edmund Grindall Biſhop of London, Richard Goodrick, with divers others her Majeſties high Commiſſioners in matters of religion (nothing ignorant how farre the adverſaries of the truth had tranſgreſſed the bounds of all humanitie, in violating the ſepulchre or grave of that good and vertuous woman) willed certaine of that Colledge, in the which this uncourteous touch was attempted or done, to take her out of that uncleane and diſhoneſt place where ſhe lay, and ſolemnly in the face of the whole Towne to burie her againe in a more decent and honeſt monument. For though the body being once dead, no great eſtimation were to be had, how or where the bones were laid; yet was ſome reverence to be uſed toward her for ſexe and womanhood ſake. Beſides, to ſay the truth, it was great ſhame, that he which had travelled ſo farre at King Edwards requeſt, from the place wherein he dwelt quietly and had taken ſo earneſt paines, being an old man, in reading and ſetting forth the truth all he could, with learning to teach and inſtruct, and ſo well deſerved of that Univerſitie; ſhould with ſo ungentle a recompence of ingratitude be rewarded againe, as to have his wife that was a godly woman, a ſtranger, good to many, eſpecially to the poore, and hurtfull to none, either in word or deede, without juſt deſerving, and beſide their owne law, not proceeding againſt her according to the order thereof, ſpitefully to be laid in a ſtinking dunghill.

Peter Martyrs wives bones again reduced out of the dunghill, and laid in a decent monument

Great ingratitude ſhewed to Peter Martyr.

To all good natures the fact ſeemed odious, and of ſuch as be indued with humanitie, utterly to be abhorred. Wherefore Maſter Calfield, then Subdeane of the Colledge, diligently provided, that from Marſhals dunghill ſhe was reſtored and tranſlated to her proper place againe, yea, and withall coupled her with Frideſwides bones, that in caſe any Cardinall will be ſo mad hereafter to remove this womans bones againe, it ſhall be hard for them to diſcerne the bones of her from the other. And to the intent the ſame might be notified to the mindes of men the better, the next day after, which was Sunday, M. Rogerſon preached unto the people, in which Sermon by the way he declared the rough dealing of the adverſaries, which were not contented to practiſe their cruelty againſt the living, but that they muſt alſo rage againſt one that was dead, and had lien two yeeres in her grave. God grant them once to ſee their own wickedneſſe, Amen.

M. James Calfield.

The bones of Peter Martyrs wife coupled with the bones of S. Frideſwide.

And thus much touching the noble acts and ſtrangeneſſe of this worthy Cardinall in both the Univerſities; whereunto it ſhall not be impertinent, here alſo conſequently to adjoyne and ſet forth to the eies of the world, the blinde and bloudie Articles ſet out by Cardinall Poole, to be inquired upon, within his Dioceſſe of Canterburie, whereby it may the better appeare what yoakes and ſnares of fond and fruitleſſe traditions were laid upon the poore flock of Chriſt, to intangle and oppreſſe them with loſſe of life and libertie. By the which, wiſe men have to ſee what godly fruits proceeded from that catholike church and See of Rome. In which, albeit thou ſeeſt (good Reader) ſome good Articles inſparſed withall, let that nothing move thee; for elſe how could ſuch poyſon be miniſtred, but it muſt have ſome honie to reliſh the Readers taſte.

Here follow the Articles ſet forth by Cardinall Poole, to be enquired in his ordinary viſitation, within his Dioceſſe of Canterburie.

33 Item, whether any goods, plate, iewels, or poſſeſſions be taken away, or withholden from the ſaid Hoſpitals, and by whom.

A hiſtory of tenne Martyrs condemned and burned within the Dioceſſe of Canterbury, for the teſtimonie of Ieſus Chriſt, and truth of his Goſpel.

January 15. The martyrdome of ten burned in the Dioceſſe of Canterburie.

MEntion was made a little before of the perſecution in Kent. Where we declared, that 15. were in the Caſtle of Canterburie impriſoned and condemned for Gods Word. Of the which 15. moreover we ſhewed and declared 5. to be famiſhed unto death within the ſaid Caſtle, and buried by the high-way, about the beginning of November. The other ten, in the firſt moneth of the next yeere following, which was the yeere of our Lord, 1557. were committed unto the fire, and there conſumed to aſhes, by Thornton, called Biſhop or Suffragan of Dover, otherwiſe called Dick of Dover, and by Nicholas Harpsfield the Archdeacon of the ſaid Province.

The names of theſe ten godly and Chriſtian Martyrs be theſe:

The names of the Martyrs.

Iohn Philpot of Tenterden.
W. Waterer of Bedingden.
Stephen Kempe of Norgate.
W. Hay of Hithe.
Thomas Hudſon of Salenge.
Matt. Bradbridge of Tenterden.
Thomas Stephens of Bedingden.
Nich. Final of Tenterden.
W. Lowick of Cranbroke.
W. Prowting of Thornham.

Concerning their Articles read before.

What the ordinarie Articles were, commonly objected to them of Canterburie Dioceſſe, is before rehearſed, ſave only that to ſome of theſe, as to them that follow after, as the time of their perſecution did grow, ſo their articles withall did increaſe to the number of two and twenty, containing ſuch like matter as ſeemed to the maintenance of the Romiſh See.

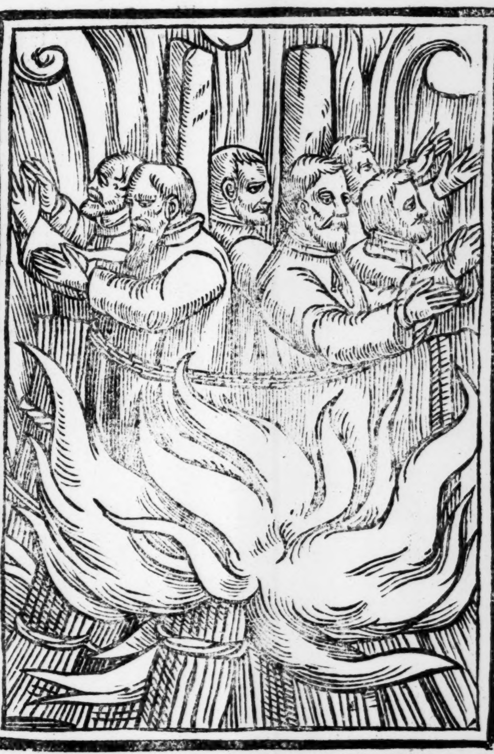
The cauſe of their martyrdome.

To theſe articles what their anſwers were likewiſe, needeth here no great rehearſall, ſeeing they all agreed together, though not in the ſame form of words, yet in much like effect of purpoſes; firſt granting the Church of Chriſt, and denying the Church of Rome, denying the ſeven ſacraments, refuſing the Maſſe, and the hearing of Latine ſervice, praying to ſaints, juſtification of works, &c. And though they did all anſwer uniformly in ſome ſmaller things, as their learning ſerved them, yet in the moſt principall and chiefeſt matters they did not greatly diſcord, &c.

The burning of ſix Martyrs at Canterbury.



The martyrdome of Waterer, Hay, Hudſon, Kemp, W. Lowick, W. Prowting, at Canterbury, Anno 1557. January 15. The other four were burned at the ſame time. Two at Wye, and two at Aſhford.

Of theſe ten godly Martyrs of Chriſt, ſix were burned at Canterbury, about the 15. of January, that is, Kemp, Waterer, Prowting, Lowick, Hudſon, and Haie. Other two, that is, Stephens, and Philpot, at Wye, about the ſame moneth. Other two, which were Finall and Bradbridge, were burned both together at Aſhford, the 16. of the ſame.

Examples how Kings and Princes, and the power of the world bend themſelves againſt Chriſt and his word, and yet could never prevail.

The next moneth following, which was February, came out another bloody Commiſſion from the King and Queen, to kindle up the fire of perſecution, as though it were not hot enough alreadie; the contents of which Commiſſion I thought here not to pretermit: not for lack of matter, whereof I have too much; but that the Reader may underſtand how Kings and Princes of this world, like as in the firſt perſecutions of the Primitive Church under Valerianus, Decius, Maximian, Diocleſian, Licinius, &c. ſo now alſo in theſe latter perillous dayes, have ſet out all their main force and power, with laws, policie, and authority to the uttermoſt they could deviſe againſt Chriſt and his bleſſed Goſpel. And yet notwithſtanding all theſe laws, conſtitutions, injunctions, and terrible proclamations provided againſt Chriſt and his Goſpel, Chriſt yet ſtill continueth, his Goſpel flouriſheth, and truth prevaileth; Kings and Emperors in their own purpoſes overthrown, their deviſes diſſolved, their counſels confounded; as examples both of this and of all times and ages do make manifeſt. But now let us hear the intent of this Commiſſion, in tenor as followeth.

¶ A bloody Commiſſion given forth by King Philip and Queen Mary, to perſecute the poore members of Chriſt.

A terrible proclamation of K. Philip and Q. Mary, againſt the poore ſervants and members of Chriſt.

Perſecutors.

Philip and Mary by the grace of God King and Queen of England, &c. To the right reverend Father in God our right truſtie and welbeloved Counſellor Thomas Biſhop of Ely, and to our right truſtie and welbeloved William Windſore Knight, Lord Windſore, Edw. North Knight, Lord North, and to our truſty and welbeloved Counſellors, J. Bourn Knight, one of our chief Secretaries, J. Mordaunt Knight, Francis Englefield Knight, Maſter of our Wards and Liveries, Edw. Walgrave Knight, Maſter of our great Wardrope, Nicholas Hare Knight, Maſter of the Rolls, and our high Court of Chancerie, and to our truſtie and welbeloved Tho. Pope Knight, Roger Cholmley Knight, Richard Reds Knight, Rowland Hill Knight, William Raſtall Sargeant at Law, Henry Cole Clerk, Dean of Pauls, William Roper, and Ralph Cholmley, Eſquires, William Cook, Thomas Martin, John Story, and John Vaughan, Doctors of the Law, greeting.

The meaning of the Goſpellers falſly reported and ſlandered.

Foraſmuch as divers divelliſh and ſlanderous perſons have not onely invented, bruted and ſet forth divers falſe rumors, tales, and ſeditious ſlanders againſt us, but alſo have ſown divers hereſies, and hereticall opinions, and ſet forth divers ſeditious books within this our realm of England, meaning thereby to ſtir up diviſion, ſtrife, contention, and ſedition, not onely amongſt our loving ſubjects, but alſo betwixt us and our ſaid ſubjects, with divers other outragious miſdemeanors, enormities, contempts, and offences, daily committed and done, to the diſquieting of us and our people, we, minding the due puniſhment of ſuch offendors, and the repreſſing of ſuch like offences, enormities, and miſbehaviours from henceforth, having ſpeciall truſt and confidence in your fidelities, wiſedomes and diſcretions, have authoriſed, appointed and aſſigned you to be our Commiſſioners, and by theſe preſents do give full power and authoritie unto you, and three of you, to enquire as well by the oaths of twelve good and lawfull men, as by witneſſes and all other means and politike wayes you can deviſe, of all and ſingular hereticall opinions, Lolardies, hereticall and ſeditious books, concealments, contempts, conſpiracies, and all falſe rumors, tales, ſeditious and ſlanderous words or ſayings, raiſed, publiſhed, bruted, invented, or ſet forth againſt us, or either of us, or againſt the quiet governance and rule of our people, and ſubjects, by books, lies, tales, or otherwiſe, in any County, Key, bowing, or other place or places, within this our Realm of England or elſewhere, in any place or places beyond the ſeas, and of the bringers in, utterers, buyers, ſellers, readers, keepers, or conveyers of any ſuch letter, books, rumor, and tale, and of all and every their coadjutors, counſellors, comforters, procurers, abettors, and maintainers, giving unto you and three of you full power and authoritie by vertue hereof, to ſearch out and take into your hands and poſſeſſions, all manner of hereticall, and ſeditious books, letters, and writings, whereſoever they or any of them ſhall be found, as well in Printers houſes and ſhops, as elſewhere, willing you, and every of you to ſearch for the ſame in all places, according to your diſcretions.

What watch is here to keep down Chriſt, but yet he will riſe.

And

Enormities or miſbehaviors.

And alſo to enquire, hear and determine all and ſingular enormities, diſturbances, miſbehaviors, and negligences committed in any Church, Chappell, or other hallowed place within this Realm, and alſo for and concerning the taking away or withholding any lands, tenements, goods, ornaments, ſtocks of money, or other things belonging to every of the ſame Churches and Chappels, and all accounts and reckonings concerning the ſame.

Not coming to the Church ſervice.

And alſo to enquire and ſearch out all ſuch perſons as obſtinately do refuſe to receive the bleſſed ſacrament of the altar, to hear Maſſe, or to come to their Pariſh Churches, or other convenient places appointed for divine ſervice, and all ſuch as refuſe to go on Proceſſion, to take holy bread, or holy water, or otherwiſe do miſuſe themſelves in any Church or other hallowed place, whereſoever any of the ſame offences have been, or hereafter ſhall be committed within this our ſaid realm.

Heretikes to be committed to their Ordinary.

Nevertheleſſe, our will and pleaſure is, that when, and as often as any perſon or perſons, hereafter being called or convented before you, do obſtinately perſiſt, or ſtand in any manner of hereſie, or hereticall opinion, that then ye, or three of you do immediately take order, that the ſame perſon or perſons, ſo ſtanding or perſiſting, be delivered and committed to his Ordinary, there to be uſed according to the ſpirituall and Eccleſiaſticall Laws.

Vagabonds, or maſterles men.

And alſo we give unto you, or three of you, full power and authoritie, to enquire and ſearch out all vagabonds, and maſterleſſe men, Barettours, quarrellors, and ſuſpect perſons, abiding within our Citie of London, and ten miles compaſſe of the ſame, and all aſſaults and affraies done and committed within the ſame Citie and compaſſe.

Decay of Churches and Chappels.

And further to ſearch out all waſte, decays, and ruines of Churches, Chancels, Chappels, Parſonages and Vicarages in the Dioceſſe of the ſame, being within this Realm, giving you and everie of you full power and authoritie by vertue hereof to hear and determine the ſame, and all other offences and matters above ſpecified and rehearſed, according to your wiſedomes, conſciences, and diſcretions, willing and commanding you or three of you, from time to time, to uſe and deviſe all ſuch politike wayes and means, for the triall and ſearching out of the premiſſes, as by you or three of you ſhall be thought moſt expedient and neceſſarie: and upon enquirie and due proofe had, known, perceived and tried out, by the confeſſion of the parties, or by ſufficient witneſſes before you, or three of you, concerning the premiſſes or any part thereof, or by any other wayes or means requiſite, to give and award ſuch puniſhment to the offendors, by fine, impriſonment, or otherwiſe, and to take ſuch order for redreſſe and reformation of the premiſſes, as to your wiſedoms, or three of you ſhall be thought meet and convenient.

Priſoning of the obſtinate.

Further willing and commanding you and everie three of you, in caſe you ſhall finde any perſon or perſons obſtinate or diſobedient, either in their appearance before you, or three of you at your calling or aſſignement, or elſe in not accompliſhing, or not obeying your Decrees, orders and commandements in any thing or things, touching the premiſſes or any part thereof, to commit the ſame perſon or perſons ſo offending, to Ward, there to remain, till by you or three of you he be diſcharged or delivered, &c. And ſo forth with other ſuch like matter, as followeth, ſee in our firſt edition, pag. 1563.

¶ The apprehenſion of two and twenty priſoners ſent up together for Gods word, to London, from Colcheſter.

AFter this bloodie Proclamation or Commiſſion thus given out at London, which was Februarie 8. the third and fourth yeers of the King and Queens reign, theſe new Inquiſitors, eſpecially ſome of them began to ruffle, and to take upon them not a little; ſo that all quarters were full of perſecution, and priſons almoſt full of priſoners, namely, in the Dioceſſe of Canterbury, whereof (by the leave of Chriſt) we will ſay more anon.

Perſecution about Colcheſter.

Twenty two for Gods word apprehended.

The aray and order of theſe 22. priſoners coming up to London.

In the meane time, about the town of Colcheſter, the winde of perſecution began fiercely to riſe; inſomuch that three and twentie together, men and women, were apprehended at one clap; of the which twentie three, one eſcaped: the other twentie two were driven up like a flock of Chriſtian Lambes to London, with two or three leaders with them at moſt, ready to give their ſkins to be pluckt off for the Goſpels ſake. Notwithſtanding the Biſhops, afraid belike of the number, to put ſo many at once to death, ſought means to deliver them, and ſo they did, drawing out a verie eaſie ſubmiſſion for them, or rather ſuffering them to draw it out themſelves; notwithſtanding divers of them afterward were taken again and ſuffered, as hereafter ye ſhall hear (God willing) declared. Such as met them by the way coming up, ſaw them in the fields ſcattering in ſuch ſort, as that they might eaſily have eſcaped away. And when they entred into the towns, their Keepers called them again into aray, to go two and two together, having a band or line going between them, they holding the ſame in their hands, having another cord everie one about his arme, as though they were tied. And ſo were theſe fourteen men and eight women carried up to London, the people by the way praying to GOD for them, to give them ſtrength. At their entring into London, they were pinioned, and ſo came into the Citie, as the picture here ſhortly after following with their names alſo ſubſcribed, doth deſcribe. But firſt let us declare concerning their taking and their attachers, contained in the Commiſſaries letter, written to Boner; then, the Indenture made between the Commiſſioners and the Popiſh commiſſarie. The letter of the Commiſſary is this.

The letter of the Commiſſary called Io. Kingſton, written to Biſhop Boner.

Lord of Oxford, L. Darcy, H. Tyrel, Anthony Brown, W. Bendlows, Edm. Tyrel, Rich. Weſton, Roger Appleton, Io. Kingſton Commiſſary, perſecutors.

AFter my dutie done in receiving and accompliſhing your honorable and moſt loving letters, dated the 7. of Auguſt: Be it known unto your Lordſhip, that the 28. of Auguſt, the Lord of Oxenford, Lord Darcie, H. Tyrel, A. Brown, W. Bendlows, E. Tyrel, Rich. Weſton, Roger Appleton, publiſhed their commiſſion, to ſeiſe the lands, tenements, and goods of the fugitives, ſo that the owners ſhould have neither uſe nor commodity thereof, but by Inventorie remain in ſafe keeping, untill the cauſe were determined.

And alſo there was likewiſe proclaimed the Queens graces warrant for the reſtitution of the Church goods within Colcheſter and the hundreds thereabout, to the uſe of Gods ſervice. And then were called the Pariſhes particularly, and the heretikes partly committed to my examination. And that divers perſons ſhould certifie me of the ornaments of their Churches, betwixt this and the Iuſtices next appearance, which ſhall be on Michaelmas even next. And the Pariſh which had preſented at 2. ſeverall times, to have all ornaments with other things in good order, were exonerated for ever, till they were warned again, and others to make their appearance from time to time. And thoſe names blotted in the Indenture, were indicted for treaſon, fugitives, or diſobedients, and were put forth by M. Browns commandement. And before the ſealing, my Lord Darcie ſaid unto me apart and maſter Bendlows, that I ſhould have ſufficient time to ſend unto your Lordſhip, yea, if need were the heretiques to remain in durance till I had an anſwer from you; yea till the Lord Legates graces Commiſſioners come into the countrey.

And maſter Brown came unto my Lord Darcies houſe and parlour belonging unto maſter Barnaby, before my ſaid Lord and all the Juſtices, and laid his hand on my ſhoulder, with a ſmiling countenance, and deſired me to make his heartie commendations to your good Lordſhip, and aſked me if I would: and I ſaid, Yea, with a good will. Wherefore I was glad, and thought that I ſhould not have been charged with ſo ſudden carriage. But after dinner, the Juſtices counſelled with the Bayliffes, and with the Jaylers, and then after took me unto them, and made collation of the Indentures, and ſealed them; and then maſter Browne commanded me this afternoon, being the 30. of Auguſt, to go and receive my priſoners by and by. And then I ſaid, it is an unreaſonable commandement, for that I have attended on you here theſe three dayes, and this Sunday earely I have ſent home my men. Wherefore I deſire you to have a convenient time appointed, wherein I may know whether it will pleaſe my Lord my Maſter to ſend his Commiſſioners hither, or that I ſhall make carriage of them unto his Lordſhip. Then M. Browne; We are certified, that the Councell have written unto your maſter, to make ſpeed, and to rid theſe priſoners out of hand: therefore go receive your priſoners in haſte. Then I: Sir, I ſhall receive them within theſe ten dayes. Then maſter Brown: The limitation lieth in us, and not in you, wherefore get you hence.

M. Brown a hot and haſty Juſtice in perſecuting Gods people.

Sir, ye have indicted and delivered me by this Indenture, whoſe faith or opinions I knew not, truſting that ye will grant me a time to examine them, leſt I ſhould puniſh the Catholiques: Well, ſaid maſter Brown, for that cauſe ye ſhall have time betwixt this and wedneſday. And I ſay unto you maſter Bailiffes, if he do not receive them at your hands on Wedneſday, ſet open your doore, and let them go.

Then I: My Lord, and Maſters all, I promiſe to diſcharge the town and countrey of theſe heretiques, within ten dayes. Then my Lord Darcie ſaid; Commiſſarie, we do and muſt all agree in one. Wherefore do ye receive them on, or before Wedneſday.

Then I: My Lord, the laſt I carried, I was going betwixt the Caſtle and ſaint Katherines Chappell, two houres and a half, and in great preaſe and danger: Wherefore this may be to deſire your Lordſhip, to give in commandement unto my maſter Sayer, Bailiffe, here preſent, to aid me thorow his liberties, not onely with men and weapons, but that the Town-clerk may be ready there with his book to write the names of the moſt buſie perſons, and this upon three houres warning, all which both my Lord and M. Brown commanded.

What ado is here with the Butchers to bring the poore Lambs to the Shambles?

The 31. of Auguſt, William Goodwin of Muchbirch huſbandman, this bringer, and Tho. Alley of Copford your Lordſhips apparator of your Conſiſtorie in Colcheſter, covenanted with me, that they ſhould hire two other men at the leaſt, whereof one ſhould be a bowe-man, to come to me the next day about two of the clock at afternoon, ſo that I might recite this bargain before maſter Archdeacon, and pay the money, that is, 46. ſhillings 8. pence. Wherefore they ſhould then go forth with me unto Colcheſter, and on Wedneſday before three of the clock in the morning receive there at my hand within the Caſtle and Motehall, fourteene men and eight women, readie bound with gyves and hemp, and drive, carrie, or lead and feed with meat and drink, as heretiques ought to be found continually, unto ſuch time that the ſaid William and Thomas, ſhall cauſe the ſaid two and twenty perſons to be delivered unto my Lord of Londons officers, and within the ſafe keeping of my ſaid Lord, and then to bring unto me again the ſaid gives, with a perfect token of or from my ſaid Lord, and then this covenant is void, or elſe, &c.

Thomas Alley of Copford Apparator to B. Boner.

Twenty two poore priſoners in bonds for Chriſt and his word.

Maſter Bendlows ſaid unto me in my Lord of Oxenfords chamber at the Kings head, after I had ſaid Maſſe before the Lords, that on the morrow after holy Rood day, when we ſhall meet at Chelmesford for the diviſion of theſe lands, I think maſter Archdeacon, you, and M. Smith, ſhall be faine to ride with certain of the Jurie to thoſe portions and manors in your part of Eſſex, and in like caſe divide your ſelves, to tread and view the ground with the Queſt, or elſe I think the Queſt will not labour the matter, and ſo do you ſay unto M. Archdeacon.

Alice the wife of William Walleys of Colcheſter, hath ſubmitted her ſelf, abjured her erroneous opinions, aſked abſolution, promiſed to do her ſolemne penance in her Pariſh Church at ſaint Peters on Sunday next, and to continue a Catholique and a faithfull woman, as long as God ſhall ſend her life. And for theſe covenants, her huſband ſtandeth bound in five pound. Which Alice is one of the nine women of this your Indenture; and ſhe is big with childe. Wherefore ſhe remaineth at home, and this done in the preſence of the Bailiffes, Aldermen, and Town-clerk. And for that maſter Brown was certified, there was no Curate at Lexdon, he enquired who was the former. The anſwer was made, Sir Francis Jobſon. Who is the Parſon? They of the Queſtmen anſwered, Sir Roger Ghoſtlow. When was he with you? Not this fourteen yeers. How is your Cure ſerved? Now and then. Who is the Patron? My Lord of Arundel. And within ſhort time after, Sir Francis Jobſon came with great courteſie unto my Lord Darcies place. And of all Gentlemen about us, I ſaw no more come in: Sir Robert Smith Prieſt, ſometime Chanon of Bridlington, now Curate of Appledoore, in the Wild of Kent, came to Colcheſter the 38. day of Auguſt, with his wife big with childe, of late divorced, taken on ſuſpition, examined of the Lords, and maſter Brown told me that they have received letters from the Councell for the attachment of certain perſons, and eſpecially of one Prieſt, whoſe name is Pullen (but his right name is Smith) doubting this prieſt to be the ſaid Pullen, although neither he nor his wife would confeſſe the ſame.

Alice Walleys big with childe, one of the nine women, promiſeth to recant.

A Cure well ſerved.

M. Pullen laid for.

Wherefore he lieth ſtill in priſon, but ſurely this is not Pullen. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip to have in remembrance, that the houſholders might be compelled to bring every man his own wife to her own ſeat in the Church in time of Divine ſervice, it would profit much. And alſo there be yet ſtanding Hoſpitals, and other of like foundation about Colcheſter, which I have not known to appeare at any viſitation, as the Maſters and Lazars of Marie Magdalen in Colcheſter, the Proctor of ſaint Katherines Chappell in Colcheſter, the Hoſpitall or Breadhouſe of the foundation of the Lord H. Harney, in Laxemarny, the Hoſpitall and Beadman of little Horkſley.

Thus preſuming of your Lordſhips goodneſſe, I am more then bold ever to trouble you, with this worldly buſineſſe, beſeeching Almighty GOD to ſend your honourable Lordſhip a condigne reward.

From Eaſtthorp this preſent xxx. day of Aug.

M. Brown doer of all things.

We found a letter touching the marriage of Prieſts, in the hands of the foreſaid Sir Robert Smith. Alſo I deſired maſter Brown, the doer of all things, to require the audience to bring in their unlawfull writings and books. Who aſked me if I had proclaimed the Proclamation. I ſaid, Yea. Then he ſaid openly on the Bench, that they ſhould be proclaimed every quarter once. And then take the Conſtables and Officers, and they alone take and puniſh the offendors accordingly.

By your poore Beadman, Iohn Kingſton, Prieſt.

These xxii. aforeſaid priſoners thus ſent from Colcheſter to London, were brought at length to Biſhop Boner. As touching the order and manner of their coming and bringing, the ſaid Boner himſelf writeth to Cardinall Poole, as you ſhall hear.

A letter of Biſhop Boner to Cardinall Poole.

B. Boners letter to Cardinall Pool, concerning the 22. priſoners aforeſaid.

May it pleaſe your good grace with my moſt humble obedience, reverence, and dutie, to underſtand, that going to London upon Thurſday laſt, and thinking to be troubled with maſter Germaines matter onely, and ſuch other common matters as are accuſtomed, enough to wearie a right ſtrong bodie, I had the day following to comfort my ſtomacke withall, letters from Colcheſter, that either that day, or the day following, I ſhould have ſent thence 22. heretiques, indicted before the Commiſſioners, and indéed ſo I had, and compelled to bear their charges as I did of the other, which both ſtood me above twenty Nobles, a ſum of money that I thought full evill beſtowed. And theſe heretiques, notwithſtanding they had honeſt Catholique Kéepers to conduct and bring them up to me, and in all the way from Colcheſter to Stratford of the Bowe did go quietly, and obediently, yet coming to Stratford, they began to take heart of grace, and to do as pleaſed themſelves, for they began to have their guard, which generally increaſed till they came to Algate, where they were lodged Friday night.

And albeit I took order that the ſaid heretiques ſhould be with me very early on Saturday morning, to the intent they might quietly come and be examined by me, yet it was betwéen ten and eleven of the clock before they would come, and no way would they take, but thorow Cheapſide, ſo that they were brought to my houſe with about a thouſand perſons. Which thing I took verie ſtrange, and ſpake to ſir John Greſſam then being with me, to tell the Maior and the Sheriffes that this thing was not well ſuffered in the Citie. Theſe naughty heretiques all the way they came thorow Cheapſide, both exhorted the people to their part, and had much comfort é promiſcuo plebe, and being entred into my houſe, and talked withall, they ſhewed themſelves deſperate, and very obſtinate; yet I uſed all the honeſt meanes I could, both of my ſelf and other, to have won them, cauſing divers learned men to talk with them; and finding nothing in them but pride and wilfulneſſe, I thought to have had them all hither to Fulham, and here to give ſentence againſt them. Nevertheleſſe, perceiving by my laſt doing that your grace was offended, I thought it my dutie before I any thing further procéeded herein, to advertiſe firſt your grace hereof, and know your good pleaſure, which I beſéech your grace I may do by this truſtie bearer. And thus moſt humbly I take my leave of your good grace, beſéeching Almighty God alwayes to preſerve the ſame. At Fulham, poſtridie Nativ. 1556.

Your graces moſt bounden Bedeſman and ſervant, Edmund Boner.

B. Boners cruelty ſomewhat ſtayed by the Cardinall.

By this letter of Biſhop Boner to the Cardinall, is to be underſtood, what good will was in this Biſhop to have the blood of theſe men, and to have paſt with ſentence of condemnation againſt them, had not the Cardinall ſomewhat (as it ſéemed) ſtayd his fervent headineſſe. Concerning the which Cardinall, although it cannot be denied by his Acts and writings, but that he was a profeſſed enemie, and no otherwiſe to be reputed but for a Papiſt: yet again it is to be ſuppoſed, that he was none of the bloody and cruell ſort of Papiſts, as may appeare, not onely by ſtaying the rage of this Biſhop, but alſo by the ſollicitous writing, and long letters written to Cranmer, alſo by the complaints of certain Papiſts accuſing him to the Pope, to be a bearer with the heretiques, and by the Popes letters ſent to him upon the ſame, calling him up to Rome, and ſetting Frier Peto in his place, had not Quéen Mary by ſpeciall intreatie, kept him out of the Popes danger. All which letters I have (if néed be) to ſhew: and beſides alſo, that it is thought of him that toward his latter end, a little before his coming from Rome to England, he began ſomewhat to favour the doctrine of Luther, and was no leſſe ſuſpected at Rome: Yea, and furthermore, did there at Rome convert a certain learned Spaniard from papiſme to Luthers ſide; notwithſtanding the pomp and glory of the world afterward carried him away to play the Papiſt thus as he did. But of this Cardinall enough.

Card. Poole a Papiſt, but no bloody Papiſt.

Card. Poole halfe ſuſpected for a Lutheran at Rome.

To return now to this godly companie again, firſt how they were brought up in bands to London, ye have heard: Alſo how Boner was about to have read the ſentence of death upon them, and how he was ſtayed by the Cardinall, ye underſtand. As touching their confeſſion, which they articled up in writing, it were too tedious to recite the whole at length. Briefly touching the Article of the Lords Supper (for the which they were chiefly troubled) thus they wrote, as here followeth.

The Supper of the Lord.

Their opinion and judgement of the Lords Supper.

Chriſts language to ſpeak in parables.

WHereas Chriſt at his laſt Supper, took bread, and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and gave it to his Diſciples, and ſaid, Take, eat, this is my bodie. And likewiſe took the cup and thanked, &c. We do underſtand it to be a figurative ſpéech, as the moſt manner of his language was in parables and darke ſentences, that they which are carnally minded, ſhould ſée with their eyes, and not perceive, and hear with their eares, and not underſtand, ſignifying this, that as he did break the bread among them, being but one loafe, and they all were partakers thereof, ſo we through his bodie, in that it was broken, and offered upon the croſſe for us, are all partakers thereof, and his blood clenſeth us from all our ſins, and hath pacified Gods wrath towards us, and made the attonement betwéen God and us, if we walk henceforth in the light, even as he is the true light.

The cauſe why the bread and cup was given in the Supper.

And in that he ſaid further, Do this in remembrance of me, it is a memoriall and token of the ſuffering and death of Jeſus Chriſt: and he commanded it for this cauſe, that the congregation of Chriſt ſhould come together to ſhew his death, and to thank and laud him for all his benefits, and magnifie his holy Name, and ſo to break the bread, and drink the wine, in remembrance that Chriſt had given his body, and ſhed his blood for us.

Thus you may well perceive, though Chriſt called the bread his bodie, and the wine his blood, yet it followeth not, that the ſubſtance of his body ſhould be in the bread and wine; as divers places in Scripture are ſpoken by Chriſt and the Apoſtles in like phraſe of ſpeech, as in John 15. I am the true vine. Alſo in John 10. I am the doore. And as it is written in the 9. to the Hebr. and in Exod. 24. how Moſes took the blood of the calves, and ſprinkled both the book and all the people, ſaying, This is the blood of the covenant or Teſtament. And alſo in the 5. chapter of Ezek. how the Lord ſaid unto him concerning the third part of his haire, ſaying, This is Ieruſalem, &c.

How the Scriptures ought to be examined.

Thus we ſee the Scriptures how they are ſpoken in figures, and ought to be ſpiritually examined, and not as they would have us to ſay, that the bodily preſence of Chriſt is in the bread, which is a blaſphemous underſtanding of the godly word, and is contrarie to all holy Scriptures. Alſo we do ſee that great Idolatrie is ſprung out of the carnall underſtanding of the words of Chriſt, This is my bodie, and yet daily ſpringeth, to the great diſhonour of God; ſo that men worſhip a piece of bread for God, yea, and hold that to be their maker.

Idolatry in worſhipping the ſacramentall bread and wine.

After this confeſſion of their faith and doctrine, being written and exhibited, they alſo deviſed a letter withall, in manner of a ſhort ſupplication, or rather an admonition to the Judges and Commiſſioners, requiring that juſtice and judgement, after the rule of Gods word, might be miniſtred unto them. The copie of which their letter I thought here alſo to ſhew unto the reader in form as followeth.

A letter or ſupplication of the priſoners to the Iudges.

A letter of requeſt of the priſoners to the Judges.

TO the right honorable audience, before whom theſe our ſimple writings, and the confeſſion of our faith ſhall come to be read or ſeen, we poore priſoners being faſt in bands upon the triall of our faith, which we offer to be tried by the Scriptures, pray moſt heartily, that foraſmuch as God hath given you power and ſtrength over us, as concerning our bodies, under whom we ſubmit our ſelves as obedient ſubjects in all things due, ye being Officers and Rulers of the people, may execute true judgement, keep the laws of righteouſneſſe, govern the people according to right, and heare the poore and helpleſſe in truth, and defend their cauſe.

God for his Son Jeſus Chriſts ſake, give you the wiſedome and underſtanding of Solomon, David, Ezekias, Moſes, with divers other moſt vertuous Rulers, by whoſe wiſedome and moſt godly underſtanding, the people were juſtly ruled and governed in the fear of God, all wickedneſſe was by them overthrowne and beaten downe, and all godlineſſe and vertue did flouriſh and ſpring. O God which art the moſt higheſt, the Creator and maker of all things, and of all men both great and ſmall, and careſt for all alike, which doeſt try all mens works and imaginations, before whoſe judgement ſeat ſhall come both high and low, rich and poore; we moſt humbly beſeech thee to put into our Rulers hearts the pure love and fear of thy Name, that even as they themſelves would be judged, and as they ſhal make anſwer before thee, ſo they may hear our cauſes, judge with mercie, and read over theſe our requeſts and confeſſions of our faith, with deliberation and a godly judgement.

And if any thing here ſeemeth to your honourable audience to be erroneous or diſagreeing to the Scripture, if it ſhall pleaſe your Lordſhip to heare us patiently, which do offer our ſelves to the Scriptures, thereby to make anſwer and to be tried, in ſo doing we poore ſubjects being in much captivitie and bondage are moſt bound to pray for your noble eſtate and long preſervation.

The requeſt of theſe men being ſo juſt, and their doctrine ſo ſound, yet all this could not prevail with the Biſhop and other Judges, but that ſentence ſhould have proceeded againſt them incontinent, had not the goodneſſe of the Lord better provided for his ſervants, then the Biſhop had intended. For as they were now under the edge of the ax, ready to be condemned by ſentence, it was thought otherwiſe by the Cardinall, and ſome other wiſer heads, fearing belike, leſt by the death of ſo many together, ſome diſturbance might riſe peradventure among the people; and ſo it was decreed among themſelves, that rather they ſhould make ſome ſubmiſſion or confeſſion, ſuch as they would themſelves, and ſo be ſent home again, as they were indeed; howbeit divers of them afterward were apprehended and put to death. But in the meane ſpace as touching their ſubmiſſion which they made, this it was, as in form here followeth.

The ſubmiſſion or confeſſion of theſe aforeſaid priſoners.

An eaſie ſubmiſſion of the priſoners.

BEcauſe our Saviour Chriſt at his laſt Supper took bread, and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and gave it unto his diſciples, and ſaid, Take, eat, this is my bodie which is given for you, this do in remembrance of me; Therefore according to the words of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, we do beleeve in the Sacrament to be Chriſts bodie. And likewiſe he took the cup, gave thanks, and gave it to his Diſciples, and ſaid, This is my blood of the new Teſtament which is ſhed for many.

Therefore likewiſe we do beleeve that it is the blood of Chriſt, according as Chriſts Church doth miniſter the ſame. Unto the which Catholique Church of Chriſt, we do in this like as in all other matters ſubmit our ſelves, promiſing therein to live as it becometh good Chriſtian men, and here in this realm to uſe our ſelves, as it becometh faithfull ſubjects unto our moſt gracious King and Queen, and to all other ſuperiours both ſpirituall and temporall, according to our bounden duties.

The names of them which ſubſcribed to this ſubmiſſion, were theſe, John Atkine, Alyn Symſon, Richard George, Thomas Firefanne, William Munt, Richard Joly, Richard Gratwicke, Thomas Winſley, Richard Rothe, Richard Clark, Stephen Glover, Robert Colman, Thomas Merſe, William Bongeor, Robert Bercock, Margaret Hide, Elyn Euring, Chriſtian Pepper Margaret Feld, Alice Munt, Joan Winſley, Cyſly Warren, Roſe Alyn, Anne Whitelocke, George Barker, John Sarby, Thomas Locker, Alice Locker.

A ſtory of five other godly Martyrs, burned at one fire in Smithfield, the twelfth day of Aprill.

TO proceed further in this ſtorie of perſecuted Martyrs, next in order follow five other burned at London in Smithfield in the foreſaid yeer of the Lord 1557. April 12. whoſe names were theſe:

Q. MARIE. Five Martyrs. Anno 1557.

Thomas Loſeby.
Henrie Ramſey.
Thomas Thirtel.
Margaret Hide, and Agnes Stanley.

Touching theſe articles, reade before.

Who being, ſome by the Lord Rich, ſome by other Iuſtices of Peace, and Conſtables (their owne neighbours) at the firſt accuſed, and apprehended for not coming to their Pariſh Churches, were in the end ſent unto Boner Biſhop of London, and by his commandement the 27. day of Ianuarie were examined before D. Darbiſhire, then Chancellor to the ſaid Biſhop, upon the former generall Articles mentioned.

Anſwers to the Articles.

Their anſwers to the articles.

VVhoſe anſwers thereunto were, that as they confeſſed there was one true and Catholike Church, whereof they ſtedfaſtly beleeved, and thought the Church of Rome to be no part or member: ſo in the ſame Church they beleeved there were but two ſacraments, that is to ſay, Baptiſme, and the Supper of the Lord. Howbeit ſome of them attributed the title and honour of a ſacrament, to the holy eſtate of Matrimonie, which undoubtedly was done rather of ſimple ignorance then of any wilfull opinion, and are thereof to be adiudged as before is admoniſhed.

Two Sacraments onely.

Moreover, they acknowledged themſelves to be baptized into the faith of that true Church, as in the third article is ſpecified. And here in reading as well of theſe articles, as alſo of the reſt, marke I beſeech you the craftie ſubtiltie of theſe Catholike Champions, who intermixing certaine points of Faith, and of the true Church, with the idolatrous and ſuperſtitious maumetrie of their Romiſh Synagogue, cauſe the poore and ſimple people, for lack of knowledge, oftentimes to fall into their craftie nets.

Crafty dealing of the Papiſts. Simple ignorance deceived.

For after they have made them grant a true Church with the ſacraments of the ſame, though not in ſuch number as they would have them, and alſo they that were chriſtened into the faith thereof, that is, in the name of the Father, of the Son, and the holy Ghoſt, they craftily now in the other their objections, deſcending as it were from the faith of the Trinitie, unto their idolatrous maſſe and other ſuperſtitious ceremonies, would make them grant that now in denying thereof, they have ſevered themſelves from the faith of the true Church, whereunto they were baptized; which is moſt falſe. For though the true light of Gods Goſpel and holy word, was marvellouſly darkened, and in a manner utterly extinguiſhed: yet the true faith of the Trinitie, by the mercifull providence of God, was ſtil preſerved, and into the faith thereof were we baptized, and not into the beliefe and profeſſion of their horrible idolatrie and vain Ceremonies.

They which ſeparate themſelves from certaine traſh brought into the church, do not ſeparate themſelves from the Church.

Theſe things not throughly weighed by theſe poore, yet faithfull, and true members of Chriſt, cauſed ſome of them ignorantly to grant, that when they came to the yeers of diſcretion, and underſtood the light of the Goſpel, they did ſeparate themſelves from the faith of the Church, meaning none other but onely to ſeparate themſelves from the admitting or allowing of ſuch their Popiſh and erroneous traſh as they now had defiled the church of Chriſt withall, and not from their faith received in Baptiſme, which in expreſſe words in their anſwers to the other articles they conſtantly affirmed, declaring the maſſe and ſacrament of the altar, to be moſt wicked blaſphemy againſt Chriſt Ieſus, and contrary to the truth of his Goſpel, and therefore utterly they refuſed to aſſent unto and to be reconciled againe thereunto.

Theſe anſwers in effect of them thus taken by the ſaid Chancellor, they were for that time diſmiſſed; but the Biſhop, taking the matter into his own hands, the firſt day of March, propounded unto them certain other new Articles: the copy whereof followeth.

Other Articles objected by Boner, Biſhop of London, againſt Thomas Loſeby, Henrie Ramſey, Thomas Thirtell, Margaret Hide, and Agnes Stanley, the ſixth day of March, being the ſecond time of their examination.

Other new articles propounded to them by B. Boner.

1 FIrſt, that thou haſt thought, beleeved, and ſpoken, within ſome part of the Citie and Dioceſſe of London, that the faith, religion, and Eccleſiaſticall ſervice here obſerved and kept, as it is in the Realme of England, is not a true and a laudable faith, religion, and ſervice, eſpecially concerning the Maſſe, and the ſeven ſacraments, nor is agreeable to Gods word and Teſtament, and that thou canſt not finde in thy heart without murmuring, grudging, or ſcruple to receive and uſe it, and to conforme thy ſelfe unto it, as other ſubjects of this realme cuſtomably have done and doe.

Maſſe & ſeven Sacraments.

English ſervice

2 Item, that thou haſt thought, &c. that the Engliſh ſervice ſet forth in the time of K. Edward the ſixth, here in this Realme of England, was and is good and godly, and Catholike in all points, and that it alone ought here in this realme to be received, uſed, and practiſed, and none other.

Coming to Church.

3 Item, likewiſe thou haſt thought, &c. that thou art not bound to come to thy Pariſh Church, and there to be preſent, and heare Mattins, Maſſe, Evenſong, and other divine ſervice, ſung or ſaid there.

Aſhes, Palmes, creeping to the croſſe, holy bread, holy water, &c.

4 Item, thou haſt thought, &c. that thou art not bound to come to Proceſſion to the Church, upon daies and times appointed, and to go in the ſame with others of the Pariſh ſinging or ſaying then the accuſtomed prayers uſed in the Church, nor to beare a taper or candle on Candlemas day, nor take aſhes upon Aſhwedneſday, nor beare palmes upon Palme Sunday, nor to creep to the croſſe upon daies accuſtomed, nor to receive and kiſſe the pax at Maſſe time, nor to receive holy water or holy bread, nor to accept and allow the ceremonies and uſages of the Church, after the manner and faſhion, as they are uſed in this Realme.

Confeſſion.

5 Item, thou haſt thought, &c. that thou art not bound at any time to confeſſe thy ſinnes to any Prieſt, and to receive abſolution at his hands, as Gods miniſter, nor to receive at any time the bleſſed ſacrament of the altar, eſpecially as it is uſed in this Church of England.

6 Item, thou haſt thought, &c. that in matters of religion and faith, thou muſt follow and beleeve thine own conſcience onely, and not give credit to the determination and common order of the Catholike Church, and the See of Rome, nor to any member thereof.

Abſolute neceſſitie.

7 Item, thou haſt thought, &c. that all things do chance of an abſolute and preciſe meere neceſſitie, ſo that whether man do well or evill, he could not chooſe but do ſo, and that therefore no man hath any free will at all.

Chriſtening of infants.

8 Item, thou haſt thought, &c. that the faſhion and manner of chriſtening of infants, is not agreeable to Gods word, and that none can be effectually baptized, and thereby ſaved, except he have yeers of diſcretion to beleeve himſelfe, and ſo willingly accept or refuſe baptiſme at his pleaſure.

Praying for the dead.

9 Item, thou haſt thought, &c. that prayers to ſaints, or prayers for the dead, are not availeable, and not allowable by Gods word, or profitable in any wiſe, and that the ſoules departed doe ſtraightwaies go to heaven or hell, or elſe do ſleepe till the day of doome, ſo that there is no place of purgation at all.

Martyrs that ſuffered.

10 Item, thou haſt thought, &c. that all ſuch as in the time of King Henry the 8. or in the time of Queene Marie in England, have beene burned as heretikes, were no heretikes at all, but faithfull and good Chriſtian people; eſpecially Barnes, Garret, Jerome, Frith, Rogers, Hooper, Cardmaker, Latimer, Taylor, Bradford, Philpot, Cranmer, Ridley, and ſuch like, and that thou diddeſt and doſt allow, like, and approve all their opinions, and doeſt miſlike their condemnations and burnings.

Faſting daies.

11 Item, thou haſt thought, &c. that faſting, and prayers uſed in this Church of England, and the appointing of daies for faſting, and the abſtaining from fleſh upon faſting dayes, and eſpecially in the time of Lent, is not laudable or allowable by Gods word, but is hypocriſie and fooliſhneſſe: and that men ought to have libertie to eate at all times all kindes of meate.

Sacrament of the altar.

12 Item, thou haſt taught, &c. that the ſacrament of the Altar is an Idoll, and to reſerve and keepe it, or to honor it, is plaine idolatrie and ſuperſtition: and likewiſe of the Maſſe and elevation of the ſacrament.

Taking of an oath.

13. Item, thou haſt thought, &c. that thou or any elſe, convented before an Eccleſiaſticall Judge concerning matters of beliefe and faith, are not, nor is bound to make anſwer at all, eſpecially under an oath upon a booke.

Their anſwers to the Articles before objected.

Their anſwers to the articles before objected.

THeir anſwers to theſe objections were, that as touching the firſt, ſecond, third, fourth, fifth, ninth, tenth, and twelfth, they generally granted unto, ſaving that they denied the ſoules of the departed to ſleep till the day of judgement, as is mentioned in the ninth article.

And as concerning the ſixth objection, they thought themſelves bound to beleeve the true Catholike Church, ſo farre forth as the ſame doth inſtruct them according to Gods holy word, but not to follow the determinations of the erroneous and Babylonicall Church of Rome.

As for the ſeventh, eighth, and thirteenth, they utterly denied, that ever they were of any ſuch abſurd opinions as are contained therein, but they granted that man of himſelfe without the help and aſſiſtance of Gods holy ſpirit, hath no power to do any good thing acceptable in Gods ſight.

True faſting.

To the eleventh they ſaid, that true faſting and prayer, uſed according to Gods word, are allowable and availeable in his ſight, and that by the ſame word every faithfull man may eate all meats at all times, with thankſgiving to God for the ſame.

After this, the firſt day of Aprill, they were againe convented before the Biſhop in his Palace at London, where little appeareth to be done, except it were to know whether they would ſtand to their anſwers, and whether they would recant or no. But when they refuſed to recant and denie the received and infallible truth, the Biſhop cauſed them to be brought into the open Conſiſtorie, the third day of the ſame moneth of April in the forenoone, where firſt underſtanding by them their immutable conſtancie and ſtedfaſtnes, he demanded particularly of every one what they had to ſay, why he ſhould not pronounce the ſentence of condemnation.

Tho. Loſebyes words to the Biſhop.

To whom Thomas Loſeby firſt anſwered, God give me grace and ſtrength to ſtand againſt you, and your ſentence, and alſo againſt your Law, which is a devouring Law, for it devoureth the flock of Chriſt. And I perceive there is no way with me but death, except I would conſent to your devouring Law, and beleeve in that Idoll the Maſſe.

Tho. Thirtels words to Boner.

Next unto him anſwered Thomas Thirtell, ſaying, My Lord, I ſay thus, if you make me an heretike, then you make Chriſt and all the twelve Apoſtles heretikes: for I am in the true faith and right beliefe, and I will ſtand in it, for I know ful well I ſhall have eternall life therefore.

Henrie Ramſeys words to Boner.

The Biſhop then asked the like queſtion of Henry Ramſey: who ſaid againe, My Lord, will you have me to goe from the truth that I am in? I ſay unto you, that my opinions be the very truth, which I will ſtand unto, and not go from them: and I ſay unto you further, that there are two Churches upon the earth, and we (meaning himſelfe and other true Martyrs and Profeſſors of Chriſt) be of the true Church, and ye be not.

Margaret Hides words to Boner.

Unto this queſtion next anſwered Margaret Hide, ſaying, My Lord, you have no cauſe to give ſentence againſt me: for I am in the true faith and opinion, and will never forſake it; and I doe wiſh that I were more ſtrong in it then I am.

Agnes Stanleys words to Boner.

Laſt of all anſwered Agnes Stanley, and ſaid, I had rather every haire of my head were burned, if it were never ſo much worth, then that I will forſake my faith and opinion, which is the true faith.

Loſebys words to Boner.

Sentence given againſt Loſeby.

The time being now ſpent, they were commanded to appeare againe at afternoone in the ſame place: which commandement being obeyed, the Biſhop firſt called for Loſeby, and after his accuſtomed manner willed his articles and anſwers to be read: in reading thereof, when mention was made of the ſacrament of the altar, the biſhop with his Colleagues put off their caps. Whereat Loſeby ſaid, My Lord, ſeeing you put off your cappe, I will put on my cappe, and therewithall did put on his cappe. And after, the Biſhop continuing in his accuſtomable perſwaſions, Loſeby againe ſaid unto him, My Lord, I truſt I have the ſpirit of truth, which you deteſt and abhorre, for the wiſdome of God is fooliſhneſſe unto you. Whereupon the Biſhop pronounced the ſentence of condemnation againſt him. And delivering him unto the Sheriffe, called for Margaret Hide, with whom he uſed the like order of exhortations.

The words of Margaret Hide to the Biſhop.

Sentence given againſt Margaret Hide.

To whom notwithſtanding ſhe ſaid, I will not depart from my ſayings till I be burned: and my Lord (quoth ſhe) I would ſee you inſtruct me with ſome part of Gods word, and not to give me inſtructions of the holy bread and holy water, for it is no part of the Scripture. But he, being neither himſelfe, nor any of his, able rightly to accompliſh her requeſt, to make ſhort work, uſed his finall reaſon of convincement, which was the ſentence of condemnation. And therefore leaving her off, called for another, viz. Agnes Stanley, who upon the Biſhops like perſwaſions made this anſwer.

The words of Agnes Stanley to the Biſhop.

My Lord, where you ſay I am an heretike, I am none; neither yet will I beleeve you, nor any man that is wiſe will beleeve as you doe. And as for theſe that ye ſay be burnt for hereſie, I beleeve are true Martyrs before God: therefore I will not goe from my opinion and faith as long as I live.

The words of Tho. Thirtell to the Biſhop.

Her talke thus ended, ſhe received the like reward that the other had. And the biſhop then turning his tale and manner of enticement unto Thomas Thirtell, received of him likewiſe this finall anſwer, My Lord, I will not hold with your idolatrous waies, as you doe: for I ſay, the Maſſe is idolatrie, and will ſticke to my faith and beliefe, ſo long as the breath is in my body. Upon which words he was alſo condemned as an heretike.

Laſt of all, was Henrie Ramſey demanded if he would (as the reſt) ſtand unto his anſwers, or elſe recanting the ſame, come home againe, and be a member of their Church. Whereunto he anſwered, I will not go from my religion and beliefe as long as I live; and my Lord (quoth he) your doctrine is naught, for it is not agreeable to Gods word.

After theſe words, the Biſhop (to conclude) pronouncing the ſentence of condemnation againſt him and the reſt (as ye have heard) charged the Sheriffes of London with them: who being thereunto commanded, the twelfth day of the ſame moneth of April, brought them into Smithfield, where all together in one fire, moſt joyfully and conſtantly they ended their temporall lives, receiving therefore the life eternall.

The ſtrange dealing of the Biſhops with Stephen Gratwick, martyr.

Among other hiſtories of the perſecuted and condemned Saints of God, I finde the condemnation of none more ſtrange nor unlawfull, then of this Stephen Gratwick: who firſt was condemned by the Biſhop of Wincheſter and the Biſhop of Rocheſter, which were not his Ordinaries.

Secondly, when he did appeale from theſe incompetent Judges to his right Ordinarie, his appeale could not be admitted.

Thirdly, when they had no other ſhift to colour their inordinate proceedings withall, they ſuborned one of the Prieſts to come in for a counterfait and a falſe Ordinarie, and ſit upon him.

Fourthly, being openly convinced and overturned in his own arguments, yet the ſaid Biſhop of Wincheſter D. White, neither would yeeld to the force of truth, nor ſuffer any of the audience aſſiſtant once to ſay, God ſtrengthen him.

Fifthly, as they brought in a falſe Ordinarie to ſit upon him; ſo they pretended falſe articles againſt him, which were no part of his examinations, but of their deviſing, to have his bloud.

Sixthly and laſtly, having no other ground nor juſt matters againſt him, but onely for ſaying theſe words; that which I ſaid, I have ſaid, they read the ſentence of death upon him.

And this was the dealing of theſe men, which needs will be reputed for Catholike Fathers of the Spiritualty, ſucceeders of the Apoſtles, diſciples of Chriſt, pillars of the holy Church, and leaders of the people. Of whoſe doings and proceedings, how agreeable they are to the example of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, I leave to diſcuſſe, referring the the judgement hereof to them, which know the inſtitution of Chriſts religion and doctrine.

The inordinate handling of Ste. Gratwick written and teſtified by his owne record.

Now leſt peradventure the diſordered miſrule of theſe Chriſtmas Lords, will not be credited upon the ſimple narration of the ſtorie, ye ſhall heare the whole diſcourſe of this proceſſe regiſtred by the hand of the Martyr himſelfe, who as he could tell beſt what was done; ſo I am ſure would not teſtifie otherwiſe then truth was, according as you ſhall heare by his owne declaration here following.

The declaration of Stephen Gratwick concerning his own ſtory and condemnation.

The ſtory and examination of Ste. Gratwick, Martyr, under the B. of Win. & Rocheſter, &c.

Upon the 25. day of May, in the yeere of our Lord, 1557. I Stephen Gratwick came before the Biſhop of Wincheſter, D. White, into S. Georges Church in Southwark at 8. of the clock in the morning, and then he called me before him, and ſaid unto me.

B. Winch. Stephen Gratwick, how ſtandeth the matter with thee now? Art thou contented to revoke thy hereſies, the which thou haſt maintained and defended here within my Dioceſſe, oftentimes before me; and alſo upon Sunday laſt ye ſtood up in the face of the whole Church maintaining your hereſies, ſo that you have offended within the libertie of my Dioceſſe: and now I being your Ordinary you muſt anſwer to me directly, whether you will revoke them or not; the which I have here in writing, and if ſo be that you will not revoke them, then I will excommunicate you, and therefore note well what you do, for now I reade here the articles againſt you.

And ſo when he had ended, he bade me anſwer unto them.

Grat. My Lord, theſe articles which you have here objected againſt me, are not mine, but of your own making. For I never had any of mine examinations written at any time, and therefore theſe be the objections that you lay againſt me as a ſnare to get my bloud.

Ste. Gratwick appealeth from the B. of Win. to his owne Ordinarie.

Wherefore I deſire your lawfull favour, to allow my lawfull appeale unto mine Ordinarie: for I have nothing to doe with you. And whereas you doe burden me, that I have offended within your dioceſſe, it is nothing ſo: for I have not enterpriſed either to preach or teach within your Dioceſſe, but was apprehended by mine owne Biſhop and ſent priſoner into your dioceſſe, by the conſent of the Councell and mine owne Ordinarie, and therefore I ſo being in your dioceſſe, you have no cauſe to let my lawfull appeale.

The B. of Rocheſter cometh in.

And with that there came the Biſhop of Rocheſter, and was received at the Biſhop of Winceſters hands with much gladneſſe, according to their determinate purpoſe before invented. And ſo followed the Archdeacon of Canterburie. And then the Biſhop againe ſtart up as a man halfe raviſhed of his wits for joy, embracing him with many gentle words, and ſaid, that he was very glad of his coming, making himſelfe ignorant thereof, as he thought it ſhould appeare to me. Then ſaid Wincheſter.

Ste. Gratwick not of Rocheſt. Dioceſſe.

B. Winch. Sir, I am very glad of your coming. For here I have one before me, who hath appealed unto you being his Ordinarie. Then ſaid the Archdeacon of Canterburie.

Arch. Cant. I know this man very well. He hath beene divers times before me. And then I anſwered and ſaid:

Gratw. My Lord, I am not of his Dioceſſe, not by five miles: for his Dioceſſe reacheth on that part but to the Clifts of Lewes, and I dwelled at Bright Hempſon, five miles beyond, in the Dioceſſe of the Biſhop of Chicheſter; and therefore I am not of his Dioceſſe.

The Biſhops counterfait a falſe Ordinarie againſt Steven Gratwick.

Then the Biſhop of Wincheſter, the Biſhop of Rocheſter, and the Archdeacon of Canterburie, caſt their heads together, and laughed: and then they ſaid, My Ordinarie would be here by and by, and ſo they ſent forth for a counterfait inſtead of mine Ordinarie, and then I ſaw them laugh, and ſpake unto them and ſaid:

See what care theſe men have of poore mens bloud.

Grat. Why do ye laugh? are ye confederate together for my bloud, and therein triumph? you have more cauſe to look weightily upon the matter: for I ſtand here before you upon life & death. But you declare your ſelves what you are: for you are lapped in Lambes apparell, but I would to God ye had coats according to your aſſembly here, which is ſcarlet gownes, for I do here perceive you are bent to have my bloud.

And then came ruſhing in that counterfaited Biſhop, who was the hired ſervant to deliver me into the hands of the high Prieſt; and the Biſhop hearing him come, with haſte inquired of his man, who was there: and he ſaid, My Lord of Chicheſter. Then the Biſhop with haſte roſe up and ſaid.

Here cometh in the vice in the play.

Winch. Ye are moſt heartily welcome, and required him to ſit downe; and then ſaid the Biſhop of Wincheſter to me, Lo here is your Ordinarie, What have you now to ſay unto him?

Grat. I have nothing to ſay unto him. If he have nothing to ſay unto me, I pray you let me depart. Then anſwered my counterfait Ordinarie and ſaid.

Counterf. Here you ſtand before my Lords and me in triall of your faith, & if you bring the truth, we ſhall by compulſion give place unto you, as it is to be proved by the word, and your doctrine to be heard and embraced for a truth.

Grat. Then I demanded of him whether he meant by authoritie, or by the judgement of the ſpirit of God in his members.

And he anſwered me, by authoritie as well as by the ſpirit.

Chriſt bringing the truth could not be heard of the Scribes and Phariſees.

Grat. Then I ſaid. Now will I turne your owne argument upon you: for Chriſt came before the high Prieſts, Scribes, and Phariſees, bringing the truth with him, being the very truth himſelfe, which truth cannot lie, yet both he and his truth was condemned, and took no place with them. And alſo the Apoſtles, and all the Martyrs that died ſince Chriſt: therefore I turne your owne argument upon you, anſwer it if you can.

Counterf. Then he with a great heat of choler, ſaid unto the Biſhop of Wincheſter, Object ſome articles againſt him, for he is obſtinate, and would faine get out of our hands, therefore hold him to ſome particular: ſo that other anſwer could I not have of his argument.

Objections of the Biſhops owne making.

Winch. Then the Biſhop of Wincheſter began to reade his objections of his owne making againſt me, and bade me anſwer unto them. And I ſaid:

Grat. No, except you would ſet the law apart, becauſe I ſee you are mindfull of my bloud.

Winch. Now you may ſee he will not anſwer to theſe, but as he hath aforeſaid. Then ſpake the Counterfait Ordinarie againe, and ſaid:

Counterf. My Lord, aske him what he ſaith to the Sacrament of the Altar. Then the Biſhop asked me, as my counterfait Ordinarie required him.

Sacrament of the Lords Supper.

Grat. My Lord, I doe beleeve that in the Sacrament of the Supper of the Lord truely miniſtred in both kindes, according to the inſtitution of Chriſt, unto the worthy receiver, he eateth myſtically by faith the body and bloud of Chriſt. Then I asked him if it were not the truth. And he ſaid, Yes. Then ſaid I, Beare witneſſe of the truth.

The ſacrament of the Altar no Sacrament.

Winch. Then the Biſhop of Wincheſter, whoſe head being ſubtileſt to gather upon my words, ſaid, My Lord, ſee you not how he creepeth away with his hereſies, and covereth them privily? Note how he here ſeparateth the Sacrament of the Altar from the Supper of the Lord, meaning it not to be the true Sacrament, and alſo how he condemneth our miniſtration in one kinde, and alloweth that the unworthy receiver doth not eate and drinke the bodie and bloud of Chriſt; which be ſore matters truely weighed, being covered very craftily with his ſubtile ſhifts and ſophiſtrie, but he ſhall anſwer directly or ever he depart.

The wicked eate not the body of the Lord.

Grat. My Lord, that is but your gathering of my words, for you before confeſſed the ſame ſayings to be the truth, and this you catch at me, and faine would have a vantage for my bloud: but ſeeing you judge me not to meane the ſacrament of the Altar, now come to the probation of the ſame Sacrament, and prove it to be the true Sacrament, and I am with you; or elſe if you can prove your Church to be the true Church, I am alſo with you.

The Biſhop of Wincheſters reaſon to prove the ſacrament in one kinde.

But then he called to memory the laſt probation of the Church and Sacraments, how he before was driven to forſake the Scriptures, and to ſhew me by good reaſon how they might miniſter the Sacrament in one kinde: and his reaſon was this, Like as a man or woman dyeth on a ſudden, and ſo when we have given him the body of Chriſt, in the meane time the partie dieth, and ſo he eateth the body of Chriſt, and not drinketh his bloud. And this was his ſimple ſhift in the proving of their Sacraments: ſo that he was now halfe abaſhed to beginne that matter againe.

But yet a little ſhift he brought in, and ſaid:

Winch. What ſayſt thou by the adminiſtration of the Prieſts every day for themſelves, and they miniſter in both kindes?

To that I anſwered, you have two adminiſtrations, for I am ſure at Eaſter you miniſter but in one kinde, and therefore it is not according to the inſtitution of Chriſt, but after your own imaginations.

Winc. Why, then what ſaiſt thou to theſe words, Take, eate, this is my body. Theſe are the words of Chriſt. Wilt thou deny them?

Grat. My Lord, they are the words of Scripture, I affirme them, and not deny them.

Rocheſter. Why, then thou doeſt confeſſe in the Sacrament of the Altar to be a reall preſence, the ſelfe ſame bodie that was borne of the Virgin Marie, and is aſcended up into heaven.

Grat. My Lord, what do you now mean? do you not alſo meane a viſible body? for it cannot be, but of neceſſitie, if it be a reall preſence, and a materiall body, it muſt be a viſible body alſo.

Winc. Nay, I ſay unto thee, it is a reall preſence, and a materiall body, and an inviſible body too.

The Catholikes make a fantaſticall body in the ſacrament.

Grat. My Lord, then it muſt needs be a fantaſticall body, for if it ſhould be a materiall and inviſible as you affirme, then it muſt needs be a fantaſticall body: for it is apparent, that Chriſts humane body was viſible and ſeen.

Winc. Then the Biſhop brake out and ſaid, when diddeſt thou ſee him? I pray thee tell me.

Grat. To that I anſwered and ſaid, a ſimple argument it is; Becauſe our corporall eies cannot comprehend Chriſt, doth not prove or follow, that he is inviſible, becauſe we cannot ſee him?

Winc. And with that the Biſhop began to waxe wearie of his argument, and removed his talke to Judas in eating the ſacrament, and ſaid, He eate him wholly, as the Apoſtles did.

Grat. And then I asked him, if he meant Chriſts fleſh and bloud, the which he ſpeaketh of in the ſixth of John, and ſaith, He that eateth my fleſh and drinketh my bloud, hath eternall life in me.

Winc. To that he anſwered and ſaid, Yea.

If the wicked do eate the body of Chriſt, they muſt needs be ſaved: and if Infants eate him not, they muſt be condemned by the Popes doctrine

Grat. Then ſaid I, of neceſſitie Judas muſt needs be ſaved, becauſe he did eate the fleſh, and dranke the bloud of Chriſt, as you have affirmed, and alſo all the ungodly that die without repentance, becauſe they have eaten your ſacrament, which you ſay is the fleſh and bloud of Chriſt: therefore of neceſſitie they ſhall receive the benefit thereof, that is, eternall life. Which is a great abſurditie to grant, and then of neceſſitie it muſt follow, that all that eate not, and drinke not of your ſacrament, ſhall finally periſh and be damned: for Chriſt ſaith, Except ye eate my fleſh, and drinke my blood, you can have no life in you. And you have afore ſaid that of your ſacrament, which you ſay is the ſame fleſh and bloud that Chriſt ſpeaketh of: and here I prove, that all children then, that die under age to receive the ſacrament, by your own argument muſt be damned, which is horrible blaſphemy to ſpeake. Now here I turn your owne argument upon you, anſwer it if you can.

Winc. My Lord, doe you not ſee what deceitfull arguments he bringeth in here againſt us, mingled with ſophiſtrie, and keepeth himſelfe in vantage, ſo that we can get no hold upon him? But I ſay unto thee, thou perverſe heretike, I ſee now, thou art a perverſe fellow. I had a better opinion of thee, but now I ſee we loſe our time about thee, yet I anſwer thee, St. Paul doth open the ſixth of John plainly, if thou wilt ſee: for he ſaith, They eate Chriſts body, and drinke his bloud unworthily, and that was the cauſe of their damnation.

Falſhood in alledging the Scriptures.

Grat. My Lord, take heed ye doe not adde unto the Text, for he that addeth unto the Text, is accurſed of God, & I am ſure here you have brought more then Paul hath ſpoken: for he ſaith not, becauſe they have eaten his body and drunke his bloud unworthily; but S. Paul ſaith, Whoſoever ſhall eate of this bread, and drinke of the cup unworthily, ſhall be guilty of the body and bloud of Chriſt. Note my Lord, he ſaith not as you have affirmed, but cleane contrary. And with that they were all in a great rage.

The Biſhops failed of their purpoſe, and are in a rage.

Winc. And the Biſhop of Wincheſter ſaid, I belied the Text.

Grat. And then I called for the Text.

Winc. And he ſaid, I asked thee even now if thou underſtoodeſt Latine, and thou ſaidſt, whether I can or no, the people ſhall beare witneſſe in Engliſh.

Grat. And ſo I called againe for the Teſtament, whether it were Latine or Engliſh for the triall of the Text.

Winc. And then when the Biſhop of Wincheſter ſaw that I cared not whether of the tranſlations I had, he ſtood up, thinking to beguile ſome ſimple man that had a booke there, and bade him that had an Engliſh Teſtament to bring it in, that he might get ſome hold at him that ſhould bring a Teſtament: but God diſappointed him thereof, and ſo he flew away from his matter, and began to raile upon me, and ſaid my ſubtle arguments ſhould not ſerve: for if I would not anſwer directly, I ſhould nevertheleſſe be excommunicated. For (ſaid he) I ſee a mad toy in thine head; thou glorieſt much in thy talke, and thinkeſt now the people are come about thee, that thou ſhalt incourage them with thy conſtant hereticall opinion. For the laſt day when thou waſt before me upon Sunday in St. Marie Overies Church, thou there reprovedſt my Sermon, and hadſt a thouſand by thee at the leaſt, to bid God ſtrengthen thee: but now let me ſee him here that dare open his mouth to bid God ſtrengthen thee; he ſhall die the death that thou ſhalt die.

No Engliſh teſtament durſt be brought.

The Biſhop of Win. reproved of Gratwick in his ſermon. The Biſhop of Winch. threatneth them that pray to God to ſtrengthen Gratwicke.

Grat. To that I anſwered, My Lord, I know your crueltie doth extend more largely then your pitie. Good experience ſo I have to ſay, for you keepe men in priſon a yeere or two, taking their bookes from them, permitting them not ſo much as a Teſtament to looke upon for their ſoules comfort, the which all men ought to have: and ſo you intreat them more like brute beaſts then Chriſtian men.

The crueltie of Catholikes upon Chriſtian priſoners.

Winc. No Sir, we will uſe you as we will uſe the childe: for if the childe will hurt himſelfe with the knife, we will keep the knife from him. So becauſe you will damne your ſoule with the word, therefore you ſhall not have it.

Grat. My Lord, a ſimple argument you bring to maintaine and cover your fault. Are you not aſhamed to make the word the cauſe of our damnation? I never knew any man but onely you that did not affirme our ſinnes to be the cauſe of our damnation, and not the word, as you ſay: and therefore if your argument be good, then this is good alſo; Becauſe that ſome men do abuſe drinke, therefore the benefit of drinke ſhould be taken from all men, or any other ſuch like good gift.

A popiſh ſimilitude well applied.

Winch. overthrowne in his own ſimilitude.

Winc. My Lords, here we loſe much time, for this fellow is perverſe, ſpeaking nothing but ſophiſtrie and perverſe queſtions: ſo that we can get no advantage upon him.

Then ſpake my counterfait Ordinarie, as one halfe aſleep all this while; yet ſomewhat with haſte when he was awaked he began to tell his tale, and ſaid:

Counterf. Reade theſe articles againſt him once more, and if he will not anſwer them, take him upon his firſt words; That which I ſaid, that I have ſaid.

Winc. Then the Biſhop of Wincheſter began to reade them againe.

Grat. But I ſaid unto him, I would not anſwer them, becauſe they were none of mine examinations, but objections of their owne making, becauſe they would have my bloud. But yet I ſaid, if they would ſet the Law apart, I would talke my conſcience freely to them.

Counterf. Then my counterfait Ordinarie began to ſpeake again, charging me with the ſaying of S. Peter, that I ſhould render account of ſuch hope as was in me.

Grat. So can I do, and yet I ſhall not pleaſe you, for here I now render my hope as S. Peter willeth me: I beleeve onely in Jeſus Chriſt to have my ſalvation in him, by him, and through him; but I perceive you would have me render my faith in ſuch ſort, as you may have my bloud, and therefore you bring good Scriptures and evill apply them.

Theſe Catholikes will not be contented with confeſſing of Chriſt onely.

Winc. Why, this fellow is perverted, and we ſhall get no more at his hands then we have alreadie; therefore let us pronounce ſentence againſt him, for we do but loſe our time.

Grat. Nay good my Lord, ſeeing you will needs have my bloud, let me ſay a little more for my ſelfe.

The railing ſermon of Winc. againſt good men.

Winch. preacheth againſt himſelfe.

Upon Sunday laſt, when I was before you, you preached this which was a truth, and agreeable to the doctrine of the Apoſtle St. James, and ſaid, If any man thinke himſelfe a religious man, and in the meane time ſeduce his tongue or his heart, the ſame mans religion is a vaine religion; and ſo my Lord, you ſtanding there in the pulpit, in the meane time ſeduced your tongue to ſlander us poore priſoners being there preſent in iron bonds, burdening us with the ſect of Arrians, and with the ſect of Herodians, and with the ſect of Anabaptiſts, and with the ſect of Sacramentaries, and with the ſect of Pelagians.

True Chriſtians not ſuffered to purge themſelves.

He meaneth againſt the reall preſence.

And when we ſtood up to purge our ſelves thereof, you ſaid you would cut out our tongues, and cauſe us to be pulled out of the church by violence. But there you gave your ſelfe a ſhrewd blow, for your tongue in the meane time ſlandered your neighbour. For I my Lord will give my life againſt all theſe hereſies, the which you there burdened us withall, even as I will give my life againſt that wherein I now ſtand before you. And with that he was raging angrie, and caught my condemnation, and ſaid.

Winc. Thou wilt grant here no more, but this word, that I have ſaid, I have ſaid: and here I gather matter enough to condemne thee, for this is a confirmation of all that thou haſt heretofore ſaid.

Grat. Then I anſwered, If you can prove that ever any of mine examinations were written, it were enough: but you have nothing againſt me, but objections of your owne making.

Winch. condemneth Ste. Gratwick, and why?

Winch. Have at thee now. If thou wilt not yeeld, I will pronounce ſentence againſt thee, and ſo he proceeded forth onward apace, curſing and banning in Latine; ſo that I told him, If the people might heare it in Engliſh, they would thinke you an uncharitable Biſhop.

Ste. Gratwick condemned againſt order, both of temporall and ſpirituall law.

Grat. And then I ſaid, ſtay my Lord, & note what you doe: for you have neither temporall law nor ſpirituall here againſt me in any cauſe.

Then ſtepped forth a Gentleman, and ſaid unto my Lord, Take heed what you do: for he doth here ſay, that you have no title nor cauſe why you ſhould condemne him.

Then the Biſhop looked about him againe, and asked me if I would recant.

I asked him, whereof I ſhould recant.

Then ſaid the Biſhop. Are you there? nay then I know what I have to doe: and ſo he proceeded forth in reading my condemnation. And there was another Gentleman which began to ſnap and ſnatch at me: and then ſaid I, I would God I had knowne this or ever I had come from home, I would ſurely have put on breeches, and not had my skin thus torne. And all this while the Biſhop read forth ſtill.

At laſt his Chaplaines cried, Stop, ſtop, my Lord: for now he will recant. And then the biſhop asked me againe.

Ste. Gratwick conſtant in Chriſt and in his death.

And I anſwered and ſaid, My Lord, my faith is grounded more ſtedfaſtly, then to change in a moment, it is no proceſſe of time can alter me, unleſſe my faith were as the waves of the ſea: and ſo the Biſhop made an end, and delivered me into the hands of the Sheriffe, to be carried priſoner to the Marſhalſey againe. And when I was condemned, I deſired God with a loud voyce, that he would not lay my bloud to their charge, if it were his good will, and ſo then they refuſed my prayer, and ſent me away. Then I began to talke as I went, and they cried, Cut out his tongue, or ſtop his mouth: and ſo I was brought to the Marſhalſey, and lapped in iron bands. Therefore I pray unto God that they unto whom this preſent writing ſhall come, may take example by my death and ſouldier-fare. So be it.

Gratwick after his condemnation prayeth for his enemies.

Q. Marie. Anno. 1557.

By me Stephen Gratwick, condemned for Gods everlaſting truth.

Ste. Gratwick to the reader.

Here for want of time, I have left out many matters, becauſe the Lord hath haſtened the time, ſo that I have written but the briefeneſſe of the matter in probation of faith, and the reward of faith, the which the Biſhop of Rocheſter, and I debated upon; the which matter I would have been very glad to have ſet downe in writing.

Winc. attempteth Ste. Gratwick with flattering and praiſing.

Alſo much more talke there was, that the Biſhop of Wincheſter and I had concerning my worldly friends and perſonall eſtate: for he plaid Satan with me, he carried me up to the mountaines and there told me, my learning was good, and my eloquence, and alſo my knowledge, ſave that I did abuſe it, ſaid he; and then he fell to prayſing of my perſon, that it was comely, and worthy to ſerve a Prince. Thus Satan flattered with me, to make me anſwer unto ſuch objections as he would lay againſt me, that I might fall into his Dioceſſe.

Thus Steven Gratwick this Chriſtian Martyr, being wrongfully condemned by the Biſhop of Wincheſter (as ye have heard) was burned with W. Morant, and one King, in S. Georges field, about the latter end of May.

Seven godly Martyrs, five women and two men, burned at Maidſtone for the word of truth, and profeſſing the ſincere religion of Chriſt.

June 18.

Ric. Thornton, Nich. Harpsfield, perſecutors.

I Shewed a little before, how after the univerſall Proclamation was ſent and ſet forth by the King and Queene in the moneth of Februarie laſt, the ſtorme of perſecution beganne in all places to riſe (whereof ſome part alſo is declared before: but yet in no place more then in the Countrey and Dioceſſe of Canterburie, by reaſon of certaine the aforeſaid inquiſitors, being now armed with authoritie, but eſpecially by reaſon of Richard Thornton Suffragan of Dover, and the Archdeacon of Cant. who of their owne nature were ſo furious and fiery againſt the harmeleſſe flock of Chriſt, that there was no neede of any proclamation to ſtirre up the coales of their burning crueltie, by reaſon whereof many a godly Saint lyeth ſlain under the altar; and in divers places of this booke well may appeare.

And now to returne to the ſaid Dioceſſe of Canterburie againe, in the next moneth following, being the moneth of June, the 18. day of the ſame, were ſeven Chriſtian and true faithfull Martyrs of Chriſt burned at Maidſtone, whoſe names here follow:

The names of the Martyrs.

Ioane Bradbridge of Stapleherſt.
Walter Appleby of Maidſtone.
Petronill his wife.
Edmund Allin of Fritenden.
Katherine his wife.
Ioane Mannings wife of Maidſtone.
Elizabeth a blinde Maiden.

As concerning the generall articles commonly objected to them in the publike Conſiſtorie, and the order of their condemnation, it differeth not much from the uſuall manner expreſſed before, neither did their anſwers in effect much differ from the other that ſuffered under the ſame Ordinarie in the foreſaid Dioceſſe of Canterburie.

Now as touching their accuſers, and manner of apprehenſion, and their private conflicts with the adverſaries, I finde no great matter coming to my hands, ſave onely of Edmund Allin ſome intimation is given me, how his troubles came, what was his cauſe and anſwers before the Juſtices, as here conſequently ye ſhall underſtand.

The examination of Edmund Allin.

The ſtory of Edmund Allin, with his trouble and examination before ſir John Baker.

This Allin was a Milner, of the Pariſh of Frytenden in Kent, and in a dear yeer, when as many poore people were like to ſtarve, he fed them, and ſold his corn better cheap by halfe then others did; and did not that onely, but alſo fed them with the food of life, reading to them the Scriptures, and interpreting them. This being known to the Popiſh Prieſts thereabouts dwelling, by the procurement of them, namely, of John Tailor Parſon of Frytenden, and Thomas Henden Parſon of Stapleherſt, he was eftſoons complained of to the Juſtices, and brought before ſir John Baker Knight; who firſt ſending for them, committed both him and his wife to Ward, but not long after they were let out, I know not how, and ſo went over unto Calice. Where after that he had continued a certain ſpace, he began to be troubled in conſcience, and there meeting with one John Webbe, of the ſame Pariſh of Fritenden (who was likewiſe fled from the tyrannie of ſir John Baker, and Parſon Tailor) ſaid unto him, that he could not be in quiet there, whatſoever the cauſe was; for God (ſaid he) had ſomething to do for him in England: and thus ſhortly he returned home again to the Pariſh of Frytenden, where was a cruell Prieſt, there Parſon, called John Tailor.

Edmund Allin went to Calice.

Edmund Allin returneth again from Calice, & is apprehended.

This Parſon Tailor, being informed by his brother Sextan, that Edmund Allin the Milner and his wife were returned, and were not at Maſſe time in the Church; as he was the ſame time in the midſt of his Maſſe, upon a Sunday, a little before the elevation (as they terme it) even almoſt at the lifting up of his Romiſh God, he turned him to the people in a great rage, and commanded them with all ſpeed to go unto their houſe, and apprehend them, and he would come to them with as much haſte as might be poſſible. Which promiſe he well performed. For he had not ſo ſoon made an end of Ite, miſſa eſt, and the Veſtments off his back, but by and by he was at the houſe, and there laying hand of the ſaid Allin, cauſed him again to be brought to ſir John Baker, with a grievous complaint of his exhorting and reading the Scriptures to the people, and ſo was he and his wife ſent to Maidſtone priſon. Witneſſed by Richard Fletcher Vicar of Crambroke, and John Webbe of Frytenden.

Mark what a holy Maſſe ſaying was here, & what a charitable religion is this.

Witneſſes to the ſtorie.

John Dove, Tho. Beſt, Tho. Linſey, Percival Barber, perſecutors.

They were not ſo ſoon in priſon, but maſter Baker immediately ſent unto their houſe certain of his men, John Dove, Thomas Beſt, Thomas Linley, Percivall Barbel, with the foreſaid John Tailor Parſon of Frytenden, and Thomas Henden Parſon of Stapleherſt, to take an Inventorie of all the goods that were in the houſe. Where they found in the bedſtraw a casket locked with a padlock, and ſo cutting the wiſt thereof, opened it, and found therein a ſackcloth bag of money, containing the ſum of thirteen or fourteen pound, partly in gold, and partly in ſilver. Which money after they had told, and put in the bag again, like good carvers for themſelves, they carried it away with them.

Beſides alſo they found there certain books, as Pſalters, Bibles, and other writings. All which books, with the money, were delivered to the foreſaid Prieſt Thomas Henden, Parſon of Stapleherſt, and after in the reign of this Queen, Anno 5. Reg. Elizab. was by right law recovered from him again, as in records remaineth to be ſeen.

Tho. Henden Prieſt, perſecutor.

Thus good Edmund Allin and his wife, being maliciouſly accuſed, wrongfully impriſoned, and cruelly ſpoiled and robbed of all their goods, were brought (as is aforeſaid) before ſir John Baker the Juſtice, to be examined; who taunting and reviling him without all mercie and pitie, asked him if thoſe were the fruits of his Goſpel, to have conventicles to gather people together, to make conſpiracies to ſowe ſedition and rebellion; and thus he began with him to reaſon.

The talk or reaſoning between ſir Iohn Baker, Collins his Chaplain, and Edmund Allin.

The examination of Edm. Allin before ſir John Baker.

Baker. Who gave thee authoritie to preach and interpret? Art thou a Prieſt? Art thou admitted thereunto? Let me ſee thy licence.

Mart. Collins, ſir John Bakers Schoolmaſter ſaid, ſurely he is an arrant Heretique, and worthy to be burned.

Private reading or expounding of the Scriptures forbidden to no man.

Allin. And it may pleaſe your honour to give me leave to anſwer in the cauſe of my faith, I am perſwaded that God hath given me this authoritie, as he hath given to all other Chriſtians. Why are we called Chriſtians, if we do not follow Chriſt, if we do not read his Law, if we do not interpret it to others that have not ſo much underſtanding? Is not Chriſt our Father? ſhall not the Sonne follow the Fathers ſteps? is not Chriſt our Maſter? and ſhall the Scholler be inhibited to learn and preach his precepts? is not Chriſt our Redeemer? and ſhall not we praiſe his name, and ſerve him that hath redeemed us from ſinne and damnation? Did not Chriſt being but twelve yeers of age diſpute with the Doctors, and interpret the Prophet Iſaiah? and yet notwithſtanding he was neither of the tribe of Levi, which were Prieſts, but of the Royall tribe of Juda, neither had taken any outward Prieſthood; wherefore if we be Chriſtians, we muſt do the ſame.

Luke 4.

Collins. And it ſhall like your Honour, what a knave is this, that compareth himſelfe with Chriſt?

Baker. Let him alone, he will pump out anon an infinite heap of hereſies. Haſt thou any more to ſay for thy ſelf?

Allin. Yea that I have. Adam was licenced of God, and Abraham was commanded to teach his children and poſteritie, and ſo David teacheth in divers Pſalms; and Solomon alſo preached to the people, as the book of the Preacher proveth verie well, where he teacheth that there is no immortall felicitie in this life, but in the next. And Noah taught them that were diſobedient in his dayes, and therefore is called the eighth Preacher of righteouſneſſe, in the ſecond Epiſtle of Peter. Alſo in the 11. of Numbers, where Moſes had choſen ſeventy elders to help him to teach and rule the reſt, Eldad and Medad preached in the tents, wherefore Joſua being offended, complained to Moſes, that Eldad and Medad did preach without licence. To whom Moſes anſwered, and wiſhed that all the people could do the like. What ſhould I be long? moſt of the Prieſts were not of the tribe of Levi and Aaron.

Preaching without licence in the Old Teſtament.

Col. Theſe are authorities of the Old Teſtament, and therefore abrogated; but thou art a fool, and knoweſt no Schoole points. Is not the Law divided into the law ceremoniall, morall, and judiciall?

Allin. I grant that the ceremonies ceaſed when Chriſt came, as S. Paul proveth to the Hebrews, and to the Coloſſians, where he ſaith, Let no man judge you in any part of the Sabbath day, new moon, or other ceremonies, which are figures of things to come: for Chriſt is the body.

Coloſ. 1.

Col. And are not the Judicials abrogated by Chriſt?

Allin. They are confirmed both by Chriſt in the fifth of Matthew, and by Paul in the 1. Epiſtle to Timoth. 4. The Law, ſaith he, is not ſet forth for the vertuous and godly, but for men-ſlayers, perjured, adulterers, and ſuch like.

Col. "Thou art an Heretique. Wilt thou call the Judicials of Moſes again? wilt thou have adulterie puniſhed with death? diſobedient children to their parents to be ſtoned? Wilt thou have Legem talionis? But thou art an Aſſe. Why ſhould I ſpeak Latine to thee thou erroneous rebell? ſhall we now ſmite out eye for eye, tooth for tooth? thou art worthy to have thy teeth and tongue plucked out.

" Albeit the poſitive law of Moſes Judicials do not binde the Gentiles with the ſame neceſſity abſolutely to every condition, as it did the Jews, to whom it was peculiarly given: yet may the Gentiles borrow out of the ſame law ſuch things that ſhall be expedient for their regiment, neither can they borrow any laws better then out of Moſes.

Allin. If we had that law, we ſhould neither have diſobedient children, neither adulterers, neither falſe witneſſe bearers, neither ruffians.

Baker. Maſter Collins, let us return to our firſt matter. Why didſt thou teach the people, whom thou ſaidſt, thou didſt feed both bodily and ſpiritually, being no Prieſt?

Allin. Becauſe that we are all Kings to rule our affections, Prieſts to preach out the vertues and Word of G O D, as Peter writeth, and lively ſtones to give light to other. For as out of Flint ſtones cometh forth that, that is able to ſet all the world on fire; ſo out of Chriſtians ſhould ſpring the beams of the Goſpel, which ſhould inflame all the world. If we muſt give a reckoning of our faith to every man, and now to you demanding it, then muſt we ſtudie the Scriptures, and practiſe them. What availeth it a man to have meat, and will eat none; and apparrell, and will weare none; or to have an occupation, and to teach none; or to be a Lawyer, and utter none? Shall every Artificer be ſuffered, yea and commended to practiſe his facultie and ſcience, and the Chriſtian forbidden to exerciſe his? Doth not every Lawyer practiſe his Law? Is not every Chriſtian a follower of Chriſt? Shall ignorance, which is condemned in all Sciences, be practiſed of Chriſtians? Doth not ſaint Paul forbid any mans ſpirit to be quenched? Doth he prohibite any man that hath any of theſe gifts, which he repeateth, 1. Cor. 14. to practiſe the ſame? Onely he forbiddeth women, but no man. The Jews never forbade any. Read the Acts of the Apoſtles. And the reſtraint was made by Gregorie the ninth Pope of that name, as I heard one, a learned man, preach in King Edwards dayes.

In time of publike corruption, and in want of true teachers, it is not forbidden to any man to teach.

Pope Gregory the ninth firſt reſtrained lay-men to teach and inſtruct others in Scriptures.

Collins. This villaine (and it like your Honour) is mad. By my Prieſthood, I beleeve that he will ſay, that a Prieſt hath no more authoritie then another man. Doth not a Prieſt binde and looſe?

Allin. No, my ſinne bindeth me, and my repentance looſeth. God forgiveth ſinne onely, and no Prieſt. For every Chriſtian, when he ſinneth, bindeth himſelf, and when he repenteth, looſeth himſelf. And if any other be looſed from his ſinne by my exhortation, I am ſaid to looſe him; and if he perſevere in ſinne, notwithſtanding my exhortation, I am ſaid to binde him, although it is God that bindeth and looſeth, and giveth the increaſe. Therefore ſaith Chriſt, Matth. 18. Whereſoever two or three are gathered together in my Name, there am I in the midſt of them, and whoſeſoever ſins they forgive, they are forgiven; and whoſeſoever they retain, they are retained. Neither hath the Pope any keyes, ſave the keyes of errour; for the key that openeth the lock to Gods myſteries and to ſalvation, is the key of faith and repentance. And as I have heard learned men reaſon, Saint Auguſtine and Origen, with others are of this opinion. Then they reviled him, and laid him in the Stocks all the night. Wherewith certain that were better minded, being offended with ſuch extremitie, willed Allin to keep his conſcience to himſelf, and to follow Barucks counſell in the ſixth chapter. Wherefore when ye ſee the multitude of people worſhipping them, behinde and before, ſay ye in your hearts, O Lord, it is thou that ought onely to be worſhipped.

Sin bindeth, repentance looſeth, God forgiveth, man exhorteth.

How man remitteth ſin, or retaineth.

The Popes keyes be the keyes of error.

Wherewith he was perſwaded to go to hear Maſſe the next day, and ſuddenly before the ſacring went out, and conſidered in the Church-yard with himſelf, that ſuch a little cake between the Prieſts fingers could not be Chriſt, nor a materiall bodie, neither to have ſoul, life, ſinews, bones, fleſh, legs, head, arms, nor breſt, and lamented that he was ſeduced by the place of Baruck, which his conſcience gave him to be no Scripture, or elſe to have another meaning: and after this he was brought again before ſir John Baker, who asked why he did refuſe to worſhip the bleſſed ſacrament of the Altar.

Allin brought again before ſir John Baker.

Allin. It is an Idoll.

Col. It is Gods body.

Talk of the ſacrament.

Allin. It is not.

Col. By the Maſſe it is.

Allin. It is bread.

Col. How proveſt thou that?

Allin. When Chriſt ſat at his ſupper, and gave them bread to eat.

Col. Bread knave?

Allin. Yea bread, which you call Chriſts bodie. Sat he ſtill at the table, or was he both in their mouthes, and at the table? If he were both in their mouthes, and at the table, then had he two bodies, or elſe had a fantaſticall bodie; which is an abſurditie to ſay it.

Baker. Chriſts body was glorified, and might be in moe places then one.

This Papiſt granteth that Chriſt had a glorified body at his Supper.

Allin. Then he had more bodies then one, by your own placing of him.

Col. Thou ignorant Aſſe, the Schoolmen ſay, that a glorified body may be every where.

Allin. If his body was not glorified till it roſe again, then was it not glorified at his laſt ſupper; and therefore was not at the table, and in their mouthes by your own reaſon.

Col. A glorified body occupieth no place.

Allin. That which occupieth no place, is neither God, nor any thing elſe: but Chriſts body, ſay you, occupieth no place; therefore it is neither God, nor any thing elſe. If it be nothing, then is your religion nothing. If it be God, then have we four in one Trinity, which is the perſon of the Father, the perſon of the Son, the perſon of the holy Ghoſt, the humane nature of Chriſt. If Chriſt be nothing, which you muſt needs confeſſe, if he occupieth no place, then is our ſtudy in vain, our faith fruſtrate, and our hope without reward.

The Papiſts make foure perſons in one Trinity.

Col. This rebell will beleeve nothing but Scripture. How knoweſt thou that it is the Scripture but by the Church? and ſo ſaith St. Auſten.

Allin. I cannot tell what St. Auſten ſaith, but I am perſwaded, that it is Scripture by divers arguments: Firſt, that the Law worketh in me my condemnation. The Law telleth me that of my ſelf I am damned; and this damnation M. Collins, you muſt finde in your ſelf, or elſe you ſhall never come to repentance. For as this grief and ſorrow of conſcience, without faith, is deſperation; ſo is a glorious and Romiſh faith, without the lamentation of a mans ſins, preſumption.

How the Scripture is known to be Scripture.

The ſecond is the Goſpel, which is the power and ſpirit of God. This ſpirit (ſaith S. Paul) certified my ſpirit, that I am the ſon of God, and that theſe are the Scriptures.

The third are the wonderfull works of God, which cauſe me to belœve that there is a God, though we glorifie him not as God, Rom. 1. The Sun, the Moon, the Stars, and other his works (as David diſcourſeth in Pſal. 19.) declare that there is a God, and that theſe are the Scriptures, becauſe that they teach nothing elſe but God and his power, maieſtie, and might; and becauſe the Scripture teacheth nothing diſſonant from this preſcription of nature. And fourthly, becauſe that the Word of God gave authoritie to the Church in Paradiſe, ſaying, that the ſœd of the woman ſhould break down the Serpents head. This ſœd is the Goſpel; this is all the Scriptures, and by this we are aſſured of eternall life; and theſe words, The ſeed of the woman ſhall break the Serpents head, gave authoritie to the Church, and not the Church to the Word.

Baker. I heard ſay, that you ſpake againſt Prieſts and Biſhops.

The revenews of Biſhops and Prelates in England.

Allin. I ſpake for them; for now they have ſo much living, and eſpecially Biſhops, Archdeacons, and Deans, that they neither can nor will teach Gods Word. If they had a hundred pounds apœce, then would they apply their ſtudy; now they cannot for their affairs.

Col. Who will then ſet his children to ſchool?

Allin. Where there is now one ſet to ſchool for that end, there would be fourty, becauſe that one Biſhops living divided into thirty or fourty parts, would finde ſo many as well learned men as the Biſhops be now, who have all this living, neither had Peter or Paul any ſuch revenew.

Baker. Let us diſpatch him; he will mar all.

Col. If every man had a hundred pounds, as he ſaith, it would make moe learned men.

Baker. But our Biſhops would be angry, if that they knew it.

Allin. It were for a Common-wealth to have ſuch Biſhopricks divided, for the further increaſe of learning.

Baker. What ſayſt thou to the ſacrament?

Allin. As I ſaid before.

The Martyrdom of five women and two men at Maidſtone. Anno 1557. June 18.

Baker. Away with him. And thus was he carried to priſon, and afterward burned. And thus much touching the particular ſtorie of Edmund Allin and his wife. Who with the five other Martyrs above named, being ſeven, to wit, five women and two men, were altogether burned at Maidſtone, the yœr and moneth aforementioned, and the 18. day of the ſame moneth.

Another ſtory of like cruelty, ſhewed upon other ſeven Martyrs, burnt at Canterbury, three men, and foure women.

June 19. The ſtory of 7. other Martyrs.

Unmercifull crueltie of the Catholiques againſt poore women.

AMong ſuch infinite ſeas of troubles in theſe moſt dangerous dayes, who can withhold himſelf from bitter tears, to ſœ the madding rage of theſe pretenſed Catholiques, who being never ſatiſfied with blood to maintain their carnall kingdome, preſume ſo highly to violate the preciſe Law of Gods commandements, in ſlaying the ſimple poore Lambes of the glorious congregation of Jeſus Chriſt, and that for the true teſtimonie of a good conſcience, in confeſſing the immaculate Goſpel of their ſalvation? What heart will not lament the murdering miſchief of theſe men? who for want of work do ſo wrack their tine on ſilly poore women, whoſe weak imbecillitie the more ſtrength it lacketh by naturall imperfection, the more it ought to be helped, or at leaſt pitied, and not oppreſſed of men that be ſtronger, and eſpecially of Prieſts that ſhould be charitable.

But bleſſed be the Lord omnipotent, who ſupernaturally hath indued from above ſuch weak creatures with ſuch manly ſtomack and fortitude, ſo conſtantly to withſtand the uttermoſt extremitie of theſe pitileſſe perſecutors: as he did before ſtrengthen the mother of the ſeven ſons in the Macchabœs, and as he hath done ſince with divers and ſundrie other godly women in theſe our later dayes, partly before mentioned, and partly to be mentioned hereafter, and here preſently may appear by the martyrdome of theſe ſeven hereunder following, of the which were foure women and thrœ men, burnt together at Canterbarie the 30. of the ſaid moneth of June, in the yœr aforeſaid, whoſe names are theſe:

Iohn Fiſhcock.
Nicholas White.
Nicholas Pardue.
Barbara Final, widow.

Bradbridges widow.
Wilſons wife.
Bendens wife.

This Bradbridges wife was thought to be with childe.

As it were too tedious exactly and particularly to proſecute the ſeverall ſtory of every one of theſe godly Martyrs; ſo I cannot paſſe over untouched the cruell and unchriſtian handling of Alice Benden during her impriſonment, according as I have received by the faithfull relation of them which beſt were acquainted with her, and partly alſo ſome doers in the matter, being her own naturall brethren. The ſtory is thus.

Roger and Tho. Hall, two godly brethren of Alice Benden.

¶ The order of the impriſonment and tragicall handling of Alice Benden, wife of Edward Benden of the Pariſh of Staplehurſt, in the County of Kent, for the teſtimony of Chriſts Goſpel.

The impriſonment of Alice Benden, and manner of her handling.

M. Roberts of Crambroke perſecutor.

FIrſt, Alice Benden was brought before one maſter Roberts of Crambroke, in the ſaid County, the 14. day of October, in the yœr of our Lord, 1556. of whom ſhe was demanded why ſhe would not go to the Church. And ſhe anſwered, that ſhe could not ſo do with a good and clœr conſcience, becauſe there was much idolatrie committed againſt the glorie of God. For the which with many mocks and taunts ſhe was ſent to priſon, where ſhe lay fourtœn dayes. For on the 20. day of October her husband required his neighbours, the wealthy men of Staplehurſt, to write to the biſhop of Dover, who had the chief government of the tyrannicall ſword in Kent for thoſe dayes, which they did, deſiring him to ſend her home.

Alice Benden impriſoned for not coming to the Church.

Alice Benden delivered by ſute of her neighbours.

Wherefore the Biſhop called her before him, and aſked her if ſhe would go home, and go to the Church. Whereunto ſhe anſwered; If I would have ſo done, I nœd not to have come hither. Then wilt thou go home, and be ſhriven of thy Pariſh Prieſt? And ſhe ſaid, No, that would ſhe not.

Well, ſaid he, go thy wayes home, and go to the Church when thou wilt. Whereunto ſhe anſwered nothing. But a Prieſt that ſtood by, ſaid; She ſaith, ſhe will my Lord. Wherefore he let her go, and ſhe came forthwith home.

The husband procureth the trouble and impriſonment of his wife.

Sir John Gilford commandeth Alice Benden to the caſtle of Canterbury.

On the Saturday following, her husband willed her to go to the Church; which ſhe both then and elſe when refuſed to do. Wherefore on the Sunday fourtœn dayes after, he going to the Church, came into the companie of divers inhabitants of the ſame Pariſh, among whom, through his fond talk and behaviour, he procured her to be ſent to ſir John Gilford, who commanded her to priſon again: yea, and the more to utter his own ſhame, the ſaid her huſband took money of the Conſtable to carry her to priſon, the price of his wives blood, meaning indeed to carry her to priſon himſelf. But ſhe having much more care of his honeſt and good report, then he had regard (as it is eaſie to ſee) of his own infamy, and no leſſe aſhamed of his ſo rude and unnaturall doings, choſe rather to commit her ſelf willingly into the hands of her enemies, then that the world ſhould witneſſe againſt her huſband of ſo facinorous a fact. Wherefore ſhe went to the Conſtable, deſiring him to go with her. But he anſwered that he could not ſo do, but granted her his boy to go with her; with whom ſhe went to priſon, namely, the Caſtle of Canterbury, according to the commandement given.

The ſpare diet of Alice Benden and Potkins wife in Canterbury Caſtle.

Where this one thing is worthie to be noted, that while ſhe was in this priſon, ſhe practiſed with a priſon-fellow of hers, the wife of one Potkin, to live both of them with two pence half-peny a day, to trie thereby how well they could ſuſtain penurie and hunger, before they were put to it. For they had heard, that when they ſhould be removed from thence to the Biſhops priſon, there livings ſhould be but three farthings a peece a day, and did indeed both ſo live for fourteen dayes ere ſhe was from thence removed.

The 22. day of Januarie following, her huſband went again to the Biſhop, deſiring him to deliver his wife out of priſon: but he ſaid ſhe was an obſtinate Heretique, and would not be reformed; and therefore ſaid that he could not deliver her.

The huſband complaineth of his wives brother Roger Hall.

Then ſaid he; My Lord, ſhe hath a brother, whoſe name is Roger Hall, that reſorteth unto her. If your Lordſhip could keep him from her, ſhe would turn; for he comforteth her, giveth her money, and perſwadeth her not to return or relent.

Alice Benden removed from the Biſhops priſon.

This occaſion was not ſo ſoone given, but it was as quickly taken, and as cruelly put in execution. For the Biſhop commanding her upon the ſame to a priſon called Mondayes hole, there alſo he gave a ſtrait charge, that if at any time her brother came, he ſhould be taken and apprehended.

The Biſhops priſon deſcribed.

This priſon was within a Court where the Prebends chambers were, being a vault beneath the ground, and being before the window incloſed with a pale, of height, by eſtimation, foure foot and a half, and diſtant from the ſame three foot, ſo that ſhe looking from beneath, might onely ſee ſuch as ſtood at the pale. After this her brother ſought often for her, with no leſſe danger of life then diligence. But for the unknown ſituation of the place, it being alſo but rarely uſed for a priſon, and the matter as cloſely kept, as it was ſecretly done, he could never come to underſtand of her being there, until through Gods mercifull will and unſearchable providence, he coming thither very rathe in the morning, her Keeper being then gone to the Church to ring (for he was a Bell-ringer) chanced to hear her voice, as ſhe powred out unto God her ſorrowfull complaints, ſaying the Pſalms of David; and there could he no otherwiſe relieve her, but by putting money in a loaf of bread, and ſticking the ſame on a pole, and ſo reached it unto her; for neither with meat nor drink he could ſuſtain her. And this was five weeks after her coming thither. All the which time no creature was known to come at her, more then her Keeper.

Example of Gods mercifull providence in relieving his ſaints.

Her lying in that priſon was onely upon a little ſhort ſtraw betweene a paire of Stocks and a ſtone wall; being allowed three farthings a day, that is, a halfe penny bread, and a farthing drink, neither could ſhe get any more for her money. Wherefore ſhe deſired to have her whole allowance in bread, and uſed water for her drink. Thus did ſhe lie nine weeks. During all which time ſhe never changed her apparell; whereby ſhe became at the laſt a moſt pitious and loathſome creature to behold.

Alice Benden kept in the Biſhops priſon nine weeks with bread & water.

The affliction of Alice Benden at her firſt coming to priſon.

At her firſt coming into this place, ſhe did grievouſly bewail with great ſorrow and lamentation, and reaſoned with her ſelf; why her Lord God did with his ſo heavie juſtice ſuffer her to be ſequeſtred from her loving fellows into ſo extreme miſery.

In theſe dolorous mournings did ſhe continue, till on a night as ſhe was in her ſorrowfull ſupplications, rehearſing this verſe of the Pſalm; Why art thou ſo heavie O my ſoul? And again, The right hand of the moſt high can change all: ſhe received comfort in the midſt of her miſeries, and after that continued very joyfull untill her deliverie from the ſame.

Alice Benden receiveth comfort of the Lord in the midſt of her miſeries.

Alice Benden called before the Biſhop.

About the 25. day of March, in the yeer of our Lord, 1557. ſhe was called before the Biſhop, who demanded of her, whether ſhe would now go home, and go to the Church or no, promiſing her great favour, if ſhe would be reformed and do as they did.

The anſwer of Alice Benden to the Biſhop.

To whom ſhe anſwered, I am throughly perſwaded by the great extremitie, that you have alreadie ſhewed me, that you are not of God, neither can your doings be godly; and I ſee, ſaith ſhe, that you ſeek my utter deſtruction, ſhewing how lame ſhe then was of cold taken, and for lack of food, while ſhe lay in that painfull priſon; whereby ſhe was not able to move her ſelf without great pain.

Alice Benden from the Biſhops priſon ſent to Weſtgate.

Then did the Biſhop deliver her from that filthie hole, and ſent her to Weſtgate, where after ſhe had been changed, and for a while been clean kept, her ſkin did wholly ſo pill and ſcale off, as if ſhe had been with ſome mortall venome poyſoned. Here ſhe continued till the latter end of April. At which time they called her before them, and with others condemned her, committing her then to the priſon called the Caſtle. Where ſhe continued till the ſlaughter day, which was the nineteenth day of June, when by terrible fire they took away her life.

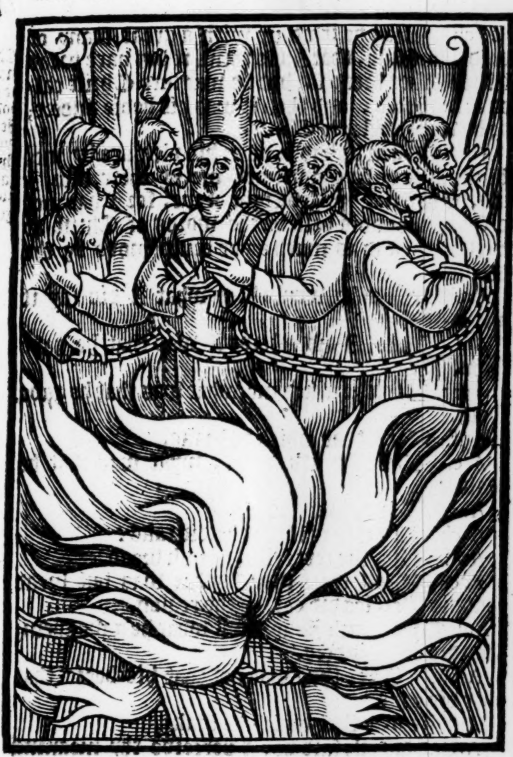
Alice Benden condemned and ſent to the Caſtle in Canterbury.

When ſhe was at the ſtake, ſhe caſt her handkerchief unto one John Banks, requiring him to keep the ſame in memorie of her, and from about her middle ſhe took a white lace, which ſhe gave to the Keeper, deſiring him to give the ſame to her brother Roger Hall, and to tell him that it was the laſt band that ſhe was bound with, except the chain. A ſhilling alſo of Philip and Marie ſhe took forth, which her father had bowed and ſent her when ſhe was firſt ſent to priſon, deſiring that her ſaid brother ſhould with obedient ſalutations render the ſame to her father again, and ſhew him that it was the firſt piece of money that he ſent her after her troubles began, which (as ſhe proteſted) ſhe had kept, and now ſent him to do him to underſtand, that ſhe never lacked money while ſhe was in priſon.

With this Alice Benden were burned alſo the reſidue of the other bleſſed Martyrs above named, being ſeven in number. Who being brought to the place where they ſhould ſuffer for the Lords cauſe at Canterbury, undreſſed themſelves joyfully to the fire; and being readie thereto, they all (like the communion of Saints) kneeled down, and made their humble prayers unto the Lord, with ſuch zeal and affection, as even the enemies of the Croſſe of Chriſt could not but like it. When they had made invocation together, they roſe and went to the ſtake, where being compaſſed with horrible flames of fire, they yeelded their ſouls and lives gloriouſly into the hand of the Lord.

The burning of ſeven Martyrs at Canterbury.

The Martyrdome of three men and foure women at Canterbury. Anno 1557. June 19.



This Bradbridges wife, when ſhe was condemned of the Biſhop to be burned, had two children named Patience and Charitie. Who then ſaid to the Biſhop, that if he would needs burn her, yet ſhe truſted, that he would take and keep Patience and Charitie, meaning her two children. Nay, quoth the Biſhop, by the faith of my bodie, I will meddle with neither of them both.

The Biſhop will neither keep Patience nor Charity.

The troubles and examinations of Matthew Plaiſe.

Matthew Plaiſe.

Unto theſe holy Martyrs of Kent above ſpecified, whereof ſeven ſuffered at Maidſtone, and ſeven at Canterburie, I thought not unmeet here alſo to be adjoyned the examination of Matthew Plaiſe, a Weaver of the ſame Countie of Kent, and a faithfull Chriſtian. Who being apprehended and impriſoned likewiſe for the teſtimonie of a good conſcience, in the Caſtle of Canterburie, was brought to examination before the Biſhop of Dover, and Harpſfield the Archdeacon, as here is to be read and ſeen.

The examination and anſwers of Matthew Plaiſe Weaver, of the Pariſh of Stone, in the County of Kent, before Thornton Biſhop of Dover, Harpſfield Archdeacon, Collins Commiſſary, and other Inquiſitors. Anno 1557.

Examination of Matthew Plaiſe before the Biſhop of Dover, Harpſfield Archdeacon, and Collins Commiſſary, &c.

First, when I came before the Biſhop, he asked me whether I were not of that Dioceſſe, and where I dwelt; for that was my firſt Article.

Anſ. I anſwered, I was of the pariſh of Stone in Kent, and ſubject unto the King and Queen of England.

Biſhop. Then he ſaid, I was indited by twelve men at Aſhford, at the Seſſions, for hereſie.

Anſ. I ſaid, that was ſooner ſaid then proved.

Biſh. Then he ſaid it was the truth that he had ſpoken to me, for he had whereby to prove.

Anſ. Then I deſired him to let me hear it, and I would anſwer to it.

Biſh. But he ſaid he would not do ſo, but I ſhould anſwer to my Article, yea or nay.

Anſ. I ſaid, he could not; for I was not at Aſhford, and therefore he had nothing to lay to my charge. But now I perceive you go about to lay a net to have my blood.

Archdeac. After many words betwixt the Biſhop and me, the Archdeacon ſaid; Peace, peace, we do not deſire thy blood, but we are glad to hear that thou art no Heretique, with many flattering words, and ſaid, yet I was ſuſpected of hereſie; and if I would be content to confeſſe how I did beleeve as concerning thoſe Articles, they would gladly teach me.

Anſ. But I ſaid I did not ſo think, for I talked with one of your Doctors, and after long talk, he would needs know how I did beleeve in the ſacrament, and I recited unto him the text, and becauſe I would not make unto him an expoſition, he would teach me nothing: yet I prayed him for my learning to write his minde; and if it were the truth, I would beleeve him; and this I did deſire him for the love of God, but it would not be.

Arch. Then ſaid he, it was not ſo, he durſt ſwear upon a book.

Anſ. I ſaid, it would be ſo proved.

Arch. Then he ſtood up with a long proceſſe, and ſaid, he would tell me the truth, and was ſure that the ſame Doctor did beleeve as he did.

Anſ. I asked him how he knew that, ſeeing ſaint Paul doth ſay, that no man knoweth what is in man, but the ſpirit which dwelleth in him: but if you wiſt what Chriſt meant by theſe words; I require mercy and not ſacrifice, Matth. 12. you would not kill innocents.

Oſe 6.

Biſhop. The Biſhop began with me again, and charged me in the King and Queens name, and the Lord Cardinals, to anſwer yea or nay to the Articles that followed.

Anſ. Then I commanded him in his name that ſhould come in flaming fire with his mightie Angels to render vengeance to the diſobedient, and to all thoſe that beleeved not the Goſpel of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which ſhould be puniſhed with everlaſting damnation, that he ſhould ſpeak nothing but the truth grounded upon Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and then I would anſwer him, or elſe not.

Biſh. Then he was very angry, and ſaid; if I would not anſwer, he would condemne me indeed, unleſſe I would anſwer every Article.

Anſ. Well, ſaid I, if you do, you ſhall be guiltie of my blood, and prove your ſelf a murtherer.

Archd. Then the Archdeacon took the Articles in his hand, and read the ſecond Article, which was, that I was a Chriſtian man, and did beleeve in their mother the Catholique Church, and the determination thereof.

The Catholike Church.

Anſ. I ſaid I was a Chriſtian man indeed; and therefore they had nothing againſt me.

Archd. Then ſaid he, what ſayſt thou to the Catholique Church, which hath ſo long continued, except it were nine or ten yeers, that this hereſie hath ſprung up here in this Realm?

Anſ. I ſaid, no man can accuſe me of any thing ſpoken againſt the Catholique Church of Chriſt.

Biſh. Then ſaid the Biſhop; Doeſt thou not beleeve the Creed?

Anſ. Yes verily, I beleeve my Creed, and all that is written in the Teſtament of Chriſt, with the reſt of the Scriptures.

Biſhop. Then, ſaith he, thou doeſt confeſſe that there is a Catholique Church, I am glad of that; but tel me, is the King and Queen of that Church, or no?

The article of the King and Queen is no article of his Catholique Church.

And yet he ſaid before that he went not about to ſeek his blood.

Anſ. Well, ſaid I, now I perceive, you go about to be both mine accuſer, and alſo my Judge, contrarie to all right. I confeſſe Chriſt hath a Church upon earth, which is built upon the Apoſtles and Prophets, Chriſt being the head thereof, and as touching the King and Queen, I anſwer, I have nothing to do with any mans faith but mine own: neither came I hither to judge; for I judge not my ſelf, but the Lord muſt judge me.

Biſh. Then ſaid he; Is there no part of that Church here in England?

Anſ. Well, I perceive you would fain have ſomething to lay to my charge. I will tell you where. Chriſt ſaith, Where two or three be gathered together in his name, there is he in the middeſt among them.

Judgement without truth.

Then the Archdeacon ſtood up with his mocks, to put me out of countenance, and ſaid to the people, that I had no wit, but that I thought all they were deceived ſo long time, and that half a dozen of us ſhould have the truth in a corner, and that all they ſhould be deceived, with ſuch like taunts and mocks; but would not ſuffer me to ſpeak one word.

Arch. Then he read the article of the ſacrament, and ſaid, I did denie the reall preſence to be in the ſacrament after it was once conſecrated, and that I ſaid, Chriſts bodie was in heaven, and no where elſe, and that the bread was nothing but a ſigne, token, or remembrance.

Anſ. Then I ſaid, you have to ſhew where and what my words were, and hereof we talked a great while.

Biſh. At the laſt the Biſhop was ſo angry, that he charged me in the Kings, Queens, and Cardinals name before the Maior and his brethren, taking them to witneſſe, if I did not ſay yea or nay, he would condemne me.

Anſ. Then I ſaid, ſeeing you have nothing to accuſe me of, wherefore ſhould I ſo anſwer?

Archdeac. Then the Archdeacon ſaid, I was guiltie; and ſaid I was like a thief at the Bar, which would not confeſſe his fault, becauſe his accuſers were not preſent; with a great many words, and would not let me open my mouth againſt him.

Matth. Plaiſe confeſſeth his minde of the ſacrament.

Anſ. Then I ſaw whereabout they went, granting to anſwer them by the word, or elſe I think they would have condemned me for holding of my peace; and this was my beginning, I beleeve that Chriſt took bread, and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and gave it to his diſciples, and ſaid; Take, eat, this is my body which is given for you, this do in remembrance of me.

Arch. Doeſt thou beleeve that Chriſt meant even as he ſaid?

Anſ. I ſaid, Chriſt was no diſſembler, but he ſpake the very truth.

Arch. Thou haſt very well ſaid, we will make the beſt of thy words. Then he praiſed me with many words, going about to prove it his bodie reall and ſubſtantiall, and ſaid, Chriſt called himſelf bread: and this to prove, when Chriſt ſaid, This is my bodie, the bread was his bodie, ſaid he, indeed, reall, and ſubſtantiall, not ſo long and ſo big as it hung on the Croſſe, as the Capernaites did think; but we eat it, as mans weak nature can eat Chriſt. Therefore when he had ſaid, This is my body, the bread was his bodie in very deed.

Capernaicall doctrine.

Anſ. Then I aſked him, what Chriſt meant by theſe words, Which is given for you?

Arch. He ſaid, Chriſt ſpake that by the bread alſo; but it was not written in Matthew, but Luke had thoſe words.

Anſ. Then I aſked him, if Chriſts bodie were made of bread, whether that was given for our redemption, or whether the bread was crucified for us, or not?

Arch. Then he ſaid, No, by Saint Mary, I ſay not ſo.

Anſ. You have ſaid the truth indeed, and even as I beleeve.

Arch. Then he ſtood up with a great many of words, and ſaid, that I did think it but bare bread ſtill, as other bread is; but he was ſure Chriſt called it his bodie, and then it was his bodie indeed; for he would beleeve Chriſt.

Chriſt called it his body: Ergo, he made it his body. It followeth not: For a thing may be called, and yet no nature changed.

Anſ. When he had ſpoken his pleaſure by me, thinking to have condemned me by their law, I ſaid, he had not judged right of me, for I had not ſo ſpoken, but did beleeve the words of Chriſt as well as he, and as much as he could prove by the Word.

Arch. Then he would hear what I did ſay it was.

Anſ. I ſaid, I did beleeve it was that he gave them.

Arch. Then he aſked me, what was that he gave them.

Anſ. I ſaid, that which he brake.

Arch. Then he aſked me, what was that he brake?

Anſw. I ſaid, that he took.

Arch. What was it that he did take?

Anſ. I ſaid, the text ſaith, he took bread.

Arch. Well then, thou ſayſt it was but bread that his diſciples did eat, by thy reaſon.

Anſ. Thus much I ſay, Look what he gave them, they did eat it indeed.

Arch. Why, then was not that his bodie that they did eat?

Anſ. It was that which he brake.

Arch. Well, ſaid he, I perceive thy meaning well enough; for thou doeſt think it is but bread ſtill, and that he was not able to make it his bodie.

Anſ. That is your expoſition upon my minde.

Arch. Then ſaid he, what didſt thou receive when thou didſt receive laſt?

Anſw. I ſaid, I do beleeve, that I did eat Chriſts fleſh, and drink his blood. For he ſaith, My fleſh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed.

Arch. Then he ſaid, I had well anſwered, thinking to have had ſome advantage at my hand, and prayed me to tell him, how I did eat his fleſh, and drink his blood.

Anſ. Then he ſaid, I muſt anſwer you by the word which Chriſt ſaith; He that eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him.

Arch. Then he faced out the matter with Sophiſtrie, and ſaid I did eat Chriſt, as that Church was in his eye, with many ſuch mocks, but would not let me anſwer one word.

Commiſ. Then the Commiſſarie did aſk me, if I did not remember St. Paul, which did rebuke the Corinths for their evil behaviour, and becauſe they made no difference of the Lords bodie, and brought in to prove his matter, how he called himſelf bread in the ſixth of John. So Paul ſaith, So oft as ye eat of this bread (meaning Chriſts bodie) unworthily, ye eat and drink your own damnation, becauſe ye make no difference of the Lords bodie. For thus ſaith Chriſt; The bread that I will give you is my fleſh. Now it is no bread, but it is his fleſh. And thus he alledged every Scripture falſe, to make up the matter.

Falſe alledging of Scriptures.

Anſ. Then I ſaid, I did beleeve the words of Saint Paul verie well, even as he had ſpoken them. For thus he ſaith; He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh his own damnation, becauſe he maketh no difference of the Lords body.

Commiſſ. What is the cauſe that he eateth his own damnation?

Anſ. I ſaid, St. Paul declareth it plainly with theſe words; If ye had judged your ſelves, ye ſhould not have been judged of the Lord.

They ſaid, that Chriſt called it his body; but they ſaid not, that it was his body.

Arch. Then the Archdeacon ſaid, he marvelled why I would not ſay, that he called the bread his body, ſeeing Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, with many other, ſaid he, called it his body.

Anſ. I ſaid, you have condemned them as Heretikes, and you would have me ſay with them, becauſe you would kill me.

Arch. Then he ſaid; In that they ſaid it was his body, they did ſay the truth.

Anſ. I asked wherefore they were killed, ſeeing they ſaid the truth.

Biſh. Then ſaid the Biſhop, that he had all their anſwers, and that they did not beleeve as they ſaid. For they ſaid, Chriſt called it his body, but it was not his naturall body: but thou ſhalt anſwer me by and by, whether it be his body or not, or elſe I will anger thee.

Anſ. Then I ſaid, I had anſwered him by the Word already, and did beleeve it alſo; therefore if he did condemne me for that, my life was not deare unto me, and I was ſure he ſhould not ſcape unpuniſhed: for God will be revenged upon ſuch murderers.

Arch. Then the Archdeacon intreated me to be ruled by him, and take mercie while it was offered; for if I were condemned, I muſt needs be burned. Yet he would not ſay but my ſoule might be ſaved; with many moe words, and deſired me that I would beleeve him, for he would ſpeake the truth: beginning how Chriſt fed five thouſand people with foure loaves, and how he turned the water into wine, even ſo Chriſt took bread and bleſt it, & when he had done, he brake it, and ſaid; This is my body, and then he commanded them to eate it: and therefore it muſt needs be his body.

Anſ. Then I deſired him to ſpeak the text right, or elſe I would not beleeve him.

Arch. Then he ſtood up, and put off his cap, and thanked me for teaching of him, and ſaid, I was a ſtubborne fellow, and took ſcorne to be taught.

Anſ. I ſaid, I ought to hold him accurſed, if he taught doctrine contrary to Chriſt and his Apoſtles.

Arch. Then he asked me, whether I did beleeve that Chriſt did give that he took, or not?

Anſw. I ſaid, I do beleeve as much as can be proved by the Scripture, and more I will not beleeve.

Compariſon between turning Moſes rod and the bread into Chriſts body, not like.

Arch. Then he began with Moſes rod, how God commanded him to lay it downe, and it was turned into a Serpent. Seeing that this was by Moſes being but a man, how much more Chriſt being both God and man took one thing, and gave to his Diſciples another?

Anſ. I ſaid, his compariſon was nothing like, for Moſes rod when it was laid down, he ſaw that it was turned into a very Serpent indeed; but in this ſacrament no man can ſee either qualitie or yet quantitie to be changed.

The opinion of the Papiſts much like to the Capernaites.

Biſh. Then ſaid the Biſhop, that mine opinion and faith was like unto the Capernaites.

Anſ. I ſaid, theirs was more like their opinion then mine.

Arch. The Archdeacon aſked me, whether Chriſt took not one thing, and gave another?

Anſ. I ſaid, look what he brake, he gave unto them, and bade them eate; and other anſwer I will make none, contrary to the Word.

Arch. Then he ſaid, he marvelled why I would not beleeve them, ſeeing this learning had continued this fifteene hundred yeeres; neither yet did ſay, as other had before, how Chriſt did call it his body.

Anſ. Then I ſaid, when Cranmer, which was here Biſhop, was in authoritie, he ſaid, that he did hold the truth, and commanded us to beleeve him, and he hath given his life for his opinion, and would you have me to beleeve you, becauſe you ſay, that you hold the truth? and that which makes me beleeve chiefely, is the Scripture, which I am ſure is the truth indeed.

Biſh. The Biſhop ſaid, he had ſpoken the truth, and that I would not beleeve.

Anſ. I ſaid, if he did not now ſpeake the truth, I was ſure he had ſpoken the truth; for he had preached before doctrine cleane contrary unto this.

Then were the reſt of my Articles read; which I anſwered, and in every Article he had up this breaden God. And they ſent for a candle light, and I thought they would have condemned me, but God would not ſuffer their cruell hearts to have their pleaſure that time: bleſſed be his name for evermore, Amen.

Arch. Then the Archdeacon was angry, and began to chide with me, becauſe I would not deſire a day of the Biſhop, and ſaid, I was a naughty ſtubborne fellow, and ſaid, it had beene my dutie to have deſired him to have been good to me, that I might have a day.

Anſ. Then I ſaid, I have ſpoken the truth; and therefore I would ask him no day, except he would give me a day of his own minde.

Commiſ. Then ſaid the Commiſſarie; Doeſt thou not think that thou maiſt be deceived, ſeeing he may be deceived that hath gone to ſtudie all the daies of his life?

Anſ. I ſaid, Yea, I might be deceived in that I was a man; but I was ſure Gods Word could not be deceived.

Commiſ. Then he prayed me to be content, and confeſſed that I might learn, and ſaid, they would be glad to teach me.

Anſ. And I ſaid, I would be as glad to learn as any man. And thus they roſe up and went away, ſaying nothing.

What became of this Matthew Plaiſe after, whether he died in priſon, or was executed, or delivered, I have as yet no certain knowledge.

The hiſtorie of ten true godly Diſciples and Martyrs of Chriſt, burnt together in one fire at Lewes, Anno 1557. June 22.

June 22.

IN the towne of Lewes were ten faithfull ſervants of GOD put in one fire, the 22. day of June, whoſe names follow:

Ten godly Martyrs.

1. Richard Woodman.
2. George Stevens.
3. W. Mainard.
4. Alexander Hoſman. his ſervant.
5. Thomaſin a Wood, Mainards maide.
6. Margerie Moris.
7. James Moris her ſonne.
8. Denis Burgis.
9. Aſhdons wife.
10. Groves wife.

Of the which number Richard Woodman was the firſt. Concerning whoſe apprehenſion, firſt by his enemies, and of his deliverance out of Biſhop Boners hands, then of his ſecond taking againe by the procurement of his father, brother, kinsfolkes, and friends, alſo of his ſundrie examinations and couragious anſwers before the Biſhops: and laſtly of his condemnation, and of his Letters ſent to his faithfull friends, here followeth to be declared by his owne words and relation reported. Which Richard Woodman, by his occupation was an Ironmaker, dwelling in the Pariſh of Warbleton, in the Countie of Suſſex, and Dioceſſe of Chicheſter, of the age of thirtie yeeres and ſomewhat more. The occaſion of his firſt apprehenſion was this:

Fairebanke preaching contrary to himſelfe.

There was one Fairebanke, who ſometimes had beene a married Prieſt, and ſerved the cure of Warbleton, where he had often perſwaded the people not to credit any other doctrine, but that which he then preached, taught and ſet forth in K. Edwards daies. And afterward in the beginning of Queene Maries reigne, the ſaid Fairebanke, turning head to taile, preached cleane contrarie to that which he had before taught.

Whereupon Richard Woodman, hearing him in the Church of Warbleton ſo to preach contrary to himſelfe, admoniſhed him of his inconſtancie, how before time he had taught them one thing, and now another, and deſired him to teach them the truth. For the which words he was apppehended, and brought before Maſter John Aſhbornham, Maſter Tolton, and Maſter Culpepper, and Maſter Roberts, Juſtices of Peace in the Countie of Suſſex, and by them committed to the Kings Bench, where he continued from June, the ſpace almoſt of a yeer and a halfe; and from thence was transferred by Doctor Story into Boners Colehouſe, where he remained the ſpace of a moneth before he came to examination.

Juſtices of Suſſex, troublers of Rich. Woodman, and what were their names.

At length, the ſame day when Maſter Philpot was burned, which was the 18. of December, he with foure other priſoners was delivered and ſet at libertie by Boner himſelfe. Notwithſtanding, ſhortly after he was ſought for againe, and at laſt found out and taken by meanes of his father, brother, and certaine other his acquainted friends, and ſo was ſent up againe to London to Biſhop Boner; where he remained in the Colehouſe eight weekes. He was there ſixe times examined, and twentie ſix times before, ſo that his examinations in all were thirtie two, from his firſt apprehenſion to his condemnation. Touching the whole diſcourſe whereof, forſomuch as the matter is ſomething ſtrange, and will peradventure ſcarce finde credit upon my narration, with them which deny all things that like them not to beleeve, ye ſhall himſelfe ſpeake and teſtifie both of the manner of his troubles, and alſo his owne examinations by himſelfe recorded, in order as followeth.

Rich. Woodman delivered out of his firſt trouble.

Rich. Woodman againe apprehended, and by whoſe meanes.

32. examinations of Richard Woodman.

A true Certificate written by Richard Woodman, of his taking, and how he was brought to the Sheriffes the 15. of March. 1556. and how long he was in priſon, and how he was there uſed, till he was brought before the Biſhop of Chicheſter at Black-Friers in London, with the order of his examinations following after the ſame.

The Certificate of Richard Woodman concerning the truth of his owne ſtory and trouble.

Gentle Reader, here you ſhall perceive how the Scriptures be partly fulfilled on me, being one of the leaſt of his poore Lambes. Firſt, you ſhall underſtand, that ſince I was delivered out of the Biſhop of Londons hands, which was in the yeere of our Lord, 1555. and the ſame day that Maſter Philpot was burned, which was the 18. of December, I lay in his Colehouſe eight weekes lacking but one day: and before that I was a yeere and a halfe almoſt in the Kings Bench after my firſt apprehenſion, for reproving a Preacher in the Pulpit, in the Pariſh of Warbleton, where I dwelt. Wherefore I was at two Seſſions before I was ſent to priſon, and carried to two more Seſſions while I was in priſon, twice before the Biſhop of Chicheſter, and five times before the Commiſſioners, and then ſent to Londons Colehouſe, and many times called before him, as it appeareth by my examinations which I have wrote, the which examinations the Biſhop of Chicheſter now hath, for they were found in my houſe when I was taken, wherein is contained all the talke which I had before them aforenamed. Alſo there be in London that had copies of the ſame of me, when I was in the Colehouſe.

The firſt apprehenſion of Rich. Woodman.

And it pleaſed God to deliver me with 4. more out of the Butchers hands, requiring nothing elſe of us but that we ſhould be honeſt men, and members of the true Catholike Church that was builded upon the Prophets and Apoſtles, Chriſt being the head of the true Church, the which all we affirmed that we were members of the true Church, and purpoſed by Gods help therein to die. And hereupon we were delivered; but he willed us many times to ſpeake good of him. And no doubt he was worthy to be praiſed, becauſe he had beene ſo faithfull an aid in his Maſter the Devils buſines. For he had burnt good Maſter Philpot the ſame morning, in whoſe bloud his heart was ſo drunken (as I ſuppoſed) that he could not tell what he did, as it appeared to us both before and after. For but two daies before, he promiſed us that we ſhould be condemned that ſame day that we were delivered; yea, and the morrow after that he had delivered us, he ſought for ſome of us againe, yea and that earneſtly. He waxed drie after his great drunkenneſſe, wherefore he is like to have bloud to drinke in hell as he is worthy, if he repent it not with ſpeede. The Lord turne all their hearts, if it be his will.

Rich. Woodman delivered out of Boners hands with foure moe.

What the Biſhop required at their deliverance.

Biſhop Boner bloud thirſtie.

This have I written, chiefely to certifie all people how we were delivered, becauſe many carnall Goſpellers and Papiſts have ſaid, that it was preſcribed that we ſhould be ſo delivered, becauſe they think that God is ſubject to man, and not man to God. For if they did, they would not blaſpheme him as they do, or if they thought they ſhould give account for it. Have not many of them read how God delivered Iſrael out of Egypt? Daniel out the Lions denne? Sydrach, Miſaach, and Abednago out of the burning Oven? with divers other ſuch like examples; yea, God is the ſame God that he was then. He is no older, nor leſſe in power, as ſome count him in wondring at his workes. Now to the matter.

Woodman purgeth himſelfe of falſe ſlander.

After I was delivered, the Papiſts ſaid that I had conſented to them, whereof they made themſelves glad; the which was the leaſt part of my thought (I praiſe God therefore) as they well perceived and knew the contrarie within a while. For I went from Pariſh to Pariſh, and talked with them, to the number of 13. or 14. and that of the chiefeſt in all the countrey; and I angred them ſo, that they with the Commiſſioners complained on me to my Lord Chamberlaine that was then to the Queene, ſir John Gage, ſhewing him that I baptized children, and married folkes, with many ſuch lies, to bring me into their hands againe. Then the Commiſſioners ſent out certain Citations to bring me to the Court. My Lord Chamberlaine had directed out foure or five Warrants for me, that if I had come there, I ſhould have beene attached, and ſent to priſon ſtraight-way. Which was not Gods will; for I had warning of their laying awaite for me, and came not there, but ſent my deputy and he brought me word that the Bayliffes waited for me there, but they miſt of their prey for that time, whereupon they were diſpleaſed.

Falſe ſurmiſes againſt Richard Woodman.

Woodman complained of to ſir John Gage, Lord Chamberlaine.

Warrants ſent out to attach Woodman.

Then within three dayes after, my Lord ſent three of his men to take me, whoſe names were Deane, Jeffery, and Frances. I being at plough with my folkes, right in the way as they were coming to my houſe, leaſt miſtruſting them of all other, came to them and ſpake to them, asking them how they did. And they ſaid, they arreſted me in the King & Queenes name, and that I muſt go with them to their Maſter the Lord Chamberlaine. Which words made my fleſh to tremble and quake, becauſe of that ſudden. But I anſwered them, that I would go with them. Yet I deſired them, that they would go to my houſe with me, that I might breake my faſt, and put on ſome other geare, and they ſaid, I ſhould. Then I remembred my ſelfe, ſaying in my heart; Why am I thus affraid? they can lay no evill to my charge. If they kill me for well doing, I may thinke my ſelfe happy. I remembred how I was contented gladly before to die in that quarrell, and ſo had continued ever ſince; and ſhould I now fear to die? God forbid, that I ſhould, for then were all my labour in vaine.

L. Chamberlaine ſendeth to take Woodman at his plough.

Woodman comforted in his ſpirit after his feare.

So by and by I was perſwaded, I praiſe God, conſidering it was but the frailtie of my fleſh, which was loth to forgo my wife and children, and goods; for I ſaw nothing but preſent death before mine eies. And as ſoone as I was perſwaded in my minde to die, I had regard of nothing in this world, but was as merry and glad, and joyfull, I praiſe God, as ever I was. This battell laſted not a quarter of an houre; but it was ſharper then death it ſelfe for the time, I dare ſay.

Woodman asketh for their Warrant.

How God worketh for his ſervants.

The inorderly doings of the Papiſts in attaching men without any Warrant.

Woodman refuſeth to go with them, unleſſe they ſhew their Warrant.

So when I had my breakfaſt, I deſired them to ſhew me their Warrant, thinking thereby I ſhould have ſeene wherefore I was arreſted, to the intent I might the better anſwer for my ſelfe, when I came before their Maſter. And one of them anſwered, they had not their Warrant there. Which words made me aſtonied, and it was put in my minde by GOD, that I neede not to go with them, unleſſe they had their Warrant. Then ſaid I to them, that is marvell that you will come to take a man without a Warrant. It ſeemeth to me, that you come of your owne minde to get thanke of your Maſter; for indeed I heard ſay (ſaid I) that there was foure or five Warrants out for me, but they were called in againe, becauſe I had certified my Lord and the Commiſſarie, by a letter that I had ſent to the Commiſſaries Court, that I was not faultie in that they laid to my charge, which was for baptizing of children, and marrying of folkes: the which I never did; for I was never Miniſter appointed to do any ſuch thing: wherefore ſet your hearts at reſt, I will not goe with you (ſaid I) unleſſe you will carrie me by force, and if you will do ſo, at your owne adventures. And ſo I roſe from the boord, and ſtepped into my chamber, meaning to go from them if I could poſſible, ſeeing GOD had made the way ſo open for me. I meant to play Peters part with them, but God would not it ſhould be ſo, but ſent a feare amongſt them, that as ſoone as I was gone into my chamber, ere ever I could come out againe, they were gone out of my houſe.

Gods great worke, how the perſecutors which came to take Woodman went away without him.

When I ſaw that, I knew it was Gods doing, to ſet me at libertie once againe. Yet I was compelled to ſpeake to them, and ſaid; If you have a Warrant, I deſire you for Gods ſake to ſhew it me, and I will goe with you with all my heart: if not, I deſire you to depart in Gods peace and the Kings: for ſurely I will not go with you without the order of the law; for I have beene too ſimple in ſuch things already. For before I was ſent to priſon firſt, I went to the Juſtices to two Seſſions, without any Warrant or commandement, but had word by one of their men, & I went gently to them, and they ſent me to priſon, and kept me there almoſt a yeere and three quarters, without all right or equitie, as it is openly knowne, not hearing my cauſe juſtly debated. And it ſeemeth ſtrange to me, that I ſhould be thus evill handled; and therefore I will go to none of them all henceforth, without the extremitie of the law.

Woodman eſcaped the hands of his takers.

Woodmans houſe againe ſearched for him.

Then one of them anſwered me, and ſaid; We have not the warrant here, but it is at home at my houſe; the worſt is, you can but make us fetch it. Then I ſaid, Fetch it if you will; but if you come in my houſe before you have it, at your own adventure be it. So I ſhut my doore, and went my way out at the other doore. So they got helpe to watch my houſe, while one of them fet the Conſtable and many moe, thinking to have had me in my houſe, and to have taken me in my houſe, and carried me away with a licence; but I was gone before, as God would have it. Notwithſtanding they ſought every corner of my houſe, but could not prevaile. I miſtruſted they would ſearch it again that night, and kept me abroad; and indeed there came ſeven of his men and the Conſtable, and ſearched my houſe.

And when they ſaw that they could not meete with me, they were ready to rent their coats, that I had eſcaped them ſo, knowing they ſhould have ſuch a check of their Maſter. When I heard that they had ſought ſo for me againe, I perceiving that they were greedy of their prey, came home, and my wife told me all things.

Woodman lodged ſixe weekes in a wood.

All the countrey and Sea coaſts laid for Woodman.

Then I ſuppoſed that they would lay all the countrey for me, and the Sea coaſt, becauſe I ſhould not go over, and then I thought that they would not miſtruſt that I would dare be nigh home. So I told my wife, that I would make my lodging in a wood not paſt a flight ſhot from my houſe, as I did indeed, even under a tree, and there had my Bible, my pen, and mine inke, and other neceſſaries, and there continued a ſix or ſeven weekes, my wife bringing me meate daily as I had neede. Yea, I thought my ſelfe bleſſed of God, that I was counted worthy to lye in the woods for the name of Chriſt. Then there came word into the countrey, that I was ſeene and ſpoken to in Flanders; whereupon they left laying in waite for me: for they had laid all the countrey for me, and the Sea coaſt from Portſmouth to Dover, even as God put in my minde they would.

Woodman delivered by his own brother into his enemies hands.

So when all was huſht, I went abroad among our friends and brethren, and at length I went beyond the ſea both into Flanders and in France; but I thought every day ſeven yeere or ever I were at home againe. So I came home againe as ſoone as it was poſſible. I was there but three weekes, but aſſoone as I was come home, and it was once knowne among Baals Prieſts, they could not abide it, but procured out Warrants againſt me, cauſing my houſe to be ſearched ſometimes twice in a weeke. This continued from St. James tide to the firſt Sunday in Lent. Otherwhile I went privily, otherwhile openly, otherwhile I went from home a fortnight or three weekes, otherwhiles I was at home a moneth or five weekes together, living there moſt commonly and openly, doing ſuch workes as I had to do; and yet all mine enemies could lay no hands on me, till the houre was full come: and then by the voyce of the countrey, and by manifeſt proofes, mine owne brother, as concerning the fleſh, delivered me into their hands, by that he knew that I was at home.

Auri ſacri fames, quid non mortalia cogis pectora? Virg.

For my father and he had as much of my goods in their hands, as I might have ſixe and fiftie pound for by the yeere cleere, and thereunto prayed. It was a Lordſhip and an Honor, and halfe an Honor that I had delivered into their hands to pay my debts, and the reſt to remaine to my wife and children. But they had reported that it would not pay my debts; which grieved me ſore. For it was 200. pounds better then the debts came to. Which cauſed me to ſpeake to ſome of my friends, that they would ſpeake to them to come to ſome reckoning with me, and to take all ſuch money againe of me as they were charged with, and to deliver me ſuch writings and writs, as they had of mine againe, or to whom I would appoint them.

Brother bewraieth the brother.

So it was agréed betwixt my father and me, that I ſhould have it againe, and the day was appointed that the reckoning ſhould be made and ſent to me that ſame day that I was taken; my brother ſuppoſing that I ſhould have put him out of moſt of all his occupying, that he was in: for it was all mine in a manner that he occupied, as all the countrey can and do wel know. Whereon (as it is reported) he told one Cardillar my next neighbour, and he told ſome of Maſter Gages men, or to Maſter Gage himſelfe: and ſo he ſent to his brother, and his brother ſent twelve of his men (he being Sheriffe) in the night before I was taken, and lay in the buſhes not farre from my houſe, till about 9. of the clock, even the houre that was appointed amongſt themſelves; for about the ſame time they thought to have had me within my houſe.

Woodmans houſe again beſet and ſearched.

They had taken a man of mine, and two of my children that were abroad in the land, & kept them with them till their houre was appointed to come in; and then a little girle, one of my children, ſaw them come together, and came running in, and cried; Mother, mother, yonder cometh twenty men. I ſitting in my bed, and making of ſhooe thongs heard the words, and ſuſpected ſtraightway that I was betrayed, I ſtirred out of my bed and whipt on my hoſe, thinking to have gone out of the doores or ever they had béene come. My wife being amazed at the childes words, looked out at the doore, and they were hard by. Then ſhe clapped to the doore, and barred it faſt, even as I came out of my chamber into the Hall, and ſo barred the other: So the houſe was beſet round ſtraightway, and they bade open the doores, or elſe they would breake them in péeces. Then I had no ſhift, but either I muſt ſhew my ſelfe openly, or make ſome other remedie.

Woodman put to his ſhifts.

The part of a truſty wife to her husband.

So there was a place in my houſe that was never found, which was at the leaſt, I dare ſay, twenty times, and ſometimes almoſt of twenty men ſearched at once, both by night and by day. Into which place I went: And as ſoone as I was in, my wife opened the doore, whereby incontinent they came, and asked for me; and ſhe ſaid I was not at home. Then they asked her wherefore ſhe ſhut the doore, if I were not at home. She ſaid, becauſe ſhe had been made affraid divers times with ſuch as came to ſearch us; and therefore ſhe ſhut the doore. For it is reported (ſaith ſhe) that whoſoever can take my husband, ſhall hang him or burne him ſtraight-way; and therefore I doubt they will ſerve me or my children ſo: for I thinke they may do ſo unto us as well as to him, ſhe ſaid. Well, ſaid they, we know he is in the houſe, & we muſt ſearch it, for we be the Sheriffes men; let us have a candle. It is told us, there be many ſecret places in your houſe. So ſhe lighted a candle, and they ſought up and downe in every corner that they could finde, and had given over, and many of them were gone out of my houſe into the church-yard, and there talking with my father, and with ſome that he had brought with him.

This [illegible] was his brother.

Now when they could not finde me, one of them went to him that gave them word that I was at home, and ſaid, we cannot finde him. Then he asked them whether they had ſought over a window that was in the Hall (as it was known afterward) for that ſame place I had told him of my ſelfe. For many times when I came home, I would ſend for him to beare me companie; yet as it chanced I had not told him the way into it. Then they began to ſearch anew. One looked up over the window, and ſpied a little loft, with three or foure Cheſts, and the way went in betwixt two of the Cheſts, but there could no man perceive it. Then he asked my wife which was the way into it. Here is a place that we have not ſought yet. When ſhe thought they would ſée it by one meanes or other, ſhe ſaid, the way was into it out of a chamber they were in even now. So ſhe ſent them up, and cried, Away, away. Then I knew there was no remedy, but make the beſt ſhift for my ſelfe that I could. The place was boarded over, and faſt nailed, and if I had come out that way that I went in, I muſt néeds come amongſt them all in the Hall. Then I had no ſhift, but ſet my ſhoulders to the boards that were nailed to the rafters to keepe out the raine, and brake them in pieces, which made a great noiſe, and they that were in the other chamber, ſéeking for the way into it, heard the noiſe, and looked out of a window, and ſpied me, and made an out-crie. But yet I got out, and leaped downe having no ſhooes on.

Woodman at length after long ſeeking found out.

So I tooke downe a lane that was full of ſharpe ſinders, and they came running after, with a great crie, with their ſwords drawne, crying; Strike him, ſtrike him. Which words made me looke back, and there was never a one nigh me by an hundred foot: and that was but one, for all the reſt were a great way behinde. And I turned about haſtily to goe my way, and ſtepped upon a ſharpe ſinder with one foot, and ſaving of it, I ſtepped into a great mirie hole, and fell downe withall, and ere ever I could ariſe and get away, he was come in with me. His name is Parker the wilde, as he is counted in all Suſſex. But if I had had on my ſhooes, they had beene like to have gone away arrandleſſe, if there had béene five hundred moe, if I had caught the plaine ground once, to the which I had not a ſtones caſt: But it was not Gods will; for if it had, I ſhould have eſcaped from them all, if there had beene ten thouſand of them.

Parker in Suſſex a bloudy perſecutor of Woodman.

Woodman taken of his enemies.

John Fauconer a blaſphemous perſecutor.

Then they tooke me and led me home againe to put on my ſhoos, and ſuch geare as I had neede of. Then ſaid John Fauconer; Now your Maſter hath deceived you. You ſaid, you were an Angel, and if you had béene an Angel, why did ye not flée away from us? Then, ſaid I, what be they that ever heard me ſay that I was an Angel? It is not the firſt lye by a thouſand that they have made of me. Angels were never begotten of men, nor borne of women; but if they had ſaid, that they had heard me ſay, that I doe truſt I am a Saint, they had not ſaid amiſſe. What, doe you thinke to be a Saint? Yea that I doe, and am already in Gods ſight, I truſt in God; for he that is not a Saint in Gods ſight already, is a Divell. Therefore he that thinketh ſcorne to be a Saint, let him be a Devill. And with that word they had brought me to mine owne doore; where met with me my father, and willed me to remember my ſelfe.

Every true Chriſtian man is a Saint in Gods ſight.

Woodman betraied either by his own father or by his owne brother.

To whom I anſwered, I praiſe God, I am well remembred whereabout I goe. This way was appointed of God for me to be delivered into the hands of mine enimies, but woe unto him by whom I am betrayed. It had beene good for that man, that he had never béene borne, if he repent not with ſpéede. The Scriptures are now fulfilled on me; For the father ſhall be againſt the ſonne, and the brother ſhall deliver the brother to death, as it is this day come to paſſe. Then ſaid one, He doth accuſe his father; a good childe indéed. I accuſe him not, but ſay my minde; for there was no man knew me at home, but my father, my brother, & one more, the which I dare ſay would not hurt me for all the good in this towne.

George Beching brother in law to Woodman.

There was one George Beching that married one of my ſiſters, and he thought that I had meant him, that he had betrayed me; and he ſaid, Brother, I would you ſhould not thinke that I was the cauſe of your taking. To whom I anſwered, that I meant him not; I meant one that was neerer of my blood then he was. Then ſaid one of Lauſe, that I had beene a Goſpeller, and ſtood from them when I was brought to a Seſſions to Lauſe, and he ſaid, I thought you would have beene an honeſt man when you were at Lauſe, and I offered Huſſey the Sheriffe to be bound for you, that you ſhould go home to your wife, and come to him againe. Then I remembred what he was, and ſaid; Be you the Pewterer? And he ſaid, Yea. Then ſaid I; It is happened to you according to the true Proverbe, as ſaith S. Peter, The dogge is turned to his vomit againe, and the ſow that is waſhed, to wallow in the mire, and the end of all ſuch will be worſe then the beginning. Then his mouth was ſtopped, ſo that he had nothing to ſay.

A Pewterer of Lauſe a turnecoate.

All this while I ſtood at my doore without; for they would not let me go in. So I put on my ſhooes and my clothes, then they put on an harneſſe about my armes made of a dogges ſlip, which reioyced my heart, that I was counted worthy to be bound for the Name of God. So I took my leave of my wife and children, my father, and other of my friends, never thinking to ſee them more in this world. For it was ſo thought of all the countrey, that I ſhould not live ſixe dayes after my taking; for they had ſo reported. But yet I knew it was not as they would, unleſſe God would grant it, I know what God can doe; but what he will doe, I know not: but I am ſure he will worke all things for the beſt for them that love and feare him. So we dranke and went our way, and came to Firle about three of the clock. And thus much touching the cauſes and effect of the troubles of Richard Woodman. Now let us ſee his examinations, which follow in this order.

Woodman reioyceth to be bound for the name of Chriſt. Woodman taketh his leave of his wife and children.

The name of this place ſo far as we could gather by the copy was Firle.

The firſt examination of Richard Woodman, before Doctor Chriſtopherſon Biſhop of Chicheſter, Doctor Story, Doctor Cooke, and other.

FIrſt, you ſhall underſtand, that I was ſent from the Sheriffes to London, the 12. day of April, in the yeere of our Lord 1557. and afterward upon the 14 day of the ſame moneth I was brought before the Biſhop of Chicheſter, and Doctor Storie, and Doctor Cooke. So the Sheriffes man delivered my Warrant and me to the Biſhop. Then the Biſhop asked me what my name was. My name (quoth I) is Richard Woodman.

Rich. Woodman brought before the Biſh. of Chicheſter, D. Story, and D. Cooke.

Chich. I am ſorrie for you, and ſo are all the worſhipfull men of your Countrey. For it hath beene reported to me, that you have beene a man of good eſtimation of all the Countrey, amongſt the poore and rich, till now of late. Wherefore look well upon your ſelfe, your wife and children, your father, and other of your friends, and be ruled. Think not your ſelfe wiſer then all the Realme. Be informed, and you ſhall have their favours all, as much as ever you had.

Woodman. You have charged me with many things, wherein I have never offended: as, if you will give me leave, I will ſhew you.

Chich. Yes, I pray you ſay your minde.

Wood. If it pleaſe you, you have charged me as though I made my ſelfe wiſer then all the Realme; God doth know, I ſtand to learne of every man that will or can teach me the truth. And whereas you ſay, I have been well eſteemed both of the poore and rich, God doth know, I know not that I have given any juſt offence, either to rich or poore. And as for my wife and children, God doth know how I love them in him, and my life alſo. My life, my wife, and my children are all in Gods hands, and I have them all as I had them not, I truſt according to St. Pauls words. But if I had x. M. pound of gold, I had rather forgoe it all, then them, if I might be in choice, and not diſpleaſe God.

Rich Woodman preferreth the Kingdome of Chriſt, before life, or wife, and all worldly reſpects.

Chich. The Sheriffe took paine to come to me of love, he ſaid, which he bare to you, as to himſelfe; and ſaid you were deſirous to ſpeake with me.

Wood. I thought it meet to appeale to mine Ordinarie. For they go about to ſhed my bloud unrighteouſly. For they have laid many unjuſt things to my charge. Wherefore I thought it meete to appeale to you, that if you can finde any fault in me meet to be reformed by Gods Word, I ſtand to be reformed; and likewiſe if my bloud ſhall be ſhed unrighteouſly, that it might be required at your hands, becauſe you have taken upon you to be the Phyſician of our Countrey.

Woodman appealed to his Ordinarie.

Story. Is not this a perverſe fellow, to lay to your charge, that his bloud ſhall be required at your hands? Thinkeſt thou that thou ſhalt be put to death unjuſtly, that thy bloud ſhould be required? No, if he ſhould condemne a hundred ſuch heretikes as thou art, I helped to rid a good ſort of you. And I promiſe thee, I will helpe to rid thee too, the beſt that I can.

Doctor Story a great ſpiller of bloud by his owne confeſſion

Wood. Then I would have anſwered him, but the Biſhop deſired us both to give him place.

Chich. Well, neighbour Woodman, I call you neighbour, becauſe you be one of my Dioceſſe; and you are ſent to me, that I ſhould give you ſpiritual counſell: for I am your ſpirituall paſtour. Therefore heare what I ſhall ſay to you.

Woodman. First, I deſire you to heare me a few words. You have ſaid, you will give me ſpirituall counſell. Be you ſure that you have the ſpirit of God?

Chich. No, I am not ſure of that.

Wood. No? be you not ſure of that?

Chich. No, by S. Marie, I dare not be ſo bold to ſay ſo; I doubt of that.

The papiſts in doubt whether they have the ſpirit of God.

Wood. Then you be like the waves of the ſea, as ſaith St. James, that be toſſed about with the winde, and be unſtable in all your waies, and can look for no good thing at the Lords hand: Yea, ye are neither hot nor cold, and therefore God will ſpue you out of his mouth, as ſaith St. John. Then they were in a great furie, eſpecially Doctor Storie, ſaying:

D. Story in a fury.

Storie. What a perverſe fellow is this? He hath the Devill within him, and is mad. He is worſe then the Devill. Now I perceive that it is true that is reported by thee, and it is the pride of all ſuch heretikes to boaſt themſelves.

Chich. Yea ſurely, he is ſent to me to learn, and taketh upon him to teach me.

Wood. I ſeeing their blindneſſe and blaſphemy, it made my heart melt, and mine eies guſh out with teares, ſaying; The Jewes ſaid to Chriſt, he had the Devill, and was mad, as you have ſaid here by me. But I know the ſervant is not above his Maſter. And God forbid, that I ſhould learne of him that confeſſeth that he hath not the ſpirit of God.

Chich. Why, do you think that you have the ſpirit of God?

Wood. I beleeve verily that I have the ſpirit of God.

Chic. You boaſt more then ever Paul did, or any of the Apoſtles, the which is great preſumption.

Wood. I boaſt not in my ſelfe, but in the gift of God, as Paul did; for he ſaid, he beleeved verily that he had the ſpirit of God, making thereof no doubts, in the 1 Corinth. chapt.7.

He is no true Chriſtian that hath not the ſpirit of God.

Chich. It is not ſo, you belie the text.

Wood. If it be not ſo, let me be burned to morrow.

Story. Thou ſhalt not be burned to morrow, but thou ſhalt be burned within theſe ſixe dayes, I promiſe thee.

Chich. If it be ſo, it is wrong tranſlated, as it is in a thouſand places more.

Wood. Then one looked in a Latine Teſtament, and another in a Greeke Teſtament, and they ſaid it was in them both that Paul ſuppoſed that he had the ſpirit of GOD, but he was not ſure.

Whether Paul was ſure to receive the ſpirit of Chriſt.

Chich. Even ſo I hope and ſuppoſe that I have the ſpirit of God, but I am not ſure.

Wood. If that place be wrong tranſlated, and ſo many places of the Bible as you ſay, then I may ſay with Chriſt; it cannot be avoyded, but offences muſt be given: But woe unto them by whom they come. I may ſay woe unto falſe tranſlators. For curſed are they that adde or take away. But take you heede that you belie not the tranſlators. I beleeve they had the feare of God more before their eyes then you report of them. And yet if that place be wrong tranſlated, I can prove by places enow, that Paul had the ſpirit of God, as I my ſelfe, and all Gods elect have.

Chich. How prove you that?

Wood. No man can beleeve that Ieſus is the Lord, but by the holy Ghoſt, firſt to the Corinthians the ſeventh chapter. I do beleeve that Ieſus Chriſt is my Redeemer, and that I ſhall be ſaved from all my ſinnes by his death and bloudſhedding, as Paul and all the Apoſtles did, and as all faithfull people ought to do, which no man can do without the ſpirit of God. And as there is no damnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſus; ſo is there no ſalvation to them that are not in Chriſt Ieſus. For he that hath not the ſpirit of Chriſt, is none of his, but is a caſt-away, as he ſaith in the ſame text. And againe, We have not received the ſpirit of bondage, to feare any more, but we have received the ſpirit of adoption, whereby we cry Abba Father. The ſame ſpirit certifieth our ſpirits, that we are the ſonnes of God. Here are proofes enow, that Paul was ſure that he had the ſpirit of God. Alſo Saint Iohn ſaith, He that beleeveth not that Chriſt is come in the fleſh, is an Antichriſt, and denieth both the Father and the Sonne: which is ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, which ſhall never be forgiven in this world, nor in the world to come. Beſide all this, He that beleeveth in God, dwelleth in God, and God in him. So it is impoſſible to beleeve in God, unleſſe God dwell in us. Oh good God, what more iniurie can be done unto thee, then to miſtruſt that we have received thy holy ſpirit by thy gift? Thus may all men ſee their blindneſſe, and whoſe ſervants they be, as they do declare themſelves, both by their words and deeds.

The Papiſts bewray their own blindnes.

Story. Oh my Lord, what an heretike is this ſame? Why heare you him? Send him to priſon to his fellowes in the Marſhalſee, and they ſhall be diſpatched within theſe 12. dayes.

Wood. When I heard him ſay ſo, I reioyced greatly in my heart, deſiring God, if it were his will, to keepe him in that minde. For I looked ſurely to have gone to the Biſhop of Londons Colehouſe, or Lollards Tower; yea, I thought my ſelfe happy, if I might have gone to Lollards Tower: but it pleaſed God to put in the hearts of them to ſend me to the Marſhalſee amongſt our brethren and my old priſon-fellowes: So mercifull hath God dealt with me in eaſing of my burden, that I looked for. So when they perceived that I feared not impriſonment, but rather reioyced, as they well perceived; Then ſaid the Biſhop, Me thinkes he is not affraid of the priſon.

Rich. Woodman glad to goe to the Marſhalſee.

Q. MARIE. Anno. 1557.

Wood. No, I praiſe the living God.

Story. This is an heretike indeed. He hath the right termes of all heretikes; the living God, I pray you be there dead Gods, that you ſay the living God?

The living God is a point of hereſie among the Catholikes.

Wood. Be you angry with me, becauſe I ſpeake the words which are written in the Bible?

Story. Bibble babble, bibble babble. What ſpeakeſt thou of the Bible? There is no ſuch word written in all the Bible.

Story ſcorneth at the holy Bible.

Wood. Then I am much too blame, if it be not ſo written; Behold, for the offences that you have done, you ſhall be carried away captive by Nabuchodonoſor to Babylon, and there ye ſhall be ſeven generations: and when you be there, you ſhall ſee Gods of gold, of ſilver, of wood, and of Stone, borne before you and behinde you upon mens ſhoulders, to caſt out a feare among the Heathen. When you ſhall ſee all theſe abominations, then ſay in your heart: It is the living God that ought to be worſhipped. Here I prove my ſaying true, both that there is a living God, and that there be dead gods. Alſo David ſaith in the Pſalmes; My ſoule hath a deſire and longing to enter into the Courts of the Lord: My heart and my fleſh reioyce in the living God; with divers other places that I could recite. Wherefore I marvell that you rebuke me for ſpeaking the truth.

Baruch. 6.

D. Story ſet to ſchoole in the Scriptures.

Chich. I do not deny but it is written, and is the truth, and I know it as well as you, but ſuch is the ſpeech of all heretikes.

Story. My Lord, I will tell you how you ſhall know an heretike by his words, becauſe I have beene more uſed to them then you have been; that is, they will ſay (the Lord) and (we praiſe God) and (the living God.) By theſe words you ſhall know an heretike.

If the living God in heaven do make an heretike, what maketh then the dead god on the Altar? Stories rule to know an heretike, that is a true Chriſtian.

Woodman. All theſe words are written for our learning, and we are commanded of the Prophets to uſe them daily, as this; The Lords name be praiſed from the riſing up of the Sunne, unto the going down of the ſame. Alſo, as many as feare the Lord, ſay alwaies, the Lord be praiſed.

Story. My Lord, ſend him to priſon, you ſhall do no good with him. I will go to Church, and leave you heare. This is an old heretike. Waſt thou never before me ere now?

When Doctor Story cannot confute them by learning, he confuteth them by impriſonment.

Wood. Yes forſooth, that I have.

Story. Yea, I trowe ſo; and I ſent thee to the Biſhop of London, and he releaſed thee, and thou promiſedſt him to be an honeſt man, and that thou wouldeſt be of the true Catholike Church, which thou haſt not fulfilled.

Wood. I promiſed him nothing but I have fulfilled it. No man ſhall be able to prove the contrary.

Story. Well, it will be tried well enough. My Lord, I will take my leave, I feare me you ſhall do this man no good.

Chicheſter. I would not have you to uſe ſuch ſpeeches as you do, as the Lord be praiſed, and the living God, with ſuch like words. Can you not ſay as well, Our Lord, or our God, as otherwiſe?

No, but if he ſhould ſay: the ſacrament of the altar worſhipped might be he: then he were a perfect Catholike. The Lord, hereticall: Our Lord, Catholike with the Papiſts.

Wood. I marvell why you ſhould reprove me therefore ſeeing they be the words of God. I doe not refuſe to ſay our God, or our Lord, when I talk of the Scripture where it is written. If I ſhould, it muſt follow, that I denied the words of God, and muſt needs be an heretike; but I doe not. Wherfore I marvell what you mean to finde fault therein. It ſeemeth to me, that you miſtruſt that I beleeve not as you do.

Chich. Yea, that is my meaning indeed.

Wood. I beleeve in the living God, if you do not ſo, then our beliefs be not alike indeed. But if it pleaſe you to examine me upon any particular matter, now, or at any other time, I will make you anſwer thereto by Gods help.

Fallacia æquivoci.

He that erreth frō the church, which church erreth not in the right faith, his faith cannot be good in deed.

Chich. Though you beleeve in God, I can prove you beleeve not as you ought to do, as I can ſhew you by your hand writing. You have denied the Catholique Church. Wherefore he that erreth from the Church, it cannot be ſaid that his faith is good. Wherefore be ruled by the Church, from the which ye have erred. I can ſhew you perillous things of your writing, if it ſhould be known, but ye ſhall not be hurt for me, if you will come to any good order. But I promiſe you I would not for three thouſand pound ſome had ſo much againſt me, as I can ſhew againſt you of your owne hand writing, which you cannot denie.

Wood. I will not denie my hand by Gods helpe. For I know well, I have written nothing at any time but the truth. There may be things written againſt me, reporting it to be mine, and yet be not: but my hand cannot well be counterfeited, there be enow that know my hand.

Chich. Do you know it your ſelfe if you ſee it?

Wood. Yea that I do. Then he aroſe and ſet a great bundle of writings, and opened them, and bade me come ſee. I looked on them, and it was my hand indeed.

Chich. How ſay you, is it not your own writing?

Wood. Yes ſurely it is.

Woodman charged with his own writings.

Chich. How ſay you to this, is not this your hand alſo?

Wood. I looked, and it was. And I ſaid, Yes verily is it.

Chich. Well, you know what it meaneth I dare ſay.

Wood. Yea, I know it very well; here is a great deal, the which I had thought had been in my houſe, but I thank God that it is here: for in this you ſhall try whether it be true or not. For in this is contained all the talke that was betwixt the Commiſſioners and me, when I was before them five times, and alſo before the Biſhop of London divers times: and I am ſure, neither you nor they ſhall finde any words falſe therein written: and I think the Sheriffes men when they ſearched my houſe for me, when I was taken, found this, and carried it with them, but I never knew it before now. But I am not ſorrie for it, but am rather glad. For herein you may ſee all the wrong that I received at their hands, and how long I was in priſon, and how I was toſſed up and down, and how I was delivered at length, and by this you may try whether it be ſo or not. I dare ſay they that found it, and they that brought it to you, had thought it would have turned me to diſpleaſure; but in very deed all things work for the beſt to them that fear God.

Rich. Woodman five times before the Commiſſioners.

Chich. Indeed I finde no great fault in this; but here is perillous geare, here is ſedition. This was ſet up upon the Church doore, you know it well enough.

Wood. Indeed I wrote it to the Prieſt and to other that took upon them to fetch my childe out of my houſe without my leave, and uſed it at their pleaſure, when they knew it was baptized alreadie, as they were well certified before. Wherefore my conſcience compelled me to ſhew them my minde in writing, wherein is contained nothing but the Scriptures of God, rebuking them for their folly.

Rich. Woodmans childe, being baptized by the Midwife, was brought out of the houſe by the Papiſts, and confirmed in the church.

Chich. Yea, but it is terribly meant, and uncharitably. It is ſuch geare coupled together I promiſe you, as I never ſaw the like. But I promiſe you, I will make the beſt of it. And I proteſt before God, I would you ſhould do as well as mine own ſoul and bodie. Be contented to be reformed. God hath done his part on you. Caſt not your ſelf away. Remember your wife and children, and the poore that lack your occupying. Meane to follow your vocation. Remember you are not called to be a teacher nor a preacher. Saint Paul ſaith, Let every man walk wherein he is called, and therein abide. Remember you are called to another vocation, for Gods ſake walke therein. It is not your office to do as you have done. You might do as much good by the report of worſhipfull men, as any man might do in all the countrey by your example, and if you would follow the laws of the Catholique Church, it would be an occaſion to bring a great many into the true Church, that are out, as you are.

D. Chriſtopherſon B. of Chicheſter beginneth with fair words to perſwade Woodman from his doctrine.

Wood. I would not that you ſhould ſay, that I am out of the Church of GOD, for I am not, but do allow the Church of GOD according to his word. Yea, if I were abroad, if I could win any into the true Church, that be out, by any meanes that I could uſe, I would be very glad. For God knoweth I love all people as my ſelf. And where you ſay I have been a Preacher, it is not ſo. I never took any ſuch thing upon me, as it is well known. But as for teaching I cannot denie: for it becometh everie man to teach and inſtruct his houſhold in the fear of God, and all other (as far as he can) that deſire it of him. And whereas you have blamed me for reading the Scripture, and leaving my vocation (as you ſay) I left not my vocation in reading the Scripture. For I truſt I followed my vocation the better therefore. And the greateſt cauſe that I was compelled to read the Scriptures, was, becauſe the Preachers & Teachers were ſo changeable.

Woodman not out of the Church.

A man may teach, though he be no Prieſt.

Reading the Scripture letteth no man to walk in his vocation, but rather doth further him.

Chich. No? did you not preach at a Fayre?

Wood. No ſurely, but it was ſo reported. I was at a Fayre indeed. Whiles I was in priſon, I had leave of the Councell to go home to pay my debts, and then I went to a Fayre to ſell cattell, and there met with me divers poore men that I had ſet awork, and of love aſked me how I did, and how I could away with impriſonment. And I ſhewed them how GOD had dealt with me, and how he would deal with all them that put their truſt in him; and this they called preaching. And ſince that it hath been reported that I have baptized children, and married folks, the which I never did: for I was never Miniſter. Wherefore if I had ſo done, I had done contrary to the order of the Apoſtles, as God forbid I ſhould.

Lies and ſlanders.

Chich. I am well apaid, if you be faultleſſe in thoſe things: for I have heard ſay the contrarie.

Wood. I have ſhewed you the truth, and that no man living ſhall be able to prove the contrary.

Chich. You ſaid you do not diſallow the true Catholique Church.

Wood. No, that I do not.

Woodman diſalloweth not the Catholique Church.

Chich. Why do you not then go to the Church? You come not there it is informed me.

Wood. I truſt I am in the true Church everie day. But to tell you truth, I come not at the church where the moſt do reſort. For if I ſhould, I ſhould offend, and be offended. For at the laſt time that I was there, I offended many, and was offended my ſelfe. Wherefore for conſcience ſake I would not come there. For I was ſent to priſon for my coming there, and now I am ſent to you for biding thence. So they will not be pleaſed any way with me, for they ſeeke my life. Wherefore looke you to it, for I am now in your hands, and you ought to be an houſe of defence againſt mine enemies. For if you ſuffer them to kill me, my blood

The Biſhop charged with his office.

blood ſhall be required at your hands. If you can finde any juſt cauſe in me worthy of death by Gods word, you may condemne me your ſelf, and not offend God: wherefore look to it, the matter is weightie, deliver me not into their hands, and think ſo to be diſcharged.

Chich. I tell you truth, I can do little in the matter. For I have not full authoritie as yet of mine office: but I will ſend for you and talk with you, if I wiſt I ſhould do you any good.

Wood. I would be glad to talk with you, and to ſhew you my minde in any thing that you ſhall demand of me, now, or at any other time.

The biſhop biddeth Woodman to dinner.

Chich. So then he deſired the Sheriffes men to tarrie dinner with him; that this man (ſaid he) may dine with me alſo: for it is poſſible that he may have no great ſtore of meat whither he ſhall go.

Talk between Rich. Woodman and the Biſhop about Prieſts marriage.

Wood. So we tarried dinner with him, and had no further talk, neither how to prove where the true Church of God is, nor of the ſacraments, nor of any other thing pertaining to me-ward, not for the ſpace of two houres or mo: but he entred in talke with me, how I underſtood many Scriptures, and for Biſhops and Prieſts marriages, and whether Paul had a wife or not. To whom I anſwered; it is a thing that I have little to do with, as concerning marriages: but I am very well content to talk with you in the matter, as far as my poore learning will ſerve. So when he had talked with me of divers Scriptures, he liked my talk well. He aſked me how I ſaid by ſaint Paul, whether he were married or not? To whom I anſwered, I can prove by the Scriptures that he was never married.

Chich. How prove you that?

Paul if he were not married, yet he had power to marry, as well as the other had.

Wood. I will prove it well enough by Gods help. But yet I will prove that Paul might have had a wife, as well as the other Apoſtles had.

Chich. Why, had the Apoſtles wives?

1 Cor. 9.

Wood. Yes, all, ſaving Paul and Barnabas, as I underſtand it. For theſe are Pauls words in the firſt to the Corinthians, the ninth chapter. Am I not an Apoſtle? am I not free? have I not ſeen Ieſus Chriſt? Are not ye my worke in the Lord? And if I be not Apoſtle to other, yet to you I am an Apoſtle. For you are the ſeale of my Apoſtleſhip in the Lord. Mine anſwer to them that aske me, is this: Have we not power to eat and to drink? either have we not power to lead about a ſiſter to wife, as well as the other Apoſtles have, and as the brethren of the Lord? Either have not Barnabas and I power thus to do? So this Text proveth, that Paul and Barnabas were unmarried. But Paul declareth that the reſt had wives, and that they had power likewiſe ſo to have, but they found no need thereof. But Paul declareth in the ſeventh Chapter of the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, that he that hath no power over his own fleſh, may marrie: For it is better to marrie then to burn. Wherefore to avoid fornication (ſaith he) let every man have his wife. He ſaith, Let every man have his wife, and every woman her husband. By this place of Scripture I underſtand, that Biſhops and Prieſts may have wives, becauſe they are men, rather then burn, or commit fornication. But I think verily, he that can abſtain, having power of his own will, doth beſt; but if he marrieth, he ſinneth not.

1 Cor. 7.

Prieſts ought to have wives rather then to burn, by ſaint Pauls doctrine.

Gen. 2.

So then he debated the Scriptures with me divers wayes, that a Biſhop or a Prieſt ought not to have a wife: but I proved by divers Scriptures both in the old Law and in the new, that women were at firſt made for the help of men, the which was ſpoken generally to all men. Wherefore (ſaid I) every man may have a woman, and ſinne not, in honeſt matrimonie, as well Biſhops and Deacons, as other men, which you call Prieſts, if they be true Miniſters of Ieſus Chriſt, and of that order that Biſhops and Deacons were in Pauls time. For Paul declareth to Timothie, 1. and the 3. That a Biſhop ſhould be the husband of one wife, and how they ſhould be honeſtly apparelled, and how they ſhould bring up their children, and likewiſe the Deacons. This (ſaid I) proveth more plainly, that both Biſhops and Deacons had wives in the Apoſtles time, the which he could not denie. But then he alledged, that no Biſhop nor Prieſt might take a wife, after he had taken upon him that office, but if he had a wife before he took the office, tried meet for the purpoſe for his life and for his learning, he might keep his wife, and bring up his children according to ſaint Pauls meaning to Timothie, or elſe might they have no wives.

1 Tim. 3.

Biſhops and Deacons were married in the Apoſtles time. Papiſts hold, that biſhops and deacons having wives before, might keep them ſtill: but not having before, might not afterward marrie.

Then ſaid I, I think Pauls meaning in that place, was, that a man that hath had two wives might not be made a Biſhop nor a Deacon, if he had never ſo much learning. But that place maketh not that a Biſhop or a Deacon may not marrie after they be made Biſhops and Deacons. For I am ſure that Paul was in the ſtate of a Biſhop, when he ſaid, He had power to lead about a ſiſter to wife, as well as the other Apoſtles had. Here Paul declareth, that it was in his power to have a wife, after he had the office of a Biſhop, which was not in his power, if he had been forbidden of God.

Paul confeſſeth himſelf after his Apoſtleſhip to have power to marry.

Thus have I ſhewed you my minde in this behalf, both of Paul, and alſo for the marriages of Biſhops and Prieſts, as I underſtand the Scriptures. Howbeit, it is a thing the which I have little to do withall: but as you required me to ſay my minde in that matter, ſo I have done.

Chich. Marie I am glad that you have ſaid as you have done. Many do affirm boldly, that Paul had a wife, and yet cannot prove whether he had or had not, by the Scriptures: but you have ſaid very well. I am glad that ye are contented to be ruled by Gods word. And if you will be contented likewiſe in other matters, no doubt you ſhall do well: therefore gentle goodman Woodman be ruled. God hath given you a good wit. I proteſt before God, I would you ſhould do as well as mine own ſoul and body, and ſo would (I dare ſay) all the worſhipfull men in the countrey, as they have reported to me.

The Biſhops fair words to Rich. Woodman

Wood. Why, my Lord, I take God to record (whom I truſt to ſerve) that I would be as glad to live in reſt and peace, as any man in all the world, if I might. And I ſtand to learne, and am contented to be reformed of any thing that I hold, if it can be proved that it be not agreeable to Gods word. And the truth is ſo, I have talked with a dozen Prieſts at the leaſt, ſince I was delivered out of priſon, of certaine matters, and they have not been able to certifie me in any thing that I have aſked them: and therefore have they complained on me to the Sheriffe, and Juſtices, making tales and lies on me, to turn me to diſpleaſure, as much as in them lieth. I promiſe you, there be as many unlearned Prieſts in your Dioceſſe, as in any one Dioceſſe in England I think; the more it is to be lamented.

Rich. Woodman complained of by unlearned Prieſts which could not certifie him in matters of religion.

Chich. I promiſe you, I do much lament it my ſelf: for I hear ſay no leſſe, but it is true that you ſay. I would I could remedie it, but I cannot: but I will do the beſt that I can, when I come into the Countrey, and I will be glad to talke with you ſome other time, when I am ſomewhat better at eaſe. You ſee I am very tender now, as I have been this half yeer and more. Come to dinner; our dinner is readie. I cauſed you not to tarrie for any great cheare that you ſhall have, nor would I you ſhould think that I go about to win you with my meat. But you be welcome with all my heart. Come, ſit down.

A Biſhoplike dinner without any talk of Scriptures.

Wood. I thanked him, and went to dinner; and there dined with him a Merchant man, one of the Sheriffes men, and I, and no mo, and we had good cheare, God be praiſed therefore. We had no talk of the Scriptures all the dinner while: but when dinner was done, the Biſhop ſaid:

Chicheſt. Now call M. Stories man. For the Commiſſioners have committed you to priſon: but I will ſend for you or ever it be long, and I pray God I may do you good. I would be verie glad of it.

D. Story a man without reaſon.

Wood. If it pleaſe you to ſend for me, I would be very glad to talk with you, for I like your talk well. And then if it pleaſe your Lordſhip to examine me upon any particular matter, I will ſhew you my minde therein, by Gods grace, without diſſimulation. But I pray you let me have nothing to do with M. Storie, for he is a man without reaſon, me think.

Chich. Well, or ever you go, how ſay you to the ſeven ſacraments? Let me hear what you ſay to them, that I may be the willinger to ſend for you again.

7. Sacraments denied.

Wood. I know not ſeven ſacraments.

Chich. Then what ſhall I talk with you? How many do you know?

Two onely ſacraments.

Wood. I know but two; one the Sacrament of Baptiſme, and the other the Supper of the Lord. But if you can juſtly prove by Gods word, that there be more then two, I ſtand to be reformed.

Chicheſt. If I prove not ſeven by Gods word, then beleeve me not: and ſo he bade me farewell.

Then the Sheriffes two men, and one of Doctor Stories men, carried me to Doctor Cooks houſe, which Doctor Cook commanded them to carry me to the Sheriffes priſon in Southwark, ſaying, he ſhall be called before us again ſhortly and all his fellows, and we ſhall diſpatch them for troubling the countrey any more.

Rich. Woodman carried to the Marſhalſey.

Luke 22. The devils members perſecutors of the Chriſtians.

Job. Pſal. 121. Rom. 14.

And ſo I was brought to the Marſhalſey, where I now am merry (God be praiſed therefore) looking for judgement of my fleſh: for they intend to diſpatch me ſhortly, if God will give them leave: but God hath their hearts in his hands, and they can do nothing to me, but as God will give them leave. Wherefore I commit my cauſe to God onely, and I am ſure there ſhall not one hair of my head periſh without my heavenly Fathers will, although I bide never ſo much trouble. Job periſhed not for all his trouble, although God gave the devill leave to trouble and try him divers and many wayes, as God hath ſuffered his members to trouble, and trie me divers and many wayes, I praiſe God. They ſhall as little prevail againſt my faith (I have no miſtruſt) as the devill prevailed againſt Job, whatſoever they do with my goods, life, or bodie. For he that kept Job in all his trouble, neither ſlumbreth nor ſleepeth, but keepeth me, and all his elect, that whether we live or die, it ſhall be to the praiſe and glorie of God. For if we live, we live at the Lords will, and if we die, we die to the Lords will: ſo, whether we live or die, we are the Lords, bleſſed be his name therefore.

Rich. Woodman to the faithfull brethren.

Wherefore, dear brethren and ſiſters, to whom this my writing ſhall come, be of good chear, and fear not what man can do unto you. For they can but kill the bodie: but fear him that hath power to kill both bodie and ſoul. And yet once again I bid you be of good chear. For the Sheriffe with divers other Gentlemen and Prieſts, whileſt I was at the Sheriffes houſe, ſaid to me, that all the heretiques in the countrey hung on me, as the people did in times paſt upon ſaint Auguſtine, or ſaint Ambroſe, or ſuch like. Wherefore ſaid they, look well on it, you have a great thing to anſwer for. To the which I anſwered; I pray God lay nothing more to my charge, then he will do for hereſie, as I am ſure he will not. For he hath ſet my ſins as far from me, as it is from the Eaſt to the Weſt: ſo that I am ſure they ſhall never come neer to me any more. Yea, and that they call hereſie, we ſerve God withall. And I am ſure there is no man nor woman that hangeth on me, but on GOD. But yet that is their imaginations and thoughts, that if they might win me to them, they ſhould win a great many likewiſe: and thinking to kill me, if they cannot win me, as I truſt in God, and am ſure they ſhall never by Gods grace, if it were poſſible for them to kill me ten times. For I am ſo linked to Chriſt in a chain by faith, that it is unpoſſible for men to looſe us aſunder, neither for life nor death I praiſe my Lord God therefore. And no doubt their full intent and purpoſe is to kill me, thinking thereby to make other afraid. Which death of my bodie were beſt of all for me, if God were ſo pleaſed. But if I may live for the comfort of other, his name be praiſed therefore. I know what he can do; but what he will do I know not. But if death be offered me, ſo that I cannot refuſe it without diſpleaſing of GOD, I truſt in God I ſhall not offend my brethren in receiving of death, but ſhall be rather an occaſion of the ſtrengthening of their faith, by chuſing and receiving of it, and that with joy. For as Chriſt hath given his life for us, ſo ought we to give our lives for the defence of the Goſpel, and comfort of our brethren. And whereas the Biſhop ſaith, he will prove ſeven ſacraments, be you out of doubt he ſhall never be able to do it, no more then he hath proved other arguments with me alreadie.

Pſal. 103.

Thoſe that fear God hang not on man.

The inſeparable knot of love between Chriſt and his members.

Chriſtians ought to give their lives for defence of the Goſpel, if they be thereto called.

Thus fare ye well from the Marſhalſey, where I now am, as a ſheep appointed to be ſlain, God be praiſed therefore.

The ſecond examination of Richard Woodman, before the Biſhop of Chicheſter, two of his Chaplains; and D. Story at the laſt came to us, the twenty ſeventh day of April.

The 2. examination of Rich. Woodman, before D. Chriſtopherſon, B. of Chicheſter, D. Story, &c.

First, I was ſent for to the Marſhalſey by D. Storie, and was carried to his houſe beſides S. Nicholas Shambles; and when I had ſpoken to him, he ſent me to the Biſhop of Chicheſter, and ſaid he would come to him his ſelf ſtraightway: and when we were in the Biſhops Hall, we had not tarried long, but the Biſhop ſent for me: and when I came before him, I did my dutie to him as much as I could.

Chich. Then ſaid the Biſhop, You be welcome; how do you now?

Wood. Well, I praiſe God, thanking your Lordſhip for the gentle talk that you had with me at my laſt departing from you.

Chich. Well, goodman Woodman, I have ſent for you of love and good will, that I bear to you, to talk with you, and I would have you to tell me your minde in few words. For indeed the laſt time that I talked with you, our talke was ſo long, that I fell into a great drithe thereby, and have been the worſe in my body ever ſince. Wherefore I pray you ſhew me your minde briefly in thoſe particular matters that I ſhall demand of you, according to your promiſe that you made when you were with me the laſt time. How ſay you, will you?

Wood. Yea forſooth, I will anſwer to any thing that you ſhall demand of me (by Gods help) as well as I can.

Chich. How ſay you by the ſeven Sacraments? for there we left off, and there we will begin again. You ſaid then there were but two. How ſay you now to it? will you denie all ſaving two?

Proving of ſeven ſacraments.

Wood. I ſay now, as I ſaid then. You ſaid, there be ſeven Sacraments, and I ſaid, I knew but two: but if you could approve ſeven by Gods word, when I came before you again, I muſt needs grant them. And you ſaid, if you could not prove them by Gods word, I ſhould not beleeve them: and now I am come to ſee how well you can prove them. Herewith he was moved and all his Chaplaines.

Chich. By God and my troth, I weene he thinketh I cannot prove them. How ſay you to the Sacrament of matrimonie?

D. Chriſtopherſon B. of Chicheſter reproved for ſwearing.

Wood. Why, my Lord, Saint Paul ſaith to Timothie, A Biſhop ſhould be faultleſſe, and you uſe much ſwearing, which is a great fault in a Biſhop, of all other, that ſhould be an example to the flock. Then he and his prelates were in a great rage with me, becauſe I reproved him for his ſwearing.

Chich. What, I perceive this man is worſe then he was the laſt day: what, he taketh upon him to teach me to ſpeak, as though I could not tell what I had to do?

Prieſt. So me thinketh, my Lord, he is a ſtout fellow indeed, as we have ſeen.

Swearing not to be born with.

Wood. Yea, I am ſtout, becauſe I do that I am commanded. I dare not for my life hold my peace: for I ſhould beare your ſinne, the which I will not do for any of you all, I tell you plainly.

Chich. Where finde you that you are commanded to reprove me?

Wood. If thou ſee thy brother ſin, reprove him: if he repent, thou haſt wonne thy brother. But you repent it not, me thinketh, but rather go about to maintain the ſame. Chriſt ſaith, He that breaketh one of the leaſt of my commandements, and teacheth men ſo, ſhall be called leaſt in the kingdome of heaven; and you go about to teach men ſo, ſo far as I ſee.

Prieſt. Why my Lord, this man is paſt cure. I ſee no hope in him.

Chriſtopherſon becauſe he was reproved for ſwearing, giveth him over to D. Storie.

Chich. No, ſo me thinketh. I will never talke with him more. Go call M. Storie; let him do with him what he will. He hath been with his fellows in the Marſhalſea, and now he is worſe then he was before. I had ſome hope in him the other day, but now I ſee none.

Wood. No, I praiſe God, my faith hangeth upon no men, but upon God.

Prieſt. Nay, my Lord, I think he is not the worſe for them: but I fear me they be the worſe for him. I know this man of old, before mine old Lord.

Wood. Well my Lord, looke well to it: will you deliver me to other men to ſhed my blood, and ſo think to waſh your hands of me, as Pilate did by Chriſt? Nay, you cannot be ſo diſcharged.

Chich. I have nothing to do with you: but of my gentleneſſe I have ſent for you, becauſe you ſaid, you would declare your minde in any particular matter I would demand of you.

Wood. Why, I do not denie but I will do ſo, if you do demand it of me. But you go about to deliver me to other to kill me: and I know that there is none that hath to do with me but you.

Chriſtopherſon not yet conſecrated, refuſeth to take the examination of Woodman.

Chich. I am not conſecrated yet: wherefore my Lord Cardinall may examine you, and condemne you, or my Lord of London: for you are now in his Dioceſſe.

Wood. Yea my Lord, is the matter even ſo? Then I perceive whereabout you go. Nay, I will talk no more with you then, if you be at that point. Aſk me what you will: but I will ſhew you nothing of my minde. I promiſe you I will not anſwer in particular matters, and ſo you to accuſe me to other, and they to kill me.

Chich. I go not about to kill you, but would be glad to hear your minde in the ſacraments, and if you underſtand them not aright, I would be glad with all my heart to ſhew you my minde how I underſtand them. For I would you ſhould do as well as mine own ſelf.

Wood. If you would talk with me to do me good, I would be content to hear you, and ſhew you my minde; otherwiſe I would be loath.

Whether matrimony be a ſacrament.

Chich. Nay, I will promiſe you, if I can do you no good, I will do you no harm: for if I meant to do you harm, I could lay your own hand-writing againſt you, but I will not: wherefore be in no doubt of me. How ſay you to the ſacrament of matrimonie? is it a ſacrament or no? How think you by it?

Wood. I think it is an holy inſtitution ordained of God in Paradiſe, and ſo to continue to the worlds end.

Chich. Lo, now you ſhall ſee how you be deceived in that, as you be in all the reſt. Come hither. You can read Latine I am ſure.

Wood. Yea I can read Latine, but I underſtand verie little.

Epheſ. 5.

Chich. Come to me, you ſhall ſee that Paul calleth it a holy Sacrament. For theſe be the words, For this cauſe ſhall a man leave father and mother, and ſhall be joyned to his wife: and two ſhall be made one fleſh: This is a great Sacrament.

S. Pauls words be theſe: This myſterie is great, &c.

Wood. I remember ſuch a ſaying, but Saint Paul calleth it not a ſacrament. But he ſaith, It is a great myſterie.

Chich. Where ſaith he ſo?

Wood. I am not ſure in that Text it is, but I am ſure theſe be St. Pauls words, and that he calleth it not a ſacrament in all his writings.

Chich. What, the laſt day ye were full of Scriptures; here it is written, and there it is written? What, we can rehearſe the Scriptures as well as you. Wherefore, if we be ſure it is written, it is no great matter for the place. Come hither, I will ſhew you the place, I think, that you mean.

In the Greek Text St. Paul calleth it myſterium.

Wood. I looked, and it was written Sacramentum. I know it is a great myſterie, in the Engliſh Tranſlation.

What is a myſterie, and what difference there is between a myſterie and a ſacrament.

Chich. I permit it be a myſterie. What is a myſterie?

Wood. A myſterie is (I take it) unſeen: for he ſaith, he ſpeaketh betwixt Chriſt and the Congregation: So the great myſterie that he ſpeaketh of, I take to be the faith of them that be married, which is hid in Chriſt, the which we ſee not, but Chriſt. But the deed which is in the Congregation, which is the outward marriage we ſee, but the inward marriage of the heart we ſee not. Wherefore Paul calleth it a myſterie. And therefore if it be a ſacrament, it is inviſible to us: it is not ſeen, as other ſacraments be.

Chich. Nay, I tell you it is a viſible ſacrament, ſeen as the other be: for is not the marriage ſeen? is not the man and woman ſeen?

Wood. My Lord, I pray you what is a ſacrament?

Chich. It is the ſigne of a holy thing.

Wood. Me thinks you have certified me verie well. There need not be a ſigne of a holy thing, where the holy thing is it ſelfe. Then his Chaplaines would have interrupted me, but I deſired my Lord I might ſay out my minde in the matter. So with much ado he bade me ſay what I could.

Argumentum.

A thing ſignified and a thing ſignifying cannot be at one time, in reſpect of it ſelf, in one ſubject.
Matrimonie is any holy thing it ſelf ſignified.
Ergo, Matrimony cannot be a ſacrament ſignifying an holy thing.

There need not to be a ſigne of a thing, where the thing is it ſelf. Matrimonie is an holy thing it ſelf, and is ended outwardly, and need no more ſignes but themſelves: Wherefore it cannot be a Sacrament as other be.

The hoſe in an hoſiers ſtall may be a ſigne, ſignifying moe hoſe to be within; but it is no ſignifying ſigne of it ſelf. Neither again is everie ſigne of another thing to be called a Sacrament.

Chich. Lo, how much you ſpeak againſt your ſelf. And for an example, I come by an Hoſier, and there hangeth a paire of Hoſe, the which be Hoſe, and be a ſigne of Hoſe that be to ſell within.

Prieſt. How ſay you to this? Now my Lord hath hit you home indeed.

Wood. He hath hit me perillouſly, I tell you with ſophiſtry to blinde mine eyes withall. I marvell you be not all aſhamed of it. I can anſwer that to all your ſhames, if I might be juſtly heard, I tell you plainly.

Prieſt. What, you be angry me thinks.

Wood. I am not angrie, but I am earneſt, I tell you, to ſee your blindneſſe and folly. I talked of the Scriptures that be written, and it is Gods word, to prove my matter true by, and you will prove your matter true by a paire of hoſe. And as well can you prove it by that, as by Gods Word.

Chicheſter proveth matrimony to be a ſacrament by a paire of hoſe.

Prieſt. Why, is there nothing true, but that is written in the Bible?

Wood. Saint Paul ſaith to the Galathians the firſt Chapter, If an Angel come from heaven, and preach any other doctrine then may be proved by Gods word, hold him accurſed: and ſo do I, I tell you plainly.

Prieſt. Here is a Teſtament in my hand; if I hurle him in the fire and burn him, have I burned Gods word, or not? I will buy a new for xvi. pence.

Letters written in the book, ſpeaking properly, be one thing: the teſtament and word of God is another thing. And yet by uſe of ſpeech, the book of the teſtament is called the Teſtament, as bread, and wine be called the body and blood of the Lord.

Wood. I ſay, you have burned Gods word, and I beleeve, he that will burn a Teſtament willingly, would burn God himſelf, if he were here, if he could: for he and his word are all one.

Then they made a great laughing at it.

Wood. Laugh on, quoth I. Your laughing will be turned to weeping, and all ſuch joy will be turned to mourning, if you repent it not with ſpeed.

Chich. Then the Biſhop began to cloak the Prieſts folly, ſaying, Why, if my Counting houſe were full of books, and if my houſe ſhould be on fire by chance, and ſo be burned, were Gods word burned?

Wood. No, my Lord, becauſe they were burned againſt your will: but yet if you ſhould burn them willingly, or think it well, and not be ſorrie for it, you burn Gods word as well as he. For he that is not ſorrie for a ſhrewd turn, doth allow it to be good.

Chich. Follow your vocation; you have a little learning. We have an altar, whereof you may not eat. What meaneth Saint Paul thereby?

Hebr. 13.

Wood. There is no man ſo fooliſh to eat ſtones I trow.

Chich. What mockers and ſcorners be you, to ſay no man will be ſo fooliſh to eat ſtones? it is a plain mock.

Wood. Why, my Lord, you ſaid I had no learning, nor knowledge, nor underſtanding. Wherefore it becometh you to make things more plain to me, and not to aſk me ſuch dark queſtions, and yet blame me too; me think it is too much.

Chicheſt. I dare ſay, you know what it meaneth well enough. The moſt fool in my houſe will underſtand my meaning better then you do.

Wood. There ſtood ſome of his men not far off, talking together beſide a window. He called one of them by his name.

Chich, Come hither. I ſay to thee, thou ſhalt not eat of this Table. What do I mean thereby?

The man. Forſooth, my Lord, you would not have me eat of this table, laying his hand thereupon. With this anſwer he made all them in the houſe to fall on laughing, and I could not hold it in, but burſt out with laughter, and ſaid.

The Biſhop of Chicheſter rightly anſwered of his man according to his queſtion.

Wood. He hath expounded the matter almoſt as well as I.

Chich. He meaneth well enough, if you would underſtand him.

Anſwer me again, to make it more plain. I ſay to thee, thou ſhalt not eat of this table. What mean I thereby?

The man. Forſooth you would not have me eat this table.

Wood. Theſe words made them all laugh. Wherewith the biſhop was almoſt angry, becauſe the anſwer proved no better, and ſaid.

Chich. He meaneth that I would not have him eat any of the meat that is ſet upon this table. How ſaiſt thou, doeſt thou not mean ſo?

The man. Yes forſooth my Lord, that was my meaning indeed.

Ait, aio.

Wood. Yea, my Lord, now you have told him what you mean, he can ſay ſo too: and ſo could I have done (as little wit as I have) if you had ſaid, Paul meant that no man might eat of that which was offered upon the altar, but the Prieſts.

Chich. Yea, I perceive you underſtand the meaning of Paul well enough, but that you liſt to cavill with me.

Wood. Why my Lord, do you think I underſtand ſuch dark places of the Scripture, without learning? you ſaid even now, I had no knowledge nor learning, wherefore I anſwered you, as you judged of me.

Chich. Well, let this matter paſſe, and let us turn to the principall again. How ſay you by the ſacrament of the altar?

Sacrament of the altar.

Wood. You meane the ſacrament of the bodie and blood of Jeſus Chriſt.

Chich. I mean the ſacrament of the altar, and ſo I ſay.

Wood. You mean Chriſt to be the altar, do you not?

Chich. I mean the ſacrament of the altar in the Church. What, is it ſo ſtrange to you?

Wood. It is ſtrange to me indeed, if you mean the altar of ſtone.

The altar how it is to be taken and where it is.

Chich. It is that altar that I mean.

Wood. I underſtand not the altar ſo.

Chich. No, I think ſo indeed: and that is the cauſe that you be deceived. I pray you, how do you underſtand the altar then?

Wood. If you will give me leave till I have done, I will ſhew you how I underſtand the altar, and where it is.

Chich. Yes, you ſhall have leave to ſay your minde, as much as you will.

Wood. It is written, Matth. 18. That whereſoever two or three be gathered together in Chriſts name, there is he in the midſt among them: and whatſoever they aske the Father upon earth, it ſhall be granted them in heaven. Agreeing to the fifth of Matth. ſaying, When thou comeſt to offer thy gift

Math. 5.

gift at the altar, and there remembreſt that thy brother hath ought againſt thee, leave there thy offering, and go firſt and be reconciled to thy brother, and then offer thy gift. The Prieſts would have interrupted me, but the Biſhop bade them let me alone.

Chicheſt. You ſhall hear a prettie concluſion anon.

Chriſt the true and onely altar.

Wood. I pray you let me make an end, and then finde fault with me if you can. Now to the matter. In theſe two places of Scripture, I prove that Chriſt is the true altar, whereon every Chriſtian man and woman ought to come and offer their gifts. Firſt, whereſoever the people are gathered together in Chriſts name, there is he in the midſt; and where he is, there is the altar, ſo that we may be bold to come and offer our gift, if we be in love and charitie: if we be not, we muſt leave there our offering, and go firſt and be reconciled to our brother, and agree with him quickly, and ſo forth, and then come and offer the gift. Some will ſay, how ſhall I agree with my adverſarie, when he is not nigh by a hundred miles? may I not pray till I have ſpoken with him? To all ſuch I anſwer; if thou preſume to pray among the faithfull, wiſhing any evill to any man, woman, or childe, thou aſkeſt vengeance upon thy ſelf. For no ſuch aſketh any thing elſe of the Lord in his prayer. Wherefore agree with thy adverſarie, that is, make thy life agreeable to Gods word. Say in thy heart without diſſimulation, that thou aſkeſt God and all the world forgiveneſſe from the bottome of thy heart, intending never to offend them any more. Then all ſuch may be bold to come and offer their gift, their prayer on the altar, where the people of God be gathered together. Thus have I ſhewed you my minde, both of the altar, and of the offering, as I underſtand it.

The place of Matth. 5. expounded.

Chich. Do you underſtand the offering and the altar ſo? I never heard any man underſtand it ſo, no not Luther the great heretique, that was condemned by a generall Councell, and his picture burned.

Wood. If he were an heretique, I think he underſtood it not ſo indeed: but I am ſure all Chriſtians ought to underſtand it ſo.

Chich. Oh what vaine glorie is in you, as though you underſtood all things, and other men nothing. Hear me; I will ſhew you the true underſtanding, both of the altar, and the offering on the altar. We have an altar (ſaid Paul, Heb. 13.) that ye may not eat of. Meaning thereby, that no man might eat of that which was offered on the altar, but the Prieſt. For in Pauls time all the living that the Prieſt had, the people came and offered it on the altar, money or other things: and when the people came to offer it, and then remembred that they had any thing againſt their brother, then they left their offering upon the altar, and went and were reconciled to their brother; and they came again and offered their gift, and the Prieſt had it. This is the true underſtanding of the place that you have rehearſed: wherefore you be deceived.

Wood. My Lord, that was the uſe in the old law. Chriſt was the end of that. But indeed I perceive by Pauls words, the ſacrifice was offered in Pauls time: yet that maketh not that was well done, but he rebuked it. Wherefore, it ſeemeth to me that you be deceived.

The Catholiques will not have the word to judge.

Chich. Who ſhall be judges betwixt us in this matter?

Wood. The 12. of John declareth who ſhall be judge in the laſt day.

Chich. You mean the word ſhall judge the word. How can that be?

Wood. Saint Peter ſaith, The Scripture hath no private interpretation: but one Scripture muſt be underſtood by another.

Chich. You will underſtand it one way, and I will underſtand it another way: and who ſhall be judges betwixt us then?

Woodman referreth himſelf to the true Church.

Wood. The true Church of God is able to diſcuſſe all doubts: to whom I refer it.

Chich. I am glad you ſay ſo, if you will ſay ſo indeed.

Wood. My Lord, I never meant otherwiſe.

Chich. The Church of God doth allow the Sacrament of the altar.

Wood. What do you offer now upon the Altar?

Doctrine prejudiciall to Chriſts paſſion to ſay, that the ſacrament of the altar doth pacifie the wrath of God.

Chich. We offer up in the bleſſed ſacrament of the altar the bodie of Chriſt to pacifie the wrath of GOD the Father; and therewith they put off their cappes all, to that abominable Idoll.

Wood. Saint Paul ſaith to the Hebrews, in the tenth Chapter, We are ſanctified by offering of the bodie of Ieſus Chriſt upon the croſſe once for all: and everie Prieſt is daily miniſtring, and oftentimes offereth one manner of offering, which can never take away ſins; and that is the offering that you uſe to offer. As far as I can ſee, you be Prieſts after the order of Aaron, that offered up ſacrifice for their own ſins, and the ſins of the people.

The Catholikes make themſelves Prieſts, not after the order of Aaron, but of Melchiſedech.

Chich. Nay, Aarons ſacrifice was with blood, which ſignifieth the death of Chriſt, the which was ended upon the croſſe by his blood-ſhedding: but we are prieſts after the order of Melchiſedech, the which offereth bread to the King in remembrance, and ſignifieth the giving of Chriſts body in bread and wine at the laſt ſupper, the which he gave to his diſciples, and commanded it to be uſed to the end of the world. This is the ſacrifice that we offer, according to his word.

Wood. Me think you have made the matter verie plain to me, that as Chriſt was the end of all ſacrifices, ſo was he the beginning of the ſacraments, willing them to be uſed in the remembrance of him, to the worlds end.

The Catholikes make the ſacrament both a ſigne ſignifying, and the thing it ſelf ſignified.

Chich. What in remembrance of him, and not himſelf, as his word ſaith, Take, eat, this is my bodie? It is not the ſigne onely, but the thing it ſelf. How ſay you? Is it not his bodie, after the words be ſpoken by the Prieſt? How ſay you? go briefly to work, for I cannot long tarrie with you.

Wood. My Lord, if you will anſwer me to one ſacrament, I will anſwer you to another.

Chich. Yes I am verie well content with that.

Whether the words onely make the ſacrament of baptiſme, without the childe there to be baptized.

Wood. If you ſay the words of Baptiſme over the water, and there be no childe there, is there true Baptiſme?

Chich. No, there muſt be the water, the word, and the childe, and then it is Baptiſme.

Wood. Verie well. Then if a childe be baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, it is not truly baptized.

Chich. No: the childe muſt be baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and the holy Ghoſt, or elſe it is not truly baptized.

Wood. Then there may be nothing added, nor taken away from the Sacraments: may there?

Chich. No, ſaid the Biſhop.

Wood. Now my Lord, I will anſwer to you, if it pleaſe you.

Chich. Well, how ſay you, Take, eat, this is my body: is it not Chriſts body, as ſoon as the words be ſaid?

Wood. My Lord, I will anſwer you by your own words, that you anſwered me, which is true: the water, the word, and the childe, all

theſe

The word, water and childe, make baptiſme: So the word, bread, and the receiver, make the ſacrament of the Lords body.

Q. MARIE. Anno 1557.

theſe together make baptiſme; the bread, wine, and the word make the ſacrament; and the eater, eating in true faith, maketh it his body. Here I prove it is not Chriſts body, but to the faithfull receiver. For he ſaid, Take, eate, this is my body.

He called it not his body before eating, but after eating. And S. Auguſtine ſaith, Crede & manducaſti, Beleeve and thou haſt eaten. And Saint Iohn ſaith, He that beleeveth in God, dwelleth in God, and God in him: wherefore it is unpoſſible to dwell in God, and to eate his body, without a true faith.

The faith of the receiver maketh it the body.

Prieſt. Then the faith of the receiver maketh it his body, and not his word, by your ſaying. I pray you what did Iudas eate?

Wood. Iudas did eate the ſacrament of Chriſt, and the devill with all.

Prieſt. He eate the body of Chriſt unworthily, as S. Paul ſaith.

Wood. Nay, St. Paul ſaith no ſuch thing. He ſpeaketh not of eating of his body unworthily, but of the ſacrament unworthily. For he ſaith, Whoſoever eateh of this bread, and drinketh of this cup unworthily, eateth and drinketh his own damnation, becauſe he maketh no difference of the Lords body: and not becauſe he eateth the Lords body. If Iudas had eate Chriſt body, it muſt needs follow, that Iudas is ſaved. For Chriſt ſaith in the ſixth of Iohn, Whoſoever eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my bloud, hath eternall life, and I will raiſe him up againe at the laſt day.

If Iudas did eate the body of Chriſt, then muſt he be ſaved.

Prieſt. My Lord, this man is an interpreter after his own minde.

Chich. I ſee it is but folly to talke with you: it is but loſt labor. How ſay you? Doe you not beleeve that after the words be ſaid, there remaineth neither bread nor wine, but the very body of Chriſt really? make me a plaine anſwer, for I will talk no more with you.

The true confeſſion of Rich. Woodman touching the ſacrament.

Wood. I will make you a direct anſwer, how I beleeve of the true Sacrament. I do beleeve, that if I come to receive the ſacrament of the body and bloud of Chriſt truely miniſtred, beleeving that Chriſt was born for me, and that he ſuffered death for me, and that I ſhall be ſaved from my ſinnes by his bloud-ſhedding, and ſo receive the ſacrament in that remembrance, then I beleeve I doe receive wholly Chriſt, God and Man, myſtically by faith: this is my beliefe.

Chich. Why, then it is no body without faith. Gods word is of no force as you count it.

Wood. My Lord, I have told you my minde without diſſimulation, and more you get not of me, without you will talk with me by the Scriptures: and if you will do ſo, I will begin a new with you, and prove it more plainly three or foure manner of wayes, that you ſhall not ſay nay to that I have ſaid, your ſelfe.

Then they made a great laughing, and ſaid, This is an heretike indeed, it is time he were burned. Which words moved my ſpirit, and I ſaid to them, Iudge not, leſt you be judged. For as you judge me, you ſhall be judged your ſelves. For that you call hereſie, I ſerve God truely with, as you all ſhall well know, when you ſhall be in hel, & have bloud to drink, and ſhall be compelled to ſay for paine, This was the man that we jeſted on, and whoſe talke we thought fooliſhneſſe, and his end to be without honor: but now we may ſee how he is counted among the Saints of GOD, and we are puniſhed. Theſe words ſhal you ſay, being in hell, if you repent not with ſpeed, if you conſent to the ſhedding of my bloud: wherefore looke to it, I give you counſell.

Sap. 5.

Prieſt. What? you be angrie, me thinks. Now I will ſay more to you, then I thought to have done. You were at Barill a twelvemoneth agone, and ſent for the Parſon and talked with him in the Churchyard, and would not goe into the Church: for you ſaid, it was the Idols Temple. Yea I was with mine old Lord, when he came to the Kings Bench to you, and you ſaid many ſtout words to him.

Woodman. That I ſaid, I ſaid: and where you ſaid I was angry, I take GOD to my record, I am not, but am zealous in the truth, and ſpeake out of the ſpirit of GOD with cheerfulneſſe.

The zeale of Gods ſpirit in R. Woodman.

Prieſt. The ſpirit of God? hough, hough, hough? think you that you have the ſpirit of God?

Woodman. I beleeve ſurely that I have the ſpirit of GOD, I praiſe God therefore: and you bee deceivers, mockers, and ſcorners before GOD, and be the children of hell, all the ſort of you, as farre as I can ſee. And therewith came in Doctor Storie, pointing at me with his finger, ſpeaking to the Biſhop in Latine, ſaying at the length.

Story. I can ſay nothing to him, but he is an heretike. I have heard you talke this houre and a halfe, and can heare no reaſonableneſſe in him.

Doctor Story cometh in.

Wood. Iudge not, leſt you be judged: for as you judge, you ſhall be judged your ſelfe.

Story. What, be you a preaching? you ſhall preach at a ſtake ſhortly with your fellowes. My Lord, trouble your ſelfe no more with him.

With theſe words, one brought word that the Abbot of Weſtminſter was come to dine with the Biſhop, and many other Gentlemen and women. Then there was ruſhing away with ſpeede to meete him. Then ſaid Doctor Storie to my Keeper:

Story. Carrie him to the Marſhalſee again, and let him keepe cloſe, and let no body come to ſpeak with him.

Doctor Story commandeth R. Woodman againe to the Marſhalſee.

Wood. And ſo they departed. Then one of the Prieſts beganne to flatter with me, and ſaid, For Gods ſake remember your ſelfe. God hath given you a good wit: you have read the ſcriptures well, and have borne them well in memorie. It were great pitie you ſhould do amiſſe.

Wood. What a flatterer be you, to ſay my wit is good, and that I have read the Scriptures well? and but even now you ſaid I was an heretike and deſpiſed me. If I be an heretike, I can have no good wit as you have confeſſed. But I thinke your owne conſcience doth accuſe you. God give you grace to repent, if it be his will.

Prieſt. I call it a good wit, becauſe you are expert in all queſtions.

Wood. You may call it a wicked wit, if it agree not with Gods word. Then one cried, Away, away, here come ſtrangers. So we departed, and I came againe to the Marſhalſee with my Keeper.

The third examination of Richard Woodman (copied with his owne hand) before Doctor Langdale, Parſon of Buxted in Suſſex, and Chaplaine to my Lord Moutague, and M. Iames Gage, at my Lord Mountagues houſe, beſides S. Marie Overies in Southwark, the 12. day of May, Anno 1557.

The twelfth day of May the Marſhall came to the Marſhalſee, and ſent for me to ſpeak with him. When I came before him, and had done my dutie, he asked my name, and what Countreyman I was, I ſhewed him both. Then he asked me when I was abroad in the Citie. To whom I anſwered, if it ſhall pleaſe your Maſterſhip, I was abroad in the Citie on Munday was ſevennight.

The third examination of R. Woodman, before D. Langdale, and M. Iames Gage, May 12.

Marſhall. What made you abroad?

Wood. The Biſhop of Chicheſter ſent for me to talke with me at home at his houſe beſide St. Nicholas Shambles.

Marſh. Were you abroad no otherwiſe then ſo?

Wood. No forſooth: I was never abroad ſince I was ſent hither, but then. For I have nothing to doe abroad, unleſſe they ſend for me.

Falſe lies and lewd reports.

Marſh. This is a marvellous matter. I promiſe you I was not ſo rebuked theſe ſeven yeeres, as I was for you within theſe three dayes. It is reported that you were abroad in the citie at certain Tavernes, and ſpake ſeditious words both in the Tavernes and ſtreets as you went.

Wood. Sir, the truth is, I was in never a houſe or Taverne, whiles I was abroad, but in the Biſhops houſe, as my Keeper can, and will (I am ſure) teſtifie: nor did I ever talke with any man in the ſtreets as I came, but with my Keeper, ſaving with one man indeed, of the Pariſh of Framfield in Suſſex, where M. James Gage dwelleth. His name is Robert Smith, being one of my moſt enemies; who ſtood in a waine as we came by, and was unlading of Cheeſe (me thought) but a little way from the Marſhalſee. Indeed I bade him God ſpeed, and asked him how he did: and he ſaid, well he thanked me: and he asked me, how I did: and I ſaid, well, I praiſe God; and that was all the talke that we had: and theſe words were ſpoken as I came by him. I promiſe you ſir, I ſtood not ſtill while I ſpake them, as my Keeper can tell: and I thinke theſe words were no ſeditious words, but might be ſpoken well enough (I thinke) or elſe it were very ſtrait.

Woodman warned to appeare.

Marſh. Then is it to be thought, that that man reported otherwiſe then it was. I am glad it is as you ſay. Well, make you ready: for you muſt go forth ſtraightway, where you ſhall be examined of that and of other things, where you ſhall anſwer for your ſelfe. Go make haſte, for I will tarry till you be ready.

Woodman taketh his leave of his fellowes.

Wood. So I departed from him, and went to my priſon fellowes, and tooke my leave of them, deſiring them to pray for me, for I thought verily to come no more to them. For I ſuppoſed I ſhould have gone before the Councell, becauſe the Marſhall ſaid, he would tarry for me himſelfe: and eſpecially becauſe he ſaid, it was reported that I had ſpoken ſeditious words, it made me thinke it is poſſible that there may be ſome falſe things imagined upon me, to bring me to my end. I remember what Chriſt ſaid, The ſervant is not above his Lord. Seeing the Jewes brought falſe witneſſe againſt Chriſt, I thought they would doe much more, or at the leaſt doe ſo to me, if God would ſuffer them, which made me caſt the worſt. But I was, and am ſure (I praiſe my Lord God) that all the world is not able to accuſe me juſtly of any ſuch thing. Which thing conſidered, made me merry and joyfull: and I was ſurely certified, that they could do no more againſt me, then God would give them leave. And ſo I bade my priſon fellowes farewell, and went into the Porters lodge to the Marſhall, and he delivered me to one of his own men, and to one of my Lord Mountagues men, & bade me go with them: and they carried me to my L. Mountagues place in Southwark, not farre from S. Mary Overies, and brought me into a chamber in my L. Mountagues houſe; and there was one D. Langdale, Chaplaine to my Lord. My Keepers ſaid to the Doctor, This is the man that we went for.

Woodman delivered to one of the Lord Mountagues men.

Lang. Is your name Woodman?

Wood. Yea forſooth, that is my name.

Lang. Then he beganne with a great circumſtance, and ſaid, I am ſorry for you, that you wil not be ruled, but ſtand ſo much in your owne conceit, diſpleaſing your father & other, judging that al the realme doth evill, ſave a few that doe as you doe: with many ſuch words, which be too long to rehearſe; but I will declare the ſubſtance of them.

Lang. What thinke you of them that died long agone, your Grandfather, with their Fathers before them? You judge them to be damned, and all other that uſe the ſame that they did, throwout all Chriſtendome, unleſſe it be in Germany and here in England a few yeers, and in Denmarke; and yet they are returned againe. Thus we are ſure this is the truth, and I would you ſhould do well. Your father is an honeſt man, and one of my Pariſh, and hath wept to me divers times, becauſe you would not be ruled: and he loveth you well, and ſo doth all the countrey, both rich and poore, if it were not for thoſe evill opinions that you hold, with many ſuch like tales of Robin Hood.

Religion eſteemed by anceſtors and grandfathers, and by place.

Wood. I pray you give me leave to ſpeake a few words to you.

Lang. Yes, ſay your minde.

Wood. You have told a great tale and a long, as it were againſt me (as you think) ſaying, I hold this and that; I judge my Father and my Grandfather, and almoſt all the world, without it be a few that be of our ſect. But I judge no man. But the 12. of John declareth, who it is that judgeth, and ſhall judge in the laſt day. The father ſhall not beare the ſonnes offences, nor the ſon the fathers offences: but that ſoule that ſinneth ſhall die, as ſaith the Prophet. And againe, we may not follow a multitude to doe evill, as ſaith the Prophet: For the moſt go the wrong way. And Chriſt ſaith in the 12. of Luke, that his flock is a little flock. Here be places enow to diſcharge me, although I doe not as the moſt doe. But can any man ſay that I do not as I ought to doe: where be my accuſers?

Multitude not to be followed in doing evill.

To do as moſt men do, and to doe as a man ought to do, are two things.

Lang. What, you be full of Scripture me think, and call for your accuſers, as though you were afraid to utter your mind to me. But I would have you not be affraide to talke with me. For I mean no more hurt to you, then I do to my ſelfe, I take God to my record.

Wood. I cannot tell, It is hard truſting of faire words. When a man cannot truſt his father nor brother, nor other that have beene his familiar friends, but they deceive him, a man may lawfully follow the example of Chriſt towards them that he never ſaw before, ſaying, Be as wiſe as ſerpents, and as innocent as Doves. Beware of men, for they go about to betray you. And it maketh me to ſuſpect you much, becauſe you blame me for anſwering with the Scriptures. It maketh me to doubt that you would take vantage of me, if I ſhould ſpeake mine owne words. Wherefore I will take as good heed as I can, becauſe I have beene deceived already by them I truſted moſt. Wherefore blame me not though I anſwer circumſpectly. It ſhall not be ſaid by Gods help, that I will run wilfully into mine enemies hands, and yet I praiſe God, my life is not deare to my ſelfe, but it is deare with God: Wherefore I will doe the uttermoſt that I can to keep it.

Hard truſting any man in this world.

Woodman blamed for anſwering with Scriptures.

Lang. You be affraide where no feare is, for I was deſired of Maſter Sheriffe and his brother, and of other of your friends, to talke with you, and they told me that you were deſirous to talke with me, and now ye make the matter as though you had nothing to doe with me, and as though you were ſent to priſon for nothing: for you call for your accuſers, as though there were no man to accuſe you. But if there were no man to accuſe you, your owne hand writing did accuſe you enough, that you ſet upon the Church doore (if you be remembred) and other letters that you let fall abroad, ſome at one place and ſome at another. Wherefore you need not to call for your accuſers. Your own hand will accuſe you enough.

D. Langdales talke with R. Woodman, upon what occaſion, and by whoſe procurement.

Woodman charged with his owne hand writing.

I

Q. MARIE. Anno 1557.

I warrant you; it is kept ſafe enough. I would not for two hundred pound there were ſo much againſt me.

Wood. I will not deny mine owne hand, by Gods helpe. For it cannot be lightly counterfaited. I doe not denie but I wrote a letter to the Prieſt and other of the Pariſh, declaring to them their folly and preſumption, to come into my houſe without my love or leave, and fet out my childe, and uſe it at their pleaſures. Which moved me to write my minde to them: and becauſe I could not tell how to convey it to them, I ſet it on the Church doore. Which letter my Lord of Chicheſter hath: for he ſhewed it me when I was before him: wherein is contained nothing but the very Scriptures, to their reproach. Let it be laid before me when you or he will; I will anſwer to it by the helpe of God, to all their ſhames that I wrote it to. And as for any other letters, I wrote none, as you ſay I did, neither had I wrote that, if they had done like honeſt neighbours. Wherefore if they be offended with me for that, I will anſwer them with Chriſts words, in the 18. of Matthew, Woe unto themſelves, becauſe they gave me the occaſion.

R. Woodmans writing ſet upon the Church doore, upon what occaſion.

And whereas you ſaid, I was deſirous to ſpeake with you, and that Maſter Sheriffe and his brother, and other of my friends willed you to talke with me, and that I fare now as though I had nothing to doe with you, and as though I were ſent to priſon for nothing: the truth is, I know no more wherefore I am ſent to priſon, then the leaſt childe in this towne knoweth. And as for me, I deſired not Maſter Sheriffe to ſpeake with you: but indeed he deſired me that I would ſpeake with you, and utter my faith to you. For he ſuppoſed that I did not beleeve well, and he reported you to be learned. But I refuſed to talke with you at the firſt. For I remembred not that you were the Parſon of Burted: wherefore I ſaid to him, I would not utter my faith to any but to the Biſhop. I ſaid, he is mine Ordinarie: wherefore I appeale unto him. I am commanded by Saint Peter in the firſt Epiſtle the third chapter, to render account of my hope that I have in God, to him that hath authoritie: wherefore I will talke with none in that matter, but with him. Wherefore ſend me to him, if you will, or elſe there ſhall no man know my faith I tell you plainly.

Woodman required of M. Sheriffe and other his friends to talke with D. Langdale. D. Landale Parſon of Burſted, where Woodmans father dwelt.

Woodmans friends deſirous to heare him and Doctor Langdale talke together.

These words then made the Sheriffe angrie, and he went his way: and when he was gone from me, I remembred that it was you that he would have me to talke with, and then I remembred that I had made a promiſe to my father and goodman Day of Weſtfield, not paſt a fortnight before I was taken, that whenſoever you came into the Countrey, I would ſpeak with you by Gods helpe, becauſe they praiſed you ſo much, that ye were learned, and they would faine heare us talke.

So all these things called to remembrance, I deſired my Keeper, which was the Sheriffes man, to ſhew his Maſter, that I would faine ſpeake with him: for I had remembred things that were not in my minde before, when I ſpake to him. So he went to his Maſter, and ſhewed him the matter, and he came to me; and then I told him my minde, and what promiſe I had made: and he ſaid, he would ſend for you on the morrow, as he did, and the meſſenger brought word you could not come; you preached before the Queene, he ſaid. Whereupon the Sheriffe came up himſelfe, and ſpake to the Biſhop that he ſhould come downe, but he was ſicke. So when he came home againe, he ſent me to the Biſhop, and I have talked with him twice alreadie, and I am ſure he can finde no fault in me, if he ſay juſtly: and yet I know not wherefore I was ſent to priſon. For I was not guiltie of that which was laid to my charge, that I had baptized children, the which I never did, as God knoweth: wherefore I had wrong to be thus handled.

This Biſhop was D. Chriſtopherſon. Woodman ſent to priſon, not knowing wherefore.

D. Lang. Indeed it hath beene reported, that you have chriſtened children, and that you chriſtened your owne childe: but ſince I heard ſay, you would not have the childe chriſtened, which is a damnable way, if you denie Baptiſme: and they ſaid, your childe was not chriſtened in a fortnight or three weekes after it was borne, and the chiefeſt of the Pariſh were faine to fetch it out of your houſe againſt your will. Wherefore you wrote railing words againſt the Prieſt and them for their good will: the which declareth that you allow not baptizing of children. And if the childe had died, it had been damned, becauſe it was not chriſtened, and you ſhould have been damned, becauſe you were the let thereof.

R. Woodman falſly ſlandered for denying baptizing of children.

Wood. What abominable lies have you told? Be you not aſhamed to ſpeake ſuch words as you have done? Firſt you ſay, I chriſtened mine owne childe, and by and by you ſaid, I denied baptizing of children, and that my childe was a fortnight or three weekes old ere it was baptized. What abominable lies be theſe? I neither baptized my child my ſelfe, neither held againſt the baptizing of it, but did moſt gladly allow it: for it was baptized as ſoone as it was borne, and I was glad thereof; therefore you be to blame to report ſo of me.

Lang. I pray you, who baptized it? ſome unthrift of your providing.

Wood. Nay ſurely, the Midwife baptized it.

Lan. But it was your minde that it ſhould be ſo.

Wood. Nay ſure, I was not nigh home by almoſt 20. miles, nor heard that my wife was brought to bed foure dayes after the childe was chriſtened. But it was not like to live: and therefore the Midwife baptized it.

Woodmans childe baptized by the midwife. Woodman falſly belied. D. Langdale too curious an Inquiſitor.

Lang. Would you have had it to Church to have been chriſtened, if it had not been chriſtened?

Wood. That is no matter what I would have done. I am ſure you cannot deny but it is ſufficiently done, if the Midwife doe it, and I hold not againſt the doing of it, neither did I it my ſelfe, as you ſaid I did.

Lang. Wherfore were you diſpleaſed with them that fet it to Church?

Wood. Firſt tell me whether the childe were not truely baptized by the Midwife?

Lang. Yes, it was truely baptized, if ſhe baptized it in the name of the Father, and of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghoſt.

Wood. Yes, that I am ſure ſhe did, and you grant that was ſufficient: and the cauſe that I blamed them for, was becauſe they did more to it then need was, by your owne ſaying. Yea, they fet it out of my houſe without my leave: the which was not well done.

Woodman troubled without juſt cauſe.

Lang. They had it to Church to confirme that was done.

Wood. Yea, but that was more then needs. But God forgive them, if it be his will. But let that matter paſſe. But I would you ſhould not ſay, that I hold againſt baptizing of children: for I do not, I take God to record; but do allow it to be moſt neceſſarie, if it be truely uſed. But me thought you ſpake words even now that were uncomely to be ſpoken; if a childe die, and be not baptized, it is damned. How think you? be all damned that receive not the outward ſigne of baptiſme?

Lang. Yea, that they be.

Wood. How prove you that?

Lang. Go ſaith Chriſt, and baptize in the name of the Father, and of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghoſt, and he that beleeveth, and is baptized,

All children be damned by D. Langdale, which die without baptiſme.

ſhall be ſaved: and he that beleeveth not ſhall be damned. Theſe be the words of Chriſt, which are my warrant.

Wood. Then by your ſaying, baptiſme bringeth faith, and all that be baptized in the water ſhall be ſaved: ſhall they? how ſay you?

All children being baptized by D. Langdale ſhall be ſaved.

Lang. Yea, that they ſhall: if they die before they come to diſcretion, they ſhall be ſaved every one of them; and all that be not baptized ſhall be damned every one of them.

Wood. Then my ſpirit was moved with him to reprove him ſharply, becauſe I had manifeſt Scriptures freſh in my minde againſt his ſaying. Then ſaid I:

R. Woodman chargeth D. Langdale with ignorance in the Scriptures.

O Lord God how dare you ſpeake ſuch blaſphemie againſt God and his Word, as you doe? how dare you for your life take upon you to preach, and teach the people, and underſtand not what you ſay? For I proteſt before GOD you underſtand not the Scriptures, but as far as naturall reaſon can comprehend. For if you did, you would be aſhamed to ſpeake as you doe.

Lang. Wherein have I ſpoken amiſſe? take heed, you have a toy in your head will make you deſpair: I dare ſay you cannot tell what your ſay. Wherefore reprove you me as you doe?

Wood. Becauſe you blaſpheme God: and as for deſpairing, take heede to your ſelfe. For I cannot ſee but you be out of your wit alreadie: and as for me, I praiſe God, I can tell what I ſay, and what you have ſaid: the which ſhall turne to your ſhame, if you will talke by the Scriptures with me.

So, when he perceived that I ſpake earneſtly and challenged him to talk by the word, his colour began to change, and his fleſh began to tremble and quake. And I ſaid:

Prove your ſayings true, if you can: for I will prove them falſe by Gods helpe. You ſaid, All children, or other that be not baptized with water, ſhall be damned. I dare not ſay ſo for all the good in the world. And you brought in the ſaying of Chriſt for your warrant. In the 16. of Marke it is written, Whoſo beleeveth, and is baptized, ſhall be ſaved: which words be very true: and whoſo beleeveth not, ſhall be damned. Which words be very true alſo. He ſaith, He that beleveth not, ſhall be damned. Yea, Saint John ſaith, He that beleeveth not, is condemned already, becauſe he beleeveth not. But neither of theſe two Scriptures, nor any other Scripture in all the New Teſtament ſaith, That he that is not baptized ſhall be damned, or is damned already. But if he beleeve not, he ſhall be damned, and is damned already, as is aforeſaid. Then he would have interrupted me, and would have laid to my charge, that I was an Anabaptiſt. But I would give him no place to ſpeake, but ſaid:

Let me make an end, and then ſay what you can. You ſhall have as much to doe, by Gods help, with this matter, as ever you had to anſwer thing in your life. You know (I am ſure) it is no manners to pluck a tale out of a mans mouth, nor is it the order of reaſoning, as you know that better then I can tel you. Then D. Langdale bade me ſay on.

Faith, not baptiſme ſaveth. Not lack of baptiſme, but lack of faith condemneth.

Woodman. My ſaying was, that they that beleeve not ſhall be damned, and be damned alreadie. But I dare not ſay for all the goods under heaven, that all they that receive no materiall baptiſme by the water ſhall be damned, as you have ſaid: yet I would you ſhould not gather of theſe words, that I denie baptiſme, as you were about to lay to my charge, ere ever I had halfe told out my tale. But I would not have you, nor any man ſo raſh in judgement, to condemne the thing that they are not able to prove by the word, and to make it ſeeme to the ſimple, that the outward waſhing of the water were the cauſe of faith.

Lang. Why, is it not ſo? will you denie it? How ſay you? Will you denie it? I ſay, the childe hath no faith before it is baptized: and therefore the baptizing bringeth the faith. How ſay you to it? Make me a plaine anſwer to this queſtion.

Baptizing of water is not the cauſe of faith. The catholikes do hold the contrary.

Woodman. Now I perceive you goe about nothing elſe, but to take vantage of my words. But by Gods helpe, I will anſwer you ſo, that you ſhall well ſee your ſayings untrue. And yet I will not ſpeake mine owne words, but the words of the holy Ghoſt, out of the mouth of the Prophets and Apoſtles: and then aske them whether they will deny it.

A catholike paradox.

You ſaid, that faith cometh by baptiſme, had by the uſe of materiall water. I muſt be ſo bold to aske you where Jacob was baptized before he had faith. Saint Paul ſaith in the ninth Chapter to the Romanes, Ere ever the children were borne, ere ever they had done either good or bad, that the purpoſe of God, which is by election, might ſtand, not by the reaſon of workes, but by the grace of the caller, the elder ſhall ſerve the younger. Iacob have I loved, and Eſau I hated. How thinke you, had this childe faith or ever he were borne, or no? anſwer to this if you can.

The purpoſe of Gods election ſtandeth by grace, and not by reaſon of works.

Lang. What, you ſpeake of the old law. Jacob was not chriſtened, but circumciſed. I ſpeake of baptiſme, and you are gone from baptizing to the time of circumciſion: anſwer me to the baptizing. And me think by your talk, you denie originall ſin, and free will, by the words that you brought in of Saint Paul.

D. Langdales argument. Children dying without baptiſme may be ſaved. Ergo, Children have no originall ſinne.

For if children can be ſaved without baptiſme, then it muſt needs follow, that children have no originall ſinne, the which is put away in the baptizing. But I thinke you know not what originall ſinne is, nor free will neither, me thinke by your talke.

Wood. Yes, I praiſe God I think) I can tell them all better then you can, me think even by your words. Firſt I pray you what Free will hath man to do good of himſelfe? tell me this firſt, and then I will anſwer to all other your queſtions that you have objected againſt me.

Abſurd doctrine.

Lang. I ſay, that all men have as much Free will now, as Adam had before his fall.

Wood. I pray you how prove you that?

Lang. Thus I prove it, that as ſin entred into the world, and by the meanes of one that ſinned all men became ſinners, the which was by Adam: ſo by the obedience of one man, righteouſneſſe came upon all men that had ſinned, and ſet them as free as they were before their fall, the which was by Jeſus Chriſt, Rom. 5.

Anſwer. The righteouſneſſe by Jeſus Chriſt cometh upon all men, not in taking away imperfections of nature, but in not imputing the imperfections of man to damnation.

Woodman. Oh Lord, what an overthrow have you given your ſelfe here in originall ſinne, and yet cannot ſee it. For in proving that we have Free will, you have denied quite originall ſinne. For here you have declared that we be ſet as free by the death of Chriſt, as Adam was before his fall, and I am ſure Adam had no originall ſinne before his fall. If we be as free now as he was then, I marvell wherefore Paul complained thrice to God, to take away the ſting of it, God making him anſwer, and ſaying, My grace is ſufficient for thee.

Originall ſin.

We are made free by the death of Chriſt not from falling, but from damnation due by the law for our falling.

Theſe words with divers other, prove originall ſinne in us; but not that it ſhall hurt Gods elect people, but that his grace is ſufficient for all his. But you ſay in one place, it is not without baptiſme; and in another place, you put it away quite by the death of Chriſt; and in very deede you have ſpoken truer in the matter then you are aware of. For all that beleeve in Chriſt, are baptized in the blood of Chriſt that he ſhed on the croſſe, and in the water that he ſwet for paine, and putting away of our ſinnes at his death. And yet I ſay with David in the 51. Pſal. In ſinne was I borne, and in ſinne hath my mother conceived me: but in no ſuch ſinne that ſhall be imputed, becauſe I am borne of God by faith, as Saint Iohn ſaith, Iohn 3. Therefore I am bleſſed, as ſaith the Prophet, Pſal. 23. Becauſe the Lord imputeth not my ſinne, and not becauſe I have no ſinne; but becauſe God hath not imputed my ſinnes. Not of our owne deſerving, but of his free mercie he hath ſaved us. Where is now your Free will become that you ſpake of? If we have free will, then our ſalvation cometh of our owne ſelfe, and not of GOD; the which is a great blaſphemie againſt GOD and his word.

Perfect doctrine.

For S. Iames ſaith, Iames 1. Every good gift and every perfect gift cometh from above, from the father of light, with whom is no variableneſſe, neither is he changed into darkneſſe. Of his owne will he begat us. For the winde bloweth where it liſteth, and we heare the ſound thereof, as ſaith Saint Iohn, Iohn 3. but we cannot tell from whence it cometh, neither whither it goeth: Even ſo is it with every one that is borne of God. For Saint Paul ſaith, Phil. 2. It is God that worketh in us the will, and alſo the deed, even of good will. Seeing then that every good and perfect gift cometh from above and lighteth upon whom it pleaſeth God, and that he worketh in us both the will and the deed; me thinke all the reſt of our owne will is little worth, or nought at all, unleſſe it be to wickedneſſe. So me think here be places enow to prove that a man hath no free will to doe good of himſelfe; with a hundred places moe that I could recite, if time did ſerve. And as for originall ſinne, I think I have declared my minde therein, how it remaineth in man; which you cannot deny, unleſſe you denie the word of God. Now, if you will ſuffer me, I will prove my ſaying of Iacob and Eſau, that I brought in to prove that faith was before baptiſme, and you refuſed it, becauſe (you ſaid) Iacob was not baptized. If you will give me leave, you ſhall ſee what I can ſay therein: for me think you think my talk long. This I ſaid, becauſe I ſaw he was ſore offended at my ſayings.

Adams free will nothing. Faith was before baptiſme.

Lang. Say what you can. For it availeth me to ſay nothing to you. For I was deſired to ſend for you, to teach you, and there will no words of mine take place in you: but you go about to reprove me. Say what you will, for me.

D. Langdale ſeemeth to be put to ſilence.

Wood. I take not upon me to teach you, but to anſwer to ſuch things as you lay unto my charge: and I ſpeake not mine owne minde, but the minde of the holy Ghoſt, written by the Prophets and Apoſtles. Wil you give me leave to anſwer briefly in that matter, that you may report to other what I hold? And he ſaid, he was contented. But I thinke it was for nothing but to have caught vantage of my words.

Wood. Firſt, if you be remembred, you ſaid, that if my childe had died without baptiſme, if I had been the cauſe that it had not been baptized, the childe ſhould have been damned, and I too. How ſay you?

Children dying without baptiſme, are not therefore damned, ſpeaking abſolutely.

Lang. Yea that you ſhould.

Wood. That is moſt untrue. For the Prophet ſaith, The father ſhall not beare the childes offences, nor the childe the fathers offences: but the ſoule that ſinneth ſhall die. What could the childe have done withall, if it had died without baptiſme? the childe could not doe withall. How ſay you unto this? And I am ſure, that which I brought in, in the old law, to prove that faith is before baptiſme, is not diſagreeable unto the word. For circumciſion was a figure of baptiſme. And that I may bring to prove baptiſme by, as well as Saint Peter did: for he brought in Noahs floud, which was a long time before Iacob and Eſau, to prove baptiſme, ſaying, While the Arke was a preparing, wherein few (that is to ſay) eight ſoules were ſaved by water, like as Baptiſme alſo now ſaveth us, not in putting away of the filth of the fleſh, but there is a good conſcience conſenting to God.

Children beare not the offences of their fathers.

1 Pet. 3.

Gen. 6.

Here Peter proveth, that water had not ſaved Noe and the other ſeven, no more then it ſaved all the reſt, if it had not beene for their faith, which faith now ſaveth us; not in putting away of the filthie ſoile of the fleſh, by the waſhing of the water, but by a good conſcience conſenting unto God.

But you ſaid, If they be baptized with the water, if they die before they come to the yeeres of diſcretion, they be all ſaved: the which S. Peter is cleane againſt, unleſſe you grant that children have faith before they be baptized.

Now I aske you what conſent of conſcience the children have, being infants. For you ſay, they beleeve not before they be baptized: Ergo, then they conſent not to be baptized, becauſe they beleeve not. And by this it followeth, that none ſhall be ſaved, although they be baptized. I would faine ſee how you can anſwer this.

Lang. You are the moſt perverſe man that ever I knew. You wot not what you ſay. The children are baptized in their “Godfathers and Godmothers faith, and that is the good conſcience that Saint Peter ſpeaketh of: and the chriſtening is the keeping of the Law, that St. Paul ſpeaketh of, ſaying, neither is circumciſion, any thing worth, nor uncircumciſion any thing worth, but keeping of the law is all together. Like as the circumciſion was the keeping of the old law, ſo is baptiſme the keeping of the new law.

“ May rather in the faith of their parents. Neither is it the faith of the godfathers and godmothers that ſanctifieth the childe, but their diligence may helpe him in ſeeing him catechiſed.

Wood. Ah, me thought if you would talke with me, you ſhould be faine to bring in the old Law to maintaine your ſayings by (for all that you refuſed it) when I brought it in. But yet it ſerveth not for your purpoſe, ſo much as you thinke for. For here you have confeſſed, that neither circumciſion availeth, nor uncircumciſion; the which you your ſelfe have coupled with baptiſme, proving that none of them both prevaileth, but keeping of the Law is all together: the which Law is kept (you ſay) by the outward ſignes; the which is nothing ſo: for Abraham beleeved GOD, and that was counted to him for righteouſneſſe, and this was before he was circumciſed. So the children beleeve before they be either circumciſed or baptized, according to my firſt ſaying of Iacob and Eſau, Iacob I loved, but Eſau I hated. These words declare, that Iacob had faith in his mothers wombe. And Iohn Baptiſt was ſanctified in his mothers wombe, and therefore it was counted to them for righteouſneſſe: and I am ſure, if they had died before they had either received Circumciſion or Baptiſme as concerning the outward deed, they ſhould have beene ſaved. For Gods gifts and callings are ſuch, that he cannot repent him of them. But by your ſaying he doth both repent and change. For you ſay, keeping of the outward Law is all together. But a bad excuſe is as good as none at all. And where you ſaid, the children be baptized in their Godfathers and Godmothers faith, they being all unbeleevers, in what faith is that childe baptized then? in none at all, by your owne ſaying. Which words made him ſtampe and ſtare.

Lang. What? then you would count that there were very few beleevers, if there be not one of three that beleeveth. You enter into judgement againſt the people. Belike you thinke there be none that beleeve well, vnleſſe they be of your minde. Indeed then Chriſts flock were a very little flock.

Wood. Indeede theſe be Chriſts words in the twelfth of Luke, the which we may ſee to be verie true. Yea, you ſaid, if there were not one amongſt three, that were very few. But there is not one amongſt three hundreth, for any thing that I can ſee. For if there were, there would not be ſo many that would ſeek their neighbours goods and lives as there be.

Lang. Is the flocke of Chriſt ſuch a little flocke as you ſpeake of? You may call it a great flocke. How many be there of them, can you tell me?

Wood. A pretty queſtion, I promiſe you, it is that you aske me: as though I did make my ſelfe equall with God.

No, no, you ſhall catch no ſuch vantage of my words, nor do I know how many there be. But I will tell you as nigh as I can. For therefore you look. I am ſure, that I ſhould enter into judgement.

Lang. Yea, I pray you tell me as much as you can, ſeeing you be ſo cunning.

Gods election ſtandeth not by the moſt part, but by the feweſt.

Wood. You ſhall ſee my judgement in it by and by. Firſt the Prophet ſaith, Follow not a multitude to do evill, for they muſt go the wrong way. For the moſt go the wrong way. There is one point to know them.

Then Chriſt ſaith in the ſeventh of Matthew, Broad is the way, and wide is the gate that leadeth into deſtruction, and many there be that go in thereat: and ſtrait is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that finde it. And in the twelfth of Luke, it is written (which words were ſpoken of Chriſt) Come you little flocke, it is my Fathers will to give you a Kingdome. The third point is this, in the third of Marke and ſecond of Matthew, You (ſaith Chriſt) ſhall know the tree by the fruits. A good tree bringeth forth good fruits, and a bad tree bringeth forth bad fruits: So by fruits I know them. For every tree that bringeth not forth good fruits, muſt be hewen downe, and caſt into the fire (into hell I thinke Chriſt meant) and your fruits declare that you be one of them. Thus have I proved foure waies, that the people that ſhall be ſaved is but a ſmall company in compariſon of the reſt. But if that be not enough, for the proofe thereof, I have twenty waies more to prove it by, and you were never the neare of your purpoſe.

4. Arguments prouing Chriſts flock to be a ſmall number.

Lang. What a naughtie man are you? you would make the patienteſt man in the world angrie with you. I think your talke is nothing but pride and vain glory, with frumps, and mocks, and deſpiſing and judging of men. It was time ſuch a fellow were taken indeed. Such a one is enough to trouble a whole Countrey. I thinke he is bleſt of God that took you: for you are not meet to be in a common wealth.

D. Langdale raileth againſt Woodman without cauſe.

Wood. With divers other ſuch like words that I cannot recite, they came out ſo thicke, with ſtamping and ſtaring and chafing, as though he had beene out of his wit. I held my peace, untill he had made an end of his tormentors talke, and then I ſpake.

Wherein have I ſaid amiſſe? or have I not anſwered you unto every queſtion that you have demanded of me? What fault can you finde in one word that I have ſaid? I dare ſay you can finde none. I marvell why you take on thus againſt me, having no cauſe ſo to doe.

Lang. No, no, you have not anſwered me to originall ſin, you denie originall ſin.

Wood. With theſe words came in at the doore M. James Gage: and I thinke he ſtood at the doore a good while before he came in, and that D. Langdale ſaw him: for his face was to the doore-ward, and my face was from it.

M. Iam. Gage entreth talke with Woodman.

Gage. Ah Woodman, me think M. Doctor and you cannot agree.

Wood. Yes ſir, me think we agree very well.

Lang. Without doubt ſir, he is the naughtieſt man that ever I talked withall in all my life: for he will have his own way in all things.

Gage. Woodman leave that pride. Doe not truſt too much to your own wit. Hearken to this man, this is a learned man, I tell you. He is known to be learned. For elſe he ſhould not be allowed to preach before the Queens Majeſtie: and I dare ſay, he will tell thee nothing, nor will thee to doe any thing, but that he will doe himſelfe: and I dare ſay, he will not go to the Devill to bring thee thither. How ſay you Maſter Doctor? Thou mighteſt think us mad, if we would hurt our ſelves to hurt thee. No I promiſe thee, my brother, neither I, nor any Gentleman in the Countrey, I think of my conſcience, but would thou ſhouldeſt do as well as their owne bodies and ſoules, as a great many of them have ſaid to thy face whilſt thou waſt at my brothers, the which thou canſt not deny.

Wood. Sir, I can ſay none otherwiſe but I was gently intreated at your brothers, both with meate and drinke and gentle words, both of you and him, and divers other Gentlemen: and I am ſure neither you nor they can ſay, that you found me unreaſonable at any time. For I ſaid, I was contented to learn of them that were able to teach me, and ſo I am, as God knoweth: and here M. Doctor (I think) can ſay no otherwiſe; for I dare ſay he can finde no fault in the talke that we have had.

Lang. No marie, I can finde nothing elſe in you. I promiſe you M. Gage, if you had been here, you would have ſaid ſo your ſelfe, He took me up indeed, and ſaid, he marvelled how I durſt preach. For he ſaid, I underſtood not the Scripture, but as farre as naturall reaſon comprehended: as though he underſtood all, and I nothing. With divers other ſuch like words he made a great complaint to him on me, and ſaid to Maſter James Gage, he would make you beleeve that I could finde no fault in him. Yes iwis: he denieth originall ſinne.

D. Langdale complaineth to M. Gage of Woodman cauſeleſſe. Woodman falſely belied.

Gage. Yea? doth he ſo? by St. Mary that is a great matter: Woodman, leave that pride. That pride will come to naught. Can ye live without ſinne?

Wood. Sir, now I perceive he will ſoone lie on me behinde my back, when he will not ſtick to lie before my face.

He ſaith, I denied originall ſinne; and it was he himſelfe, as I will let you be judge in the matter. For as he went about to prove, that man hath free will, he ſaid, we were ſet as free by the death of Chriſt, as Adam was before his fall: which words prove plainly, that we have no originall ſinne: And I took him withall, and ſaid, Had Adam originall ſinne before his fall? and then he could not tell what to ſay, but cavilled with words, and ſaid he meant not ſo: and therefore I marvell he is not aſhamed to make ſuch lies to my face. Theſe words made them both aſtonied.

D. Langdale denieth originall ſin, yet accuſeth Woodman of the which he is culpable himſelfe.

Gage. M. Doctor, he ſaid even now you could finde no fault in all his talke. I will bid you aske him a queſtion, and I will warrant you, you ſhall finde fault enough. I pray you aske him, how he beleeveth in the Sacrament of the Altar.

I think he will make but a bad account thereof.

Wood. Yes, I will make account good enough of that, by Gods help.

Lang. Well, how ſay you to the ſacrament of the altar?

Wood. I ſay, I know no ſuch ſacrament, unleſſe Chriſt be the altar that you mean.

Gage. Lo, I told you, you ſhould ſoon finde fault in him, if you came to that point with him. You ſhould have begun with that firſt, and never have talked with him about other things. What? know you not the ſacrament of the altar?

Woodman knoweth no ſacrament of the altar, unleſſe they take Chriſt to be the altar.

Wood. No ſure, I know no ſuch, unleſſe Chriſt be the altar that you mean; for Chriſt is the altar of all goodneſſe. And if you meane Chriſt to be the altar of the ſacrament you ſpeak of, you ſhall ſoone heare my minde and beleefe therein.

Lang. Well, we mean Chriſt to be the altar. Say your minde, and go briefly to work; for I think it almoſt dinner time.

Gage. I pray you go roundly to work, that you may make an end before dinner.

Woodmans judgement of the ſacrament.

Wood. Yes, you ſhall ſoon hear my minde therein, by Gods help. I do beleeve, that whenſoever I come to receive the ſacrament of the body and blood of Jeſus Chriſt, being truly miniſtred according to Chriſts inſtitution, I beleeving that Chriſt was born of the Virgin Marie, and that he was crucified on the Croſſe, and ſhed his blood for the remiſſion of my ſins, and ſo take and eat the Sacrament of bread and wine in that remembrance, that then I do receive wholly Chriſt, God and man, myſtically by faith. This is my beleefe of the Sacrament, the which no man is able to diſprove.

Gage. By S. Mary, I can finde no fault in this. How ſay you maſter Doctor?

D. Langdale ſeeketh a knot in a ruſh.

Lang. Sir, you ſee not ſo much as I do. For he goeth craftily to work, I tell you as I have heard. For though he hath granted that the faithfull receiver receiveth the bodie of Chriſt, God and man, yet he hath not granted, that it is the body of Chriſt before it be received, as you ſhall ſee by and by, I warrant you, by his own words. How ſay you? Is it the body of Chriſt as ſoon as the words be ſpoken by the Prieſt, or not? for theſe words will try him more then all the reſt.

Whether the ſacrament be the body of Chriſt before it be received.

Wood. Doth the Word ſay that it is his bodie before it is received? if it do, I will ſay ſo too.

Gage. Why? then we ſhall agree well enough, if you will be tried by the Word.

Wood. Yes forſooth, that I will; God forbid elſe.

Gage. Why? the Word ſaith it is his bodie before it is eaten.

Wood. Thoſe words would I fain hear; but I am ſure they be not in the Bible.

Lang. No? that you ſhall ſee by and by (maſter Gage, quoth he) and turned to the 22. of Luke, and there he read, When ſupper was done, Chriſt took bread, gave thanks, and brake it, and gave to his diſciples, and ſaid; Take, eat, this is my body: Then they ſpake both at once; Here he ſaith it is his bodie.

Luke 22. Eating goeth before the words of conſecrating.

Wood. Maſter Gage, I do not denie but he called it his body, but not before eating, as I ſaid before. Wherefore I pray you mark the words. Chriſt ſaid, Take, eat: I pray you ſir mark theſe words that he ſaid, Take and eat, and then he ſaid it was his body. So you ſee, eating goeth before. For he ſaid; Eat, this is my body. So according to the verie Word, I do beleeve it is his body. Which words made them both aſtonied.

D. Langdale driven to his ſhifts.

Lang. Why, then by your ſaying, Judas ate not the bodie of Chriſt. How ſay you? Did he not?

Wood. Nay, I aſk you. Did he?

Lang. I aſk you.

Wood. And I aſk you.

Lang. And I aſk you.

Wood. Marie I aſk you. And I bid you anſwer if you dare for your life. For whatſoever you anſwer, unleſſe you ſay as I have ſaid, you will damne your own ſoul. For maſter Gage, I proteſt before God, I would you ſhould do as well as mine own ſoul and bodie; and it lamenteth my heart to ſee how you be deceived with them; they be deceivers all the ſort of them. He cannot anſwer to this, but either he muſt prove Judas to be ſaved, or elſe he muſt prove that it is no bodie before it be received in faith, as you ſhall well perceive, by Gods help, if he dare anſwer the queſtion.

Gage. Yes, I dare ſay he dareth. What? you you need not to threaten him ſo.

Wood. Then let him anſwer if he can.

Then he ſaid he knew what I would ſay to him; therefore he was much in doubt to anſwer the queſtion.

Lang. Maſter Gage, I will tell you in your eare what words he will anſwer me, or ever I ſpeak to him.

Wood. Then he told maſter Gage a tale in his eare, and ſaid:

D. Langdale afraid to anſwer to Rich. Woodman.

Lang. I have told maſter Gage what you will ſay.

Gage. Yea, and I will ſpeak the truth for both parties.

Wood. Well, how ſay you? Did Judas eat the body of Chriſt, or not?

The Catholiques hold that Judas did eat the body of Chriſt.

Lang. Yea, I ſay Judas did eat the body of Chriſt.

Wood. Then it muſt needs follow, that Judas hath everlaſting life. For Chriſt ſaith in the ſixth of John; Whoſo eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternall life, and I will raiſe him up at the laſt day. If Judas did eat Chriſts bodie, I am ſure you cannot denie but that he did both eat his fleſh, and drink his blood, and then is Judas ſaved by Chriſts own words. Therefore now you are compelled to ſay that it was not Chriſts bodie, or elſe that Judas is ſaved.

Argument. Whoſoever eateth the fleſh of Chriſt, hath everlaſting life, Iohn 6. Judas did eat the fleſh of Chriſt: Ergo, Judas hath everlaſting life.

Gage. Surely theſe be the very words that maſter Doctor told me in mine eare, that you would ſay to him.

Wood. Well, let us ſee how well he can avoid this argument.

Lang. Judas is damned, and yet he ate the bodie of Chriſt; but he ate it unworthily: and therefore he is damned.

Wood. Where finde you that Judas did eat the body of Chriſt unworthily?

Lang. They be Saint Pauls words, 1 Cor. chap. 11.

1 Cor. 11.

Saint Pauls words miſalledged by D. Langdale.

Wood. Maſter Gage, I deſire you for Gods ſake marke my words well what I ſay. If Saint Paul ſpeake any ſuch words there, or in any other place, if there be any ſuch words written in all the whole Bible, that ever any man eat the bodie of Chriſt unworthily, then ſay that I am the falſeſt man that ever you heard ſpeake with tongue. But indeed, theſe be the words of Saint Paul, Whoſo eateth of this bread, and drinketh of this cup unworthily, eateth and drinketh his owne damnation, becauſe he maketh no difference of the Lords bodie; that is, becauſe he preſumeth to eate the Sacrament of the Lords bodie without faith, making no difference betwixt the ſacrament and other bread and drinke. And that is Saint Pauls meaning, and not that any man doth or can eate the bodie of Chriſt Making no difference of the Lords body expounded.

Chriſt "unworthily. For whoſoever eateth the bodie of Chriſt, hath everlaſting life, as is aforeſaid in the ſixth of John; with theſe words one came for them to dinner in all haſte.

" Chriſt ſpeaketh of eating his fleſh ſimply, without any determination of unworthines: that is, ſimply whoſoever beleeveth in Chriſt, he ſhall be ſaved, neither is any unworthineſſe in beleeving in Chriſt.

Gage. I am ſorrie, I would fain hear more of this talk, but we ſhall have another day well enough.

Lang. Nay, maſter Gage, I will never talk with him more; for he is the unreaſonableſt man that ever I talked with in all my life.

Wood. Then maſter Gage put off his cap, and deſired him that he would not refuſe to talke with me, and that it might not be grievous to him. For he ſaid, we will ſeek all the means poſſible to make him an honeſt man, and to keep him from burning, if we could. For if my brother and I had not been, he had been burned ere this time. Then there was great curteſie betwixt them.

Lang. Sir, for your ſake, and for my maſter your brothers ſake, and for his fathers ſake, and other of his friends ſakes, that have ſpoken to me many times with weeping tears, I will do the beſt to him that I can; but for no love nor favour that I bear to him, I tell you truth.

Note well the working of this mans charity, to do for a man more at requeſt, then for any compaſſion of the party.

Gage. Woodman, you hear what maſter Doctor ſaith. When will you come again?

Wood. Even when you will ſend for me. For I am a priſoner, and cannot come when I would. Or if I ſhould deſire to come, it will coſt me money, and I have none to give: but if you ſend for me, it ſhall coſt me none.

Gage. Well, I will ſend for you on Friday or Saturday, at the fartheſt; for to morrow I muſt ride forth of town, and I would fain hear your talk.

Wood. Sir, I would be verie glad you ſhould hear our talk alway, and I truſt in GOD you ſhall hear me ſay nothing, but the Word of God ſhall be my warrant. So maſter Gage took his leave, and went his way to his lodging, which was right in my way as I went unto priſon-ward again; and when he came without my Lord Mountagues gates, there we met with one Hood of Burſted, a Smith. Then ſaid maſter Gage:

Gage. Woodman, I had forgot one thing, that Hood hath brought me in remembrance of as ſoon as I ſaw him; for he heard when the tale was told me.

Gage. Hood, did not you hear when Smith of Framfield told me that he ſaw Woodman abroad in the citie at libertie.

Hood. Yea forſooth that I did.

Gage. Yea ſurely, and I was verie glad, for I had well hoped you had been conformable. But I heard otherwiſe afterward again, that you had leave of the Keeper to go abroad and ſpeak openly in the ſtreets, as you went up and down.

Wood. Indeed ſo the Marſhall told me to day. But indeed I was never abroad ſince I came to priſon, but when I was ſent for; and indeed the ſame time I was abroad with my Keeper, coming from the Biſhop, and as I was coming, even not far from the Marſhalſey, I ſaw goodman Smith ſtand in a Waine unloding of cheeſe, and I aſked him how he did, even as I went by, and never ſtayed for the matter, and thereupon it did riſe. So I departed from them, with my Keeper to the Marſhalſey again, where I now am merry, I praiſe God therefore, as a ſheep appointed to be ſlain.

Lewd tales and falſe lies raiſed upon Woodman.

The fourth examination of Richard Woodman, had before the Biſhop of Wincheſter, the Biſhop of Rocheſter, and a certain Doctor, with divers other Prieſts and Gentlemen, the 25. day of May. Anno 1557.

Woodman.

I Was ſet from the Marſhalſey to the ſaid Biſhops and Prieſts, ſitting in St. Georges church in Southwark, by one of the Marſhals men and one of the Sheriffes men. When I came before them, and had done my duty to them as nigh as I could, then ſaid the biſhop of Wincheſter:

The fourth examination of R. Woodman before the B. of Wincheſter, &c.

Winch. What is your name?

Wood. My name is Richard Woodman forſooth.

Wincheſter. Ah Woodman, you were taken and apprehended for hereſie about three yeers agone, and were ſent to priſon in the Kings Bench, and there remained a long time. Mine old Lord of Chicheſter, being a learned famous man, well known in this Realme of England, and almoſt throughout all Chriſtendome, I think came to priſon to you, and there, and at other places, called you before him divers times, travelling and perſwading with you many times (becauſe he was your Ordinarie) to pluck you from your hereſies that you held, but he could by no means advertiſe you.

The old biſhop of Chicheſter was Doctor Day.

Whereupon you were delivered to the Commiſſioners, and they could do no good with you neither. Then they ſent unto you my Lord of London. My Lord of London calling you before him divers times, labour was made unto him of your friends, that you might be releaſed. My Lord having a good hope in you, that you would become an honeſt man, becauſe he had heard ſo of you in times paſt, yea and you your ſelf promiſing him, that you would go home and recant your hereſies that you held, delivered you; ſending alſo a letter of your recantation to the Commiſſarie, that he ſhould ſee it done. But as ſoone as you were out of his hands, you were as bad as ever you were, and would never fulfill your promiſe, but have hid your ſelf in the woods, buſhes, dens, and caves, and thus have you continued ever ſince, till it was now of late. Then the Sheriffe of that ſhire (being a worſhipfull man) hearing thereof, ſent certain of his men, and took you in a wood, and ſo carried you to his houſe. I cannot tell his name. What is your Sheriffes name?

Untrue. For Biſhop Bonner delivered him of his own accord at the burning of Philpot, upon other cauſes.

Falſe and untrue.

Wood. Forſooth, his name is ſir Edward Gage.

Sir Edward Gage Sheriffe of Suſſex.

Wincheſter. Well, you were apprehended for hereſie, and being at maſter Gages three weeks or more, ye were gently intreated there; he and other Gentlemen perſwading with you divers times, little prevailed.

Then you appealed to the Biſhop of Chicheſter that now is. The Sheriffe like a worſhipfull man, ſent you to him, and he hath travelled with you, and other alſo, and can do no good with you, whereupon we have ſent for you.

Wood. Then I ſpake to him. For I thought he would be long, before he would make an end. I thought he was a peer in telling of thoſe lies that he had told there againſt me already. Yea, I kept ſilence from good words; but it was great paine and grief unto me (as David ſaid.)

At length the fire was ſo kindled within my heart, that I could not chuſe but ſpeak with my tongue; for I feared leſt any of the companie ſhould have departed or ever I had anſwered to his lies, and ſo the Goſpel to have been ſlandered by my long ſilence keeping. So I ſpake, I praiſe GOD therefore, and ſaid; my Lord, I pray you let me now anſwer for my ſelf, for it is time.

Winch. I permit you to anſwer to theſe things that I have ſaid.

Wood. I thank God therefore. And I think my ſelf happie (as Paul ſaid, when he was brought before King Agrippa) that I may this day anſwer for my ſelf. My Lord, I promiſe you there is never a word of your ſayings true that you have alledged againſt me.

Woodman charged with falſe matter.

Winch. I cannot tell, but thus it is reported of you. As for me, I never did ſee you before this day; but I am ſure it is not all lies that I have ſaid, as you report.

Wood. Yes my Lord, there is never a true word of that you have ſaid. And further, where you ſaid you never ſaw me before this day, you have both heard me, and ſeen me, I dare ſay, before this day.

Wincheſt. I think I heard you indeed on Sunday, where you plaid the malapert fellow; but I cannot tell that I ſaw you. But I pray you, were you not taken in the woods by the Sheriffes men?

Wood. No ſure, I was taken beſides my houſe, I being in my houſe when they came, wherefore that is not true.

Winch. Were not you at the Sheriffes three weeks?

Wood. Yes that I was, a moneth juſt, and was gently intreated of him, I can ſay no otherwiſe; for I had meat and drink enough, and faire words.

Winch. Ah, I am well apaid; it is not all lies then, as it chanced. For I ſpake but of three weeks, and you confeſſe a moneth your ſelf.

Wood. Yet your tale is never the truer for that. For you ſaid, I was there three weeks for hereſie, the which is not ſo. For I was not apprehended for hereſie at the firſt, neither did mine old Lord of Chicheſter travell with me to pull me from hereſie, as you ſaid; for I held none then, neither do I now, as God knoweth, neither was I ſent to the Commiſſioners nor to the Biſhop of London for hereſie, neither was I delivered to him for any ſuch thing, nor promiſed him to recant, as you ſaid I did. Wherefore I marvell you be not aſhamed to tell ſo many lies, being a Biſhop, that ſhould be an enſample to other.

Wincheſter ſwift in judging

Winch. Lo, what an arrogant heretique this ſame is. He will denie God; for he that denieth his own hand, denieth God.

R. Woodman cleareth himſelf of recantation.

Wood. My Lord, judge not leſt you be judged your ſelf. For as you have judged me, you ſhall be judged, if you repent not. And if I have ſet my hand to any recantation, let it be ſeen to my ſhame, before this audience: For I will never deny mine own hand, by Gods help.

Winch. It is not here now, but I think it will be had well enough; but if it cannot be found, by whom will you be tried?

The honeſt dealing of B. Boner with Woodman herein.

Wood. Even by my Lord of London; for he dealt like a good man with me in that matter that I was ſent to priſon for. For it was upon the breach of a Statute, as maſter Sheriffe here can tell. For he was Sheriffe then, as he is now, and can tell how I was toſſed up and down, from Seſſions to Seſſions; and becauſe I would not conſent that I had offended therein, they ſent me to priſon again.

This was Doctor Day.

Then my Lord of Chicheſter being mine Ordinary, and I being his tenant, came to me, to perſwade with me that I ſhould have conſented to them, and to finde my ſelf in fault, where I was in none. To the which I would not agree, but I deſired him that he would ſee me releaſed of my wrong; but he ſaid he could not, but willed me or my friends to ſpeak to the Commiſſioners for me, becauſe it was a temporall matter: and when I came before them, they ſent me to my Lord of London, and my Lord of London was certified by the hands of almoſt thirtie men, both Eſquires, Gentlemen, and Yeomen, the chiefeſt in all the countrey where I dwelt, that I had not offended in the matter that I was ſent to priſon for. Whereupon he delivered me, not willing me to recant hereſies, for I held none (as God knoweth) neither do I now: nor do I know wherefore I was ſent to priſon, no more then any man here knoweth; for I was taken away from my work.

The cauſe and manner how Woodman was delivered by B. Boner.

Wincheſt. No? wherefore appealed you then to my Lord of Chicheſter, if it were not for hereſie?

Wherefore Woodman appealed to his Ordinary.

Wood. Becauſe there was laid to my charge that I had baptized children, and married folks, the which I never did, for I was no where Miniſter. Wherefore I appealed to mine Ordinarie, to purge my ſelf thereof, as I have. Wherefore if any man have any thing againſt me, let them ſpeak; for I came not hither to accuſe my ſelf, neither will I.

Wincheſt. Maſter Sheriffe, can you tell upon what breach of Statute he was ſent to priſon firſt?

The Sheriffe. Yea forſooth my Lord that I can.

Wood. My Lord, if you will give me leave, I will ſhew you the whole matter.

Winch. Nay, maſter Sheriffe, I pray you tell the matter, ſeeing you know it.

The Sher. My Lord, it was for ſpeaking to a Curate in the Pulpit, as I remember.

The cauſe why Woodman was firſt apprehended.

Winch. Ah, like enough, that he would not ſtick to reprove a Curate. For did you not ſee how he faſhioned himſelf to ſpeak to me in the Pulpit on Sunday? He played the malapert fellow with me; and therefore it was no great marvell though he played that part with another.

Rich. Woodman and his fellow-priſoners falſly accuſed and belied of the Biſhop of Wincheſter in the Pulpit.

Wood. Why, you will not blame me for that, I am ſure. For we ſpake for no other cauſe, but to purge our ſelves of thoſe hereſies that you laid to our charge. For theſe were your words; Good people, theſe men that be brought before us, being here, denie Chriſt to be God, and the holy Ghoſt to be God (pointing to us with your left hand) the which might ſeeme to the whole audience, that you meant us all. Wherefore to cleare our ſelves thereof, we ſpake, and ſaid we held no ſuch thing. And you ſaid you would cut out our tongues. But I am ſure you have no ſuch law.

Winch. Yes that we have, if you blaſpheme, and as it chanced, I found ſuch amongſt you.

Wood. Indeed after we ſpake, you declared who they were, but not before; for you ſpake generally. Wherefore we blaſphemed not, but purged our ſelves.

Speaking to the Curate in the Pulpit made hereſie.

Winch. But I pray you how can you purge your ſelf for ſpeaking to the Curate, that it is not hereſie?

Woodman cleareth himſelf from breach of the Statute.

Wood. Forſooth theſe be the words of the Statute; Whoſoever doth interrupt any Preacher or Preachers, lawfully authoriſed by the Queens Majeſtie, or by any other lawfull Ordinarie, that all ſuch ſhall ſuffer three moneths impriſonment, and furthermore be brought to the quarter Seſſions, there (being ſorrie for the ſame) to be releaſed upon his good abearing one whole yeere. But I had not ſo offended as it was well proved. For he that I ſpake to was not lawfully authoriſed, nor had put away his wife. Wherefore it was not lawfull for him to preach by your own law; and therefore I brake not the Statute, though I ſpake to him.

Note the prettie ſhift of this Catholique Prelate.

Winch. I am glad, I perceive this man ſpeaketh againſt Prieſts marriages; he is not contented with prieſts that have wives. He is an honeſter man then I took him for, Maſter Sheriffe, have him away. I am glad he loveth not Prieſts marriages.

Wood. Then I would have anſwered to his ſayings, but he would in no wiſe hear me, but bade the Sheriffe have me away. So the Sheriffe took me by the hand, and plucked me away, and would not let me ſpeak, but going out of the Chancell doore, I ſaid; I would ſhew him the whole matter, if he would have given me leave, but ſeeing he will not, if he will let me go ſo, they ſhall ſee whether I will not go home to my wife and children, and keep them, as my bounden dutie is, by the help of GOD. So I was ſent to the Marſhalſey again, where I now am merrie, I praiſe GOD therefore, as a ſheep appointed to be ſlain.

Moreover, I was credibly informed by one of our brethren that heard our talk, that the Biſhop ſaid when I was gone, that they would take me whileſt I was ſomewhat good. Which words ſeemed to many of the people that were there, that I ſpake againſt Prieſts marriages, but I did not, but did onely anſwer to ſuch queſtions as he aſked me, as you ſhall perceive well by the words, if you mark them, which words were theſe:

Woodman falſly taken to ſpeak againſt Prieſts marriages.

How can you purge your ſelf from hereſie, for talking to the Curate in the Pulpit, and not offend the Statute, ſaid the Biſhop? meaning thereby, I think, to have taken vantage of my words; but it was not Gods will that he ſhould at that time. For I anſwered him by the words of the Statute, which words be as hereafter followeth (that is:) Whoſoever doth interrupt any Preacher or Preachers, lawfully authoriſed by the Queens Majeſtie, or by any other lawfull Ordinarie, that all ſuch ſhall ſuffer three moneths impriſonment. But I proved that this man was not lawfully authoriſed to preach (by their own law) becauſe he had not put away his wife. For their law is, that no Prieſt may ſay Maſſe, nor preach with the Maſſe, but he muſt firſt be ſeparated from his wife. That is, becauſe honeſt marriages be good and commendable, and theirs naught and abominable; therefore they cannot dwell together.

A Prieſt keeping his wife, yet would needs hold again with Papiſtry.

Now I give you all to underſtand, that I did not reprove this Prieſt, becauſe he had a wife, but becauſe he taught falſe doctrine, which grieved my ſoul, becauſe he had been a fervent Preacher againſt the Maſſe, and all the Idolatrie thereof ſeven years before, and then came and held with it again; for the which cauſe I reproved him in the Pulpit. And the words that I ſpake to him, are written in divers of my examinations at my firſt impriſonment for that ſame. But in verie deed, I knew not of the Statute when I reproved him. But becauſe I was ſent to priſon upon the breach of it, I bought a Statute book, and when I had peruſed it, I perceived I had not offended by their own law; and therefore ſtill when I was called to anſwer, I anſwered them with their own law. But yet they kept me in priſon a year and almoſt three quarters or ever I was releaſed. I was at mine anſwer for that eighteen times. If any think I do not allow Biſhops and Prieſts marriages, let them look in my firſt examination before the Biſhop of Chicheſter that now is, during this my impriſonment, and there they ſhall finde what I have ſaid in the matter. The truth is, I looked to be condemned with my brother that ſame day. But we may all ſee that they can do nothing but as God will permit them to do. But when the time is full come, I truſt in God I ſhall run that joyfull race that my brethren have done. Thus I commit you all into the hands of God, who is the preſerver, defender, and keeper of all his elect for evermore, Amen.

R. Woodman ſaving himſelf from his enemies by their own law.

¶ The fifth examination of Richard Woodman, had before the Biſhop of Wincheſter, the Archdeacon of Canterbury, Doctor Langdale, with a fat headed Prieſt, and other, whoſe names I know not, with certain alſo of the Commiſſioners, at ſaint Marie Overies Church in Southwarke, in the preſence of 300. people at the leaſt, the 15. day of Iune, Anno 1557.

VVincheſter. Woodman, you were before us the laſt day, and would not be known in any wiſe that you were ſent to priſon for hereſie, and called for your accuſers, and ſtood ſtoutly in defending of your ſelfe, and in your departing I had thought you had ſpoken againſt Prieſts marriages, thinking by your words we ſhould have found you an honeſt man, and conformable, when we had called you before us again. You told ſuch a fair tale for your ſelf, as though you had been free from all that was laid to your charge. For you ſaid it was all lies that I told againſt you; but ſince I have proved the contrarie, as here is your own hand to ſhew. By the which I have proved, that you reproved not the Prieſt for lacking of authoritie, and becauſe he had not put away his wife, but becauſe you liked not his preaching. For indeed I took it, that you reproved him becauſe he was not lawfully authoriſed, but I have proved the contrary ſince.

The fifth examination of Rich. Woodman before the Biſh. of Wincheſter, and divers other. Iune 15. Anno 1557.

Wood. I told you not that I did either reprove him for lack of authoritie, or becauſe I liked not his preaching, but I told you wherefore I was firſt ſent to priſon. For you ſaid I was ſent to priſon for hereſie, and made a long tale againſt me. And indeed I told you that there was never a word of your ſayings true, but was all lies, as it was indeed. For I never was ſent to priſon for hereſie, neither held I any then, nor do now, I take heaven and earth to witneſſe; but I told you I was ſent to priſon upon the breach of a Statute, which was for ſpeaking to a Prieſt in the Pulpit, and for that cauſe the Iuſtices of that countrey had thought I had offended the Statute, and called me before them, and would have had me to have been bound to my good abearing, and becauſe I refuſed it, they ſent me to priſon. And theſe be the words of the Statute, as I told you the laſt day. If any man do interrupt any Preacher or Preachers, lawfully authoriſed by the Queens Majeſtie, or by any other lawfull Ordinarie, that then everie partie that ſo offendeth, ſhall ſuffer three moneths impriſonment, and furthermore be brought to the quarter Seſſions, and there being ſorrie for the ſame, and alſo bound for his good abearing one whole yeer, to be releaſed, or elſe to remain to priſon again.

The words of the Statute.

And when I was in priſon, I bought a Statute book, which when I had peruſed over, I found by the words thereof that I had not offended, becauſe he was not lawfully authoriſed, as the Biſhop of London was certified by the hands almoſt of thirtie men, both Eſquires, Gentlemen, and Yeomen, the chiefeſt in all that countrey. For he had not put away his wife, and therefore the Statute took no place on me, as I told you the other day. Wherefore my Lord of London, ſeeing me have ſo much wrong, did like a good man to me in that matter, and releaſed me. Now when I had told you this matter, you bade the Sheriffe have me away: You ſaid you were glad I held againſt Prieſts marriages, becauſe I anſwered to the queſtion you aſked me.

No breach of the Statute and why.

The fat Prieſt. My Lord, do you not hear what he ſaith by my Lord of London? He ſaith he is a good man in that he releaſed him, but he meaneth that he is good in nothing elſe.

The Prieſt ſcanneth upon the meaning of Woodman.

Wood. What? can you tell what I meane? let everie man ſay as he findeth; he did juſtly to me in that matter. I ſay if he be not good in any thing elſe, as you ſay, he ſhall anſwer for it, and not I; for I have nothing to do with others mens matters.

See how neerly theſe men ſeek matter againſt him, whereby to trap him.

Wincheſt. Well, how ſay you? how liked you his preaching? I pray you tell us.

Wood. That is no matter how I liked it. How ſoever I liked it, I offended not the Statute. Wherefore you have nothing to ſay to me for that I am ſure.

Winch. Well, how like you this then? Here is your own hand writing. I am ſure you will not denie it. Will you look on it?

Wood. It is mine own handie work indeed, the which by Gods help I will never denie, nor ever did yet, I praiſe God therefore.

Wincheſt. And here is good geare I tell you. I pray you hearken well to it; theſe be the words, before the Commiſſioners. How ſay you? Do you not beleeve as ſoone as the words be ſpoken by the Prieſt, that there remaineth neither bread nor wine, but onely the verie bodie of Chriſt, both fleſh and blood, as he was born of the Virgin Marie? theſe were the words of the Commiſſioners.

Luke 22.

Woodman charged with his anſwers before the Commiſſioners at his laſt examination.

And then thou ſaideſt, thou durſt not ſay otherwiſe then the Scripture ſaith. I cannot finde (ſay you) that it is the bodie of Chriſt before it is received by faith, bringing in the 22. of Luke, ſaying; Chriſt ſaid, Take, eat, this is my bodie. So I cannot prove it is his bodie before it is eaten. Then ſaid the Commiſſioners; Did not Judas eat Chriſts bodie? And if you can prove that Judas is ſaved (ſaid you) I muſt grant that he eat his bodie. For Chriſt ſaith in the ſixth of John; Whoſo eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternall life, and I will raiſe him up at the laſt day; which words prove, ſaid you, that if Judas eat the bodie of Chriſt, he muſt needs be ſaved. How ſay you now? Did Judas eate the bodie of Chriſt, or not?

Doctor White B. of Wincheſter, bent to have the blood of Woodman.

Wood. Then I perceived he went about nothing but to catch words of me in his Dioceſſe, to condemne me with. Though I ſhould confound him never ſo much, I perceived that he was fully bent thereto. To whom I anſwered and ſaid:

I will anſwer you to no ſuch thing, for I am none of your Dioceſſe; wherefore I will not anſwer to you.

Winch. Thou art within my Dioceſſe, and thou haſt offended within my Dioceſſe; and therefore I will have to do with thee.

Ric. Woodman appealeth from the Biſhop of Wincheſter to his own Ordinary.

Wood. Have to do with me and you will; but I will have nothing to do with you, I tell you plainly. For though I be now in your Dioceſſe, I have not offended in your Dioceſſe; if I have, ſhew me wherein.

Winch. Marie here is thine own hand-writing, the which thou affirmedſt in my Dioceſſe.

Wood. I do not deny but it is mine own handwriting; but that proveth never the more that I have offended in your Dioceſſe: for that doth but declare what talk there was betwixt the Commiſſioners and me, the which you have nothing to do withall.

Wincheſter. No? hold him a book, and thou ſhalt ſweare whether thou holdeſt it now, or not, and whether thou wroteſt it not in my Dioceſſe, as I think thou diddeſt; Lay thy hand on the book.

Woodman refuſeth to ſwear or anſwer before Wincheſter being not his Ordinary.

Wood. I will not be ſworne for you; for I am not of you Dioceſſe; and therefore you have nothing to do with me. And as for the writing of the ſame, I never wrote word of it in your Dioceſſe.

Lang. No, did you not? my Lord, let me ſee; I will finde where you wrote it.

Wood. Then he took it and looked on it, and anon he found that I was ſent for out of the Kings Bench, to come before the Commiſſioners.

Lang. My Lord, here you may ſee it was in the Kings Bench, the which is in your Dioceſſe.

Wood. Although I were ſet out of the Kings Bench, that proveth not that I wrote it there, nor did I, I promiſe you truly.

The fat Prieſt. Where wrote you it then?

Wood. Nay, I owe you not ſo much ſervice to tell you; finde it out as well as you can. For I perceive you go about to ſhed my blood.

Wincheſt. It is no great matter where it was written; it is here, and he denieth not but he wrote it. You ſhall hear more of it. Here the Commiſſioners asked you, whether Judas did eat any more then bare bread, and you anſwered, that he eat more then bare bread.

Woodman in a great burning of conſcience, for fear leſt he had granted too much to the Commiſſioners before, ſaying, that Judas did eat more then bare bread.

Whereupon they ſent you away back to the Kings Bench again, and asked you not what more, for the which cauſe (as you have written here) you had a hell burning in your conſcience. For you had thought they would have ſent a diſcharge to the Kings Bench, and ſo let me go (ſaid you) and regiſter my name in their books, that I had granted that Judas did eat the bodie of Chriſt, and ſo the Goſpel ſhould have been ſlandered by me. For the which cauſe I was in ſuch caſe, I could ſcantly eat, drink, or ſleep for that ſpace, as all my priſon-fellows can teſtifie. If all you, I ſay, that go to the church of Satan, and there heare the deteſtable doctrine, that they ſpit and ſpue out in their Churches and pulpits, to the great diſhonour of God, if all you, I ſay, that come there, had ſuch a hell burning in your conſcience for the time, as I had till I came before them again, and had uttered my conſcience more plainly, I dare ſay you would come there no more. All this is your writing; is it not? how ſay you?

Wood. I do not denie but it was mine own deed.

Wincheſt. And I pray you, where is there ſuch ſpitting and ſpuing out of falſe doctrine as you ſpeak of?

Wood. In the ſynagogue of Satan, where God is diſhonoured with falſe doctrine.

Winch. And I pray you where is one of them?

Wood. Nay, that judge your ſelf; I came not hither to be a judge.

Winch. Well, here you have affirmed, that Judas (your maſter) eat more then bread; but yet he eat not the bodie of Chriſt, as you have declared by your words. For, you had a hell burning in your conſcience, becauſe you were in doubt, that the Commiſſioners underſtood by your words, that Judas had eaten the bodie of Chriſt, becauſe you ſaid, he eat more then bare bread. Therefore thou hadſt a great ſort of devils in thee; for in hell be many Devils: and therefore the Devill and Judas is thy maſter, by thine owne words.

Wood. Nay, I defie Judas and the Devill, and his ſervants; for they be your maſters, and you ſerve them, for any thing that I can ſee, I tell you truth.

Winch. Nay they be thy maſters. For the Devill is maſter where hel is, and thou ſaidſt thou hadſt a burning hell in thee. I pray thee tell me, how thou canſt avoid it, but that the devil was in thee by thine own ſaying?

The Biſhops Argument.

The Devil is maſter in hell.
Woodman felt a burning hell in his conſcience: Ergo, the Devill was Woodmans maſter.

Anſwer.

Hell is taken in Scripture two wayes; either for the place where damned ſpirits and ſouls be tormented for ever out of this life: or elſe for Gods correction and anguiſh of the ſoul in this life, which ſometime is felt ſo ſharp, that it is reſembled to hell it ſelf: As where we read; The Lord bringeth to hell, and bringeth out again, &c. Tob. 13. The pains of hell have found me, &c. Pſal. 114.

Wood. The hell that I had, was the loving correction of God toward me, to call me to repentance, that I ſhould not offend God and his people in leading things ſo dark, as I left that. For the which cauſe my conſcience bare me record, I had not done well, as at all times I have felt the ſting of it, when I have broken the commandements of God by any means, as all Gods people do, I dare ſay, and it is the loving kindneſſe of God towards them, to drive them to repentance. But it is to be thought, that your conſcience is never troubled, how wickedly ſoever you do. For if it were, it ſhould not be ſo ſtrange to you as you make it, which declareth plainly whoſe ſervant you be.

Winch. What a naughtie fellow is this? This is ſuch a perverſe villain as I never talked with in all my life. Hold him a book, I will make him ſwear, to anſwer directly to ſuch things as I will demand of him; and if he will not anſwer, I will condemne him.

Wiſd. 5.

Wood. Call you me a fellow? I am ſuch a fellow, I tell you, that will drive you all to hell, if you conſent to the ſhedding of my blood, and you ſhall have blood to drink, as ſaith Saint John in his Revelation, the ninth chapter, and being in hell, you ſhall be compelled to ſay for pain of conſcience; This is the man that we have had in deriſion, and thought his life madneſſe, and his end to be without honour; but now we may ſee how he is counted among the ſaints of God, and we are puniſhed. This ſhall you ſee in hell, if you repent it not, if you do condemne me. This you ſhall finde in the fifth chapter of the book of Wiſdome: and therefore take heed what you do, I give you counſell.

Winch. Wiſdome? What ſpeakeſt thou of wiſdome? thou never hadſt it; for thou art as very a fool as ever I heard ſpeak.

1. Cor. 1.

Wood. Do you not know, that the fooliſh things of this world muſt confound the wiſe things? Wherefore it grieveth me not to be called a fool at your hands.

Winch. Nay, thou art none of thoſe fools; thou art an obſtinate fool, and an heretique. Lay hand on the book, and anſwer to ſuch things as I will lay againſt thee.

R. Woodman again refuſeth to ſwear or anſwer before the Biſhop, being not his Ordinary.

Wood. I will lay hand on the book for none of you all. You be not my Biſhop; and therefore I will have nothing to do with you.

Winch. I will have to do with you. This man is without law, he careth not for the King nor Queen, I dare ſay; for he will not obey their laws. Let me ſee the Kings commiſſion. I will ſee whether he will obey that, or not.

Wood. I would you loved the King and Queens Majeſtie no worſe then I do, if it pleaſed God: You would not do as you do then.

Winch. Hold him a book, he is a rank heretique. Thou ſhalt anſwer to ſuch things as I will demand of thee.

Wood. I take heaven and earth to record I am no heretique, neither can I tell wherefore I am brought to priſon, no more then any man here can tell, and therewith I looked round about on the people, and ſaid to the Biſhop; If you have any juſt cauſe againſt me worthy of death, lay it againſt me, and let me have it; for I refuſe not to die (I praiſe God) for the truths ſake, if I had ten lives. If you have no cauſe, let me go home, I pray you, to my wife and children to ſee them kept, and other poore folk that I would ſet a work by the help of God. I have ſet a work an hundred perſons ere this, all the yeer together, and was unjuſtly taken from them; but God forgive them that did it, if it be his will.

Winch. Do you not ſee how he looketh about for help? But I would ſee any man ſhew thee a cheerfull countenance, and eſpecially you that be of my Dioceſſe. If any of you bid God ſtrengthen him, or take him by the hand, or embrace him, or ſhew him a cheerfull countenance, you ſhall be excommunicated, and ſhall not be received in again, till you have done open penance; and therefore beware of it.

A charitable commandement of a Catholique Prelate under pain of excommunication, No man to ſay, God ſtrengthen him.

Wood. I look for no help of men, for God is on my ſide, I praiſe him therefore; and therefore I need not to care who be againſt me, neither do I care.

Then they cried, Away with him, and bring us another. So I was carried again to the Marſhalſey, where I am now merrie (I praiſe God therefore) as a ſheep appointed to be ſlain. But for lack of time, I have left out much of our talk; but this is the chiefeſt of it.

The ſixth and laſt examination of Richard Woodman, written and copied with his own hand.

BE it known unto all men by this preſent writing, that I Richard Woodman, ſometime of the Pariſh of Warbleton, in the County of Suſſex, was condemned for Gods everlaſting truth, Anno 1557. July 16. by the Biſhop of Wincheſter, in the Church of Saint Mary Overies in Southwark, there ſitting with him the ſame time the Biſhop of Chicheſter, the Archdeacon of Canterbury, D. Langdale, M. Roper, with a fat headed Prieſt, I cannot tell his name. All theſe conſented to the ſhedding of my blood, upon this occaſion, as hereafter followeth.

I affirmed, that Judas received the ſacrament with a ſop and the Devill withall; and becauſe I would not be ſworn upon a book, to anſwer directly to ſuch Articles as he would declare to me; and becauſe I would not beleeve that there remained neither bread nor wine after the words of conſecration, and that the bodie of Chriſt could not be received of any but of the faithfull: For theſe Articles I was condemned, as hereafter ſhall follow more at large, by the help of God.

FIrſt, the Biſhop ſaid when I came before him:

The ſixth examination of Ric. Woodman before the biſhop of Wincheſter, and divers other, in the Church of S. Mary Overies.

Wincheſter. You were before us on Munday laſt paſt; and there you affirmed certain hereſies. How ſay you now? Do you hold them ſtill, or will you revoke them?

Wood. I held no hereſies then, neither do I now, as the Lord knoweth.

Winch. No? did you not affirm, that Judas received bread? which is an hereſie, unleſſe you tell what more then bread.

Wood. Is it hereſie to ſay, Judas received no more then bread? I ſaid he received more then bare bread; for he received the ſacrament that was prepared to ſhew forth the Lords death: and becauſe he preſumed to eat without faith, he eat the devill withall, as the words of Chriſt declare; after he eat the ſop, the Devil entred into him, as you cannot denie.

Winch. Hold him a book. I will have you anſwer directly, whether Judas did eat the body of Chriſt, or no.

Ric. Woodman again refuſeth Wincheſter to be his Judge.

Wood. I will anſwer no more, for I am not of your Dioceſſe; wherefore I will have nothing to do with you.

Winch. No, you be in my Dioceſſe, and you be of my Dioceſſe, becauſe you have offended in my Dioceſſe.

Wood. I am not of your Dioceſſe, although I am in your Dioceſſe; and I was brought into your Dioceſſe againſt my will: and I have not offended in your Dioceſſe, if I have, tell me wherein.

Truth taken for hereſie.

Wincheſt. Here is your own hand-writing, the which is hereſie. Theſe be the words: I cannot finde, ſay you, that it is the body of Chriſt to any, before it is received in faith. How ſay you? is not this your own hand-writing?

Wood. Yea, I do not deny but it is mine owne hand-writing; but when, or where was it written, or where were the words ſpoken?

M. Roper commiſſioner, and witneſſe againſt Woodman.

Before the Commiſſioners, and here is one of them; Maſter Roper, the words were ſpoken before you. Were they not?

Roper. Yes indeed that they were, Woodman, I am ſure you will not deny them; for you have written the words even as you ſpake them.

Woodman. No ſir, indeed I will not deny but that I ſpake them, and I am glad that you have ſeene it. For you may ſee by that whether I lie, or not.

Woodmans hand-writing brought in againſt him.

Roper. Indeed the words be written word by word as ye ſpake them.

Wincheſter. Well, here you affirme, that it is your own deed. How ſay you now? will you be ſorrie for it, and become an honeſt man?

Wood. My Lord, I truſt no man can ſay, but that I am an honeſt man; and as for that, I marvell that you will lay it to my charge, knowing that my Lord of London diſcharged me of all matters that were laid againſt me, when I was releaſed of him.

Woodman firſt releaſed, and yet called to account againe, againſt all good order.

Winch. You were releaſed, and it might fortune, it was not laid to your charge then; therefore we lay it to your charge now, becauſe you be ſuſpected to be an heretike: and we may call you before us, and examine you upon your faith upon ſuſpicion.

Wood. Indeed St. Peter willeth me to render account of my hope that I have in God, and I am contented ſo to do, if it pleaſe my Biſhop to heare me.

Chich. Yes I pray you let us heare it.

Wood. I do beleeve in God the Father Almightie, maker of heaven and of earth, and of all things viſible and inviſible, and in one Lord Ieſus Chriſt my Saviour, very God, and very man. I beleeve in God the holy Ghoſt, the comforter of all Gods elect people, and that he is equall with the Father and the Sonne. I beleeve the true Catholike Church, and all the ſacraments that belong thereto. Thus have I rendred account of my hope that I have of my ſalvation.

Sacrament of the Altar.

Winch. And how beleeve you in the bleſſed ſacrament of the altar? And with that word they all put off their caps to that abominable Idoll.

Wood. I pray you be contented, for I will not anſwer to any moe queſtions; for I perceive you go about to ſhed my blood.

Woodman made an Anabaptiſt, becauſe he will not ſweare before him that is not his Ordinarie.

Winch. No? hold him a booke. If he refuſe to ſweare, he is an Anabaptiſt, and ſhall be excommunicated.

Woodman. I will not ſweare for you, excommunicate me if you will. For you be not meete to take an oath; for you laid hereſies to my charge in yonder Pulpit, the which you are not able to prove; wherefore you be not meete to take an oath of any man. And as for me, I am not of your Dioceſſe, nor will have any thing to do with you.

Winch. I will have to do with thee, and I ſay thou art a ſtrong heretike.

All truth is hereſie with theſe men.

Wood. Yea, all truth is hereſie with you; but I am content to ſhew you my minde, how I beleeve on the ſacrament of the body and blood of Ieſus Chriſt, without flattering. For that you looke for, I am ſure. But I will meddle no further, but what I hold my ſelfe of it. I will not meddle of any other mans beleefe on it.

N. Harpſ. Why? I am ſure all mens faith ought to be alike.

Wood. Yea, I grant you ſo, that all true Chriſtians faith ought to be alike. But I will anſwer for my ſelfe.

N. Harpſ. Well, let us heare what you ſay to it.

Woodmans confeſſion of the ſacrament.

Wood. I do beleeve, that when I come to receive the ſacrament of the body and blood of Ieſus Chriſt, if it be truely miniſtred according to Chriſts inſtitution, I coming in faith, as I truſt in GOD I will whenſoever I come to receive it, I beleeving that Chriſt was borne for me, and that he ſuffered death for the remiſſion of my ſinnes, and that I ſhall be ſaved by his death and bloodſhedding, and to receive the ſacrament of bread and wine in that remembrance, that then I do receive whole Chriſt, God and man, myſtically by faith, this is my beleefe on the ſacrament.

Myſtically.

Then they ſpake all at once, ſaying myſtically by faith? The fat Prieſt. What a foole art thou? myſtically by faith, thou canſt not tell what myſtically is.

1 Cor. 1.

Wood. If I be a foole, ſo take me: But God hath choſen ſuch fooles of this world to confound ſuch wiſe things as you are.

The fat Prieſt. I pray thee what is myſtically?

What is myſtically.

Wood. I take myſtically to be the faith that is in us, that the world ſeeth not, but God onely.

Wincheſter. He cannot tell what he ſaith. Anſwer to the ſacrament of the altar, whether it be not the body of Chriſt before it be received, and whether it be not the body of Chriſt to whomſoever receiveth it? Tell me, or elſe I will excommunicate thee.

Woodman againe appealeth to his Ordinarie.

Wood. I have ſaid as much as I will ſay; excommunicate me if you will. I am none of your Dioceſſe. The Biſhop of Chicheſter is mine Ordinarie. Let him do it, if you will needs have my blood, that it may be required at his hands.

M. Chriſtopherſon Biſh. of Chicheſter his Ordinarie, not yet conſecrated.

Chich. I am not conſecrated yet, I told you when you were with me.

Wood. No indeed, your Kine bring forth nothing but Cowe-calves, as it chanceth now; meaning thereby he had not his Buls from Rome.

Woodman for his fervent ſpeech rebuked.

Then they were all in a great rage with me, and called me all to nought, and ſaid I was out of my wit, becauſe I ſpake fervently to every mans queſtion; all the which I cannot remember, but I ſaid:

So Feſtus ſaid to Paul, when he ſpake the words of ſoberneſſe and truth out of the ſpirit of God, as I do. But as ye have judged me, you be your ſelves. You will go to hell all the ſort of you, if you condemne me, if you repent it not with ſpeede.

Wood. Then my Keeper, and the Sheriffes deputie Fuller, rebuked me, becauſe I ſpake ſo ſharply to them. And I ſaid, I pray you let me alone; I muſt anſwer for my life.

Then there was much ado that I ſhould keepe ſilence, and ſo I held my peace. Then ſpake the Biſhop of Wincheſter and the Archdeacon of Canterburie, ſaying; We go not about to condemne thee, but go about to ſave thy ſoule, if thou wilt be ruled, and do as we would have thee.

Wood. To ſave my ſoule? nay, you cannot ſave my ſoule. My ſoule is ſaved already. I praiſe God therefore. There can no man ſave my ſoule, but Ieſus Chriſt; and he it is that hath ſaved my ſoule, before the foundation of the world was laid.

The fat Prieſt. What an hereſie is that my Lord?

This fat Prieſt well ſeen in the Scriptures.

here is an hereſie. He ſaith his ſoule was ſaved before the foundations of the world were laid. Thou canſt not tell what thou ſayeſt. Was thy ſoule ſaved before it was?

Ieſus Chriſt onely Saviour of mans ſoule, and not man.

Wood. Yes, I praiſe God, I can tell what I ſay, and I ſay the truth. Look in the firſt of the Epheſians, and there you ſhall finde it, where Paul ſaith, Epheſians I. Bleſſed be God the Father of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, which hath bleſſed us with all manner of ſpirituall bleſſings in heavenly things, by Chriſt, according as he hath choſen us in himſelfe before the foundation of the world was laid, that we ſhould be holy and without blame before him, through love, and thereto were we predeſtinated. Theſe be the words of Paul, and I beleeve they be moſt true. And therefore it is my faith, in and by Ieſus Chriſt, that ſaveth, and not you, or any man elſe.

The fat Prieſt. What? Faith without workes? St. Iames ſaith, faith without workes is dead, and we have free will to do good works.

Good workes not diſallowed.

Phil. 2.

Wood. I would not that any of you ſhould think, that I diſallow good workes. For a good faith cannot be without good workes. Yet not of our ſelves, but it is the gift of God, as ſaith St. Paul to the Philippians, the ſecond Chapter, It is God that worketh in us both the will and alſo the deed, even of good will.

The Archdeacon of Canterburie made Ordinarie by the Cardinall to examine Rich. Woodman.

Winch. Make an end; anſwer to me. Here is your Ordinarie, the Archdeacon of Canterburie; he is made your Ordinarie by my Lord Cardinall, and he hath authoritie to examine you of your faith upon a booke, to anſwer to ſuch Articles as he will lay to you. And I pray you refuſe it not: for the danger is great if you do. Wherefore we deſire you to ſhew your ſelfe a ſubject in this matter.

Then they ſpake all, and ſaid; Loe, my Lord deſireth you gently to anſwer to him, and ſo we do all. For if you refuſe to take an oath, he may excommunicate you. For my Lord Cardinall may put whom he will in the Biſhops office, untill he is conſecrated.

Wood. I know not ſo much. If you will give me time to learne the truth of it (if I can prove it to be as you ſay) I will tell you my minde in any thing that he ſhall demand of me, without any flattering.

Prieſt. My Lord and all we tell thee it is true; and therefore anſwer to him.

Ri. Woodman challengeth his Iudges to be all turn-coates & changlings.

Wood. I will beleeue none of you all, for you be turne-coates and changelings, and be wavering minded, as ſaith St. Iames; you be neither hote nor cold, as ſaith S. Iohn, therefore God will ſpue you out of his mouth. Wherefore I can beleeve none of you all, I tell you truth.

Winch. What? be we turne-coates and changelings, what meaneſt thou by that?

Wood. I meane, that in King Edwards time you taught the doctrine that was ſet forth then, every one of you, and now you teach the contrarie; and therefore I call you turne-coates and changelings, as I may well enough. Which words made the moſt part of them to quake.

Winch. Nay, not all as it chanced.

Wood. No? I pray where were you then?

Winch. I was in the Tower, as the Lieutenant will beare me record.

Wood. If you were in the Tower, it was not therefore, I dare ſay, it was for ſome other matter.

Then they all tooke heart of grace, and ſaid; My Lord, he cometh to examine you, we think: if he will not anſwer to the Articles, you were beſt to excommunicate him.

Wincheſter. He is the naughtieſt varlet heretike that ever I knew. I will reade the ſentence againſt him.

The free ſpeech of Woodman to the Biſhops and Prieſts.

Wood. Then they ſpake all at once, and I anſwered then as faſt as I could. But I cannot remember it all, the words came out ſo thick, I ſpared them not, I praiſe God therefore; for I ſpake freely.

Then they that ſtood by rebuked me, and ſaid; You cannot tell to whom you ſpeak I think.

Wood. No? Think you ſo? they be but men. I am ſure I have ſpoken to as good as they be, and bettter then they will ever be, for any thing that I can ſee, if they repent not with ſpeed.

Wincheſter about to reade the ſentence.

Wincheſt. Give eare; for I will reade ſentence againſt you.

Wood. Will you ſo? wherefore will you? you have no juſt cauſe to excommunicate me; and therefore if you do condemne me, you will be condemned in hell, if you repent not: and I praiſe God, I am not affraid to die for Gods ſake, if I had a hundred lives.

Wincheſter. For Gods ſake? nay, for the Devils ſake. Thou ſayſt thou art not affraid to die; No more was Iudas that hanged himſelfe, as thou wilt kill thy ſelfe wilfully, becauſe thou wilt not be ruled.

Woodman. Nay, I defie the Devill, Iudas, and all their members. And Iudas fleſh was not affraid, but his ſpirit and conſcience was affraid, and therefore deſpaired and hung himſelfe. But I praiſe God, I feele no lothſomeneſſe in my fleſh to die, but a joyfull conſcience, and a willing mind thereto. Wherefore my fleſh is ſubdued to it, I praiſe God; and therefore I am not affraid of death.

Chich. Woodman, for Gods ſake be ruled. You know what you ſaid to me at my houſe. I could ſay more, if I would.

Reade in the firſt examination of Woodman, pag. 2176. in the ſecond edition.

Wood. Say what you can; the moſt fault that you found in me was, becauſe I praiſed the living God, and becauſe I ſaid, I praiſe God, and the Lord; which you ought to be aſhamed of, if you have any grace; for I told you where the words were written.

Wincheſt. Well, how ſay you? will you confeſſe that Iudas received the body of Chriſt unworthily? tell me plainly.

No man can receive the body of Chriſt unworthily.

Wood. My Lord, if you, or any of you all can prove before all this audience, in all the Bible, that any man ever eat the bodie of Chriſt unworthily, then I will be with you in all things that you will demand of me; of the which matter I deſire all this people to be witneſſe.

Prieſt. Will you ſo? then we ſhall agree well enough. St. Paul ſaith ſo.

Wood. I pray you where ſaith he ſo? rehearſe the words.

Prieſt. In the 11. of the firſt to the Corinthians he ſaith; Whoſo eateth of this bread, and drinketh of this cup unworthily, eateth and drinketh his owne damnation, becauſe he maketh no difference of the Lords body.

The place of S. Paul. 1 Cor. 11. expounded.

What it meaneth to make no difference of the Lords body.

Wood. Doe theſe words prove that Iudas eate the body of Chriſt unworthily? I pray you let me ſee them. They were contented. Then ſaid I, theſe be the words even that you ſaid: Good people hearken well to them, Whoſo eateth of this bread, and drinketh of this cup unworthily: He ſaith not, Whoſo eateth of this body unworthily, or drinketh of this blood unworthily: But he ſaith; Whoſo eateth of this bread, and drinketh of this cup unworthily (which is the ſacrament) eateth and drinketh his owne damnation, becauſe he maketh no difference betweene the ſacrament which repreſenteth the Lords body, and other bread and drinke. Here (good people) you may all ſee they are not able to prove their ſayings true. Wherefore I cannot beleeve them in any thing that they doe.

Winch.

Q. Maris. Anno 1557.

Winch. Thou art a ranke heretike indeed. Art thou an expounder? Now I will reade ſentence againſt thee.

Woodman. Judge not leſt you be judged. For as you have judged me, you be your ſelfe. Then he read the ſentence. Why, ſaid I, Will you reade the ſentence againſt me, and cannot tell wherefore.

Wincheſter readeth ſentence againſt Woodman, and cannot tell wherefore.

Winch. Thou art an heretike, and therefore thou ſhalt be excommunicated.

Wood. I am no heretike, I take heaven and earth to witneſſe, I defie all heretikes; and if you condemne me, you will be damned, if you repent not. But God give you grace to repent all, if it be his will; and ſo he read forth the ſentence in Latine, but what he ſaid, God knoweth, and not I. God be judge betweene them and me. When he had done, I would have talked my minde to them, but they cried, Away, away with him. So I was carried to the Marſhalſee againe, where I am, and ſhall be as long as it ſhall pleaſe GOD; and I praiſe GOD moſt heartily, that ever he hath elected, and predeſtinated me to come to ſo high dignitie, as to beare rebuke for his names ſake; his name be praiſed therefore, for ever and ever, Amen.

Rich. Woodman condemned and carried to the Marſhalſee, being not ſuffered to ſpeake.

And thus you have the examinations of this bleſſed Woodman, or rather Goodman; wherein may appeare as well the great grace and wiſdome of GOD in that man, as alſo the groſſe ignorance and barbarous crueltie of his adverſaries, eſpecially of Doctor White Biſhop of Wincheſter. Now followeth likewiſe the effect of his letter.

A godly letter of Richard Woodman, written to a Chriſtian woman, Miſtreſſe Roberts of Hawkhurſt.

GRace, mercie, and peace from GOD the Father, and from his Sonne our alone Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, by the operation and working of the holy Ghoſt, be multiplied plentiouſly upon you deare ſiſter Roberts, that you may the more joyfully beare the Croſſe of Chriſt that ye are under, unto the end, to your onely comfort and conſolation, and to all our brethren and ſiſters that are round about you, both now and ever, Amen.

In my moſt humble wiſe I commend me unto you, and to all our brethren and ſiſters in thoſe parts, that love our Lord unfainedly, certifying you, that I and all my brethren with me are merrie and joyfull, we praiſe God therefore, looking daily to be diſſolved from theſe our mortall bodies, according to the good pleaſure of our heavenly Father, praiſing GOD alſo for your conſtancie, and gentle benevolence, that you have ſhewed unto Gods elect people, in this troubleſome time of perſecution; which may be a ſure pledge and token of Gods good will and favour towards you, and to all other that heare thereof. For bleſſed are the mercifull, for they ſhall obtaine mercie. Wherefore the fruits declare alway what the tree is. For a good man or woman, out of the good treaſure of their heart, bring forth good things.

Math. 24.

Wherefore (deare ſiſter) it is not as many affirme in theſe daies (the more is to be lamented) that ſay God asketh but a mans heart; which is the greateſt injurie that can be deviſed againſt God and his Word. For St. James ſaith; Shew me thy faith by thy deeds, and I will ſhew thee my faith by my deeds, ſaying; the Devils have faith, and tremble for feare, and yet ſhall be but Devils ſtill, becauſe their mindes were never to doe good. Let us not therefore be like them, but let our faith be made manifeſt to the whole world by our deeds, and in the middeſt of a crooked and perverſe nation, as St. Paul ſaith, let your light ſhine as in a darke place.

God asketh more then the heart onely.

James 2.

Phil. 2.

Oh deare hearts, now is the Goſpel of GOD overwhelmed with many black and troubleſome clouds of perſecution, for the which cauſe very few go about to have their eies made cleere by the true light of the Goſpel, for feare of loſing of their treaſures of this world, which are but vaine, and ſhall periſh.

Let not us therefore be like unto them which light their candle, and put it under a buſhell; but let us ſet our candle upon a candleſtick, that it may give light unto all them that are in the houſe: that is to ſay, let all the people of the houſhold of GOD ſee our good workes, in ſuffering all things patiently that ſhall be laid upon us for the Goſpels ſake, if it be death it ſelfe. For Chriſt died for us, leaving us an example, that we ſhould follow his ſteps; and as he hath given his life for us, ſo ought we to give our lives for the defence of the Goſpel, to the comfort of our brethren.

Matth. 7.

How is it then that ſome will ſay, that their faith is good, and yet they doe all the deeds of Antichriſt the Devill, and be not aſhamed to alledge certaine Scriptures to maintaine their wickedneſſe? Saint Paul ſaith; To beleeve with the heart juſtifieth, and to confeſſe with the mouth maketh a man ſafe. Oh good God, here may all men ſee, that no man or woman can have a true faith, unleſſe they have deeds alſo; and he that doubteth, is like the waves of the ſea toſſed about of the winde, and can looke for no good thing at the Lords hands. May not a man judge all ſuch to be like thoſe which St. John ſpeaketh of, that be neither hote nor cold; and therefore God will (he ſaith) ſpue them out of his mouth? If we judge evill of ſuch, have not they given us occaſion? had it not beene better for them to have had a milſtone tied about their necks, and to have beene caſt into the Sea, then they ſhould give ſuch offences to Gods elect people in condemning them as they do, in going to the Synagogue of Satan, and there to receive the marke of the Beaſt, in that they ſee and heare God blaſphemed there, and hold their peace? Doth not that declare to the whole world, that they allow their doings to be good? and theſe do not onely defile themſelves, but alſo be an occaſion to confirme the Papiſts in their Papiſtrie, and ſo be an occaſion of our weake brothers falling, the which will be all required at their hands; which wil be too heavie a burden for them to bear, if they repent it not with ſpeede. For they that know their Maſters will, and do it not, ſhall be beaten with many ſtripes. Oh, do not we perceive, that now is the acceptable time that Chriſt ſpeaketh of? yea even now is the axe put to the rootes of the trees, ſo that every tree that bringeth not forth good fruits now, muſt be hewen downe, and caſt into the fire.

Rich. Woodman vexed of his owne friends.

Oh good God, what a ſort of fearfull ſayings are here contained? what Chriſtian heart will not hearken diligently hereto? Oh, may not all people well perceive now that this is the time that our Maſter Chriſt ſpeaketh of, that the father ſhould be againſt the ſon, and the ſon againſt the father, and one brother againſt another; that the brother ſhall deliver the brother to death: yea, and that the wicked ſhall ſay all manner of wicked ſayings againſt us for his Names ſake? the which I have well found by experience, I praiſe GOD therefore, that hath given me ſtrength to bear it. For I think there can be no evill deviſed but it hath been imagined againſt me, and that of my familiar friends, as David ſaith: but I praiſe my Lord God, they are not able to prove any of their ſayings true, but that they go about to finde fault in them that God hath choſen, becauſe they themſelves liſt not to take up their croſſe and follow Chriſt; and therefore they ſpeak evil of the thing that they know not, the which ſhall give account for it before him that is readie to judge both the quick and the dead.

John 10.

1 John 4.

But my truſt is, that all the people of GOD will be ruled by the counſell of St. John, ſaying; My ſheep will hear my voice, ſtrangers they will not hear: meaning thereby, that ye ſhould not beleeve ſtrangers, counting them ſtrangers that go about to ſubvert the Goſpel. Wherefore mark well what they be, and try them well or ever you give credit to them, according to Saint Johns counſell in his Epiſtle, ſaying; Beleeve not every ſpirit, but trie the ſpirits whether they be of God, or not; meaning thereby, that they that be not of God, will ſpeake good of none but of them that be as they be. Wherefore (deare ſiſter) be of good cheere, and give no credit to ſuch people, whatſoever ye heare them ſay. For I have no miſtruſt by Gods helpe, but that all the world ſhall ſee and know that my bloud ſhall not be dear in mine own ſight, whenſoever it ſhall pleaſe God to give my adverſaries leave to ſhed it. I doe earneſtly beleeve, that God which hath begun this good worke in me, will performe it to the end, as he hath given me grace and will alway, to beare this eaſie yoake and light burden; the which I have alwaies found, I praiſe my Lord God.

The manifold troubles which Woodman hath paſſed through.

Woodman comforted in his troubles.

For when I have been in priſon, wearing one while bolts, otherwhile ſhackles, otherwhile lying on the bare ground, ſometime ſitting in the Stockes, ſometime bound with cords, that all my bodie hath been ſwollen, much like to be overcome for the paine that hath beene in my fleſh, ſometime faine to lie without in the woods and fields, wandring to and fro, few I ſay, that durſt keep my company for fear of the Rulers, ſometime brought before the Juſtices, Sheriffes, Lords, Doctors, and Biſhops, ſometime called dogge, ſometime Devill, heretike, whoremonger, traitor, theefe, deceiver, with divers other ſuch like; yea, and even they that did eate of my bread, that ſhould have been moſt my friends by nature, have betrayed me: Yet for all this I praiſe my Lord God that hath ſeparated me from my mothers wombe, all this that hath happened unto me hath been eaſie, light, and moſt delectable and joyfull of any treaſure that ever I poſſeſſed; for I praiſe God they are not able to prove one jote or tittle of their ſayings true. But that way that they call hereſie, I ſerve my Lord God, and at all times before whomſoever I have beene brought, God hath given me mouth and wiſdome, where againſt all my adverſaries have not beene able to reſiſt, I praiſe God therefore.

Luke 21. Matth. 10. Experience of the Lord to keepe promiſe with his people.

Wherefore (dear ſiſter) be of good comfort with all your brethren and ſiſters, and take no thought what you ſhall ſay; for it ſhall be given you the ſame houre, according to the promiſes, as I have alwaies found, and as you and all other of Gods elect ſhall well finde, when the time is full come. And whereas I and many other have hoped, that this perſecution would have been at an end ere this time; now I perceive, God will have a further tryall to root out all diſſemblers, that no man ſhould rejoyce in himſelfe, but he that rejoyceth, ſhall rejoyce of God.

1 Cor. 13.

Rom. 8.

Wherfore if prophecie ſhould faile, and tongues ſhould ceaſe, yet love muſt endure. For feare hath painfulneſſe, but a perfect love caſteth out all feare: which love I have no miſtruſt but GOD hath powred it upon you ſo aboundantly, that nothing in the world ſhall be able to ſeparate you from God. Neither high nor low, rich nor poore, life nor death, ſhall be able to put you from Chriſt; but by him I truſt you ſhall enter into new Jeruſalem, there to live for ever, beholding the glory of God with the ſame eyes that you now have, and all other faithfull people that continue to the end. Give all honour and glorie to God the Father, God the Sonne, and God the holy Ghoſt, three perſons and one God, to be honoured now and ever, Amen.

After theſe examinations thus had and commenced betweene Richard Woodman and the Biſhops, he was (as is afore told) judged by ſentence of condemnation, and ſo deprived of his life; with whom alſo was burned nine other, to wit, five men, and foure women, which were taken not paſt two or three dayes before their judgement. The names of all which being alſo before expreſſed, Theſe perſons here above named, and bleſſed Martyrs, were put to death at Lewes, the 22. of June.

Certaine Juſtices charged for burning of Chriſts people without any lawfull Warrant or Writ.

Of the which number the eight laſt were apprehended (as is ſaid) either the ſame day, or the ſecond or third day before, and ſo with the ſaid Woodman and Stevens were together committed to the fire; in which ſpace no Writ could come down from London to the Juſtices, for their burning, Wherefore what is to be ſaid to ſuch Juſtices, or what reckoning they will make to God and to the lawes of this Realme, I referre that to them that have to do in the matter. The like whereof is to be found alſo of other Juſtices, who without any lawfull Writ of diſcharge, or order of law, have unlawfully and diſorderly burnt the ſervants of Chriſt (whoſe blood the law both may and alſo ought to revenge:) eſpecially at Saliſburie, and at Canterburie, and Garnſey. But concerning theſe matters, though mans law do winke, or rather ſleepe at them, yet they ſhall be ſure Gods Law will finde ſuch murderers out at length. I pray God the doers may repent betime.

The condemnation of Rich. Luſh.

IN the Regiſters of Gilbert Biſhop of Bathe and Wels, I finde a Certificate made to King Philip and Queene Marie, of one Richard Luſh, there condemned and given to the Secular power to be burned for the cauſe of hereſie, whoſe affirmations in the ſaid Certificate be expreſſed in tenour and effect, as followeth.

His Articles.

1 First, for denying the veritie of the bodie and blood of Chriſt in the ſacrament of the altar.

2 Item, for denying auricular confeſſion to be made to the Prieſt.

3 Item, for affirming onely to be three ſacraments; to wit, of Baptiſme, of the Supper, and of Matrimonie.

4 Item, for refuſing to call the Lords Supper by the name of the ſacrament of the altar.

5 Item, for denying Purgatorie, and that praier and almes profit not the dead bodie.

6 Item, that Images are not to be ſuffered in the Church, and that all that kneele to Images at the Church, be Idolators.

7 Item, that they which were burnt of late for religion, died Gods ſervants and good Martyrs.

8 Item, for condemning the ſingle life of Prieſts, and other votaries.

9 Item, for denying the univerſall and catholike Church, meaning belike the church of Rome.

The martyrdome of Rich. Luſh in the Dioceſſe of Bathe and Wels.

For theſe aſſertions, as there are expreſſed, he was condemned and committed to the Sheriffes, and alſo a Certificate directed by the Biſhop aforeſaid, to the King and Queene. Whereby we have apparantly to underſtand, that the ſaid Richard Luſh, thus condemned by Biſhop Browne, was there burnt and executed, unleſſe peradventure in the meane ſeaſon he died, or was made away in the priſon; whereof I have no certaintie to expreſſe.

A note of John Hullier Miniſter and Martyr, burned at Cambridge.

Referre this ſtory of John Hullier Martyr, to that which is before ſaid of him.

The ſtory of John Hullier with more matter inlarged.

Concerning the ſtorie of John Hullier Martyr, partly mentioned before, for the more full declaration of the death and martyrdome of that good man, becauſe the ſtorie is but rawly and imperfectly touched before; for the more perfecting thereof, I thought thereunto to adde that which ſince hath come to my hand, as followeth.

John Hullier firſt ſcholler at Eaton.

Firſt, John Hullier was brought up at Eaton Colledge, and after, according to the foundation of that houſe, for that he was ripe for the Univerſitie, he was elected ſcholler in the Kings Colledge, where alſo not tarrying full the three yeeres of probation, before he was fellow of the Colledge, he after a little ſeaſon was one of the ten Conducts in the Kings Colledge, which was Anno 1539. Then at length in proceſſe of time, he came to be Curate of Babram, three miles from Cambridge, and ſo went afterward to Linne; where he, having divers conflicts with the Papiſts, was from thence carried to Ely, to Doctor Thurlby, then Biſhop there; who after divers examinations, ſent him to Cambridge Caſtle, where he remained but a while.

John Hullier conduct in the Kings Colledge.

Hullier brought from Linne to the Biſhop of Ely.

Hullier priſoned in the Tolboth.

From thence he was conveighed to the towne priſon, commonly called the Tolboth, lying there almoſt a quarter of a yeere, while at length he was cited to appear at great Saint Maries on Palmeſunday Eve, before divers Doctors, both Divines and Lawyers, amongſt whom was chiefeſt Doctor Sharton, alſo Doctor Yong, Doctor Sedgewike, Doctor Scot, Mitch, and others. Where after examination had, for that he would not recant, he was firſt condemned, the ſentence being read by Doctor Fuller.

Hullier degraded.

Then conſequently he was degraded after their Popiſh manner, with ſcraping crowne and hands. When they had degraded him, he ſaid cheerefully; This is the joyfulleſt day that ever I ſaw, and I thanke you all, that ye have delivered and lightned me of all this paltrie.

Braſey Maior of Cambridge.

In the meane time whileſt it was doing, one ſtanding by, asked Hullier what booke he had in his hand. Who anſwered, a Teſtament. Whereat this man in a rage tooke it and threw it violently from him. Then was he given over to the ſecular powers, Braſey being Maior, who carrying him to priſon againe, tooke from him all his bookes, writings, and papers.

Briſley Sergeant, perſecutor.

On Maunday Thurſday coming to the ſtake, he exhorted the people to pray for him, and after holding his peace, and praying to himſelfe, one ſpake to him, ſaying; The Lord ſtrengthen thee. Whereat a Sergeant, named Briſley, ſtaied and bade him hold his tongue, or elſe he ſhould repent it.

Hulliers ſtedfaſt truſt in God.

Nevertheleſſe Hullier anſwered and ſaid (either thus or very like, the effect was all one) Friend, I truſt that as God hath hitherto begun, ſo alſo he will ſtrengthen me, and finiſh his worke upon me. I am bidden to a Maunday, whither I truſt to go, and there to be ſhortly. God hath laid the foundation, and I by his aide will end it.

Hullier prepared himſelfe to the ſtake.

Then going to a ſtoole (prepared for him to ſit on) to have his hoſen plucked off, he deſired the people to pray for him againe, and alſo to beare witneſſe that he died in the right faith, and that he would ſeale it with his blood, certifying them, that he died in a juſt cauſe, and for the teſtimonie of the veritie and truth, and that there was no other rocke but Jeſus Chriſt to build upon, under whoſe banner he fought, and whoſe ſouldier he was; and yet ſpeaking, he turned himſelfe about toward the Eaſt, and exhorted the people there likewiſe.

Three notorious Papiſts in Trinitie Colledge.

Now it chanced on a banke to ſtand thrée arch Papiſts, George Boyes, Henrie Barley, and Gray, all thrée of Trinitie Colledge. This Boyes was one of the Proctors of the Univerſitie that yéere. To whom Maſter Gray ſpake, ſaying; Heare ye not Maſter Proctor, what blaſphemie this fellow uttereth? ſurely it is evill done to ſuffer him.

Boyes, Proctor of Cambridge.

At whoſe words, this Boyes ſpake with a loud voice; Maſter Maior, what meane ye? if ye ſuffer him thus to talke at libertie, I tell ye the Councell ſhall heare of it, and we take you not to be the Quéens friend. He is a pernicious perſon, and may doe more harme then you wote of. Whereat ſimple Hullier, as meek as a Lambe, taking the matter very patiently, made no anſwer, but made him ready, uttering his prayer. Which done, he went méekly himſelfe to the ſtake, & with chaines being bound, was beſet with reed and wood, ſtanding in a pitch barrell, and the fire being ſet to, not marking the winde, it blew the flame to his back. Then he féeling it, began earneſtly to call upon God. Neverthelesse his friends perceiving the fire to be ill kindled, cauſed the Sergeants to turne it, and fire it that place where the winde might blow it to his face.

The martyrdome of Iohn Hullier.

Books burned with Hullier.

That done, there was a companie of books which were caſt into the fire, & by chance a Communion book fell betwéene his hands, who receiving it joyfully, opened it, and read ſo long till the force of the flame and ſmoake cauſed him that he could ſée no more; and then he fell again to prayer, holding his hands up to heaven, and the booke betwixt his armes next his heart, thanking God for ſending him it: and at that time the day being a very faire day and a hote, yet the winde was ſomewhat up, and it cauſed the fire to be the fiercer, and when all the people thought he had been dead, he ſuddenly uttered theſe words; Lord Ieſus receive my ſpirit, dying very meekly.

The laſt words of Ioh. Hullier at his death.

The place where he was burned, is called Ieſus Gréene, not farre from Ieſus Colledge. Seagar gave him certaine Gunpowder, but little to the purpoſe; for he was dead before it tooke fire. All the people prayed for him, and many a teare was ſhed for him. Which the papiſts ſéeing, cried, he was not to be prayed for, and being but a damned man, it could profit him nothing: neverthelesse they continued praying, Whereat the papiſts fell in ſuch a rage, that they menaced them with terrible threatnings to ward. His fleſh being conſumed, his bones ſtood upright even as if they had béen alive. Of the people, ſome took what they could get of him, as péeces of bones. One had his heart, the which was diſtributed ſo farre as it would go; one took the ſcalpe and looked for the tongue, but it was conſumed except the very roote.

Papiſts of Cambridge forbid the people to pray for Hullier.

One rounded him in the eare, and deſired him to be conſtant to the end; at which he ſpake nothing, but ſhewed a joyfull countenance, and ſo continued both conſtant and joyfull to the end.

A note of Thomas Rede.

Referre this to Thomas Rede Martyr, before.

THomas Rede who was burned at Lewes, as it appeareth above, before he was in priſon, determined with himſelfe to go to Church. The night following he ſaw a viſion, a companie of tall young men in white, very pleaſant to behold; to whom he would have joyned himſelfe, but it would not be.

Then he looked on himſelfe, and he was full of ſpots, and therewith waked, and tooke hold, and ſtood to the truth; God be thanked therefore, and ſo conſtantly was burned with his fellowes, as is above ſpecified.

Simon Miller and Elizabeth Cooper burnt at Norwich.

July 13. Simon Miller a Merchant, Martyr.

IN the moneth of July next enſued the martyrdome of Simon Miller and Elizabeth Cooper. This Simon dwelling then in the town of Linne, a godly and zealous man in the knowledge of the Lord and of his truth, deteſting and abhorring the contrary enforced religion then ſet forth, came from Linne to Norwich, where he ſtanding in the preaſe and hearing of the people, coming out the ſame time from their Popiſh ſervice ended in the Church, beganne to aſke them coming out of the Church, where he might go to have the Communion. At which words, divers much marvelling to heare and ſée his boldneſſe, one that was an evill diſpoſſed Papiſt, hearing the ſame, ſaid, that if he would needs go to a Communion, he would go bring him thither where he ſhould be ſped of his purpoſe. Whereupon ſhortly after he was brought to the Chancellor of Norwich (whoſe name was Dunning) who after a few words, and ſmall talke paſſed with this examinate, committed him to ward.

The words of Simon Miller to the people. The cauſe why Simon Miller was taken.

Simon Miller examined before Doctor Dunning.

In the meane while as he was in examination, he had in his ſhooe his confeſſion, written in a certain paper, whereof a péece appearing above his ſhooe, was ſpied and taken out. The Chancellor asking if he would ſtand to the confeſſion of the ſame faith therein contained, he conſtantly affirmed the ſame. Whereupon as is ſaid, he was committed. Thus the ſaid Simon being in the biſhops houſe, under cuſtodie of the Kéeper there called Maſter Felow, how it hapned it is not certaine, whether by gentleneſſe of the Keeper (who was ſomewhat gentle that waies) or by leave given of the Biſhop, or elſe whether he had condeſcended of a purpoſe to their Articles, he was diſmiſſed, and went home to his houſe at Linne. Where he continued a certaine ſpace, while he had diſpoſed and ſet there all things in order.

Sim. Millers confeſſion eſpied in his ſhooe.

Simon Miller diſmiſſed to his houſe at Linne.

That done, he returned againe to the Biſhops houſe to his priſon & kéeper, till the time at length, he conſtantly abiding in his profeſſed purpoſe, and defence of Gods truth, was by the ſaid Biſhop and his Chancellor condemned and committed to the fire about the 13. day of July.

Simon Miller returneth again to his confeſſion, and is condemned.

Elizabeth Cooper, Martyr.

Eliz. Cooper, Martyr.

WIth this Simon Miller alſo was burnt one Elizabeth Cooper (as is aforeſaid) a Pewterers wife, dwelling in S. Andrewes Pariſh in Norwich, where ſhe had before recanted, and being unquiet for the ſame, and greatly troubled inwardly, at the laſt ſhe came into the ſaid Saint Andrewes Church, the people being at their Popiſh ſervice, and there ſtanding in the ſame, ſaid ſhe revoked her recantation before made in that place, and was heartily ſorrie that ever ſhe did it, willing the people not to be deceived, neither to take her doings before for an example, &c. Theſe or ſuch like words ſhe ſpake in the Church.

Elizab. Cooper revoketh her recantation in the open Church.

Then cried one Bacon of the ſaid Pariſh, laying his armes abroad, ſaying; Maſter Sheriffe, will you ſuffer this? and repeating the ſame, urged him to go from the Church to her houſe, at whoſe knocking ſhe came downe, and was taken and ſent to priſon.

her,

her, and the more for the Goſpels ſake he was verie loath to do it, but that he was enforced by thoſe other perſons (before ſpecified) much againſt his own conſcience, which he now earneſtly repenteth.

This good woman being condemned, and at the ſtake with Simon Miller to be burnt, when the fire came unto her, ſhe a little ſhrunk thereat, with a voice crying, ha. When the ſaid Simon Miller heard the ſame, he put his hand behinde him toward her, and willed her to be ſtrong and of good chear: For good ſiſter (ſaid he) we ſhall have a joyfull and a ſweet ſupper. Whereat ſhe being, as it ſeemed, thereby ſtrengthened, ſtood as ſtill and as quiet as one moſt glad to finiſh that good work which before moſt happily ſhe had begun. So in fine ſhe ended her life with her companion joyfully, committing her ſoul into the hands of Almighty God.

Eliz. Cowper ſtrengthened at the ſtake by Sim. Miller.

The Martyrdome of ten faithfull and bleſſed Martyrs, five men and five women burnt at Colcheſter, five in the forenoon, and five in the afternoon, for the teſtimony and witneſſe of Chriſt Ieſus and his glorious Goſpel.

Auguſt 2. The martyrdome of ten godly Martyrs, five men and five women at Colcheſter.

As it is no new thing in thoſe whom we call Prelates and Prieſts of the Church, to be raiſers up of Perſecution againſt Chriſt and his poore flock: ſo it is much to be marvelled or rather lamented, that noble perſons, and men of honour and worſhip, would be made ſuch Miniſters, to ſerve the affections of theſe tyrants, as commonly, as well in all the ſorrowfull dayes of the late Queen Marie, as namely in this preſent ſtorie is to be marked.

And firſt thou remembreſt (gentle Reader) how mention was made a little before of xxii. which were ſent up priſoners together from Colcheſter to London by the Earle of Oxford, the Lord Darcie, maſter Tyrell of ſaint Oſithes, and other Commiſſioners and Juſtices, &c. The which xxii. (as is aforeſaid) through a gentle ſubmiſſion put unto them, were afterward releaſed and delivered.

W. Munt, Alice his wife, Roſe Allen her daughter.

In the number of theſe foreſaid 22. was one William Munt of Muchbentley in Eſſex, huſbandman, with Alice his wife, and Roſe Allen maid, the daughter of the ſaid Alice Munt; which coming home again to their houſe at Muchbentley aforeſaid, refrained themſelves from the unſavorie ſervice of the Popiſh Church, and frequented the companie of good men and women which gave themſelves diligently to reading, invocating, and calling upon the name of God through Chriſt: whereby they ſo fretted the wicked Prieſt of the town, called Sir Thomas Tie, and other like unto him, that caſting their heads together, they made a peſtilent ſupplication to the Lord Darcie, in the name of the whole Pariſh: the tenor whereof hereafter followeth.

Tho. Tie prieſt a wicked Promoter.

The manner of a ſupplication to the Lord Darcy, and by him delivered to Sir Iohn Kingſton Prieſt and Commiſſarie.

A ſupplication of the perſecutors to the Lord Darcy.

PLeaſeth it your honourable Lordſhip to be advertiſed that we confeſſe, whileſt your good Lordſhip lay here in the countrey, the people were ſtayed in good order, to our great comfort: but ſince your Lordſhips departure, they have made digreſſion from good order in ſome places, and namely in the Pariſh of Muchbentley, by reaſon of three ſeditious perſons, William Munt and his wife, and Roſe her daughter, who by their colourable ſubmiſſion (as it doth appeare) were diſmiſt and ſent down from the Biſhop of London, and ſince their coming home they have not onely in their own perſons ſhewed manifeſt ſignes and tokens of diſobedience, in not coming to the Church, nor yet obſerving other good orders, but alſo moſt maliciouſly and ſeditiouſly have ſeduced many from coming to the Church, and from obeying all other good orders; mocking alſo thoſe that frequent the Church, and calling them Church Owles, and blaſphemouſly calling the bleſſed ſacrament of the altar a blinde god, with divers ſuch like blaſphemies. In conſideration whereof, may it pleaſe your honour (for the love of God, and for the tender zeal your good Lordſhip beareth to juſtice, and the common peace and quietneſſe of the King and Queens Majeſties loving ſubjects) to award out your warrant for the ſaid William Munt, his wife, and Roſe her daughter, that they being attached and brought before your good Lordſhip, we truſt the reſt will fear to offend (their Ring Leaders of ſedition being apprehended) to the quietneſſe of their obedient ſubjects.

Your daily Orators, the Pariſhioners of Muchbentley, Thomas Tye Prieſt, Iohn Carter, Thomas Candler, Iohn Barker, Richard Mere, Iohn Painter, Will. Harris, Iohn Richard, with other.

Cruell perſecutors.

This being done, the ſaid Sir Thomas Tye bethought with himſelf, where the perſecuted did reſort. For in the beginning of Queene Maries reigne, for a twelvemoneth and more, he came not to the Church, but frequented the companie of godly men and women, which abſtained from the ſame, and as they thought, he laboured to keep a good conſcience, but the ſequel ſhewed him to be a falſe brother.

Tho. Tie a falſe brother, and a bloody perſecutor.

Now (as I ſaid) he partly knowing the places of refuge for honeſt men, did further inquire of other men about the ſame: and being thereof ſufficiently (as he thought) inſtructed to his purpoſe, immediately about the time the ſupplication above ſpecified was exhibited to the ſaid Lord Darcie, wrote ſecretly a letter to Boner Biſhop of London, wherein he maketh his account how he had beſtowed his time, and complained of divers honeſt men, among which was the ſaid William Munt and his companie: The tenor of which letter hereafter followeth.

A letter ſent to Boner Biſhop of London, from Sir Thomas Tye, Prieſt.

Tyes letter to B. Boner.

RIght honourable Lord, after my bounden dutie done in moſt humble wiſe, theſe ſhall be to ſignifie unto your Lordſhip the ſtate of our parts concerning religion. And firſt ſince the coming down of the twenty two ranke heretiques diſmiſſed from you, the deteſtable ſort of ſchiſmatiques were never ſo bold ſince the King and Queenes Majeſties reigne, as they are now at this preſent. In Muchbentley where your Lordſhip is patron of the Church, ſince Willi. Munt, and Alice his wife, with Roſe Allin her daughter came home, they do not onely abſent themſelves from the Church, and ſervice of God, but do daily allure many other away from the ſame, which before did outwardly ſhew ſignes and tokens of obedience.

They aſſemble together upon the Sabbath day in the time of divine ſervice, ſometimes in one houſe, ſometime in another, and there keep their privie Conventicles and Schools of hereſie. The Jurates ſay, the Lords Commiſſion is out, and they are diſcharged of their oath. The Queſt men in your Archdeacons Viſitation alledged that foraſmuch as they were once preſented and now ſent home, they have no more to do with them nor any other. Your officers ſay, namely Maſter Boſwell, that the Councell ſent them not home without a great conſideration. I pray God ſome of your officers prove not favourers of heretiques. The rebels are ſtout in the town of Colcheſter.

The Miniſters of the Church are hemd at in the open ſtreets, and called knaves. The bleſſed ſacrament of the altar is blaſphemed and rayled upon in every houſe and Tavern. Prayer and faſting is not regarded. Seditious talks and news are rife, both in town and countrey, in as ample and large manner, as though there had no honourable Lords and Commiſſioners been ſent for reformation thereof. The occaſion riſeth partly by reaſon of John Love of Colcheſter Hieth (a perverſe place;) which John Love was twice indicted of hereſie, and thereupon fled with his wife and houſhold, and his goods ſeiſed within the town of Colcheſter, to the King and Queens Majeſties uſe. Nevertheleſſe the ſaid John is come home again, and nothing ſaid or done to him. Whereupon the heretiques are wonderfully encouraged, to the no little diſcomfort of good and Catholique people, which daily pray to God for the profit, unitie, and reſtauration of his Church again: which thing ſhall come the ſooner to paſſe, through the travell and pains of ſuch honourable Lords and reverend Fathers as your Lordſhip is, unto whom I wiſh long life and continuance, with encreaſe of much honour. From Colcheſter the xviii. of December.

Your humble Bedeſman,
Thomas Tye,
Prieſt.

The taking of W. Munt, his wife, and Roſe Allin their daughter.

When Judaſly this wicked Prieſt had thus wrought his malice againſt the people of God, within a while after the ſtorms began to ariſe againſt thoſe poore perſecuted, William Munt and his companie, whereby they were enforced to hide themſelves from the heat thereof. And continuing ſo a little ſpace, at laſt, the ſeventh day of March, Anno 1557. being the firſt Sunday in Lent, and by two of the clock in the morning, one maſter Edmund Tyrrell who came of the houſe of thoſe Tyrrels which murdered King Edward the fifth and his brother) took with him the Bailiffe of the hundred called William Simnel, dwelling in Colcheſter, and the two Conſtables of Muchbentley aforeſaid, named John Baker and William Harris, with divers other a great number; and beſetting the houſe of the ſaid William Munt round about, called to them at length to open the doore: which being done, maſter Tyrrel with certain of his company went into the chamber where the ſaid father Munt and his wife lay, willing them to riſe: for (ſaid he) you muſt go with us to Colcheſter Caſtle. Mother Munt hearing that, being very ſick, deſired that her daughter might firſt fetch her ſome drink; for ſhe was (ſhe ſaid) very ill at eaſe.

Then he gave her leave and bade her go. So her daughter the forenamed Roſe Allin, maid, took a ſtone pot in one hand, and a candle in the other, and went to draw drink for her mother: and as ſhe came back again thorow the houſe, Tyrrel met her, and willed her to give her father and mother good counſell, and advertiſe them to be better Catholique people.

Roſe. Sir, they have a better inſtructer then I. For the holy Ghoſt doth teach them. I hope, which I truſt will not ſuffer them to erre.

Tyrr. Why, ſaid maſter Tyrrel, art thou ſtill in that minde, thou naughtie huſwife? Marie it is time to look upon ſuch heretiques indeed.

Q. MARIE.

Anno. 1557.

Roſe. Sir, with that which you call hereſie, do I worſhip my Lord God, I tell you troth.

Tyr. Then I perceive you will burn, goſſip, with the reſt, for companies ſake.

Talk between Ed. Tyrrel and Roſe Allin.

Roſe. No ſir, not for companies ſake, but for my Chriſts ſake, if ſo I be compelled, and I hope in his mercies, if he call me to it, he will enable me to bear it.

Tyrr. So he turning to his companie, ſaid, Sirs, this goſſip will burn: do you not think it? Marie ſir, quoth one, prove her, and you ſhall ſee what ſhe will do by and by.

Tyrrel burneth Roſe Allins hand.

Then that cruell Tyrrell, taking the candle from her, held her wreſt, and the burning candle under her hand, burning croſſe-wiſe over the back thereof, ſo long, till the very ſinews crackt aſunder. Witneſſe hereof William Candler then dwelling in Muchbentley, who was there preſent and ſaw it. Alſo miſtreſſe Bright of Romford, with Anne Starkey her maid, to whom Roſe Allin alſo both declared the ſame, and the ſaid miſtreſſe Bright alſo miniſtred ſalve for the curing thereof, as ſhe lay in her houſe at Romford going up towards London with other priſoners.

In which time of his tyrannie, he ſaid often to her, Why whore, wilt thou not crie? Thou young whore, wilt thou not crie? Unto which alwayes ſhe anſwered, that ſhe had no cauſe, ſhe thanked GOD, but rather to rejoyce. He had (ſhe ſaid) more cauſe to weep then ſhe, if he conſidered the matter well. In the end, when the ſinews (as I ſaid) brake, that all the houſe heard them, he then thruſt her from him violently, and ſaid, A ſtrong whore, thou ſhameleſſe beaſt, thou beaſtly whore, &c. with ſuch like vile words. But ſhe quietly ſuffering his rage for the time, at the laſt ſaid, Sir, have ye done what ye will do? And he ſaid, yea, and if thou think it be not well, then mend it.

The patience of the faithfull.

Roſe. Mend it? nay, the Lord mend you, and give you repentance, if it be his will. And now if you thinke it good, begin at the feet, and burn the head alſo. For he that ſet you awork, ſhall pay you your wages one day, I warrant you: and ſo ſhe went and carried her mother drink as ſhe was commanded. Furthermore, after the ſearching of the houſe for more companie, at the laſt they found one John Thurſton and Margaret his wife there alſo, whom they carried with the reſt to Colcheſter Caſtle immediately.

The devil payeth the perſecutors their wages.

She revengeth not evil for evil.

And this ſaid Roſe Allin being priſoner, told a friend of hers this cruell act of the ſaid Tyrrel; and ſhewing him the manner thereof, ſhe ſaid, while my own hand (quoth ſhe) was a burning, I having a pot in my other hand, might have laid him on the face with it, if I had would: for no man held my hand to let me therein. But I thank God (quoth ſhe) with all my heart, I did it not.

Alſo being aſked of another, how ſhe could abide the painfull burning of her hand, ſhe ſaid, at firſt it was ſome griefe to her, but afterward, the longer ſhe burned, the leſſe ſhe felt, or well neare none at all.

And becauſe maſter Tyrrel ſhall not go alone in this kinde of crueltie, you ſhall hear another like example of a blinde harpers hand burnt by Biſhop Boner, as is teſtified by the relation of Valentine Dingley, ſometime Gentleman to the ſaid Biſhop, who declared before credible witneſſe, as followeth: How the ſaid B. Boner, having this blinde Harper before him, ſpake thus unto him, That ſuch blinde abjects which follow a ſort of hereticall preachers, when they come to the féeling of the fire, will be the firſt that will flie from it.

Q. MARIE.

Anno 1557.

To whom the blinde man ſaid, that if everie joynt of him were burnt, yet he truſted in the Lord not to flie. Then Boner ſignifying privily to certain of his men about him what they ſhould do, they brought to him a burning coal. Which coal being put into the poore mans hand, they cloſed it faſt again, and ſo was his hand pitiouſly burned. Amongſt the doers whereof was the ſaid M. Valentine Dingley, witneſſe and reporter hereof, as is declared.

We read in the ſtorie of Titus Livius of King Porſenna, who after the burning of the right hand of Marcus Scævola, which came purpoſely to kill him, being onely contented therewith, ſent him home to Rome again. But thus to burne the hands of poore men and women which never meant any harme unto them, and not yet contented with that, but alſo to conſume their whole bodies without any juſt cauſe, we finde no example of ſuch barbarous tyrannie, neither in Titus Livius, neither in any other ſtorie amongſt the heathen.

But to return to our Colcheſter martyrs again, as touching William Munt and his wife, and burning of their daughter Roſe Allins hand, ſufficient hath béen declared. With the ſaid William Munt and his familie, was joyned alſo in the ſame priſon at Colcheſter, another faithfull brother, named John Johnſon, alias Aliker, of Thorp, in the Countie of Eſſex Labourer, of the age of foure and thirtie yéers, having no wife alive, but thrée young children, who alſo was with them indicted of hereſie, and ſo all theſe four lay together in Colcheſter Caſtle.

The other ſix priſoners lay in Mote Hall in the ſaid Towne of Colcheſter, whoſe names were:

Firſt, William Bongeor, of the Pariſh of ſaint Nicholas in Colcheſter, Glaſier, of the age of ſixty yéers.

2 Thomas Benold of Colcheſter, Tallow Chandler.

3 W. Purcas of Bocking in the Countie of Eſſex, Fuller, a young man, of the age of twentie yéers.

4 Agnes Silverſide, alias Smith, dwelling in Colcheſter, widow, of the age of fourtie yéers.

5 Helene Ewring, the wife of John Ewring Miller, dwelling in Colcheſter, of the age of 45. yéers, or thereabouts, who was one of the 22: priſoners mentioned before, ſent up in bands from Colcheſter to London, and after being delivered with the reſt, repaired home to Colcheſter again to her huſband, where notwithſtanding ſhe enjoyed her libertie not very long: for ſhortly after her return, met with her one Robert Maynard then Bayliffe of Colcheſter, a ſpeciall enemy to Gods Goſpel, who ſpying her, came to her, and kiſſed her, and bade her welcome home from London. Unto whom ſhe conſiderately anſwered again, and ſaid, that it was but a Judas kiſſe. For in the end, quoth ſhe, I know you will betray me, as indéed it came to paſſe: for immediately after that talk ſhe was apprehended by him again, and there lodged with the reſt in the town priſon (as is aforeſaid) called the Mote Hall.

Helene Ewring apprehended the ſecond time.

Rob. Maynard a great enemy to the Goſpel.

6 The ſixth of this companie was Elizabeth Folks, a young maid, and ſervant in Colcheſter, of the age of twenty yéers. These ſix were impriſoned in the town priſon of Colcheſter, called Mote Hall, as the other foure, above ſpecified, were in the Caſtle.

Divers examinations theſe good men had at ſundrie times before divers Juſtices, Prieſts, and Officers, as M. Roper, John Kingſton Commiſſarie, John Boſwel Prieſt and Boners ſcribe, and others mo, whereof the ſaid Boſwel made relation to Biſhop Boner, certifying him of their depoſitions, as is to be read in our firſt book of Acts and Monuments. Laſt of all they were examined again in Mote hall the twentie fourth day of June, by Doctor Chadſey, John Kingſton Commiſſarie, with other Prieſts, and Boſwel the Scribe, in the preſence of the two Bailiffes of Colcheſter, Robert Brown and Robert Maynard, with divers other Juſtices both of the town and countrey, and other gentlemen a great ſort: at which time and place, and before the ſaid perſons, they had ſentence of condemnation read againſt them, chiefly for not affirming the reall preſence of the ſacrament in their altar. The effect of their words therein, was this, or ſuch like, as here followeth.

Firſt the Lords faithfull priſoners in Mote Hall.

William Bongeor.

VVilliam Bongeor of the Pariſh of Saint Nicholas in Colcheſter, Glaſier, ſaid, that the Sacrament of the Altar was bread, is bread, and ſo remaineth bread, and for the conſecration it is not the holier, but rather the worſe. To this he did ſtand, as alſo againſt all the reſt of their Papiſticall doctrine: and ſo had ſentence read againſt him.

Tho. Benold.

Tho. Benold of Colcheſter, Tallow Chandler, affirmed the like in effect that the ſaid William Bongeor did: and ſo had ſentence alſo read againſt him.

W. Purcas condemned.

W. Purcas of Bocking ſaid, that when he received the ſacrament, he received bread in an holy uſe, that preacheth the remembrance that Chriſt died for him. To this he ſtood, and againſt other their Popiſh matters: and ſo alſo had ſentence read againſt him.

Agnes Silverſide condemned.

Agnes Silverſide, alias Smith, ſaid, that ſhe loved no conſecration. For the bread and wine is rather worſe then better thereby, ſhe ſaid. This good old woman anſwered them with ſuch ſound judgement and boldneſſe, to everie thing they aſked her, that it rejoyced the hearts of many, and eſpecially to ſee the patience of ſuch a reverend old age, againſt the taunts and checks of her enemies. To this ſhe alſo ſtood, and had ſentence read againſt her in like manner.

Helene Ewring condemned.

Helene Ewring anſwered the like in effect as the other did, clearly denying all the laws ſet forth by the Pope, with her whole heart. This good woman was ſomewhat thick of hearing, but yet quick in underſtanding the Lords matters, his name therefore be praiſed. Againſt her alſo there was ſentence read.

Eliziab. Folks condemned.

A ſubſtantiall lie, A reall lie.

Elizabeth Folks the young maiden, being examined whether ſhe beleeved the preſence of Chriſts body to be in the Sacrament ſubſtantially and really, or no; anſwered that ſhe beleeved that it was a ſubſtantiall lie, and a reall lie. At which words the Prieſts and others chafed very much, and aſked her again, whether after the conſecration there remained not the body of Chriſt in the ſacrament. And ſhe anſwered, that before conſecration and after, it is but bread, and that man bleſſeth without Gods word, is curſed and abominable by the word, &c. Then they examined her of confeſſion to the prieſt, of going to Church to hear Maſſe, of the authority of the Biſhop of Rome, &c. Unto all which ſhe anſwered, that ſhe would neither uſe nor frequent any of them all, by the grace of God, but utterly deteſt and abhor them from the bottome of her heart, and all ſuch trumperie.

D. Chadſey wept.

Eliz. Folks praiſeth God at her own condemnation.

Eliz. Folks prayeth for her enemies.

Sleeping Maynard.

Then read they the ſentence of condemnation againſt her. In which time Doctor Chadſey wept, that the teares trickled downe his cheeks. So the ſentence being read, ſhe kneeled downe on both her knees, lifting up her hands and eyes unto heaven, with fervent prayer in audible voice praiſing God that ever ſhe was born, to ſee that moſt bleſſed and happie day, that the Lord would count her worthie to ſuffer for the teſtimonie of Chriſt: and Lord, ſaid ſhe (if it be thy will) forgive them that this have done againſt me, for they know not what they do. Then riſing up, ſhe exhorted all thoſe on the Bench to repentance, eſpecially thoſe who brought her to priſon, as Robert Maynard the Bailiffe, and ſuch like; which Maynard commonly, when he ſat in judgement upon life and death, would ſit ſleeping on the Bench many times, ſo carefull was his minde on his office.

Further ſhe willed halting Goſpellers to beware of blood, for that would crie for vengeance, &c. And in the end ſhe told them all, laying her hand upon the barre, if they did not repent their wicked doings therein, that undoubtedly the very barre would be a witneſſe againſt them at the day of judgement, that they had that day ſhed innocent blood.

Eliz. Folks might have eſcaped, and would not.

This Elizabeth Folks, the day before ſhe was condemned, was examined onely upon this article, Whether ſhe beleeved that there was a Catholique Church of Chriſt or no. Unto which ſhe anſwered, Yea. Then was ſhe immediately (by Boſwels means the Scribe) delivered unto her Uncle Holt of the ſame town of Colcheſter to keep, who carried her home unto his houſe: and ſhe being there, might have departed thence many times, if ſhe had would: for there was means offered to convey her away. But ſhe hearing that ſome doubted that ſhe had yeelded to the Pope (although it was moſt untrue) would in no wiſe content her ſelfe, but wept, and was in ſuch anguiſh of minde and terror of conſcience, that (no remedie) ſhe would to the Papiſts again, for any perſwaſions that could be. And coming before them at Coſins houſe at the white Hart in Colcheſter, ſhe was at utter defiance with them and their doctrine: and ſo had, as you have heard, in the end a Papiſticall reward, as the reſt of her brethren had.

The Lords faithfull priſoners in Colcheſter Caſtle.

W. Munt condemned.

VVilliam Munt of Muchbentley in Eſſex, of the age of ſixtie one yeers, ſaid, that the ſacrament of the altar was an abominable idoll, and that if he ſhould obſerve any part of their Popiſh proceedings, he ſhould diſpleaſe God, and bring his curſe upon him, and therefore for fear of his vengeance he durſt not do it. This good father was examined of many things: but GOD be thanked, he ſtood to the truth, and in the end therefore had ſentence of condemnation read againſt him.

John Johnſon condemned.

John Johnſon of Thorp in Eſſex, widower, of the age of thirty foure yeers, was examined as the reſt, and made anſwer in ſuch ſort, as the Papiſts counted him none of theirs, and therefore condemned him with their bloody ſentence, as they had done the reſt before. This John Johnſon affirmed, that in the receiving of the ſacrament, according to Chriſts inſtitution, he receiveth the bodie of Chriſt ſpiritually, &c.

Alice Munt condemned.

Alice Munt, the wife of the ſaid William Munt, of the age of one and fourty yeers, being alſo examined as the reſt, ſaid and confirmed the ſame in effect as her huſband did, and was therefore fore alſo condemned by their bloody ſentence in like manner.

Roſe Allin.

Roſe Allin Maid, the daughter of the ſaid Alice Munt, of the age of twenty yeers, being examined of auricular confeſſion, going to the Church to hear Maſſe, of the Popiſh ſeven ſacraments, &c. anſwered ſtoutly, that they ſtank in the face of God, and ſhe durſt not have to do with them for her life, neither was ſhe (ſhe ſaid) any member of theirs: for they were the members of Antichriſt, and ſo ſhould have (if they repented not) the reward of Antichriſt. Being aſked further, what ſhe could ſay of the See of the Biſhop of Rome, whether ſhe would obey his authoritie or no: ſhe anſwered boldly, that ſhe was none of his. As for his See (quoth ſhe) it is for crows, kites, owls, and ravens to ſwim in, ſuch as you be: for by the grace of God I ſhall not ſwim in that See, while I live, neither will I have any thing to do therewith. Then read they the ſentence of condemnation againſt her, and ſo ſent her unto priſon again unto the reſt, where ſhe ſung with great joy, to the wonder of many.

Roſe Allins anſwers.

Roſe Allin condemned.

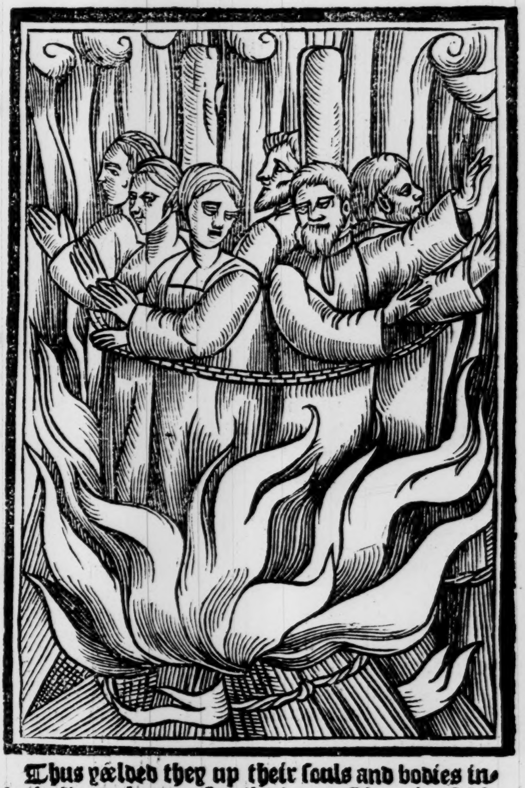
Thus theſe poore condemned lambes, being delivered into the hands of the ſecular power, were committed again every one unto the priſon from whence they came, where they remained with much joy and great comfort (in continuall reading and invocating the name of God) ever looking and expecting the happie day of their diſſolution. In which time the cruell Papiſts left not their miſchievous attempts againſt them (although they would ſeem now to have no more to do with them) for bloody Boner, whoſe throat never cried ho, ſhortly after got a writ for the burning of the foreſaid ten good creatures; and to ſhew the more diligence in the cauſe, he ſent his own truſty man down with it, named Edward Coſin, and with him alſo his letter for the furtherance of the matter, the thirty day of July, the next moneth after the condemnation.

The writ being thus received of the ſaid Bayliffs, and they having then no leaſure thereabouts, appointed the day of the execution thereof, to be the ſecond day of Auguſt next following. And becauſe the faithfull ſouls were in two ſeverall priſons, as the Caſtle was for the Countrey, and Mote Hall for the Town: therefore it was agreed among them, that they in Mote Hall ſhould be burnt in the forenoon, and thoſe at the Caſtle, by the Sheriffe of the Shire, in the afternoon, as here thou mayeſt ſee it more plain how it came to paſſe accordingly.

The ſecond day of Auguſt, 1557. betwixt ſix and ſeven of the clock in the morning, was brought from Mote Hall unto a plat of ground, hard by the town wall of Colcheſter on the outward ſide, William Bongeor, William Purcas, Thomas Benold, Agnes Silverſide, alias Smith, Helene Ewring and Elizabeth Folks aforenamed; which being there, and all things prepared for their Martyrdome, at the laſt theſe ſaid conſtant Martyrs kneeled down, and made their humble prayers to God, but not in ſuch ſort as they would, for the cruell tyrants would not ſuffer them: eſpecially one maſter Clere among the reſt (who ſometime had been a Goſpeller) ſhewed himſelfe verie extreme unto them; the Lord give him repentance (if it be his good will) and grace to be a better man. When they had made their prayers, they roſe, and made them readie to the fire. And Elizabeth Folks, when ſhe had plucked off her Petticoat, would have given it to her mother (which came and kiſt her at the ſtake, and exhorted her to be ſtrong in the Lord) but the wicked there attending, would not ſuffer her to give it. Therefore taking the ſaid Petticoat in her hand, ſhe threw it away from her, ſaying, Farewell all the world, farewell faith, farewell hope, and ſo taking the ſtake in her hand, ſaid, Welcome love, &c. Now ſhe being at the ſtake, and one of the officers nailing the chain about her, in the ſtriking of the ſtaple, he miſt the place, and ſtrake her with a great ſtroke of the hammer on the ſhoulder bone: whereat ſhe ſuddenly turned her head, lifting up her eyes to the Lord, and prayed ſmilingly, and gave her ſelf to exhorting the people again.

When all ſix were alſo nailed likewiſe at their ſtakes, and the fire about them, they clapped their hands for joy in the fire, that the ſtanders by (which were by eſtimation thouſands) cried generally almoſt; The Lord ſtrengthen them, the Lord comfort them, the Lord poure his mercies upon them, with ſuch like words, as was wonderfull to hear.

The Martyrdome of three men and three women at Colcheſter, burned in the forenoon, beſides foure other burned at afternoon.



The Martyrdome of W. Bongeor, W. Purcas, Tho. Benold, Agnes Silverſide, alias Smith, Helene Ewring, Eliz. Folks at Colcheſter in the forenoon. Anno 1557. Auguſt 2.

Thus yeelded they up their ſouls and bodies into the Lords hands, for the true teſtimonie of his truth. The Lord grant we may imitate the ſame in the like quarrell (if he ſo vouch us worthie) for his mercies ſake, Amen.

In like manner the ſaid day in the afternoone, was brought forth into the Caſtle yard, to a place appointed for the ſame, William Munt, John Johnſon, Alice Munt, and Roſe Allin aforeſaid: which godly conſtant perſons, after they had made their prayers, and were joyfully tied to the ſtakes, calling upon the name of God, and exhorting the people earneſtly to flee from Idolatrie, ſuffered their Martyrdome with ſuch triumph and joy, that the people did no leſſe ſhout thereat to ſee it, then at the other that were burnt the ſame day in the morning.

W. Munt, Alice his wife, Roſe Allin their daughter, John Johnſon, burnt the ſame day at afternoon. Aug. 2.

Thus ended all theſe glorious ten ſouls that day, their happie lives unto the Lord, whoſe ages all did grow to the ſumme of foure hundred and ſix yeers, or thereabouts. The Lord grant we may well ſpend our yeers and dayes likewiſe to his glorie. Amen.
